ADVERTISEMENT.

THE following SYSTEM of HERALDRY was undertaken by the Author, about the beginning of the last century, under the patronage of the Parliament of Scotland, and in dependence on a public pecuniary aid of £200, granted in the year 1704, for enabling him to execute an undertaking which bore a close alliance to the honour of the nation.

The liberality of the Parliament having been rendered ineffectual, in consequence of prior assignments on the fund out of which the grant was payable, the plan of the Author was circumscribed, and the publication of the Work delayed till the year 1722, when the First Volume was printed at Edinburgh, for Mr J. Mackeuen, bookseller, to whom the Author had assigned the property.

As this Volume was in many respects defective, an Appendix, or Supplementary Volume, was intended by the Author to follow the First Volume; but the death of that learned and industrious heraldic antiquary, at no great distance of time, the imperfect state of his collections, and the property passing through different hands, delayed the publication of the Second Volume till the year 1742, when it was printed at Edinburgh by Mr Robert Fleming, who was assisted in preparing it for publication by Mr Roderick Chalmers and other antiquaries.

The great utility of this Work, which is universally acknowledged to be of the highest value and authority, joined to the consideration of its excessive rarity and enormous price, induced the design of reprinting it.

In committing the Work, a second time, to the press, an opportunity has been found of retouching the original plates, correcting many typographical errors, and a very considerable number of mistakes, chiefly in the orthography of persons and places, and adding a few notes, distinguished by the letter E: but the Publishers do not wish to be understood as having made any alteration in the substance, style, or language of the Work.

It is in contemplation with the Publishers to print a Supplementary Volume, containing corrections of the preceding volumes, additional examples of Armorial Bearings in Scotland, and a continuation and enlargement of the memorials of our most ancient and considerable families to the present time. As it is evident that the materials for such a volume must be derived from sources of information inaccessible to the Publishers, they earnestly solicit the communication of authentic memorials from the Nobility and Gentry of Scotland concerning their respective families.

EDINBURGH, TO THE

MOST ILLUSTRIOUS PRINCE,

JAMES

DUKE OF HAMILTON, CHATELHERAULT AND BRANDON,

Marquis of Clydesdale, Earl of Arran, Lanerk, and Cambridge, Lord Aven, Polmont, Machanshire, and Innerdale, Baron of Dutton: And Hereditary Keeper of His Majesty’s Palace of Holyroodhouse.

My Lord,

The design of the ensuing Treatise being to illustrate and perpetuate to posterity, in a methodical way, such distinguished Ensigns of Honour as have been bestowed by Sovereigns, especially the Kings of Scotland, on persons and families of the most distinguished merit, I could not introduce it more favourably into the world, than under the protection of your most illustrious name, whose noble family has so signalized themselves in the service of their prince and country, as to deserve to be honoured with the highest offices, and distinguished by the most noble badges of honour, which the Kings of Scotland could confer.

Your Grace's family, next to the Sovereign's, justly claims the precedence of all the families of Scotland, not only as being the first Duke, but also on account of your royal descent; your noble ancestor, James Earl of Arran, being so near in blood to Mary Queen of Scotland, that he was declared, in Parliament 1542, the second person of the realm, and successor to the imperial crown, in case she died without issue; and also regent during her minority.

The merit of your family was not confined to your native country, but procured considerable honours abroad; so as the same noble person was dignified in France with the title Duke of Chatelherault, whose son, John, was created Marquis of Hamilton, being the first in Scotland who bore that dignity; and in England, since the union of the crowns, your family was honoured with the title of Earl of Cambridge; and, since the union of the two kingdoms, with the title of Duke of Brandon.

Some of your ancestors have also been invested with the Royal Ensigns of St Michael in France; and, ever since the accession of our Kings to the crown of England, they have been honoured successively with the most Noble Order of the Garter. As your illustrious father had the honour to be installed in that Order, so also in the royal and most ancient Order of the Thistle in Scotland: Which two Orders, in one person, is a singular instance never before bestowed (that I know of) on any other subject in Great Britain.

Your Grace having been pleased, of late, to add to the achievement of the family of Hamilton, &c. those of your mother, the daughter and sole heir of the ancient and noble family of Digby Lord Gerard of Bromley in England, I have prefixed them to this address, resolving to blazon and speak more particularly of them in the supplement to this work.

I shall not trouble your Grace with a particular detail of your ancient and honourable descent, that being already performed by better hands; in whose works, the wisdom, valour, and loyalty of your ancestors to their prince and country, shine with a lustre becoming their grandeur.

So far as falls within my province, I hope, I have done your family justice in this book, and have nothing here to add but my earnest wishes, that the advantages of birth, education, and other accomplishments, so eminent in the person of your Grace, (which to enumerate, were to offend a modesty usually attending great souls), may be improved to perpetuate, and, if possible, to enlarge the honour of your family; and to let the world know, how much I am,

My Lord,

Your Grace's most humble,

Most obedient, and most devoted servant,

ALEXANDER NISBET.
AS HERALDRY itself is of a noble extract and original, so the knowledge thereof is worthy of any gentleman: and, if duly considered, will be found no less useful than curious; as tending to illustrate the histories not only of particular families, but of the nation in general.

The original design of heraldry is not merely show and pageantry, as some are apt to imagine, but to distinguish persons and families; to represent the heroic achievements of our ancestors, and to perpetuate their memory; to trace the origin of noble and ancient families, and the various steps by which they arrived at greatness; to distinguish the many different branches descended from the same families, and to show the several relations which one family stands in to another.

As the practice of heraldry in Scotland is very ancient, so the higher we trace it, we find arms the more regular and distinct: And of so great importance to the nation was the regularity and distinction of arms reckoned by our kings and parliaments, that sundry laws, relative there-to, have been enacted and published, discharging all persons to assume arms to themselves without due authority; prohibiting those to carry arms who had right to none, or those who had right, to usurp the arms of other men.

Before the modern practice of subscribing names to writs of moment, which was not used in Scotland till about the year 1540, all such writs and evidents were only signed with seals, which contributed much to the regularity of arms: And therefore it was enacted by sundry statutes, That every freeholder should have his proper seals of arms, and should either compear himself at the head court of the shire, or send his attorney with his said seal; and they who wanted such seals were to be ameriate or fined: So that commonly gentlemen sent to the clerk of the court their seals in lead, who kept the same in his office, to produce or compare on occasions; and it was reckoned no less a crime than forgery to counterfeit another man’s seal. Vide Regiam Majestatem.

As those seals grew less useful and necessary, so armorial bearings became less regular: And therefore, anno 1592, cap. 125. the Parliament gave power and commission to the Lyon King at Arms, and his brethren heralds, to visit the whole arms of noblemen, barons, and gentlemen within Scotland, and to distinguish them with congruous differences, and to matriculate them in their books; as also, to inhibit all such to bear arms, as by the law of arms ought not to bear them, under the penalty of confiscating to the king all the goods on which such arms should be found; with an hundred pounds to the Lyon and his brethren, and in case of not payment, to be imprisoned during the Lyon’s pleasure. And, anno 1672, cap. 21. the said act of Parliament is renewed and ratified, and the Lyon King of Arms is empowered to distinguish arms, and matriculate the same in his books or registers. Which Register is ordained to be respected as the true and un repealable rule of all arms and bearings in Scotland.

Many other instances might be given to prove the regard our ancestors in Scotland bore to heraldry, their zeal and concern to prevent irregularities therein. By all which it is evident that they never looked on armorial bearings as an idle amusement, but as a matter of great moment and importance to the nation.

As the study of heraldry is what my peculiar genius has led me to for many years, so I have endeavoured to adapt my studies that way, to the service of my country, not only by instructing sundry of our young nobility and gentry in that science, but by composing a complete system of it for the benefit of posterity. In which I have endeavoured to prosecute that subject, both in a scientific or speculative way, and also reducing the same to practice, by collecting the armorial bearings of most, if not all those surnames and families that ever made any considerable figure in Scotland, and applying those bearings for illustrating the particular history of families among us.

However ignorant or capricious people may censure this undertaking as idle or useless, yet the Parliament of Scotland, anno 1704, were of opinion, that something of that nature was very much wanted, and when finished, would be serviceable to the nation: And were so well pleased with my proposals for publishing the same, that the better to enable me thereto, they ordered me two hundred pounds Sterling, payable out of the tonnage on foreign ships; but that fund not answering their expectations, and being encumbered with prior assignments, I never had a farthing that way, which was the occasion of this book’s not being published long ago.

The work being chargeable, and my bookseller having undertaken it wholly on his own risk, I was obliged to confine myself to a certain number of sheets. At the time of publishing my proposals, it was reckoned that the whole might have been contained in about 120, besides copper-plates; and the price to subscribers was fixed accordingly. And though that number of sheets was then judged sufficient to contain the whole System of Heraldry, according to the view I then had of it, yet, by reason of sundry new materials which occurred, the book has already exceeded the foresaid number of sheets, and I have not been able to overtake sundry particulars which I intended to have treated of; such as marks of cadency, marshalling of divers coats in one shield, exterior ornaments, &c. And, upon a more mature deliberation, I find, that in order to treat distinctly of those particular heads remaining, and to do justice to many considerable families, which I was obliged either altogether to omit, or treat of very superficially, an Appendix, or Supplement, will be necessary: in which I shall have opportunity both of correcting any thing amiss, and supplying any thing here omitted.

Had I confined myself barely to a System of Heraldry, as other authors on that subject have commonly done, I might easily have gone through all the other parts of it; but the great collections I have made of armorial bearings in Scotland, and the memorials of particular families, in this book, are so useful a part of it, that I am apt to think most of my readers will be better pleased with the method I have taken, than if I had given them only a dry system of the parts and rules of heraldry.

Though I have not been able to overtake some things in the System of Heraldry, as I at first intended, yet I have explained the True Art of Blazon, in a more ample, regular, and distinct manner, than any thing that I have ever seen on that subject. I have treated of the Rise and Nature of Arms, the principal Ensigns of Honour on which they have been usually placed, their different Tinctures and Furrs, the Partition and Repartition Lines, with their Accidental Forms: As also, the different Figures used in Arms, whether Proper, Natural, or Artificial, with the different terms of those figures, from their position, situation, and disposition in the shield; together with their various blazons and significations, according to the sentiments of those who have written in Latin, Italian, German, French, and English.

As I have treated of all those particular heads very fully and distinctly, so I have illustrated them, and the several rules relative thereto, by suitable examples of armorial bearings; principally taken from those of our own nation, and failing them, from those of other nations over all Europe; so that I may justly call it an Universal System, not calculated for Scotland only, or any particular country, but answering to the regular practice of heraldry through the world. Notwithstanding of which, I may presume to say, that my reader will here find such a collection of armorial bearings of surnames and families in Scotland, both ancient and modern, that the like was never attempted; and which will serve as a general register, or at least a directory of arms to posterity: A work hitherto much wanted, and earnestly wished for by the curious.

In order to render my collection more complete, I have not only had recourse to my Lord Lyon’s Register, in the Herald-Office, whose civili- ties to me on that occasion I most thankfully acknowledge, but also to old books of blazons, ancient records, seals of arms, and other monu- ments of antiquity: All which I mention as my proper vouchers on that subject, and refer to them by proper marks, of which I shall give here a short account.

The Lyon Register, though, by the foresaid act of Parliament, anno 1672, ordained to be respected as the true and unrepeatable rule of all arms and bearings in Scotland, and instituted to prevent irregularities in heraldry, yet, at this day, is not so complete as is to be wished. Many of our most ancient and considerable families have neglected to register their arms, notwithstanding the act of Parliament, partly through in- dolence, and partly through an extravagant opinion of their own great- ness, as if the same could never be obscured: So that were it not for an- cient records, books of blazons, charters with seals appended thereto, or other monuments of antiquity, to which I have had recourse with great labour, and some of which I have purchased with great charges, the ar- morial bearings of sundry considerable families and surnames in Scot- land had been entirely lost. However, as the Lyon Office is of late much improved, and better regulated than formerly, it is like to be very useful in time coming; and I have collected the greatest part of my blazons therefrom, and refer thereto sometimes by the letters (L. R.)
I. Lyon Register, and sometimes by the letters (N. R.) i. e. New Register.

The most certain vouchers for the practice of arms in Scotland, next to the Lyon’s Register, are ancient seals appended to charters, and other writs, many of which I have seen, and to them I refer in the following Treatise, mentioning them particularly.

Next to them are old manuscripts and illuminated books of blazons, whereof sundry are now in my custody, and to which I also frequently refer, as follows:

I. I have an old illuminated book of arms, with the names of the families who carry those arms, written under the shield, but often misplaced, and the writing such as can scarcely be read: I conjecture it to have been done by some Frenchman, in the reign of King James V. or in the minority of our Queen Mary, but can say nothing certain that way. Only, I saw at London in the Herald-Office there, another of the same book, resembling mine both in the painting, writing, binding, &c. so near as one book could resemble another. I met also there with sundry others.

II. James Workman’s Illuminated Book of Arms, who was herald in the reign of King James VI.; which book I frequently refer to by these letters (W. MS.), which book I had from the ingenious Mr Henry Fraser, Ross Herald.

III. Mr Pont, a known antiquary, his Alphabetical Collection, in manuscript, of the Arms of our Nobility and Gentry, the original of which I have, being handsomely blazoned, and written in a good hand, to which I commonly refer thus, (P. MS.)

IV. James Esplin, Marchmont Herald, has left behind him an Illuminated Book, with the pictures of sundry of our old kings and their arms; as also the arms of our nobility and principal gentry, about the year 1630, to which I refer thus, (E. MS.) This book I have upon receipt from Mr Hugh Wallace of Ingliston.

V. Sir James Balfour, a learned and famous antiquary, who was Lyon King at Arms in the reign of King Charles I. left a Register of Arms, now in the Lawyers’ Library, to which I refer thus, (B. MS.)

VI. George Ogilvie, a late herald with us, has left a Collection of Blazons, some of which I mention, and are marked thus, (O. MS.)

Besides those already mentioned, I have sundry other manuscripts of arms in my custody, but do not so frequently refer to them; because I am not certain by whom they are done, and therefore cannot depend on their authority farther than as they agree with other books of the same kind. And as to blazons which I have collected from printed books, old buildings, or other monuments of antiquity, when I refer to them I always mention them at large.

Many of those manuscripts &c. are in danger of being lost to posterity: But I am hopeful the collections I have made from them may be very useful, at least for supplying any loss which may happen that way.

I likewise refer sometimes to Sir George Mackenzie’s Science of Heraldry thus, (M*K. H.)

As to memorials of particular families I have not been so full on them as otherwise I might have been; had the number of sheets to which I was confined allowed me; but a work of that nature, though most desirable in itself, yet being attended with many difficulties, requires much time and labour: And, therefore, all that I could pretend to, at present, was only to lay a foundation, upon which either I myself, or others afterwards may build.

The learned Sir George Mackenzie began a collection of such memorials, which he has left behind him in manuscript; which I have referred to as occasion required: And had he finished the same for the press, it had been great service to the public, and made a very proper appendix to his excellent Book of Heraldry. But indeed a work of that nature is too great for one man, or one age, to finish, and therefore must proceed gradually, as the circumstances of things will permit. There are some ancient families amongst us now extinct, others have lost their charters and records; and there are some who, though they have them in their possession, yet are not willing to communicate them; and there are many of such an indolent disposition as not to regard the history either of their own, or of other considerable families: And yet without their concurrence a work of this nature cannot be completed. But as it is unreasonable, that the more curious and inquisitive part of mankind should suffer by the indolence of those men, I am resolved to go on in this work so far as I can, with such helps as may be had.

There are three objections which may possibly be framed against this Treatise, which I shall endeavour, briefly, to obviate. First, some may object, that in my memorials of families I have insisted more particularly on some inconsiderable families, and passed over others of greater consideration very superficially. To which I answer, That probably it may have happened so, but without any design or fault in me; for some persons have a taste for learning and antiquity beyond others, know the histories both of their own families, and of the nation in general, and are willing to do justice both to themselves and posterity, and therefore have assisted me with memorials, or allowed me to peruse their charters: Whereas others are altogether careless of such matters, and neither are concerned for knowing, or being known. Besides, that being straitened for room, I was obliged to abridge most of my memorials, especially towards the latter end, and to omit some altogether. But as I designed my book for the use of posterity, so in the Supplement which I intend to make to it, I propose to omit no memorial of any family which I either have by me, or may at any time come in my way, so far as I find it duly vouched: And, therefore, if any family shall think themselves neglected hereafter, they must blame themselves.

Secondly, others may object, That I have erred in sundry of my accounts of families. To which I answer, That the work being new, I have been obliged to go in an untrodden path, and therefore it is not to be wondered if sometimes I should miss my way; but I have endeavoured to act as cautious a part as possible, and where no proper vouchers appeared, I have chosen to be silent. If I have erred in any thing, I shall be ready, upon better information, to retract and correct the same in the above-mentioned Supplement, and shall be very thankful to any person who gives me further light in those matters. Which corrections and additions, being once printed, will be preserved for the use of posterity, and if ever the book comes to a second edition, these may be inserted in their proper places.

Thirdly, it may be objected, That this may be an endless work, so that one volume may draw on another, and yet the whole never be completed. To which I answer, That a complete history of all the surnames and honourable families in Scotland is not to be expected from one hand, or in one age; notwithstanding of which, all advances towards such a history will be serviceable to the public. We have no complete history either of England or Scotland, nor is it probable that ever we shall have one till the day of judgment, when the thoughts of the hearts of all men shall be revealed: And yet the collections of learned historians and antiquaries, in all ages, have been applauded, and very deservedly; as tending to illustrate and improve our national history, though without being ever able actually to complete it. In like manner, though I shall never pretend to make a complete collection of memorials, relative to all our considerable families, yet, in the Supplement, I propose to finish my whole System of Heraldry in all its parts; to correct what is wrong, and supply what is wanting in the present volume, so far as I am either capable, or may receive assistance from others; and, wherein I come short, to leave a plan or foundation for those who come after me, to improve and build upon.

There are sundry subscribers, who should have been both mentioned in the book, and had their achievements engraved on the copper-plates, but happened either to come in too late for this volume, or neglected to give in either memorials or arms; however, all care shall be taken to do them justice afterwards.

I am very sensible that a work of this nature, in which so many different persons and families are more or less concerned, must expose the author to variety of censures, and readily they who are least concerned will be most censorious: But as it is the service of my country, and benefit of posterity that I chiefly write for, so I shall be easy as to the snarls of idle and ignorant critics; and shall be ready, on all occasions, fully to satisfy candid and judicious readers: And whatever fate the following book may undergo in the present age, I shall comfort myself with the thoughts of this, that the older it grows, the more useful and valuable will it be to posterity.

SYSTEM

SPECULATIVE AND PRACTICAL:

WITH THE TRUE ART OF BLAZON.

CHAP. I.

OF THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF ARMORIES.

BEFORE I proceed to treat of ARMORIES in all their parts, it will not be improper to premise briefly somewhat concerning their name, rise and progress.

Arms have been taken by all nations, and in all ages, for military marks and signs of honour; by which, not only persons, families and communities are distinguished and known, but nobles also distinguished from plebeians, and nobles among themselves. Which marks and signs were called arms; because in ancient times, they were painted, or engraven on shields, and other pieces of armour; as also, upon banners and pennons, from whence they are called armorial ensigns: And being likewise embroidered or painted on the surcoats of military men, which they wore over their armour, to distinguish them in battle, they were called coats of arms.

How useful and honourable of old these marks and signs have been, will appear from what some learned men have written on that subject; of whom I shall only mention a few.

William Wyrley, in his True Use of Armories, printed at London, an. 1592, says, "Without armorial tokens, no martial discipline can be exercised, no army ranged, no attempt of any company achieved, and, by consequence, no conquest made, nor so much as any commonwealth defended, neither from outward enemies, civil discord, or rebellion of any plebeian rout. It will, I hope, reduce in estimation, a matter both of honour, order and necessity, which no doubt was, "by the wisest and best governed states, at the first devised, and generally by all "of any policy, received to a most necessary end."
John Fenne, in his Glory of Generosity, printed at London, an. 1586, p. 147, says, "The ancients did bear arms for the honour's sake of virtue: For it is one, "nay, the chiefest honour, for a gentleman to bear a coat of arms, and without "which none can be called gentle; and that is commanded by the sanction of the "laws of nations."

Guillim, in his Display of Heraldry, Sect. I. Chap. I. says, "How great the "dignity and estimation of arms ever has been, and yet is, we may easily conceive "by this, that, as they do delight the beholders, and greatly grace and beautify "the places wherein they are erected; so also, they do occasion their spectators "to make serious inquisition, whose they are; who is the owner of the house "where they are set up; of what family the bearer is descended; and who were "his next, and who his remote parents and ancestors. It is very notable, that "these signs, which we call arms at this day, however in former ages they have "been named, have been of the greatest use and esteem, the knowledge of which "is called the Science of Heraldry, or of Armories. Which Edward Bolton in his "Elements of Arms, calls the Mistress and Queen of Liberal Knowledge; for in it "all the fair arts seem to assemble, and every grace of invention glitters there, "with much signification, ornament and utility; for armories are the only re- "maining customary evidences or testimonies of nobility now: For neither sta- "tues, arches, obelisks, trophies, spires, or other public magnificent erections, are "now in use."

These ensigns of honour, or marks of nobility, are to be met with everywhere, not only on the frontispiece of public and private buildings, as aforesaid, but commonly on tombs, and other monuments of antiquity, and especially are of excellent use on seals, by which we know ancient charters and other evidences of the highest importance, whether they be authentic, yea or not. And I cannot sufficiently wonder at the vanity of a great many, who glory in their carrying these marks and signs of honour, which they do not at all understand; and must regret it in the greatest part of my countrymen, who, though otherwise well qualified in the knowledge of other liberal arts and sciences, yet neglect to apply themselves to the study of heraldry; a science so valuable, that the greatest men in all ages have thought it worth their study and application: And therefore Thomas Gore, in his Catalogue of Learned Men, who have written on this science, expresses himself in these words, "Quo viri nobiles aliquo laudabilem illam Heraldiac "Artem perseuendit acriori extimulentur studio, &c. ut palam fiat omnibus, "quais in prætio & honore nunc dierum est & ohm fuit res Heraldica, in toto "prope literarium orbis."

Though learned men are generally agreed as to the usefulness of armories, yet they differ with respect to the beginning and rise of them, of which I have spoken particularly in a book formerly published by me on that subject, entitled, An Essay on the Ancient and Modern use of Armories, to which I refer the curious. But lest I should seem to be defective in my present undertaking, in which I propose to lay open the several parts of heraldry, I shall therefore give here a brief account of the nature and rise of arms.

Many are of opinion that arms owe their first beginnings to the light of nature, and have been used by all nations, however rude and illiterate, for distinguishing the more worthy and eminent, from the vulgar and ordinary people; though they cannot but allow that arms have been used in greater perfection and regularity in some countries than in others. The reason they give for their opinion, is, that whatever we find universally practised in all nations must be founded in nature; or, which is much the same, that whatever all countries, whether civil or barbarous, agree to in the main, though they differ perhaps in some circumstances, must proceed from the dictates of natural reason. And, to support their assertion, they produce many instances of the practice of arms among the ancient and modern inhabitants, not only of this but of the new discovered world, America. Whence some conclude, that the use of arms was Antediluvian, and after the Flood, was continued among the children of Noah, and afterwards more particularly, and in greater perfection, among the Children of Israel, as they endeavour to prove from the prophecy of Jacob and Moses, and more especially from the 2d chap. of the Book of Numbers, where God gives express commandment, "that every man of the "Children of Israel shall pitch by his own standard, with the ensign of his father's house." And further, they urge the use and practice of armories in succeeding ages among the Egyptians, Assyrians, Greeckes and Romans. And indeed it is true, that, as mankind increased and grew numerous, certain marks and distinctions, by which, persons, families and communities might be known one from another, were in a manner absolutely necessary; and, therefore, as the learned Becmannus saith, "Hominem ab homine distinguiere, ac variis distinctur erimine nominibus & signis, labor fuit primorum parentum, & pullulantis orboris his negotium." Neither can military marks be younger than Mars himself, seeing, without distinguishing marks and signs, no martial discipline could be exercised. But, notwithstanding this, neither the Egyptian hieroglyphics, the Grecean emblems, nor even the banners and ensigns of those, or other ancient nations, the antiquity of which is unquestionable, can properly be called armes. The former of these having never been looked upon as such; and the latter, viz. banners and ensigns, being rather to be reckoned among the regalia of these nations, as ensigns of power and dominion, than hereditary marks of honour, which we now call armes.

There are others who do not ascribe the rise and use of armes to the light of reason and nature, but rather to common practice and custom, as distinguishing military marks, or symbolical figures, used by these nations upon their shields, head-pieces, standards, or pennons, &c. which, as they were not hereditary marks of honour, transmitted from father to son, so neither were they ever regulated to the titles and rules of armories, being only temporary devices, which were taken up, and laid aside at pleasure, and intended partly for distinction, and partly for ornament's sake. And this is plain, particularly with respect to their use amongst the Romans, who never looked upon them as hereditary marks of nobility: For, had the Romans been conversant in the science of heraldry, as now practised all over Europe, we had certainly received from them the terms of that science, whereas, on the contrary, we find them handed down to us in Gothic and old French words, which the ancient writers of heraldry were obliged to dress up in a barbarous sort of Latin, when they wrote for the use of the learned world.

The Romans had, for their badges and signs of nobility, the statues or images of their ancestors; and, among many other divisions of the Roman people, we find them divided into that of Nobiles, Novi & Ignobiles, which distinction of persons and families was taken from their right to have images or statues, an honour granted only to those, whose ancestors had borne some office in the state, such as Curule Edile, Censor, Praetor, Consul, &c.

He who had the privilege of using the images or statues of his ancestors was termed Nobilis; he who had only his own was called Novus; (the same with our upstart, or first of a family, that obtains a coat of armes) and he who had neither his own statues, nor those of his fathers, went under the name of Ignobilis, as the common people among us, who have no right to armorial bearings; so that their fas Imaginium, was the same with our right to carry armes: And therefore, Abrahams Fransis, Lib. II. de Armis, says, "Quademmodum aput Romanos, eorum familia obscure habebantur quorum nullie sunt Imagines, sic & illi jam ignobiles existimantur, qui majorum Armam non possunt ostendere."

These images or statues were made of wood, brass, marble, and sometimes in wax-work, and the better to represent the person intended, painted according to the life (as Polybius observes), and dressed out answerable to their quality; adorned with the robes of the offices they had borne, with marks of their magistracy, and the spoils they had taken from the enemy. Thus the collar or chain on the statue of Torquatus, and the tuft of hair on that of Cinnaeatus, were the trophies of which those brave heroes had despoiled two of the Roman enemies.

These statues commonly stood in their courts, in a cabinet of wood, (from whence our cabinet of armes and ambries, where the several pieces of the honours of the nobility, such as, helmet, crest, gauntlet, spurs, banners, &c. were kept) and, upon solemn days, these presses or cabinets were set open, and the statues being adorned as above, were exposed to public view, in their courts before the porch and gate of their houses, (as now our nobility and gentry have their coats of armes cut in stone, or painted on escutcheons over their gates); not only that the people might behold their nobility and honours, but to excite their posterity to imitate the virtues of their ancestors, as Petrus Ancarena Clement says, "Arma pluribus in locis eam ob causam collocantur, non solum ut Nobilitatis indiciem sint, & majorum nostrorum Monumenta, sed ut posteri excipiant ad laudem & decess." And Valerius Maximus upbraids a cowardly and insignificant posterity, "by those ensigns, which as it were," says he, "tells them how unworthy they are of the honours and privileges of their brave ancestors."

When any of the family died, the statues and images were not only thus exposed to view, but in the funerals were carried before the corpse, as ensigns of their nobility. This is observed by Hermannus Hermes, in his Fasciculus Juris Publici, p. 520, and Basil Kennet, in his Antiquities of Rome, tells us, that the Romans brought forth their images at the funerals of those persons only who had the Jus Imaginum; and that Augustus ordered 600 beds of images to be carried before, at the funeral of Marcellus; and Sylla, the dictator, had no less than 6000.

From this practice of the Romans, came the custom of succeeding ages to carry, at the funerals of great men, their ensigns of nobility, with the armorial bearings of those honourable families of whom they were descended, as well on the mother's side, as on the father's; which, by our practice, being placed on funeral escutcheons, round the achievement of the person deceased, are called Quarters or Branches; and by others, Proofs of Nobility: but by Pontus Heuterus Delphius, Stemma, who, in his Genealogies, particularly treats of this subject, and derives our custom of carrying arms at funerals from that of the Romans above mentioned, in these words: "Quemadmodum olim apud Romanos in more posuit ut majorum imagines ornandae funebre Pompe adhiberentur, Atriaque cereis per Armaria dispositis, ad Gentilitatem ostendendam ornarentur: ita & nostro tempore in usu est, ut viri nobiles in justis funerum Exequiis, nuptiarum solemnibus, quorumdam etiam sacrorum primordiis, longa serie a præavis demissum Stemmat in medium adducat, ut scil. inde ortus sui splendorem communstreun, dum qua tuor, octo, sexdecim aut triginta duo Nobilitatis suæ Membra (quas vulgo quer teras vocant) adierint, licet non uno codemque ordine a singulis Insignia locentur."

From all which we observe, that the use of arms with us, being hereditary marks of honour and noble descent, are of the same nature with the Jus Imaginum among the Romans. Which opinion is confirmed by many famous writers, too numerous to be here inserted: But I cannot omit a modern one, the judicious John Brydal of Lincoln's-Inn, Esq. who, in his little book, intituled, Jus Imaginis apud Anglos, p. 53, says, "For, as in ancient times, the statues or images of their ancestors were proofs of their nobility, so, of latter times, coat-arms "came in lieu of those statues or images, and are the most certain proofs and evidences of nobility. Hence it followeth, that Jus Nobilitatis is nothing else but Jus Imaginis; insomuch that the word Imagó doth oftentimes signify nobility; and the right of having images with their ancestors was the same as the right of having arms now with us." And hence it is, as Gerard Leigh tells us, in his Accidents of Armory, p. 42, "That the law of arms is for the most part directed "and regulated by the civil law."

Our armorial bearings, as hereditary marks of honour, thus succeeding in place of the Roman images and statues, naturally lead us to date their rise and origin as such, from the time of the subversion of the Roman Empire by the Goths and Vandals; who, as they sunk many liberal arts and sciences, seem to have given birth and life to that of heraldry. These northern and barbarous nations charged their shields, and other pieces of armour, with figures of fierce animals, and almost all kinds of creatures, partly for distinction's sake in time of battle, and partly for ornament's sake, according to their own particular genius; answerable to the common saying, "Ex is quibus quisque magis delectatur quals etiam ipsa sit cognoscitur."

These military marks and figures of lions, boars, wolves, &c. which they had on their shields, and other pieces of armour, became hereditary ensigns of honour, and were continued as such by them, and their posterity, and were called instead of Jus Imaginum, Tessera Gentilitia, Insignia Gentilitia, and sometimes Arma us Budeus in Pandect. "Prior pro ipsis" (speaking of the Roman images) says, "pos-
OF ARMORIES.

"teriora tempora Insignia Gentilitia habuerunt quae arma vulgo vocantur; quae ipso quoque primum, nunc simile est veri, virtutis prae mia fuerunt, ac rerum praelare gestarum decora." And elsewhere, "Gentiles fuerunt hi, qui imagines sui generis proferre poterant, & erant insignia Gentilitia quae hodie arma dicuntur."

Hence they became fond of the word Gentilis: And as Selden observes in his Titles of Honour, it came to be used, in their language, for an honourable epithet, glori-ying probably in that name by which the Romans used to call them in contempt; for the Romans used indifferently to call all those Gentiles, who were not citizens of Rome.

These warlike nations, having subdued the Roman Empire, and raised their glory by military bravery, were naturally led to a high esteem of warlike achievements; and, therefore, derived their ensigns and titles of honour from what chiefly concerned a soldier, and distinguished the different ranks of nobility, according to the different orders of military men, such as Miles, Eques, Scutifer, &c. and their posterity, naturally desirous either to imitate, or perpetuate the warlike achievements of their ancestors, continued the same marks and ensigns of honour which were used by their ancestors: And not only so, but collateral descendants were ambitious to share with them in the glories of war already purchased; and, therefore, assumed the same figures with the principal families, with some variation for difference. And, in process of time, these ensigns were also desired by others, who justly reckoned, that, by extraordinary services performed in their civil capacities, they deserved as well of their Prince or country, as others had done by their military achievements. Upon which, many devices were formed into arms, and continued as hereditary marks of honour, of which I am to speak particularly in the following treatise.—And so much shall serve at present for the nature and rise of arms.

As the Goths, and their northern allies, first brought in armorial bearings, and transmitted them to their posterity as hereditary marks of honour, so did they also the feudal law, by means of which, arms grew up to farther perfection; as is evident by many armorial figures (in the following treatise) of ancient families, representing the acknowledgments and services they were obliged to perform to their overlords and superiors, as roses, cinquefoils, spur-revels, bows and arrows, hunting-horns, ships, &c. upon which account such figures are frequent in armories all Europe over. Thus the old barons of Arran and Lorn were obliged to furnish a ship to the King in time of war, as their old charters bear; upon which account they still carry ships, or lymphads in their arms. But of such feudal arms I have discoursed in my above-mentioned essay, and shall be more particular in my following treatise.

Arms were very much improved, and in great esteem in the reign of King, Charles the Great of France; for which see Favin's Theatre of Honour, and Bartholomaeus Chasa, in his Catalogue of the Glory of the World, who says, "That that King not only constituted the Twelve Peers of France, but regulated the use of arms." And all the French writers of that age tell us, That that great King, besides others, honoured the Frieslanders and Scots with ensigns of honour, for their extraordinary services in his wars; and when he and Achaius, King of Scotland, entered into that famous league about the year 792, the double treisure, flowered and counter-flowered with flower-de-luces, was added to the arms of Scotland, as a badge and memorial of that alliance, of which I have spoken in my fore-said essay, and shall have occasion afterwards to speak of the same in the following treatise.

For the better understanding of the antiquity and progress of Armories, as we now have them, I shall here mention only two grand occasions which contributed thereto, viz. the Crusades and Tournaments.

Crusades, or expeditions to the wars in the Holy Land against the Infidels, gave occasion of bearing several new figures, hitherto unknown in arms, such as the be-zants, martlets, alerions, escalopes, &c. besides an indefinite number of crosses, which are to be seen in arms all over Europe. For they, who undertook these expeditions, received, from the hands of bishops and priests, little crosses, made of cloth or taffety, which they sewed on their garments, and on which account these expeditions were called Crusades. The first of them began in the year 1096; in which almost all Christian nations engaged, and took upon them the Cross, as their manner of speaking was then. The form and fashion of the cross then could not but be as various as fancy could invent, to distinguish many companies of different nations. Which crosses became proper and fixed armorial figures to many families who had arms before these expeditions, but afterwards disused the same for the love they bore to the Cross, of which I have given several instances in my foresaid essay. By these crusades, arms were much improved all Europe over, and they gave an increase of various forms of crosses and other figures;—of which in the following treatise.

Tournaments, the other occasion I mentioned of improving armories, are much more ancient than the crusades, though I have spoken of them first, and have very much improved armories, sooner or later; not only by giving rise to figures within the shield, (such as the ordinaries as some say), but to those without the shield, which adorn and trim it in the present perfection and beauty we find arms, and which we call Achievements, i.e. complete armorial bearings, with all the exterior ornaments. And since tournaments seem to have completely built the armorial structure, (except as to marks of cadency, and the method of marshalling many coats of arms in one shield), I shall here treat of them briefly and distinctly, that my reader may somewhat understand achievements, as I speak of them in the following treatise, till I come to treat separately of them in distinct chapters.

Some say, that Tournamenta is but the corruption of the word Trojamen; the Ludus Trojae, which were invented by Ascianus, and celebrated by a company of Roman youths, dressed after a warlike manner, and generally of the best families of Rome. Others say, that Tournamenta came in place of the Ludus Trojae, and derives its name from Touren, a French word, (to turn round), because to be expert in these military exercises, much agility both of man and horse was requisite.

Tournaments are commonly described, " Nundinæ vel feriae in quibus milites ex condicio convenire, & ad ostentationem virtum suarum & audacie, temere condigua solent." Or thus: "Solemn meetings, at great festivals, where nobles and gentlemen performed martial exercises by combating together in desport." That there were such meetings as these, under the names of tournaments, joustings, Hastings, and tiltings, all Europe over, and especially in Germany, in the beginning of the tenth century, (where none were to be admitted who had not arms, as marks of their noble descent), is acknowledged by German, French, and English writers. Favin, in his Theatre of Honour, says, (for which he vouches Franciscur Modius's Pandectæ Triumphales), That the Emperor Henry, surnamed the Birder, Duke of Saxony, in the year 936, decreed to bring in jousts and tournaments by solemn ordinances; and gave commandment, that the Palatine of the Rhine, and the Dukes of Bavaria and Saxony, should give, in writing, laws for regulating these meetings; which they accordingly digested into twelve articles, in imitation of those of France, says Favin. By one of these articles it was decreed: "That no man should be admitted into these festivals of arms who was not a gentleman of armories, and of four descents at least, of noble parentage, both on the father and mother's side; and if any man, who could not so justify his nobility by armorial ensigns, "(such as those we call quarters, or proofs of nobility, being the arms of his grandfathers and grandmothers), should present himself to jousts, by pretending that he was ennobled by his Prince, (here Novi Hominæ were excluded), and thereupon presumed himself worthy to be in the same rank with those of ancient nobility, such a man should be beaten with rods, and obliged to ride the rails, or barriers, for his punishment." These rails, or barriers, were certain lists or stakes of wood, which surrounded the place of action, and kept off the spectators from the actors. And since I am speaking of them, I cannot but show, that though the various fashions of the trimming of arms be brought from these honourable military exercises, yet I cannot be made to believe what Menestrier says, That the proper figures in this science, such as the chevron, saltier, bend, bar, and other traverse pieces, are brought into this science, from these pieces of wood which formed and made up the barriers, however so like to them they may seem to be;—of which afterwards. But to proceed, Segar, Norry King of Arms, in his treatise of Honour Military and Civil, Lib. III. tells us also, That Henry the Bird was the first who introduced tournaments in Germany, which other nations did imitate, and had their own laws relative to them. Our author mentions several laws, one of which was, "That it should be "lawful for all gentlemen, well born, to enter and fight in these exercises of arms, "ever excepting such as had, in word or deed, blasphemed, or done or said any "thing contrary to our Christian faith, of whom, if any presume to enter the list, "we will and command, that the arms of his ancestors, with all his furniture, shall "be cast out, and his horse confiscated."

As for the frequency of tournaments solemnized in Germany, England, and Scotland, I shall name but some, though there were many.—Henry the Bird solemnized one in the city of Magdeburg, upon the first Sunday after the feast of the Three Kings, in the year 938, and in anno 943. There was another held at Rottenburgh, by Conrad Duke of Franconia. The Duke of Saxony solemnized another in the city of Constance, the first Sunday after the feast of All Saints, in anno 948. Favin gives us an account of thirty-seven tournaments, from that time till the year 1194. John Stow, in his Large Survey of London, tells us, several were securely solemnized there every Friday in Lent, "by which, (says he), the gentry gave good proof how serviceable they would be in war." Upon which account, Richard I. of England appointed several tournaments, "that his subjects, "(says our author), by these means, might be accustomed to horsemanship and "feats of arms; and, consequently, better enabled to oppose their enemies the "Scots." Segar tells us of a tournament, held by King Edward the III. where David the II. King of Scotland, josted and carried the prize. He likewise tells us, that Richard II. of England made solemn proclamation of a tournament, to be held at London, through Scotland, France, and Flanders, to which several stranger knights resorted. And John Stow, in his formentioned book, says, many lords came from Scotland to that tournament, to get worship (as he calls it) by force of arms. Amongst them was the Earl of Mar, who challenged the Earl of Nottingham to joust with him; they rode together certain courses, but not the full challenge, for the Earl of Mar was cast down, and had two of his ribs broken. The next Scotsman was Sir William Dazel, (whom I take to be Dalziel), the King of Scotland's banner-bearer; he challenged Sir Piercy Courtney, the King of England's banner-bearer, and, when they had ridden many courses, they gave over without a seen victory. Then Cockburn, Esquire of Scotland, josted with Sir Nicholas Howberk; but Cockburn was borne over, horse and man, anno 1395. On St George's day, there was a great jousting on London bridge, (says our author), between David Earl of Crawford of Scotland, and the Lord Wells of England, in which the Lord Wells was, at the third course, borne out of his saddle.

In Scotland I have met with several tournaments solemnized; but our authors are so brief that they only name them. There were three held in the reign of King William at Roxburgh, Edinburgh, and Stirling: Another in the reign of Alexander II. at Haddington; "where," says Hector Boetius, "our nobility and "foreign knights shewed great prowess." King Alexander the III. held another at Roxburgh, upon the festivals of his son's marriage. There was another in the reign of King Robert III.; to which came one John Morlo, an Englishman, (says our author), who gave challenge to the Scots knights; he was taken up first by Archibald Edmonston, and, after him, by Hugh Wallace, and defeated both of them; but at last was taken up by Hugh Traill, who overcame him. King James IV. caused proclaim a tournament through Germany, France, and England, under this title, "In defence of the Savage Knight," (being so called by a foreign princess), to be holden at Edinburgh, upon the festivals of his marriage with Margaret, eldest daughter to King Henry VII. of England;—the fame of which tour-ament, (says Hawthorned in his History), brought many foreign lords and knights to Scotland. Challenges were given and received in defence of the Savage Knight; and, several days before the joustings, the shields of the nobility and gentry of Scotland, with their helmets, wretches, crest, and devices, were hung upon the barriers, or other places near by, which were guarded with strong and robust highlandmen, in savage dresses, which gave occasion to many families with us, whose progenitors were actors in that tournament, to have savages for their supporters. To these tournaments with us none were admitted but those that were truly noble, as is evident by their proclamations, directed, of old, to earls, barons, and knights; and, since the reign of King James I. lords and barons:——for which see Lindsay of Pitscotie's Manuscript, in the Lawyers' Library at Edinburgh.

Having thus briefly given an account of the nature of tournaments, and the laws relative to nobility and arms, with a few instances of them, as solemnized both at home and abroad, I shall now add some observes from the ceremonies and customs used in the solemnities of tournaments, from some of their formulas which I have met with, from which some heralds bring the first use of exterior ornaments which adorn the shield, especially Menestrier.

It was the custom of those who went to these military exercises, to be in a complete military equipage, with arms on their shields, surcoat, and caparisons of their horses, as they are to be seen on the equestrian sides of many ancient seals with us and other nations, and on several sculptures, as Plate I. with their esquires riding before, carrying their masters tilting-spears, with their pennons of arms at them; and in their left hand, the timbre, i. e. the helmets which were to be worn in the exercise, adorned with pieces of silk, mistress's favours, wreaths, or torse, being of the tinctures of the arms, and their proper liverys, and therupon the crest or device. When the knights came near the barriers, where the joustings were to be held, they blew and winded a horn or trumpet, which gave advertisement to the heralds, who were there attending, to come forth, to receive their name, armorial bearing, and their other proofs of nobility; which accordingly they performed, and recorded in their books: From which, it is said, came Heraldry, or Art of Blazon, a German word, which signifies to wind a horn, now taken for a regular description of arms, in their proper terms; whence the German families have their helmets frequently adorned with several horns or trumpets, to show how often they have jousted in tournaments.

After the heralds have recorded the names, arms, and proofs of nobility of the knights, their shields of arms, with helmets, mantlings, wreaths, and crests, with which they were to joust, were hung up by the left corner, with the timibre, (in that posture which we call couchie, which we meet with in many shields of arms on old monuments and seals, and shows the owners had been received into tournaments) upon windows, pavilions, trees, barriers, or other fit places, near to the place of jousting, some days before the action; to the end that every one might be known by his arms, crest and liveries, to the actors, judges and spectators: With whom, and the ladies, the heralds went about, and described the arms, and gave an account of their owners, whom the ladies took the freedom to praise or dispraise; whence, sometimes, the word blazon is taken to praise or dispraise.

Then challenges were given by the knights to one another, which were performed, by touching their shields with such weapon as they were to just with, either with blunts or sharps. For the better understanding of which, I shall add here a piece of a formula of a tournament, held at Inguleuerm in France, in the year 1580, sent by the French lords and gentlemen to the English, by way of a challenge, as in Segar's Treatise of Honour Civil and Military, Book III. being thus: "We likewise give you to understand, that such order is taken, that every "one of us shall have his shield and impress hung on the outside of his pavilion, "to the end if any one of you desire to run at tilts, then that the day before, you "may with a lance, or such as you intend to joust with, touch the shield; and "who intends to try his fortune, with blunt and sharp, must touch the shield with "both, and signify his name and arms to them that have our shields in keeping."

Those who attended the shields, so hung and exposed, (which the French call "faire fenestre), Menestrier tells us, were the knights' servants or pages, who were dressed in such fashions as their masters fancied, making them sometimes appear like savages, Saracens, Moors, Sirens, and other monsters; and sometimes under the disguise of lions, bears, &c. who guarded the shields, with one or more heralds, to take an account of the names and arms of those, as also their weapons, with which they touched the shields, and to list them for combat. From which customs and form, says our author, came the use of tenants and supporters, representing men and beasts, at the sides of the shield: So that those, it seems, who were qualified to be admitted into jousts and tournaments, though but gentlemen had right to carry supporters; but now they are allowed to none under the dignity of a lord-baron, except those who have right to them by prescription. But more of this afterwards, when I come to treat of the exterior ornaments.

Having given my reader a general idea of the rise, growth, and improvement of arms, to the present structure we now find them in, called Armorial Achievements, I must put an end to this general discourse, to begin and proceed to treat separately, as I have proposed, of all the figures and pieces of armories, with their attributes and proper terms, in the following chapters of this treatise.

C H A P. II.

OF THE DEFINITION AND DIVISION OF ARMS.

I DEFINE Arms, hereditary marks of honour, regularly composed of certain tinctures and figures, granted or authorised by sovereigns, for distinguishing, differencing, and illustrating persons, families, and communities.

These marks of honour being represented upon shields, surcoats, banners, pensons, and other military instruments and ensigns, as is said before, are called arms, coats of arms, and armorial ensigns; by the French, armories; and in Latin, Arma Gentilitia, Tesserae Gentilitiae, Insignia, Phrenosebemata, & Deigmata.

Hereditary marks of honour, regularly composed of certain tinctures and figures, distinguish arms from other signs and marks of soldiers, merchants and tradesmen, which are but arbitrary, during pleasure; as also from hieroglyphics, symbols, emblems and devices, which have no fixed and certain tinctures, but may be composed of any colours or figures.

The words, Granted or authorised by sovereigns, exclude all arbitrary marks and signs; such as those assumed by the ignoble at their own pleasure, which cannot be called ensigns of honour, however like to arms they may seem: For, "Nemo potest dignitatem sibi arrogare sine principis licentia. None can assume the "marks of honour, without the allowance of the sovereign;" arms being only allowed to the noble, and the ignoble are discharged the use of them, by the laws of all well-governed nations.

The words, For distinguishing, differencing, and illustrating persons, families, and communities, show the three principal ends of arms.

The first, is to distinguish the noble from the ignoble, the worthy from the unworthy, by marks of honour and noble descent, conferred by princes upon their well-deserving subjects and their families, in reward of their virtuous actions and brave attempts.

The second end of arms, is to difference the branches or cadets of one and the same family; that the first may be known from the second, and he again from the third, and the third from the fourth, and so on, were there never so many of them.

The third end and design of arms, is to illustrate persons, families, and communities, with ensigns of noble descent, and other additaments of honour, within and without the shield: All which I shall fully handle in this Treatise of Heraldry.

The division which I make of arms, in order to my intended method, is, into essential parts, and accidental ones, and of parts within and without the shield, and of their various species and kinds.

By the first, I understand tinctures and figures, without which, no arms can be. By accidental, attributes which follow figures in their various shapes, as ingrailed, inveeted, embattelled, &c. The parts within the shield, are those contained within the limits of the shield: And, by parts without the shield, I understand the exterior ornaments, such as crests, helmets, mantlings, supporters, &c. And as for the species and kinds of arms, such as, arms of alliance, of patronage, gratitude, concession, dominion, noble fees and pretensions; all which I shall fully treat of in their proper places. And, before I proceed, I shall here give a description of those utensils and things, upon which arms have been anciently, and of late placed; such as, the surcoat, ensign, and shield.

C H A P. III.

THESE are called by heralds, the three principal signs of honour, upon the account that arms have been commonly placed upon them; which I shall here briefly describe.

The surcoat, is a thin, loose, light, taffeta coat, used by military men over their armour; upon which their arms were painted or embroidered, that they might be distinguished in time of battle. Sovereigns and other great men are represented on the equestrian side of their seals, on horseback, with such surcoats of arms. Sandford, in his Genealogical History of England, tells us, "That Gilbert Earl of Clare was killed in the battle of Bannockburn by the Scots, for want of his " surcoat of arms; who otherwise would have been saved, because he was a near " kinsman to King Robert the Bruce." These surcoats were much of the same shape and form of those now worn by heralds.

The other principal sign of honour, is the ensign; under which general name, are comprehended standards, banners, pennons, gideon, and gonfanouns.

The first two, standards and banners, are of a square form, painted or embroidered with the whole achievements of those, who have right to display them in the field, or in solemnities; and anciently they were allowed to none under the degree of a knight-bannneret.

The pennon and gideon are of an oblong figure, and ending in a sharp point or two, carried on the points of spears; and on them are only painted a part of the owner's arms, such as his device, crest, and motto.

The gonfanoun is a banner or standard of the church, which is square, but has three labels or fanions (i.e. pieces of stuff, from which it is named), hanging down; and the bearers thereof are called gonfaloniers.

Arms have also appeared anciently upon the furniture of horses, such as the caparisons, as may be seen on the seals of kings, and other great men, who are represented on horseback, holding on their left arm the shield of their arms, and the same armorial figures embroidered on the caparisons of their horses. I have seen a seal of Alexander II. King of Scotland, appended to a charter of confirmation of several lands to the abbacy of Melrose, upon which he is represented sitting on a throne with a crown on his head, in his right hand a sceptre, and in his left a sword: On the other side of this seal, he is represented on horseback in his coat of mail, holding in his right hand a sword, and on his left arm a shield, with the arms of Scotland, and the same arms are on the caparisons of his horse. Sandford, in his Genealogical History, makes King Edward I. of England, the first of their kings that had the arms of England on the caparisons of his horse; so that the custom of placing arms upon caparisons was sooner with us than in England. I have seen the seals of the earls of March, Fife, &c. appended to evidents in the reign of Alexander III., wherein they were represented on horseback, holding their shield of arms; and the same on the caparisons of their horses.

I shall not insist here further upon several other things, on which arms have been placed, but proceed to the principal one, the shield, called by the ancients Scutum, from the Greek word σκοτυς, Corium, because they were made or covered with hides of beasts. From Scutum comes also the French Ecu and Escuion; the English Escutcheon; and the Italian Scudo, for a shield: From which also came these titles of honour, Scutifer, Scutiger; the Spanish Escudros; the French Esquire; and the English Esquire.

The shield was also called Clypeos, κύπεος, Sculpere to engrave; because figures of armorial bearings or achievements were commonly painted, engraven, or imbossed upon it; as Virgil,

Materum Clypeos, Danaunque insignia nobis Aptenus.
OF THE SURCOAT, ENSIGN, AND SHIELD.

As the shield was a necessary instrument in defence of the body, so was it with the ancients an honourable badge or sign; for, with the Grecians and Romans, they who returned from the battle without it, were in great disgrace, and interdicted from holy things, as the antiquaries of those nations write. And as the shield was necessary and honourable, so it was judged by all nations the most convenient tabula, to contain marks of valour and honour, as Becmannus very well observes, Dissert. VI. Chap. VIII. " Scutum cur veteres potissimum eligerent, ratio fuit & quod inter arma maxime conspicuum esset, ac defensivis pariter atque offensivis " armis omnibus nobilium habetur."

Antiquaries, historians, and heralds, amuse us with many various forms of shields used by the ancients, which are but of little use to us, therefore I shall be very brief with them. There is no kingdom, people, or country, but have had several forms and fashions of shields, as they have had of apparel, of which I shall give here only some few forms, ancient and modern, that have been generally known and received all Europe over.

Shields for the most part of old were to be seen triangular on the ancientest monuments, seals and coins; by the French called l'Ancien Ecu, as in Plate I. fig. 1. that is the ancient shield: And from this triangular form, came the custom in heraldry, of placing the greatest number of figures above, and the smallest below, as 2 and 1; and if more figures, such as stars, 4, 3, 2, and 1. This form of shield is to be seen on our ancientest monuments with figures so situated.

The other form of a shield, Plate I. fig. 2. now universally used, is square, rounded and pointed at the bottom, as Monsieur Baron describes it, in his Art of Blazon; "Quarré arrondi & pointu par la bas," which they say is after the fashion of the Samnite shield used by the Romans. Sylvester Petra Sancta, in his Treatise of Heraldry, cap. 11. says, "Existimo enim ad scuti Samnici formam inferne cuneatam & pinnatam, aequali autem superne exigi posse materiatum scuti hujus honorarii figurationem." Shields after this form, are commonly made use of by the Britons, French, and Germans.

The Spaniards and Portuguese, have the like form of shields; but they are round at the bottom, without a point, Plate I. fig. 3. The Germans, besides the former, have other forms of shields whereon they place their arms; two of which I shall here add. The first has its sides sloping, and again bulging at the flanks, as fig. 4. and the other, as fig. 5. has nicks and notches, called a shield-chancere; because a shield after this form was used of old by them as a convenient one for resting the lance upon the notch, and in giving a thrust; yet its form is not so convenient as the former ones to receive armorial figures. The two shields first mentioned, have been, and are more frequently used than any other form of shields.

Besides these various forms of shields, we find them also frequently distinguished by their different positions; some being carried erect, and others pendant, or hanging by the right or left upper corner: This the French call Escu Pendu, and the Italians, Scuto Pendente; the reason given for it, is, that when tiltings and tournaments were proclaimed, they that were to joust in these military exercises, were obliged to hang up their shields of arms some days before the time of exercise, along the windows and balconies of the houses, near the place of action, and if in the field, upon trees, pavilions, or barriers of the place of jousting; that they who were judges, or otherwise assisted in these noble exercises, might know the actors. Columbian says, "That they who were to fight on foot had their shields hung by the right corner, and they on horseback by the left." This position of the shield is called pendant by some, and coubé by others, and was very frequent all Europe over, from the eleventh century to the fourteenth. But all the shields coubé or pendant that I have met with of the sons of the royal family of Scotland and England, and of the nobility of these kingdoms, were pendant, or coubé by the sinister, and very few by the dexter corner: The shield, pendant, or coubé, when lying on the right side, was then a mark that the owner thereof had formerly been exercised in tournaments, into which none were admitted but those that were truly noble. And it may not be improper here to observe, that no sovereign ever carried his shield pendant or coubé; because, as sovereigns, they never formally entered the lists of tournaments.
The Italians, for the most part, have their shields of arms after an oval form, fig. 6. in imitation, it is thought, of those used by Popes, and other eminent churchmen. Their learnedest writer on heraldry, Sylvester Petra Sancta, regrets the use of oval shields in Italy, who says, "Nunc figura Scuti ovalis usurpatur, retinetur quae nescio an ex pictorum & sculptorum imperitia." Others tell us, that the oval shield is not so honourable as those we have given before, as not representing any ancient nobility or descent, nor glory purchased in war, but a burgherly or citizen fame, and praise of learning, as Philobertas Camponile, whose words the anonymous author of Observationes Eugenio-logicæ, Lib. II. cap. 5. gives us thus, "Ejusmodi scuti rotundis non indicari vetustam originem, nec partem in bello gloriam, sed urbano laudem, solum famam Eruditionis ac Literarum." And our anonymous author, in his forecited place, adds, "Qui nullo gaudet Nobilitatis Jure, vel qui per Artes Mechanicas allow modo co Jure destitutus est, signa si qua habet, neuitiquam in scuto aut Clypeo exhibere posse; sed aut in forma rotunda aut ovali, & a scuto distincta;" i. e. Those who have not the privilege of nobility, or have had, and lost the privilege, by using mechanical arts, or by any other means, cannot place their arms on a formal shield, but on round or oval ones. But though oval shields be not looked upon as honourable in some countries, and especially in our author's country, Flanders, yet in Italy, we find not only the popes, and churchmen of noble descent, place their arms on oval shields or cartouches, but even the secular princes in Italy; which they would not do, if they looked upon round or oval shields, as any way derogatory from their honour, but still retain them, as of the ancientest form used by the Romans.

Women place their paternal arms on lozenges and fusils. The lozenge is a square figure, with one of its angles upmost, Plate r. fig. 7.; and the fusil is such another, but longer than broad, and its upmost and undermost angles sharper than those at the sides, fig. 8. Plutarch tells, in the life of Theseus, That in the city of Megara, (in his time), the tomb-stones, under which the bodies of the Amazons lay, were shaped after the form of a lozenge; which some conjecture to be the cause why women have their arms upon lozenges. Others again, that the fusil signifies a spindle, and represents one full of yarn, a proper instrument for women. Sylvanus Morgan, and other English heralds, fancy, that the form of shields used by men was taken from Adam's spade, and women's from Eve's spindle. The French have a saying from their pretended Salic law, "Nunquam coronar lanceae transub seriat ad fusum;" "the crown of France passes not from the lance to the distaff or fusil." Sylvester Petra Sancta will have the form of women's shields to represent a cushion, whereupon they used to sit and spin, or do other housewifery, and calls it, "Pulvillum in quo exercent mulieres lintearia opificia." Sir John Ferne has another notion of a woman's shield, to be from that square one, used sometimes by the Romans, called Tessera, which they finding unfit for war, did afterwards allow to women, to place their paternal ensigns upon, with one of its angles always upmost, as a tessera of their noble descent. I have given these few forms of shields, generally made use of all Europe over, and passed over many other forms, which some writers ascribe to the ancients, as being of no use to this science, nor a part of blazon. I shall add here the form of a cartouch, upon the account that some heralds tell us, That they, who have not right to carry arms on formal shields, may place them on cartouches. Favin, in his Theatre of Honour, and Menestrier, in his Treatise of Exterior Ornaments, and in his Abregé Methodique des Armorries, gives us this form of a cartouch, fig. 9. carried by the village of Lyons in France. Others, again, tell us, That cartouches, i. e. false shields or compartments, are most frequently oval, having a mullet or frame round it, with flourishes coupe tortile, like to that used by the Popes, out of humility as they pretend. Monsieur L'Abbé Dancet, in his Dictionary, says, "A cartouche, ornamental qne d'un fait de sculpture & de peinture qui représente des rouleaux des cartes coupées & tortillées;" such as these embellishments which are placed at the sides of geographical maps, and frontispieces of books, wherein are commonly placed the names of countries, titles of books, marks and figures of merchants and tradesmen; and are like those compartments below achievements of arms whereon the supporters stand, and in which are placed the names, designations, &c. belonging to the owners.
OF THE TINCTURES, &c.

So then formal shields, above given, are ancient and honourable signs, and used by all nations, for placing on them the fixed figures of noble families, yet in the blazon of them, neither the form nor position of the shield is ever mentioned, though it be the continent, or containing part of armories; and whether we consider the shield itself as a solid or geometrical body, or as the imitation of such a body, drawn with lines or purfles, by a pen or pencil, upon paper, or any thing: The superficies of that geometrical body, or the space within the bounding lines, is called with us and the English, the field; by the Italians and Spaniards, campo; and by the Latins, area, fundus, campus; and must be of the tinctures received in this science, of which I proceed to treat.

CHAP. IV.

OF THE TINCTURES, OR ARMORIAL COLOURS.

The essential parts of arms, (by some called the Elements of Armories), by our former definition, are Tinctures and Figures. Tincture is a general word for metals and colours made use of in the science of heraldry; and, in place of it, the French use the word Emaux, i.e. Enamelling, in placing colour upon gold and silver, the two metals in armories.

The tinctures, or armorial colours are seven, viz. two metals, gold and silver, and five colours, blue, red, black, green, and purple.

These tinctures are said, by Sylvester Petra Sancta and others, to be taken from the livery of the four companies which acted upon the Roman theatres; and Me mestrier would have them brought from the Roman legions, as in his L'Origine de l'Art du Blason.

In this science, tinctures, as well as figures, have their proper and fixed terms all Europe over, to which heralds hold close in their blazons; so that almost all nations understand and receive them in these terms, as an universal language, which we very much owe to the French. And the terms of the tinctures are these:

There have been some debates among heralds, which of these tinctures are most honourable. All agree in giving precedence to the metals or and argent; but the contest is in ranking the colours, some esteeming them more noble, according to nature, as they partake most of light. As Upton, a canon of Sarum-Wells in England, in his Treatise of Arms, ranks them thus: azure, gules, purpure, vert; sable, preferring azure to gules, grounding his opinion on that saying, "Colores esse nobiliores, aut ignobiliores quo de albedine vel nigredine plus participant."

Others prefer those colours that can be best distinguished at the greatest distance, and the further these distinctions or colours appear, they are, according to them, the more nascible and commendable; upon which head they tell us, the Imperial Black Eagle is placed in a white field. Gerard Leigh prefers gules to azure, because it is nearer to the colour of the metal or than azure, which participates of the metal argent. And some prefer sable before vert and purpure, because its deepness is more conspicuous at a distance; and they prefer vert to purpure, because the last was but lately received into this science. But all these precedencies given to tinctures must be considered with this proviso, that there be no other special reasons for the bearing of them otherwise in the ensigns of kingdoms and families.

In all coats of arms there must be, at least, two tinctures; and there is a general rule given by heralds, that the field should be of a more noble tincture than...

the figure placed upon it; as in the arms of Scotland, the field is or, the figure, the lion, is gules. Again, if the field consist of two different tinctures, parted per fess, parted per pale, &c. the noblest tincture should be on the upper part, or on the right side of the shield, as Hoppingius, Cap. XI. lex. 4. "Quoties arma quatuor ex diversis coloribus, semper nobilior color nobiliori in loco ponendus;" providing always, as before, there be no other special reason for the contrary.

Those tinctures at the first view, when painted and illuminated, are known by their natural colours; and when carved and engravet on copperplate, they were anciently known by the initial letters of their names. But now in Taille-douce they are known by points, hatches, or small lines; which contrivance some impute to the French, and others to the Italian, Sylvester Petra Sancta; which I shall here show, as I speak separately of the tinctures.

1. Or, a French word which signifies gold, its colour is yellow; and in Latin blazons, these words are used for it, aureus color, aureum, luteum, croceum, flavum, galbium. This tincture was anciently known in engravings by the letter O, but now by points and ticks, as fig. 1. Plate I.

2. Argent, i. e. silver, its colour is white; the Latins say, argentus color, albus, and argentum. It was anciently known in Taille-douce by the letter A, but now it is blank, and has no mark, as fig. 2.

3. Azure, i. e. blue, is said to have come from an Arabic or Persian word lazard or lazurion, which signifies the same; it is variously latinized by heralds, caeruleus, cyanus, glaucum, and caesium. It was represented by the letter B, now by horizontal or thwart hatches, as fig. 3.

4. Gules, or Gueules, i. e. red; some bring it from gula, the throat, because it is always red; others from an Arabian word gule, which signifies a red rose; and others will have it from esculentum, cocheinal, wherewith they dye scarlet: The Latins, for gules, say, rosenus color; ruber, rubeus; sanguineus, cocciineus; and Petra Sancta uses these words, puniceum, purpureum; concibuleatum, ostreum, mineo vel cinnabri illusum. Gules was known in Taille-douce by the letter R, now by perpendicular hatches. Fig. 4.

5. Sable, i. e. black; some would have it come from the black furr called sables; others from the French word cable, which signifies sand or earth, being dark or black: The Latins say, nigreus, succus, fusus, ater, & tabuleum. It was known by the letter S, and now, in engravings, by cross hatches, perpendicular and horizontal, as fig. 5.

6. Vert, the common French word for green, is not used in their blazons; but the word sinople, taken from the town Sinople in the Levant, where the best materials for dying green are found.

I find green termed peasin, from a Greek word which signifies a leek; the Latins say, viridus or praesium. It was known by the letter V, now by thwart or diagonal hatches from right to left, as fig. 6.

I must take leave a little here, to give the opinion of ancient heralds, who say, that the last two colours were not so soon received in armories, especially in England, as the former colours. John Bassardo, of that nation, who wrote in the reign of Richard II. says, That in armories there were two principal colours, white and black, and the other three, yellow, blue, and red, were composed out of the first two, and that some heralds of late added the colour green. Henry Spelman, his countryman, who wrote long after him, tells us, that the colour purpure was but newly added, and that he did never see that colour in English arms. Menestrier says likewise, That in France, purpure was never found in arms, except to represent the natural colour of fruits, as grapes,—of birds, as peacocks, &c. which are then blazoned proper; that is, in their natural colours:—For if purpure had been an armorial colour, it would not have been wanting in the ensigns of Kings and Princes, where it is not to be met with, neither have I found it in any of our nobility and gentry's arms, but of late, in a new family.

was called Nacre-murex: And the reason it was not so frequent in heraldry, was, that the shell-fish, in which that material was found, and the art of extracting or perfecting it, has been lost, ever since the Turks got possession of the fisheries at Tyre, and other places, where these shell-fishes grew. And the colour which we have in place of it, being composed of a red and a little black, or, as some say, of red and blue, has not been thought worthy to be received as an armorial colour. And though it be pretended by some, that the lion in the arms of the kingdom of Leon in Spain, and the horse in the arms of Westphalia, and the lion in the arms of Bohemia, are of the colour purpure, and have been so blazoned by some, yet here-in they are mistaken; for gules, i. e. red, is called purpureus color, as before, by Sylvester Petra Sancta: And Bartorus, the lawyer and herald, who obtained right from the Emperor to carry the arms of Bohemia, knew the colour of his own arms best, and gives them thus in his Treatise de Insignitius, "Ut ego & omnes de agni " tione men leonem rubem eum causis dubius in campo aureo portaremus."

That purpure and gules are all one armorial colour is clear; and that which gave occasion to some to believe that purpure was used of old as a distinct colour, is only the alteration (says MeneWRAPPER) that is made sometimes on silver towards the colour purple, especially when silver lies in moist places, and is exposed to the weather; which made some unadvisedly to blazon the silver horse of Westphalia, purpure: And it is the known reason, why illuminators and painters make no use of silver for writing, but only of gold, because the silver turns to a purpure colour. Sylvester Petra Sancta says, The reason why purpure is seldom used in armories, is, because it is only made use of by churchmen at the altars, and not by military men in the camp: His words are these, "Quia violatius color aris non castris me- ruit, nec fuit in vestibus & in eleypiis honoraris qui castra sequabantur."

Besides these five colours named, the English heralds give other two colours, more rarely used than purpure, and of less esteem; such as tenney and sanguine, which I cannot pass over, lest I seem to omit a part of the English heraldry.

These two colours are, by the English heralds, appropriated to abatements of honour, and so are dishonourable stained colours; yet, says Guillim, if other figures be of these two colours, they are looked upon as honourable: But neither he, nor others, have ever given instances of any honourable families carrying figures of such colours that I have met with. Randal Holm, who wrote since Guillim, in his Academy of Armory, speaking of colours, says, "These two last colours, saniu- ine and tenney, have been used by the Dutch and Germans, but not with us in "England; and, therefore," says he, "I do not set them down in the plate of "cuts with the other colours." And in the 18th page of his book says, "There "are indeed properly no more than four colours in arms with British men; which "are gules, azure, sable, and verde; and two metals, or and argent."

Of these two metals and four colours, are all the fields and figures of arms, except some natural figures, such as grapes, oranges, peacocks, &c. which, when they are represented in their natural colours, are then blazoned proper, without mentioning their colours. Some heralds will have those tinctures above-mentioned to have mystical significations, and to represent moral, politic, and military virtues, in the bearers of such colours; which fancies I designedly omit as ridiculous: For arms, of whatsoever tinctures they be, are equally noble, data paritate gestantium, if the bearers of them be of equal dignity. But lest I should seem to be defective in this part of armories, and because most of the English writers not only insist too tedious on their virtues and qualities which they fancy they represent, but give out for a rule in this science, that gentlemen’s arms should be blazoned by tinctures, the nobility’s by precious stones, and sovereign princes’ by planets, to show their supposed eminent virtues, by which also they blazon. Of such fantastical blazons, I shall subjoin the following scheme; and if it seem too narrow for some, who love to use other different ways, by the months, days of the week, &c. I recommend them to John Feme's Glory of Generosity.

That these are but mere fancies, and are likewise unfit for the art in which they are employed, is clear from the following reasons given by Sir George Mackenzie of Roscaugh, in his Science of Heraldry, p. 19.

I. The French, from whom the English derive their heraldry, and to whom they conform themselves, not only in principles and terms of art, but even in extrinsic words of the French language, do not only disallow these different ways of blazoning, but constantly treat them in ridicule.

II. The Italian, Spanish, and Latin heralds, use no such different forms, but blazon by the ordinary colours and metals, as Sylvester Petra Sancta in his Treatise, p. 58. "Non variari nomina debent metallorum vel colorum in magnatum, aut in Regum Insignias, pro hac re provoco ad Scriptores cæteros qui Gallice, Germanicæ, aut Latine hac de re dissercurunt."

The great design of heraldry, is, to have the art of blazon universal, and to have the arms they describe, generally understood in all nations; yes, and even Mr Cartwright their countryman, does condemn these ways as fantastical.

III. Art should imitate nature; and as it would be an unnatural thing in common discourse, not to call red, red, because a prince wears it; so it is unnatural to use these terms in heraldry; and it may fall out to be very ridiculous in some blazons: As for instance, if a prince had for his arms, an ass cobant under his burthen, gules, it were very ridiculous to say, that he had an ass cobant Mars; for the word Mars will agree very ill with asses, sheep, lambs, and many other things which are to be painted red in heraldry; and a hundred other examples may be given, but it is enough to say, that this is to confound colours with charges, and the things that are borne, with colours.

IV. As this is unnecessary, so it confounds the reader, and makes the art unpleasant, and deters gentlemen and others from studying it, and strangers from understanding what our heraldry is; nor could the arms of our princes and nobility be translated in this disguise into any other language.

But that which convincest me most, (says our learned author,) that this is an error, is, because it makes the great rule unnecessary, whereby colour cannot be put upon colour, or metal upon metal, for this cannot hold, but when metals and colours are employed, and named.

Having now fully treated of armorial colours, as the first elements or essential parts of armories, according to that part of the above definition, composed of tinctures and figures, I lay it down as a principle, that a shield of one of the foresaid tinctures only, without any figure, cannot be called a coat of arms, or an armorial bearing, no more than a red coat or a black hat, arms; and no more than a piece of virgin-wax can be called a seal, nor a sheet of clean paper an evident, for two tinctures are absolutely necessary, at least, to form a coat of arms; and when two tinctures meet in one shield, (though there be no proper or natural figure,) there appears a partition or terminating line, which makes a figure, however small; and is sufficient to make an armorial bearing, as will appear by the following partitions of the field, and of furrs, ermine and vair, of which I proceed to treat.
OF THE FURRS IN HERALDRY, &c.

C H A P. V.

OF THE FURRS IN HERALDRY, ERMIN AND VAIR.

Furrs used in arms are two, ermine and vair, which are composed of two or more of the foresaid tinctures: Heralds generally bring their first use in armories, from the robes and mantles of princes and chief commanders, which were lined or doubled with such furrs.

Ferne, in his Lacie's Nobility, p. 72, says, That Priamus, King of Troy, in a mantle doubled with ermine, fought against the Grecians; and that the old Dukes of Brittany in France, as deriving their descent from him, carried ermine; which that dukedom continues to carry till this day. Columbier, Sir George Mackenzie, and others, tell us, That le Seignior de Causus, fighting in Hungary, and perceiving his army to fly, did pull out the lining or doubling of his cloak, which was of the furr vair, and displayed it as an ensign to rally his men; which, for its good effect, became the fixed armorial bearing of that seigniory.

That furrs were ancienly in use in arms, we have an ancient instance of Pope Innocent III. who, in giving absolution to Henry of Falkenburg, as being accessory to the slaughter of Conrad, the first Bishop of Wurtzburg, enjoined him, for penance, to fight against the Saracens, but never to appear in ermine and vair, or any other armorial colours made use of in tournements.

Sir George Mackenzie gives another rise to furrs in his Science of Heraldry, where he says, "As shields were anciently painted, or covered with skins, as the targets or shields of our Highlanders yet are, the painting gave occasion to the colours formerly treated of, and the covering to the furrs or skins now used, which I take," says he, "to be a better rise for their being in arms than to say that they were used in mantles or garments." But, with all due deference to that great man, I think that Sylvester Petra Sancta, and others, with a great deal of reason and probability, bring both the tinctures and furrs in armories, from the habits and garments of military men and civil magistrates, to the shield:—of which more particularly in the Chapter of Partitions. But to proceed to the description of furrs in armories.

There are then two principal furrs, ermine and vair; with their different kinds. Ermine is the skin of a little beast, about the bigness of a squirrel, whose fur is altogether white except the tip of his tail, which is black, with which the white fur is besprinkled for beauty's sake; and for its rarity and beauty is looked upon as a royal and noble furr. The Kings of Scotland and England have their royal robes doubled with this furr: And a distinguishing sign of the degrees of nobility in Britain, is, the number of rows or bars of ermine allowed to them by sovereigns, to wear on their robes, as signs of their degrees of nobility. A duke, in his mantle of state, has four bars of ermine allowed him; a marquis, three and a half; the earls, three; the viscounts and lords, say our present writers, have only their mantles and robes faced up with a white furr, taken for a Litivite's skin. This furr is so much esteemed by our European Kings, that, as Menestier tells us, at the coronation of Henry II. of France, for want of true ermines to line his robes, they were forced to make use of cloth of silver, spotted with pieces of black velvet, to represent ermine.

Several heralds have been at pains to trace the etymology of ermine. Some, probably enough, derive it from Armenia, where this little creature is to be found. For the furr ermine the Latins say, muris Armeniae vellus; and sometimes exuvia Pontici muris, from the country of Pontus, where it is also to be found. And it is observed by some, that those got there are not so white, neither the tip of their tail so black, as those in Armenia, from which country it has more commonly its name. Others, as Edward Bolton in his Elements of Armories, Chap. XXX. disapproves the derivation of ermine from Armenia; because these creatures are called there garunatales; and he brings the name from bermes or berme, which were long square stones, formed like a statue, set up anciently by the Romans in their public ways; and dedicated to Mercury; and these bermes or berme were used also in adorning sepulchres and libraries. So, by this hardy derivation of Bolton's, every spot of ermine in arms stands for a berme, or shadow thereof, turning a shield, ermine, into a Roman Atrium, which contained the images or statues of the noble Romans. This derivation, however improbable it may seem, I thought fit to give, in regard it hath some congruity with the most probable opinion, that armories had their rise from the Faur Imaginum.

Ermine is represented by a white field powdered or semé of black spots, irregularly disposed as it were; which black spots have their points upward, and topped with three ticks of black, as fig. 8. And when a shield, or field, or figure, is of this furr, argent and sable, it is, in the blazon, only called ermine.

As for its different kinds, or sorts, in armories, they are after the same form, but of different tintures: As, if the field be sable, and the spots argent, it is called contre ermine; by the English, erminet, fig. 9. If the field be or, and the spots sable, the English call it erminois; and when the field is black, and the spots or, they call it pean. And they have another sort which they call erminits; that is, when a hair of red, or a little gules, is placed at the sides of the black spots in a white field. But the last three sorts are rarely to be met with, even in English blazons, being the peculiar inventions of English heralds. The French and we use them not; and if they occur, they would be blazoned or, same de spots, sable, or sable powdered with ermines, or; and not make use of the words, erminois, pean, and erminett, not knowing what they signify.

Ermine, and its kinds, have two tintures, by what is represented. The spots are in place of figures, and so make a complete armorial bearing; and, as such, ermine has been carried by the Dukes of Bretagne, which we blazon only ermine; the French say, d'ermines; and the Latins say, scutum Arminius multis svelere descriptum. This ducally was annexed to the kingdom of France by Lewis XII. marrying Anne, the only daughter and heir of Francis II. and last duke of Bretagne.

The fields, and figures, or pieces of armories, which are laid upon the field as charges, frequently with us and other nations, are of this fur; and, when the field is ermine, it may be charged with figures of any of the metals or colours before-mentioned. And the figures being ermine, may be laid upon fields either of metal or colour; because furres are composed of two tintures, metal and colour, and so may either charge, or be charged, without any breach of the rule, Not to place metal upon metal, nor colour upon colour, of which I shall give some instances, of carrying ermine as a field and charge.

The family of Soules with us, lords of Liddesdale, anciently carried ermine, three chevronets, gules; which I have observed marshalled sometimes in the achievements of the Douglass's, for the title of that lordship.

The surname of Menzies have the field of their arms ermine; and these also of the name of Monerief, McCulloch, Craigie, and many others, of whom afterwards. And the family of Hamilton charges the field of their arms, being gules, with three cinque foils ermine, to shew their descent from the old earls of Leicester in England. And these of the surname of Telsifer, Cowper, and Mushet, have some of their armorial figures ermine, to show their descent from Bretagne; and some of our senators of the College of Justice have assumed the fur ermine as senatorial.

The spots of ermine are many, and of an indeterminate number, being irregularly disposed on the field; but when a certain number of them, under ten, formally disposed, and situated after the position of any of the proper figures in heraldry, then the bearing is not to be blazoned ermine, the spots being charges, and are called with us ermine spots, by the French, mouchetures; and in the blazon, their name, number, and disposition are to be expressed. Gerard Leigh, an old English herald, in his Accidents of Armories, gives an example of this nature, thus, argent four queues (i.e. tails) of ermine placed in cross sable; the moderns call them four ermine spots, or mouchetures, in cross sable. Henderson of Fordel has on a chief of his arms, a crescent between two mouchetures. Hamilton of Innerwick has two mouchetures on his fesse; and Sir George Hamilton of Barnton has on his chevron, argent, a buckle, azure, betwixt two mouchetures, sable. Monsieur Baron, in his Art Heraldique, gives us the arms of De Vexin in French, " de gules au croissant d'argent, chargé de cinque mouchetures de sable;" i.e. gules, a cres-
OF THE FURR VAIR.

VAIR is the other principal furr in heraldry. Its pieces are always argent and azure, as fig. 10, and 11, of such esteem with the ancients in lining or doubbling of robes and mantles of Kings, princes, and senators, as heralds tell us, but differ among themselves about the nature of it. The most part, and learnedest of them, tell us, that it is the skin of a little beast like a weasel, called Varus, which Menestrier says, is thus described in a manuscript in the Vatican at Rome, "Varus est bestia parvula paulo amplior quam Mustela, a re nomen sortita, nam in "ventre candidat, in dorso cinereo colore variatur, adaeque elegantii, ut pellis ejus "in deliciis habeatur, nec nisi excellentibus viris, & mulieribus convenire judica "tur in orbibus bene moratis." From this beast Varus, whose back is blue, and belly white, they bring Vair; its proper colours, as I have said, being azure and argent. And when the head and feet of the beast are taken from its skin, it resembles much the figure of vair used in heraldry, as Sir George Mackenzie and John Ferne observe in their above-mentioned books.

Others, again, affirm, that this furr is not called vair from the beast Varus, but from variol velure, being composed of pieces of skins of various colours sewed together; and when they latini this furr, they say, Arma variata ex pelibus albis & ceruleis, so blazonns Mr Gibbon for the arms of Beauchamp, an eminent man in the reign of Edward I. who was at the siege of Carlaverock in Scotland. The learned Uredus, in his Blazons of Vair, says, "Scutum vario velure impressum," and so, with others, will have vair come from the Latin word vario, to vary and change.

Some latin vair, not from the various colours, but from the forms of the pieces of the furr, which seem to represent little shields, and so say, Vairia pelles scutulata. And Le Traph de'Arms will have these pieces of vair to represent pots, bells, or cups, ranged in a right line, of which some seem turned upside down, others upright, as fig. 11. Sometimes the cups, or bells, are ranged in such sort, that the points of one of the blue immediately touches another of the same colour, as do these of the colour argent; and this they call contre vair, as fig. 12. And some heraldis latin vair from the form of its pieces, which they take to represent caps or hats; as Uredus, in the Blazon of Guissnes, a French seigniory, and that of the arms of St Pole, being gules, three pales, vair, a chief, or, are thus latined by him, Scutum coccineu tribus palis velure petasato impressis, lemniscatum, summitate deauration: The word petasus, signifies a cap or hat with a broad brim; so that for vair, the Latins ordinarily say, "Scutum velere petasato argen-tio vicissim & ceruleo impressum," the arms of the family of Varena in Italy, which are canting arms, vair being relative to the name. And Menestrier tells us, the arms of Beauframpton in France being vair, are also canting, and relative to the name, who will have the form of the pieces of vair to represent bells, which Beaufray signifies befoyl, a belfry, a watch-tower or steeple, also an alarm-bell. The like may be said of the surname of Belches with us, who carry vair equivocally, relative to the name Belches.

We meet with grand vair and menu vair in French books. The first consists only of three tracts or ranges of pieces of vair; so the fewer they are the pieces are the larger, and latined by Sylvester Petra Sancta, "Petasi decumanni grandiores." Menu vair, or little vair, is where there are more tracts than four; and this is the ordinary vair used in armories, which is always of the tinctures argent and azure, as fig. 10. and 11. Which tinctures we do not express in blazon, but only the word vair, which is always supposed to be of these two colours. But if the pieces of vair be of other tinctures, then they are to be expressed, by saying vairé or vair of gules, and or, fig. 13.: As these of the Ferrers, earls of Derby, and their descendants Lords Ferrers of Chartley in England, who carried vairé, or, and gules; thus blazoned by Jacobus Willhemhus Imhoff, in his Treatise, Blazonia Regum pariumque Magnae Britanniae, "Ferrari, Comites Derbiæ & Baronæ de Chartley, scutum quo utebantur petasis aureis & rubeis variegatum est."
We meet often in French books vair or vairy, with their pieces otherwise ranged than the former, as fig. 14, which they call vair en pointe; of which Monsieur Baron, in his L'Art Heraldique, gives us the arms of Durant, which he blazons vair en pointe; and, when of other tinctures than argent and azure, vair en pointe, d'or & de gueder.

There is another fur rarely to be met with, but in the books of our English writers, as fig. 15, which Gerard Leigh calls Meire, a term used by them when the field is gritte, as John Ferne says; that is, when the field is composed equally of pieces of metal and colour alternately, as vair, cicévé, lazenge, and meire. The last, of which we are speaking, is composed of pieces representing cups or goblets, always of the tinctures of argent and azure alternately. And the foresaid Leigh blazons this coat vairy cappy (or tassy); and his countryman, Mr Gibbon, in his Introductio ad Latitam Blazonianum, calls it, "Campum cuppis vel tassis variag-

But Guillim, and other modern heralds, say, the pieces of this fur do not represent the heads of crutches, and blazon it, potent contre potent, argent and azure; Potent, an English word signifying a crutch, from the French word potence, a gallows, or cross like a T. The name of Burcau, in France, have a cheron of these figures in their arms, which is blazoned by Sylvester Petra Sancta, "Cantherius ex repetitis mutuo insertis patibulis;" and Mr Gibbon calls it, "Cantherium patibulatum;" and the English heralds, Potent contre potent; as in the foresaid figure.—Of which more particularly afterwards, in the Chap. of Cross-ses, at the title, Of the Cross Potent, or Potence.

Having, I think, sufficiently treated of the nature and forms of furs used in armor-aries, which are a compound of metal and colour, and are sufficient of themselves, without the addition of any other figure, to stand for a complete coat of arms; when they are a field of arms, may be indifferently charged, either with metal or colour; and when charges or pieces are of those furs, they may be laid on a field either of metal or colour, without offending the rule of heraldry, Not to put metal upon metal, or colour upon colour. I now proceed to the principal points of the shield.

C H A P. VI.

OF THE POINTS AND PARTS OF THE SHIELD; AND FORMS OF LINES, WHICH DIVIDE THE SHIELD INTO SEVERAL PARTS.

I HAVE described the shield under several forms, and clothed it with armorial tinctures and furs. I shall proceed now to show its points or niduli, as the Latin term them, in which figures are situated, and from them have additional terms in the blazons, to show in what parts of the shield they stand, and how disposed of.

The names of the points and parts of the shield are taken from the parts of a man, whom the shield is supposed to represent; of which I have given two schemes, Plate II.

In fig. 1, Plate II. the letters A B C represent the highest part of the shield, which the French call chef, the head. The English and we write it chief, as it were the most honourable and chief part of the shield.

D is called the collar, or honour point; because eminent men do wear their badges of honour about their necks, as the Knights of the Thistle, Garter, Holy Ghost, Golden Fleece, &c.

E is called the cœur (or heart) point, as also the centre or fesse point.

F, the nombre or the navel point.

G H, by the French, are called the flanque points; but by the English, the base points. And I, by all nations, the base point.

A is the dexter chief point; B the middle chief point; C the sinister chief point; G the right base point; H the sinister base point: But the French call them flanques; and the letter I under them, they call the base point. The use of these points is to difference coats of arms charged with the same figures: For arms having a lion in chief, differ from those which have a lion in the nombre point; and arms that have
OF THE LINES.

The lines used in armories, in dividing the shield into different parts, and in composing of figures, are of different forms, without which many arms would be one and the same; for a chief wavy differs from a plain chief, by the lines which compose them: And there are particular reasons for these different forms of lines, as shall be observed hereafter. These lines, according to their forms and names, give denomination to the pieces or figures which they form, except the straight or plain line. The crooked lines are these following: The first two lines, Plate II. named ingrailed and inverted, when represented together, are somewhat known, the one from the other, being opposite to one another, both being made (as it were) of semicircles, the ingrailed with points upward, and the inverted line with points downward. But this is not yet a sufficient distinction; for suppose the space betwixt them, which form, be a fesse, then it is only ingrailed and not inverted; for a fesse ingrailed must have the points on both sides turned towards the field, and the convex or gibbose parts towards the fesse itself; and so of a bend, chevron, and other proper figures in heraldry: And if these be inverted, then the convex parts of the line are towards the field; but these lines are more clearly distinguished, when placed by way of border, as fig. 1. Plate II. with the letters within a border ingrailed, and in fig. 2. within a border inverted. These two lines, ingrailed and inverted, are more hard to be distinguished, when the field is divided into two equal parts of different tinctures, as parted per pale, parted per fesse, &c.
Here we know not whether the line be ingrailed or invected, except we observe this rule. That the form of the line must be applied to the colour first named. The French, for ingrailed, say engrele; and for invected, canelé. And those who write in Latin, commonly say, for ingrailed, ingrediatus, imbricatus, and striatus; and for invected, invectus and canaliculatus; as Sylvester Petra Sancta.

Wavey, or wavedd, is said of a line or lines that are formed after the waves of the sea, as parted per fesse wavey in the arms of Drummond of Concraig, Plate II. fig. 4.; and the lines which form the bars waved in the arms of the earl of Perth, which signifies, that the bearer got his arms for services done at sea; as Sir George MacKenzie says, That the Drummonds bear the three bars or faces unde or wavey, because the first of that name came by sea with Queen Margaret, who was married to Malcolm Canmore, as master of the ship, and having suffered great storm, through which he, by his skill, conducted them. He did thereafter get the three faces wavey, representing waves; which form of line, the French term unde or ondé; and the Latin, undulatus, undosus, or undatus. Nebulé, so called, because the line represents a cloud. The French heralds call it nuance; the Latins, nebula linea; and is given also to such as have been eminent for their skill in navigation.

Crenellé, or embattled lines, represent the battlements of a house; and are said to signify, in armories, skill in architecture,—valiant actions in defending or assaulting castles,—or to show the bearer to be descended of a noble house; for of old, none were admitted to embattle their houses but great barons; as Cambden observes, who speaking of Tunstal's seat in England, says, "Rex dedit ei licentiam "canellare mansam." The word crenellé is used for embattling, especially when a figure is embattled but in one side; and when a figure, such as a fesse, is embattled on both sides, heralds say ordinarily bretessé, and some say contre bretessé. For embattling, the Latins use the words pinnatus, pinnis asperatus; as Uredus in his Blazons, and Sylvester Petra Sancta in his Mirdes Pinnule.

There is another embattled line of this sort, which Leigh gives us, called battledd embattled; because it hath one degree of battling above another; and when the upper points are sharp, it is called campagne, as if the points represented bastions, the outer-works of cities and camps: When the upper points or battlements are rounded, it is called crenellé embattled arrondi; such an embattlement faces the west part of the House of Seaton, the ancient seat of the chief of that name, Earls of Winton. The line indented resembles the teeth of a saw, and has its name from dens, a tooth, or indentura, a certain deed of writing, whose top is indented, or cut into like teeth. Dancété, which is the same almost with the indenta secundum quae; but not secundum quantum, for their forms are both one, but in quantity they differ much, for the indenté is smaller than the dancété: Also dancété differs from indenté, by reason it consists but of few teeth, though never fewer than three, as Mr Holmes in his Academy of Armory, whereas the indenté hath many teeth. The French say for indenté, dénébé, dentellé; and for dancété when the teeth are very long, and when there are but two teeth or points, vivre; which Memestrier takes for the letter M, when the legs of it are extended from side to side of the shield; because, many who carry a partition or fesse after that form, their names begin with the letter M: The Latins say, for indenté, indentatus, dentatus, and denticulatus; and when the teeth of it are very long, as dancété, they say dentes decumanì.

I shall add other two forms of lines, lest I should seem to be defective in respect of other heralds; who, for the most part, confound their readers, and make the art unpleasant, and deter them from studying of it, by many fanciful forms of lines, which are rarely, or never to be met with, their terms being gibberish and bombast. The first of these two is termed paté, or dove-tail, from a form of art used by joiners, who make joints one into the other by that name: It is by Mr Morgan, in his Sphere of Gentry, blazoned, inclave, labelled, because the points as they proceed from the ordinary, such as a chief or fesse, represent the points or ends of labels. The other line is blazoned undé or champaine by Ferne. Upton calls itベース; because its points are formed like pieces of vair.
These, not counting the last two, are the common received forms of lines in armories, and are called the accidents or attributes of armorial figures; which they form, and if any other be in painting or sculptures, not agreeable to those above, as being uncouth and irregular, they are called by the best French heralds clatté.

The knowledge and use of these forms of lines are necessary in this science, to distinguish and difference many armorial bearings, who have the same partitions and figures, which would be all one bearing, if they were not distinguished and differed by these attributes and accidents of lines; as will more eminently appear in the following chapters.

CHAP. VII.

OF THE PARTITION AND REPARTITION LINES IN ARMORIES.

A SHIELD of one of the armorial tinctures is not a complete armorial bearing, as I said before, except there be more tinctures than one; for then a figure will appear, though but the termination of two tinctures or more meeting together, which represents a line or lines.

Lines then, which divide the shield, or field, into parts, are of two sorts. And, First, These which divide the shield into equal parts, and cut the centre, are called the principal partition lines; by some perdistant lines: Of them there are four, parted per pale, per fesse, per bend, dexter, and sinister, called by the French, parti, coupé, tranché, taillé. Secondly, Repartition lines, by which I understand these which divide the shield into unequal parts, as parti mi-coupé, and coupé mi-parti: But before I proceed to treat of them separately, and illustrate them by examples, I shall give the opinion of the learnedest heralds, of their rise and use in armories. Mark Vulson de la Columbié, in his Science Heroique, will have the rise of the partition lines, from the strokes and cuts of swords, which military men received in time of battle upon their shields; and, to recompense the dangers wherein they were known to have been by these cuts, heralds did represent these cuts upon their shields by lines; but for my part, I cannot conceive how these strokes or cuts, given at random, could give rise to the regular partition lines in armories, which are very mathematical, and regular in the shield; and from them all the proper figures in heraldry have their forms and denominations; whence also the positions, dispositions, and situations of natural figures, have their terms in blazons; yea, the science depends upon the knowledge of them.

I am rather of the opinion, that the partition lines have their rise from the same fountain with the tinctures and furs, viz. from the habits of princes and military men, who, of old, were clothed in the war with garments of diverse colours, parti, coupé, bendé hâvé, &c. Of these party-coloured garments, Favin observes, in his Theatre of Honour, were the jackets, cassocks, and arming coats of the ancient Gauls, for which he cites these words of Virgil, "Virgatis lucent sagulis." And Eritherus, in his Notes upon this place of Virgil, says, "Quasi ha quidem in Virgariam modum deducte, quibus vestibus milites utuntur vulgo, striati et divisati & inde iuvia in militari us vestibus dicta." And Mr Freeeus, in his Origin of the Palatinate from the Boii, says, the Dukes of Bavaria have anciently borne their arms, pallé, bendé, argent, azuré, for that they resemble the party-coloured cassocks of the ancient Boii, who were these Gauls that attempted the surprise of Rome, and that their party-coloured garments were white and blue, by which they were discovered in the night-time. The Guelph and Gibeline factions distinguished themselves by party-coloured garments; the first had them parted per fesse, of two different colours, and the other parted per pale; and the same partitions were in their shields of arms. Menestrier in his treatise of the Origin of Arms, is of the opinion, that the rise of the partitions, in armories, was from those in the habits of great men, and of which he gives several instances; a few of which I shall here mention, as the ancient robes of the Consuls of Grenoble, were parti, or, and azuré; and the garments of the officers of the city of Cambrai, parti, gules and argent; and from these come the same partitions in their arms. The town of Metz carries for arms parti, argent, and sable; and Bergamo, a town in Lombardy, carries also parti, azuré, and or; the ancient habits of their magistrates being of the same tinctures; and these partitions are called devices, from the diversity of their colours.

Besides those partitions, we find other pieces of armories to have come from habits and garments, to the shields, or fields, especially those that are semé, or powdered, with small figures, such as stars, flowers, &c. And show evidently, that they were first on the stuff of garments, before they came to the shield; for in all coats of arms semé, the half of these figures appear on the sides of the shield, being as it were so cut, when the stuff or cloth was shaped to the form of a shield. Many learned antiquaries and heralds are of this opinion. Sylvester Petra Saceta, in his Tesserae Gentilitiae, has the title of his roth chap. thus; " Ex vestium ornatn: "petitum origo gentilium Tesserarium;" and about the end of that chapter, he says, "Si modum desideres habe signa transcribendi ex vestibus ad clypeos, nempe ex unius luminis panno, vel bipartito, vel quadrupartito, vel lemnisco, vel scutato lato; fingas clypeo super ponit pannum ejus schematis & statim habes istiussmodi gentilias tesseras." And besides, it is certain the crosses used in armories, were taken from the habit to the shield; for those who undertook the crusades to the Holy War had crosses of stuff sewed on their clothes, before they were in their arms: Whence many shields of arms are manché, and gironné; that is to say, with sleeves and gussets, which are proofs that many figures came from the habits and garments of great men to their shields.

But to proceed to the partition lines, as is said before to be four principal ones, which divide the shield or field, into equal parts, by cutting the centre. The English and French give them different names, the knowledge of both which are necessary. The terms of the last would be found more serviceable in this science than those of the English, who bring them from the ordinaries. And to explain both, I shall add their terms in Latin, by heralds who write in that language.

When the shield or field is divided into two equal parts, by a perpendicular line from the top of the shield to the base of the point, it is said by us and the English, parted per pale. The French say only parti, as of other things, when divided into two equal parts perpendicularly; as Plate II. fig. 2. thus blazoned, parted per pale, argent, and gules. The French, parti d'argent, et de gueules. The Latins say, Scutum a summò bipartitum, dextra semissæ argentæ, sinistra cocceæa: The arms of the city of Bari, in the Kingdom of Naples, which are so parted, upon the account that the ancient robes of their magistrates were of the same partition, as Favin gives us in his forementioned book: The arms of Lucerne, a Swiss canton, argent, parti d'azure i.e. parted per pale, argent, and azure: And Ferne, in his above-named book, gives us the arms of the name of Fairly in England, blazoned after the old English way, counterly per pale, sable and or: They said of old counterly, when the field was divided into two equal parts, for which they say now, parted per pale.

There are several surnames with us, who have their bearings parted per pale, as that of Maule; the chief family of which name is that of the Earls of Panmure, whose bearing parted per pale, argent and gules; a bordure charged with eight escalops, all counter-changed of the same.

Those of the surname of Alexander, parted per pale, argent and sable; a chevron and crescent in base, all counter-changed. The chief of this name was Alexander Earl of Stirling, who, to show his descent from the Macdonalds, quartered their arms with his own: Or, a galley sable, accompanied with three cross creslets, fitched gules; two in chief, and one in base.

The surname of Nairn gives parted per pale, sable and argent, a chaplet charged with four quarter-foils all counterchanged, which was carried by Sir Robert Nairn of Strathurd; who, being one of the Senators of the College of Justice, was created a Lord of Parliament by the title of Lord Nairn, whose only daughter and heir was married to William, a younger son of the Marquis of Athol, who took upon him the name, title, and arms of Nairn, which he quarters with the arms of Murray of Athol.

The blazons of other families of the surnames above mentioned will be found at the end of this chapter.

The term counter-changed, mentioned in the foresaid blazons, is used where the field is of metal and colour, and the figure which is placed upon them, partakes of both; that part of it being of colour which lies upon the metal, and the other part metal, which lies upon the colour.

When the partition line is straight, and of none of those crooked forms above mentioned, it has then no additional denomination in the blazon: But if it consist of any of those particular forms, then the term of that form is added in the blazon, and serves as a difference for cadets, as well to distinguish them amongst themselves, as to difference them from their principal families. So Thomas Maule, a second son of Maule of Melgum, who was a second son of Panmure, gave the same bearing with Panmure, with the partition line waved thus; fig. 2, parted per pale, wavy argent and gules, on a bordure, eight escalops all counter-changed of the same. And Captain John Maule, another cadet of that family, made his partition line nebule, as in the new Register in the Herald-office: Where also David Alexander of Pitkelly, has his partition line ingrained for a difference, thus, parted per pale, ingrailed argent, a chevron; and in base, a crescent, all counter-changed of the same.

I shall here blazon the armorial bearing of the surname of Alexander, in the vulgar Latin, and then proceed to the other partitions.

Scutum ad perpendicularum bipartitum dextra semisse argentee, sinister atra, cum cantus & in imma luna crescenti, predictis coloribus commutatis, Parted per fesse, is when the shield is divided into two equal parts, by a horizontal line. The French say, coupé; the Latin, partitum ex transverse, and sometimes transverse sectum; as fig. 3, parted per fesse, or and azure. The French, coupé d'or, et d'azure; the Latins, ex auro & cyano transverse bipartitum; the arms of the Trotti in Milan. This and the former partition are very frequent in the arms of the Italians, upon the account, there are few old families in Italy, who were not engaged in the factions of the Guelphs and Gibelines, which parties were not only distinguished by such partitions in their arms, but even in their habits, as before.

Those of the surname of BALNAVES with us, carry parted per fesse, argent and sable, a chevron counter-changed, of the same tinctures: Some say, that their name and arms, are from a high hill, in the north of Scotland, called Ben Nevis, whereabouts they lived; the top of which hill is always white with snow, and it's lower parts black with heather. Balnavs of Hallhill, carried the foresaid arms. Mr James Balnaves of Carnbody, and chanter of Dumblane, parted per fesse, argent and sable, a chevron betwixt three cinquefoils, two in chief, and one in base, all counter-changed; and for crest, a hand holding a foot-ball; with this motto, Hue origo, as in our new Register of Arms; and some others of the name, have the foot-ball for crest, with these words, Fortitudine & velocitate, upon another tradition of their name, that one Nevoy, playing well at the foot-ball, before one of our kings, who cried out, Well-ball'd, Nevoy; from whence the surname Balnaves, which tradition seems more probable, and that they are originally from the family of Nevoy, because their arms are not unlike.

The surname of MIDDLETON, the chief of which family was the Right Honourable the Earls of Middleton, and Lords Clermont; coupé, or and gules, a lion rampant within a double tressure, flowered, and counter-flowered, with flower de luees, all counter-changed.

DRUMMOND of Concarig and Borlands, an old branch of the honourable house of Drummond of Stobhall, and afterwards of Perth, parted per fesse, waved or and gules, as fig. 4.

SHEWAL of that Ilk, parted per fesse, dancetti, sable and argent; in chief three stars, and in base, a boar's head erased, all counter-changed of the same tinctures; as in Workman's Manuscript of Blaunse, who was a herald painter in the reign of King James VI.

The name VALENCE in England, parted per fesse, indented, azure and argent. The name of KENDAL there, parted per fesse, indented, or and gules, as in Morgan's Heraldry.

The third principal partition line, parted per bend, is when a field is divided into two equal parts by a diagonal line, passing from the upper right angle, to the left angle, towards the base; the French say then, tranche, the Latins, oblique; dextrorsus bipartitum, vel sectum; as fig. 5. parted per bend, gules and or.
OF THE PARTITION AND REPARTITION LINES

James Allan of Sauchaul, parted per bend indenté, argent and gules; in chief two crescents, and in base a star, all counter-changed, fig. 6. so matriculated in the New Register: Others of the name of Allan, carry a pelican with three birds in a nest, or; as in James Pont's Manuscript of Blazons, written in the year 1624.

The surname of Darsalough, parted per bend, ingrailed sable and argent, as in Mr Thomas Crawford's Manuscript of Blazons.

The surname of Srot, parted per bend, dancetté, argent and sable, two mullets counter-changed, as in Pont's Manuscript.

The name of Boyle in England, of which is the Right Honourable Richard Earl of Burlington, parted per bend, embattled argent and gules, (some say for embattled, crenellé). Imhoff, in his Blazons of the Nobility of England, gives them thus, Scuto constant oblique dextrorsum secto, ita ut dimidia ex parte candent, alter rubeat, sectionis vero acies in pinnas desinat, quartered in the achievement of the Earl of Glasgow.

The fourth principal partition line, parted per bend sinister, is by a diagonal line, passing from the upper left corner to the low right angle toward the base; the word sinister is mentioned in the blazon of this partition, to distinguish it from the former; the French say only taillé, as fig. 7. taillé d'argent et d'azure, i.e. parted per bend, sinister, argent and azure; the Latins, sectum sinistrorsus sectum ex argenteo & cyanoe; the arms of Zurich, one of the Swiss cantons.

In England, the surname of Jouines in Derbyshire, carry parted per bend, sinister ermine and ermines, (the French would say, taillé d'ermine et contre ermine), over all, a lion rampant within a border ingrailed, or. The same arms are borne by Sir John Trevor of Drynkynt, in Denbighshire, descended from Tudor Trevor, Earl of Hereford, but he has no bordure.

Sir George Mackenzie, in his Science of Heraldry, gives us the arms of Ellis, parted per bend sinister, argent and gules, a hand couped, and grasping a lance bend-ways, bearing on the top thereof an helmet, proper; in the sinister chief angle, a spur-rowel of the first, and, in the dexter base, a horse-head couped sable; but the Ellis's of Elliston and Southside carry other arms, viz. eels relative to the name,—of which afterwards.

There were several families with us who had their arms of this partition, as in our old books of blazons, which is now turned to the dexter, fancying some abatements or ignominy in the partition per bend sinister; but I have met with no herald that says any thing to its dishonour, but all look upon it to be as honourable as the partition from the right.

Having treated of the four principal partition lines, when but one of them in a field, dividing it into two equal parts, I proceed now to show, what blazons they have, when there are two or more of these lines dividing the field into many parts.

When the first two lines mentioned, parted per pale and parted per fesse, as the French parti and coupé, meet in a field, they divide it into four equal parts or quarters, which are of different tinctures, the first as the fourth, and the second quarter as the third; as Sylvester Petra Sancta, Cap. XXV. says, "Ex aere simul ab apice simul ab latere intersecta habentur tetratae equales & recti; atqui hi semper ita "metalli & coloris jubar alternat ut primus cum ultimo, secundus cum tertio, "splendent lumine consentaneo;" fig. 8. quarterly gules and argent; French, écarter té de gueules et d'argent. Gerard Leigh, and his followers, give out, That it should be blazoned, parted per cross, gules and argent, especially when there are no charges nor figures on the quarters. Suitable to this, Mr Gibbon blazons the same, as carried by Vere Earl of Oxford, with a star argent on the first quarter: "Scutum "in quatuor partes (sanguineas vicissim & auroe) lineis ad crucis modum ductis "sectum; cujus quadrans primus stella argentea decoratur." The German Imhoff, in his Blazons of the Peers of Britain, blazons it better, thus: "Scutum in qua "dras sectum, quarum prima & extrema rubent, reliqui candent, solaque prima "stella distincta est argentea." The arms of the surname of Toumis with us, illuminated in Workman's Book of Heraldry, as fig. 9. where the two partition lines are indented, is thus blazoned, parted per pale and per fesse indenté, argent and gules; in the upper quarters two stars counter-changed of the same. And here it may be observed, that when the partition lines are under accidental forms, they are then to be named in the blazon as the same figure, quarterly indenté, argent and gules, in chief, two stars counter-changed of the same.

When the other two partition lines, per bend, dexter and sinister, tranché and taillé, meet in a field, they divide it into four quarters, or areas, as fig. 10. which is blazoned, parted per salier, argent and azure, by the name of banc in Dauphiny. The French say, d'argent flanque d'azure; and frequently, l'écartelé en sautoir. The Latins, as Chifletius, secatum oblique dextrorum & sinistrorum sectum; and Imhoff, secatum in modum decussis quadrupartitum. Some have blazoned them, gironné of four, argent and azure; because these quarters are not square but triangular, and meet in the centre as girons.

When the three partition lines, coupé, tranché, and taillé, meet in one field, they make six triangular areas; which the English blazon, gironné of six, or and sable, on the first three negroes' heads, proper; the arms of the name of Callader in England, as fig. 11.

There is a rule to be observed in the above-mentioned partitions. That the tincture on the right side is to be begun with, as in the examples of parted per pale and quarterly; and with the tincture which possesseth the top or chief part of the shield, as in the examples of parted per fesse and per salier: Which rule, Sylvester Petra Sancta gives thus: "Descriptio harum partium inchoare debet ab eo fulcio gore, seu colos, seu metallici, qui primus observatur oculis in superiore loco, vel in angulo dextro." But, in the last example, we do not begin with sable, which is in the dexter corner, but with or, because it possesses the most part of the chief, and the sable but a casket or lesser part of it. If there were a perpendicular line added to the three former, all the parts would be equal. Then we are to mention first the tincture in the dexter chief corner, as in the examples following.

When all the four principal partition lines meet in one field, they divide it into eight angular and conal areas, or pieces, like to girons, as fig. 12. which our heralds blazon, gironné of eight pieces, or and sable; but, in my opinion, these areas are not properly girons, which are figures or charges laid upon the field; for sometimes there will be but one, two, or three girons, and, in some bearings, to the number of sixteen,—of which afterwards. And it is to be observed, that these eight conal areas fall out necessarily by the four partition lines; which, by the most judicious heralds, are blazoned, parted per pale, fesse, bend, dexter, and sinister, or and sable; carried by the ancient and honourable name of Campbell, as in Sir George Mackenzie's Science of Heraldry. Menestrier, in his La Science de la Noblesse, gives the same arms to the family of Grolee in Bresse, which he blazons, parti, coupé, tranché, taillé, d'or et de sable. Mr Gibbon, in his Introductio ad Latinam Blazonianum, gives us the arms of Bassingborn in England, which are also the same with the paternal bearing of Campbell, viz. "Seutum linea perpendicular, & diagonali tum dextra, tum sinistra in octana auro & furce traductum segmenta," because, says he, these lines divide the field exactly into eight gironal segments.

Besides the four principal partitions, now described, there are others, and especially one, very frequently used with us and the English, but not with the French, especially under the name we give it; which is, Parted per chevron; it is made by two half diagonal lines, rising from the dexter and sinister base flanks, and meeting in the collar point of the shield, as fig. 13, parted per chevron, sable and argent. The English heralds bring this partition, as they do others, from the ordinaries, which the French do not; and so the first were wont to latinate this partition thus, seutum partition ad modum signi capitatis, which they of old latinized a chevron, taking it to represent the ancient attire of the head;—but more of this afterwards. Mr Gibbon blazons the foresaid figure, seatum ad modum canterii (another word for the chevron) bipartitum, pars superior nigra & inferior argentea, carried by the name of Ashron in Cheshire.

Those of the surname of Craw with us give such a partition in their arms, as Craw of Auchencraw, in the Merse, an old family, now extinct, carried parted per chevron, vert and gules, three crows, argent; and the branches of that family, which continue in the shire of Berwick, have these partition lines under accidental forms. Craw of East Reston, parted per chevron, embattled vert and gules, three crows, argent, fig. 14.
When there are two perpendicular, or palar lines, dividing the shield or field into three equal parts, without cutting the centre, as fig. 15. it is blazoned, tierce in pale, azure, or, and gules; and by the Latins, aren tripartita in aequales trientes a summo ad inum ex cyano, auro, & ostro, so given us for the arms of Douchat in France, by Sylvester Petra Sancta.

Tierce in fesse is such another, made by two horizontal lines, dividing the field into three equal parts, as fig. 16. tierce in fesse, azure, sable, and argent; the French say sometimes, d'azure coupé, de sable et tierce d'argent. Sylvester Petra Sancta blazons such a coat, belonging to the Berengi in Hessa, aren tripartita transversa in tres trientes ex veneto svaro & argentoe.

There are other two tierces, after the position of the bend, dexter, and sinister, by dividing the field into three equal parts by two diagonal lines; the first, as fig. 17. tierce in bend, or, gules, and azure, by the name of Nonpar in France. The other from the left to the right, as fig. 18. tierce in bend, sinister, or, sable, and argent, by Turlinger in Bavaria. The French say, instead of tierce in bend, sinister, tierce en bar.

These partitions, by tiercing the field, are not used in Britain in forming a simple coat of arms, but only when they marshall three coats of arms in one shield,—of which afterwards. The Germans, French, and other nations, have, besides these tierces, which make up one coat of arms, others of the same nature, which do not occur in our British Blazons, at least if they do, they are not under the terms used abroad, of which I shall give a few instances for my reader's satisfaction.

Fig. 19. This is called tierce in mantle, azure, argent, and gules, by the name of Absperg in Ratisbon, which is made when the field is divided into three parts, by two lines issuing from the middle of the upper part of the shield, and dividing itself again at the collar point into two diagonal lines, somewhat circular to the flanks. Which partition is frequent in the arms of religious orders, to represent their different habits; the undermost area represents the tunic or vest, and the upper part the surcoat or pallium, and in what colours they are worn. Sylvester Petra Sancta, speaking of this partition, Cap. XXIV. says, "Ad haec scutaria clara," "my se trabea, ter perinde scuti aeream partitur; & quod explicatur utrique, "hoc refert pallium, quoque intus apparat, tunicam seu internum amicum repellent, ut dubitari non possit, quin ad similitudinem vestium, imo ad rem "vestiarium hae symboli gentilittii forma pertinet, idque ordinum religiosorum etiam "tessere confirmant, exemplo sint trabea aut coccinea, supra tunicam intextam "argentum; qui est Gisiorum Venetius ac Plessenbergium in Francia." And, on the margin, our author tells us, the French would call it pilé or chappé; and gives us several examples of this nature, some of which are reversed, to whom I refer the curious. I have observed, that the Spaniards marshall their arms by this partition, tierce in mantle; as the family of Henriquez, first and second, argent, charged with a lion rampant, gules; and the third of the last with a castle, or; being descended of a natural son of Ferdinand King of Leon and Castile.

There is another partition more frequent, parted per pile in point, or and sable, fig. 20. so blazoned by Guillim and other English heralds. Gerard Leigh says, the pile part of this coat may be charged, and no other part thereof; and that it may be used as one only coat; but by what authority he asserts the field cannot be charged, I know not, for the practice of England is otherwise: As in the arms of Exmouth Duke of Somerset, and of Parke Marquis of Northampton. I do not take this figure to be a proper partition, but rather a field sable, charged with a pile or, one of the subordinaries,—of which afterwards.

Tierce in pile from the left to the right, gules, argent, and or; the French say, tierce embarassée à droit de gueules d'argent et d'or, for the family of Negenduck, as Menestrier in his La Science de la Noblesse.

Tierce in giron, bend sinister ways, sable, argent, and gules: But Menestrier says, tierce en giron en barré, de sable, d'argent, et de gueules, fig. 22. for the family of Wa's.

Tierce en girondi: Menestrier says, tierce en girons gironnans au arrondis de gueules, d'argent, et de sable, carried by De Mengentzer, as in his La Science de la Noblesse, où la Nouvelle Methode du Blason, fig. 23.

Tierce en paires, is frequent with the French and Germans. Its form and name is from the figure of pearl,—of which in its proper place. This partition is made by a paler line issuing from the base point, dividing, at the centre, into two diagonal lines, which end in the dexter and sinister chief points, and divide the field into three areas; blazoned, tierce in paire, argent, sable, and gules, fig. 24. borne by the Prince of Misnia in Upper Saxony. Sylvester Petra Sancta not only gives us this partition, but the reverse of it, tierce in paire, reversed argent, or, and azure, borne by the family of Haldamanstein in Germany.

There are partitions denominated by the French, parti emancé, coupé emancé; &c. of the first, when the field is divided perpendicularly by points or piles, mixing with one another, or like a large dancetté, as fig. 25.

Parti emancé, sable and argent, the English would blazon it, parted per pale; dancetté argent and sable; or argent, three piles issuing from the left side, sable. The French know nothing of piles—of which afterwards; but say, when such figures appear, emancé, manche signifying the sleeve of a coat. By the descriptions of these partitions, and the examples given, it is more than probable, that these partition lines were originally from the habits and party-coloured garments of great men.

There are other partitions, called by some repartitions, a few of which, chiefly used in Europe, I shall here subjoin; though these may be referred to the Chapter Of Marshalling many Coats of Arms in one Shield. But since these are used by some families in Europe as one coat of arms, I shall speak of them in this place.

This partition is made by a fesse, or horizontal line, and half a palar or perpendicular line from the chief, terminating in the centre; which the English would blazon, parted per fesse, first parted per pale, or and azure, second argent. The French say, coupé mi-parti en haut d'or, d'azure, et d'argent; and Sylvester Petra Sancta, parma transversa secta, superiore parte partim auræ, partim cyanea, & inferne argentea, the arms of the Fatieri in Venice, fig. 26.

Fig. 27. parted per fesse, first or, second parted per pale, sable and argent; the French say, coupé mi-partis en base; and Sylvester Petra Sancta, superne omnino auræ, inferne caviæ argentæque, the arms of Schaffengeri in Bavaria.

Fig. 28. parted per pale, first parted per fesse, azure and gules, second argent; the French, parti mi-coupé, to the dexter d'azure, de gueules, et d'argent. Sylvester Petra Sancta, sectum in dextra semissæ quidem, superne carneum, inferne paniceum, & penitus argentæum in levæ semisse, borne by the family of Florcaneri in Bavaria. I shall add this partition, consisting of six areas; blazoned, parti one, coupé two, azure and argent, as fig. 29. But this partition is fitter for holding different coats of arms marshalled together in one shield, than to be a coat of arms of itself without figures;—but more of such afterwards.

There are many other odd partitions and repartitions of the field into two or more parts, which are to be found in the books of heralds before-mentioned, which, for brevity's sake, I omit; because they are not to be met with in our Britannic Bearings, and rarely in eminent families abroad. I shall only here add one, which is a little singular with us, which I met with in a part of a manuscript of the learned Mr Thomas Crawford, a curious antiquary and herald, whose writings on this and other sciences, were, to the great loss of our country, embezzled and destroyed after his death. He gives us the arms of Garth, (or McGarth), in Galloway, an old name, but now not frequent, as fig. 30. which he blazoned, quarterly per pale and chevron, argent and gules.

To put an end to these partitions and repartitions, I shall only advise my reader to carry along with him the four principal partition lines, as they are given in the English and French terms; from which not only the other partitions and repartitions, which commonly occur, but also the following proper figures in heraldry, which I am to treat of, have their names.

And here I shall conclude this chapter, as I propose to do those that follow, with a collection of blazons of the several families with us, which have for their bearings one or more of those partitions or figures whereof I have now treated, or may treat hereafter, in their proper places: Which I choose rather to do, than interrupt my reader by a multitude of blazons at the end of every paragraph.

James Alexander of Knockhill, parted per pale, argent and sable, a chevron and crescent in base, all counter-changed, with a mullet for difference. N. R. By H.
OF THE PARTITION AND REPARTITION LINES

these two letters I understand the New Register of the Lyon Office; so that those blazons, marked with these letters, are to be found matriculated there.

ALEXANDER ALEXANDER of Auchmull, some time Bailie of Aberdeen, parted per pale, argent and sable, a chevron between two mullets in chief, and a crescent in base, all counter-changed; crest, a hand sustaining a pair of balances of equal scales: motto, Quod tibi ne alteri. N. R.

ROBERT ALEXANDER of Boghill, parti argent and sable, a chevron betwixt a writing-pen, fesse-ways, in chief, and a crescent in base, all counter-changed; crest, a hand holding a quill: motto, Fidei serva. N. R.

JAMES ALEXANDER of Kinglassy, parti argent and sable, a chevron bruised at the top, and, in base, a crescent counter-changed, quartered with the arms of the name of Alton; crest, a horse-head couped gules, bridled argent: motto, Dux faci non trabitur. N. R.

The Right Honorable the Ears of MIDDLETON, Lords Clermont and Fettercairn, parted per fesse, or and gules, a lion rampant within a double tressure, flowered and counter-flowered with flower-de-luces, all counter-changed; crest, a tower embattled sable, and on the top of it a lion rampant; supporters, two eagles sable, armed and crowned, or: motto, Fortis in arduis.

This noble family is the principal one of the ancient surname of Middleton, so called from their lands, which lie in the shirefdom of Kincardine, as Sir George Mackenzie in his Manuscript, who tells us, that the ancient evident, now extant of the family, is a charter of King William's, confirming a donation of King Duncan's, of the lands of Middleton, to Malcolm the son of Kenneth, from whence they took the surname, and were designed Middlton's of that ilk, till they sold these lands, and were thereafter designed Middltons of Cadham, till the year 1660, that John Middleton, for his eminent loyalty and bright parts, was advanced by King Charles II. to be Earl of Middleton, and High Commissioner to the Parliament of Scotland; and then got a concession of the double tressure to be added to his arms. He was succeeded in his titles and dignities, by his son Charles Earl of Middleton, who was secretary of state for Scotland, and afterwards for England.
The other branches of the family of Middleton, whose arms are to be found in the Lyon Register, are these:

Captain ROBERT MIDDLETON, descended of the family of MIDDLETON of Kilhill, parted per fesse, or and gules, a lion rampant within a bordure embattled, all counter-changed; crest, a boar's head erased and erected, azure; motto, Guard yourself.

Captain LAURENCE MIDDLETON, descended of Middleton of Clerkhill, who was a fifth brother of Killhill, carried the same, only with the variation of having the bordure nebule; crest, an ape sitting on the top of a tree, all proper; motto, Arte & Morte.

JOHN MIDDLETON, merchant in Frasersburgh, descended of the Middltons of Fettercairn, parted per fesse, or and gules, a lion rampant counter-changed of the same, armed and langued azure, holding in his dexter paw an astrolobe, proper; motto, My hope is in God.

Mr JOHN MIDDLETON, a minister of the gospel in England, in the county of Essex, second lawful son to Mr Alexander Middleton, principal of the King's College in the university of Aberdeen, parted per fesse, or and gules, a lion rampant within a bordure, indented and counter-changed of the same.
The surname of CRAIK, coupé, argent and vert, in chief three roses, gules; and in base a ship, or, with sails thirled up.
The surname of ALISON, parted per bend, gules and or; a flower-de-luce counter-changed, as in Mackenzie's Heraldry, Clan McIver, or Clan Kiver, quarterly, or and gules, over all a bend sable, as in Mr Thomas Crawfurd's Manuscript of Blazons.
The Lord WIDDINGTON in Lincolnshire, in England, quarterly, argent and gules, a bend sable.
The paternal ensign of the ancient surname of CAMPELL, as I observed before, is composed of the four principal partition lines, parti, coupé, tranché, taillé, which divide the field into eight girondal segments, ordinarily blazoned with us, gironné of eight, or and sable; by the mistake of the engraver, in the Plate of the Achievements, it is sable and or, and so in several blazons in the Register of Arms.

I here give the blazon of the achievement of his Grace John Duke of Argyle, Earl of Greenwarch, &c., chief of the ancient and honourable surname of Campbell, quarterly, first and fourth gironné of eight pieces, or and sable, second and third argent, a galley or lymphad, sable; sails furled up, flag and pinnets flying, and oars in action, for the lordship of Lorn; surrounded with the principal ensign of the most noble Order of the Garter, with the George pendant, as one of the Knights Companions of the said Order; timbred with crown, helm, and mantlings, befitting his quality; and on a wreath of his tinctures, for crest, a boar's head couped, or; with the motto on an escrol, Ne obliviscaris; and for supporters, two lions gardant gules, armed and langued azure, standing on a compartment, wherein are these words, Vix ea nostra usque; and behind the shield are placed a batton and sword accolé saltierways, the one being gules semé of thistles, or, and ensigned with an imperial crown, and the crest of Scotland; and the other, a sword proper, hilted and pommelled or, being the two badges of the Great Master of the Household, and High Justiciar of the Kingdom of Scotland; as in the Plate of Achievements.

The Right Honourable Hugh Campbell, Earl of Loudon, descended of old of the ancient family of Lochow, afterwards Earls and Dukes of Argyle, carried the same gironal segments of different tinctures as his progenitors have done. The first of them, Duncan Campbell, in the reign of King Robert the Bruce, married Susanna Crawford, heiress of Loudon, as is evident by that king's charters; upon which account, in place of the tinctures or and sable, the family has ever since been in use to have, for their tinctures, gules and ermine, being these in the bearing of Crawford of Loudon, viz., gules, a fesse ermine. The achievement of the present Earl of Loudon, is gironné of eight gules and ermine, surrounded with a collar of the most ancient and noble Order of the Thistle, or that of St. Andrew, with the badges thereat pendant: Which arms are timbred with crown, helm, and mantlings, agreeable to his quality; and, on a wreath of his tinctures, for crest, an eagle displayed with two heads within a flame of fire, and on an escrol; for motto, I hate my time; supported on the dexter by a man armed at all points, holding a spear, proper; and, on the sinister, by a lady richly apparelled, holding in her hand a missive letter; as in the Plate of Achievements.

The Right Honourable John Earl of Breadalbane, Lord Glenorchy, quarterly, first, the paternal coat of Campbell, as descended of a younger son of the family of Lochow, now dignified with the title of Duke of Argyle. Secondly, argent, a lymphad sable, and oars in action. Thirdly, or, a fesse chequy, azure and argent, as being descended of one of the co-heiresses of Stewart of Lorn; and the fourth as the first: Which arms are adorned with crown, helm, and mantlings, befitting his quality, and on a wreath of the tinctures of his paternal bearing: For crest, a boar's head erased, proper; supporters, two stags, proper; attired and unguled or; motto, Follow me.

The other cadets of the noble family of Argyle, I add here, as they stand recorded in our Modern Register: Sir Hugh Campbell of Calder, quarterly, or, a hart's head cabossed, sable, attired gules, for the name of Calder, the heiress of which name and lands, one of his progenitors married. Secondly, gironné of eight, or and sable, for Campbell. Thirdly, argent, a galley with her-oars in action, sable, for Lorn. Fourthly, or, on a fesse, azure, three buckles of the first; crest, a swan, proper; crowned, or; motto, Be mindful: Supported on the dexter by a lion rampant, gardant gules, armed or; and on the sinister, by a hart, proper.

Sir James Campbell of Lawyers, gironné of eight, sable and or, within a bordure vair; crest, a boar's head erect and erased, azure; motto, Fac & spera.

Sir George Campbell of Cesnock, as descended of the family of Argyle and Loudon, carried both their arms thus, recorded in the Lion Register 1672; gironné of eight pieces, or and sable, for Argyle, within a bordure gules, charged with eight escalops of the first; and a canton, also gironné of eight pieces, ermine and gules, for Loudon; crest, a phœnix head erased, or; with this motto, Constant & prudent.

Sir Colin Campbell of Aberuchill, Baronet, and one of the Senators of the College of Justice, whose grandfather was a second son of Campbell of Lawers, who was descended of the first son of a second marriage of the first laird of Glenorchy, who was a second son of the family of Lochow, now Duke of Argyle; gironné of eight, or and sable, within a bordure embattled vert: Thereafter Sir Colin used the bordure nebulé, and afterwards he caused mark it in the books, ermine; and altered also his exterior ornaments thus; crest, a demi-lion gardant, gules; holding in his dexter paw a sword, proper; and in his sinister, two laurel branches, orle-ways: The old motto was, Ex campo victoria; but since he was one of the Senators of the College of Justice, he took for motto, Victoriam coronat Christus; and for supporters, two blood hounds collared and leashed, proper.

His son and successor, Sir James Campbell of Aberuchill, now carries the same arms; but has of late, by warrant of my Lord Lyon King at Arms, placed the laurc on the lion's head in his crest; and in his sinister paw, a Highlander's dag or pistol; with this new motto, Sequitur victoria fortis. He married the heiress of Dempster of Pitliver; whose armorial bearings, with those of his own, may be seen engraved in copperplate, amongst the Plates of Achievements.

Robert Campbell of Glenlyon, whose grandsire's grandfather was the eldest son of a second marriage of Sir Duncan Campbell of Glenorchy, and his lady a daughter of Douglas Earl of Angus, carries quarterly, first and fourth, Campbell; secondly, Lorn; thirdly, Stewart; and in the centre, a man's heart crowned, proper, for Douglas Earl of Angus; crest, a demi-lion, holding up by his dexter paw a heart crowned: motto, qua recta sequor.

Alexander Campbell of Lochnell, descended of the family of Argyle, quarterly, first, Campbell; second, argent; a boar's head erased, azure; armed and languid gules; third, Lorn, and the fourth as first; crest, a dexter hand holding a lance bend-ways, proper: motto, Audaces jecro.

Alexander Campbell, brother-german of Waterhaughs, gironné of eight pieces, ermine and gules, waved; and a crescent for difference: motto, Tandem licet sero.

John Campbell of Monzie, descended of a third son of the family of Glenorchy; the quartered coat of Glenorchy, with a mullet for difference: motto, Follovo me.

John Campbell of Gargunnock, gironné of eight, ermine and gules; on each of the last, a bee volant, argent; crest, a stork, proper: motto, Refero.

John Campbell of Succoth, gironné of eight pieces, ingrailed or and sable; crest, a camel's head couped, proper: motto, Labor omnia superat.

Colin Campbell of Blythswood, descended of Campbell of Ardkinas, descended of Argyle; quarterly first and fourth; gironné of eight, or and sable; each charged with a trefoil, slipped and counter-changed of the same; second and third, Lorn; crest, a ship at anchor: motto, Vincit labor.

Matthew Campbell of Watchhaughs, descended of the family of Loudon; parti, coupé, tranché, taillé, wavey ermine and gules: motto, Tandem lice sero.

Robert Campbell of Glenfalloch, descended of Glenorchy; the quartered coat of that family, and for difference in the centre, a hunting-horn, sable, garnished gules; crest, a man's heart pierced with a dart, proper: motto, Thut far.

Duncan Campbell, eldest lawful son to Colin Campbell of Monchaster, second lawful son to Sir Robert Campbell of Glenorchy; the quartered arms of Glenorchy within a bordure invected, sable; crest, a boar's head erased chequy, or and sable: motto, Sequor.

John Campbell of Moy, Justice and Sheriff-depute of Argyle, descended of Campbell of Meiklefines, a third son of Sir John Campbell of Calder; carries Calder's coat as before, within a bordure ingrailed, or; crest, a swan, proper; crowned, or: motto, Be ever mindful.

Another cadet of the family of Calder, was Captain John Campbell, being a third son of that family; whose grandchild is Mr Archibald Campbell, writer in Edinburgh, and who by his mother is descended of Campbell of Moy, and carries the arms of Calder, with such another suitable brisure.

John Campbell of Carrick, as descended of Argyle, carries the arms of that family, within a bordure invected, or; charged with eight crescents, sable: motto, Let on.
IN ARMORIES.

Sir Colin Campbell of Ardkinlas, descended of Argyle, gironné of eight, or and sable, within a bordure of the first; crest, a lynx-headed with oars in action, sable: motto, Set on.

Alexander Campbell of Balgairshaw, whose grandfather was a second son of Campbell of Cronnan, descended of the family of Loudon, gironné of eight, ermine and gules, within a bordure ingrailed of the second, and charged with eight crescents, argent: motto, Lente sed opportune.

Donald Campbell of Auchawilling, descended of Sir Duncan Campbell, a second son of Colin Campbell, first laird of Ardkinlas; carries Ardkinlas's arms, and charges the bordure with eight crescents, sable; crest, two oars of a galley, disposed in sallier: motto, Arnis & fide.

John Campbell of Innellan, descended of Auchawilling, carries the same with Auchawilling; but, for a bordure ingrailed, crest, the same: motto, Vis & fides.

Colin Campbell of Ardintenny, descended of Ardkinlas; gironné of eight, or and sable; a bordure of the first, charged with eight crescents of the second; crest, two oars of a galley, disposed in sallier: motto, Terra, mare, fide.

Walter Campbell of Skipness, descended of Ardintenny, carries the same with Ardintenny, but makes the bordure indented; crest and motto the same.

I have just now in my hands, a charter in Latin, containing a precept of seisin, granted by Dougal Campbell of Corvorane, then representing the old family of Macdougal Campbells of Craignish, with consent and assent of Ronald Campbell his son and heir, to Duncan McCallar of Ardarie, and Margaret Drummond his spouse, and to Patrick McCallar their son, &c. of the one mark-land of Kilmon, near Lochavich, in the barony of Lochow-Middle, and earldom of Argyle, dated at Kilmochgoyll, the seventh day of October 1528, written by Neil Fisher, Theosura-rio Lemoense & N. P. with a seal of arms thereto appended, having a formal shield, gironné of eight, hanging on the mast of a ship or galley, with the legend round it. S. (for sigillum), Dugal de Creagginisb. Most, if not all the letters, are of the old Irish character, by which the seal seems to be much older than the charter, and probably cut before surnames were used, either in charters, or upon seals.

These are also descended of the family of Lochow, now dukes of Argyle, and at this time represented by Dougal Campbell, now of Craignish, who bears the same arms, and uses for crest, a boar's head erased, proper; with the motto, Fit via vi. See the old seal and present arms in the Plate of Achievements.

Craw of East-Reston, parted per chevron, embattled vert and gules, three crowns argent; crest, a crow, proper: motto, Cui debeo fidus.

Craw of Nether-Byer, a cadet of East-Reston, gives the same; and, for difference, a bordure counter-changed of the tinctures of the field; crest, a crow, proper; with the motto, God is my safety.

Craw of Hugh-Head, parted per chevron, ingrailed vert and gules, three crowns argent; crest, a crow proper, standing on a sheaf of corn; motto, Nec careo, nec curro. All these are matriculated in the New Register.

The surname of Lillie, parted per chevron, ingrailed argent and gules, three lilies counter-changed of the same.

The surname of Chapman, parted per chevron, argent and gules, a crest in the centre counter-changed, as in Sir James Balfour's Book of Blazons; but in other books, I find some of the same name to carry vert, a saltier ingrailed between four sangliers' heads, erased argent.

OF THE PROPER FIGURES IN HERALDRY, &c.

C'H A P. VIII.

OF THE PROPER FIGURES IN HERALDRY, OR THE HONOURABLE ORDINARIES IN GENERAL.

The essential parts of armories, as before mentioned, are tinctures and figures. I have spoken of the first, and I proceed now to treat of the second.

Figures, in this science, are either proper or natural. The first have their being and name from heraldry; and as they are called proper figures, so likewise the ordinary charges; as being of an ordinary use in this science. The second, natural figures or common charges, are the representation of all things, animate or inanimate; and these keep their proper names in blazon, though they have additional terms, from their position, disposition, and situation in the shield.

The partition lines, which I have been treating of, may be reckoned proper figures; because they have their names from this art, and give denomination to all figures and charges, disposed or situate after their position: Yet they are not properly charges, but the termination of such armorial bodies or figures which they form.

The proper figures to be treated of, are those charges, or armorial bodies, which charge the field, or are laid upon it, and are commonly called the ordinaries, from their ordinary or frequent use in this science, and by some heralds, the principal or honourable ordinaries; (th' French say, pièces honorables,) because they possess the third part, and principal places of the shield: And some say they are called honourable ordinaries, because they are oftentimes given by emperors, kings, and princes, as additions of honour to armorial bearings of persons of singular merit and descent.

There are some proper figures, which are called the sub-ordinaries, or less honourable ones; not upon the account that they are of less dignity and honour, but forasmuch as they cede the principal places of the shield to the honourable ordinaries, when they meet together in one shield.

The number of the honourable ordinaries with the English is nine; some French heralds count ten, and others twelve; and make every one of them possess a third part of the field: But the English make them sometimes to possess a lesser part,—of which I shall take notice as I treat of them separately. And since our heralds have followed the English in numbering them nine, so shall I: And since they are all of equal quality, I shall take the liberty to rank them after the method of the partition lines, with which they agree in nature and name.

The honourable ordinaries then are: The pale, fesse, bar, chief, bend dexter, bend sinister, cross, saltier, and chevron. Some English, in place of the bend sinister, have the inescutcheon; but I rank it with the sub-ordinaries, which are these:

The bordure, orle, orsonier and tressure, inescutcheon, franc, quarter, canton, cheque, billets and billette, pile, point, girons, piles, flanc, flance and voider, losange, rustre, muscles, faulx, fiet and fretté, besants, torteaux, vire, annulet, guilté, papelonné, and diepre; all which shall be treated of in order, in several chapters.

As for the nine honourable ordinaries, some fancy that they are brought from the parts of a man's entire armour, as Columbier, who tells us, they represent the complete armour of a chevalier, as the chief, his helm; the pale, his lance; the bend, his shoulder-belt; the cross, his sword; the fesse, his scarf; and the chevron, his spurs.

But this herald has made his chevalier go on foot, and has not given him a horse. Monument brings these honourable ordinaries from pieces of the consular garment, from pieces of armour, and from the pieces of the rails and barriers of tournaments and joustings, into which none were admitted but they that were truly noble; which rails and barriers were made up of traverse and cross pieces of timber, formed like the ordinaries, where he has found out the saltier for a horse to Columbier's chevalier.

But, to leave these conjectures and fancies, I join with others, that the honourable ordinaries have been invented as marks of different qualities in the bearers, and granted as additions of honour; as the chief, the reward of these actions which are the product of wit; the cross, of religious performances; the fesse and bend, of military exploits; the chevron, of politic effects; and the pale, a sign of authority. But, not to insist on their significations in general, I shall treat more particularly of their different significations, representations, and reasons, for which they are become the fixed figures of some families.

CHAP. IX.

OF THE PALE.

THE Pale is that honourable ordinary which possesses the third middle part of the field perpendicularly, and has divers significations and representations in armorial bearings.

And, first, it is taken and latinised by heralds palus, which signifies a pale of wood, or stake; and sometimes, for palus, palulus, which signifies a ditch or channel, which it is supposed to represent in arms, especially by some towns in Holland; but more generally for pales of wood, with which cities and camps are fortified; and has been given for an armorial figure to those who have, with skill or success, impaled a city or camp, or who, with valour, have broken down the impalings of their enemy's camp or city.

The town of Beauvais in France carries for an armorial figure, a pale, with this verse to show its signification, upon account that town stood out always firm for the Kings of France against the English. Others tell us, That the pale in this city's arms is relative to its name Beauvais, which signifies a good way; as the pale, in the arms of the town of Stra- ta, represents a way or street, which Strata signifies. And Menestrier tells us, The town of Fond, upon the way from Rome to Naples, carries argent, a pale gules, to represent a ditch or channel, which Fond signifies in that country; and the town of Dordrecht in Holland, gules, a pale argent, upon the account, and in memory of an old civil battle which occasioned much slaughter, staining the great street of that town with blood, and the river, running in the midst thereof, clear, is represented by the white pale.

The pale in the arms of many noble families is frequently taken for a mark of power or jurisdiction, as the learned Menestrier and other heralds observe, to represent the paler part of the consular garment, which hangs down before from the neck to the foot. Bishops, and other dignified churchmen, have likewise such as belong pieces belonging to their ecclesiastical habits, called _episcopal pallets, stroles, and tippets_, as marks of jurisdiction and authority. The _episcopal pale_ is borne in the arms of the Arch-Episcopal See of Canterbury. But to proceed to the form of secular and armorial pale, and its accidental forms.

Plate III. fig. 1. argent, a pale _azure_, the paternal bearing of the ancient surname of_Erskine_, the chiefs of which, the Right Honourable the Earls of _Marr_, Lords Erskine, &c. have, for a long time, been in use to quarter these with the arms of Marr, viz. _azure_, a bend between six cross creslets, fitched or; in their achievement, timbred with crown, helmet, and mantlings befitting their quality, and out of a wreath of their tinctures; for crest, a right hand, proper, holding a skin in pale, argent, hilted and pommelled or; and for motto, _Je pense plus_. Which achievement has been anciently, and of late, surrounded with the collar of the most noble Order of the Garter, (as Ashmole gives us), and of the most ancient Order of the Thistle, with the badges of St George and St Andrew pendant thereat, and supported with two griffins argent, winged, beaked, and armed or.—Of the antiquity of this noble family after wards.

Several of the armorial bearings of the noble and honourable families of this surname, descended of the house of Marr, are to be found at the end of this chapter.
OF THE PALE.

The pale is subject to the accidental forms of lines which compose it, as to be ingrailed, invected, indented, nebule, &c. As also, the pale is sometimes foibé, or aiguisé, that is, sharp at the point, and, in this form, it aptly represents a pale of wood fixed in the earth, to fortify camps and towns.

The family of CHANDOS in France and England, one of which name was one of the first Knights Companions of the noble Order of the Garter, as Ashmole gives us, in his Institution of that Order, argent, a pale fitched, at the point gules, as fig. 2.

Plate III.; the French say, l'argent au pale en pied aiguisé de gueules; and Sylvester Petra Sancta speaking of the arms of the Sussouni, being argent, three pales fitcheé at the foot gules, interdum (says he) subllice Gentilitiae cupiditatem in una parte. When the pale turns fitcheé, or sharp gradually, from the top to the point, then they are called by us and the English, fîles,—of which afterwards, being one of the sub-ordinaries.

Plate III. fig. 3, parted per fesse, gules and ermine, a pale counter-changed of the same, and on the first three muscles or, used for arms by the name of Esplin.

Such another bearing is that of Roper of Teynham, an old family in Kentshire, which was dignified with the title of Lord Teynham, by King James I. of Great Britain, thus blazoned by Mr Dale, pursuant, in his Catalogue of the Nobility of England, parted per fesse, aures and or, a pale, and three bucks' heads erased, and counter-changed of the same.

The pale, as I said before, is subject to the accidental forms of lines which compose it; a few instances I shall here add, as fig. 4. or, a pale ingrailed sable, by the surname of Sawers, which, having teeth like a saw, is relative to the name. Sylvester Petra Sancta gives us another coat of the same kind, which he blazon, sub-lîca surva untrîque striata, in aureo seuti alveolo.

Plate III. fig. 5, gules, a pale invected argent, by the name of Vex, as in Homs's Academy of Armory. And here it may be observed how ingrailing and investing lines differ.

As for the other forms the pale is subject to, as nebule, dançetté, embattled, &c. and how they may be charged and accompanied with other figures, in regard the other ordinaries are subject to the like, and that I will have occasion to speak of them and their attributes, I shall refer those forms till I come to them; but shall here add one singular form, which I have not mentioned before, viz.

Aure, a pale rayonné or, by the name of Lightford; the French say, a pale radiant, or rayonné, so named from the glittering rays and shining beams, like those of the sun.

Plate III. fig. 6. aures, a pale rayonné or, charged with a lion rampant gules, is carried by the name of Coleman in England.

This ordinary, the pale, is sometimes charged or accompanied with figures, for which I shall add the armorial bearing of the Honourable Mr David Erskine of Dun, one of the Senators of the College of Justice. Plate III. fig. 7. argent, on a pale sable, a sword of the first, point downward, for the surname of Dun, upon the account that Sir Robert Erskine of that Ilk, one of the progenitors of the Earls of Murr, married the heiress of Dun of that Ilk, who carried gules, a sword in pale argent: Their younger son, in obtaining his mother's inheritance, placed the sword upon the pale of Erskine, for his difference from the principal family. Some of our old books of painting represent the sword as a cross croslet fitchè or, taking it to be one of these in the arms of the earldom of Murr; but, in our New Register of Arms I find them matriculated for David Erskine of Dun thus, quarterly first and fourth argent, a pale sable for Erskine, second and third gules, a sword in pale argent, hilted and pommelled or, for Dun of that Ilk; and for crest, a griffin's head erased, holding in its beak a sword bendways, and on the blade of it is for motto, in domino confide. Which arms are supported by two griffins gules, winged and armed or.

The pale, as is said, possesses the third middle part of the field perpendicularly from top to bottom, yet it admits of diminutions as to its breadth, the half of it is called a pallet, and the fourth part of the pallet an endorse or vergeet.

The pallet, the diminutive of the pale, being a half of its breadth, is latined pa-lus miniatus, and cannot be called semipalus or demi-palus, which respects its length; for with the English it is always as long as the pale: neither, according to them, can it be charged with any thing, but may be carried between figures. I have not met with the practice of carrying one pallet alone in a coat of arms, but where there are frequently two, three, or more together in one field, except in the bearing of the name of Ward, azure, a pallet argent, given us by the author of the Synopsis of Heraldry, fig. 8. Plate III.

The endorsee, or verget, being the fourth part of the pallet; the first is a term used by the English, and the latter by the French, which signifies the same thing, a small rod or branch of a tree, which were usually interwoven with the pales, or stakes of wood, (in the sense we took them before,) to fortify camps and cities; wherefore heralds tell us, that an endorsee or verget are never to be seen in arms, but when a pale is between two of them; for example, Plate III. fig. 9. but here the endorsee are made too broad by the engraver.

Argent, a pale ingrailed between two endorses sable, by the name of Bellasyse, thus blazoned by Mr Gibbon, "In parma argentea palum integrum ingreditum, (hoc est in semi lunulas utrinque delineatum), & dubias hinc inde vacerrulis planis ejusdem coloris comitatum." And Jacob Imhoff, in his Historia Genealogica Regum Parisiwmque Magnae Britanniae, says, "Insignia quibus Bellasysii utun-tur, in scuti quadrupartiti prima & ultima areola rubea, cantederium aureum, li-his tribus ejusdem metalli stipartum," (i. e. quarterly in the first and fourth area gules, a chevron or, betwixt three flower-de-luces of the last, for Fauconberg; but the pursuivant Dale, in his Catalogue of Nobility, gives other tinctures, viz.
argent, a chevron gules, between three flower-de-luces azure), "in secunda vero, & tertia argentea, palum nigrum utrinque utrinque, codem colore tincta co-mitatur representant." There was an old family of the name of Bellasyse in Yorkshire, of which was Henry Bellasyse, who was created Knight Baronet by King James I. and his son Thomas, for his loyal services, was created a Lord Baron, and thereafter, in 1642, Viscount Fauconberg; and since, in anno 1699, their family has been honoured with the title of Earl of Fauconberg.

When there are more pales than one in a field, they cannot but lose of their breadth, and be proportionally smaller according to their number; whence they have from the English the diminutive name pallet; but the French call them always pales, though they exceed the number of four.

Plate III. fig. 10, or, three pallets gules, surmounted of a chevron or, charged with as many buckles of the first, by the surname of SKIRVING. Thus by Monsieur Baron, in his Art du Blason, of such another coat, d'or, à trois pales gueelles, à la chevron d'or, chargé de trois formes d'or brochant sur le tout. It is to be observed, the French are not so nice as the English blazoners, who will not repeat one word twice in the blazon of a coat, whereas the French do not stand to repeat one word twice in one blazon, as trois and or are here twice repeated.

Fig. 11. Plate III. or, three pallets gules, the arms of the town of Mechlin in the Netherlands; thus by Uredus, scutum aureum pali coccineo tripartito exaratam; and the arms of the county of Provence being almost the same, he blazons, scutum aureum quatuor pales minuatis impressum, i. e. or, four pallets gules.

The arms of the kingdom of Aragon in Spain, are, or, four pallets gules; which the French blazon, d'or, à quatre pons de gueules. This country was possessed of old by the Kings of Navarre, till Reimar, natural son of Sanchez the Great, King of Navarre, erected it into a kingdom anno 1034, whose arms were then an oak tree, because that country lies near the Pyrenean forest: But since it was annexed to Barcelona, by Raymond Berenger Count of Barcelona, who married Petronilla, the only daughter of Reimar II. and last King of the Arragonian race, about the year 1162, that kingdom has had no other arms since but these of the Counts of Barce-loina, or, four pallets gules; which are said to have their rise thus: In the year 1733, Geoffrey le Velon Count of Barcelona returning all bloody from battle, the King of Spain dipped his four fingers in his blood, and drew with them as many long lines on Geoffrey's shield, which became afterwards his fixed arms; (we have such another story of the rise of the arms of the noble family of Keith, Earls Marischals of Scotland, which are after that same form,—of which afterwards,) which account is affirmed by Favin and many other writers; but Menestrier will have those arms relative, and speaking of the name Barcelona. Quasi barris longas, i. e. long bars.
OF THE PALE.

It is to be observed, when a shield is filled with such pieces, as {pale}, {bend}, {bar}, &c., of different tinctures, those of the greatest number are to be first named in the blazon; as in the above example, the tincture or predominates, which is taken for the field, and the pallets {gules} for the charge. But when these pieces are of equal number and quantity, then we say, pale of so many pieces, and name first that of the tincture on the right side.

Hugh Gourney, a Norman, was made Earl of Gourney in England by King William Rufus, and carried pale of six pieces, or and {azure}. His daughter and heir was married to the Lord Mowbray, and his brother Sir Roger Gourney carried as the said Hugh; of whom Sir John Newton in England is descended, as in a Manuscript of the Ancient Nobility of England, which I have seen in the House of Seaton: I take some blazons out of it upon account of their antiquity, as those of Simon Sentiz Earl of Huntingdon, who carried pale of six, or and {gules}, within a bordure {argent}. He was Earl of Huntingdon in right of his wife Maud, daughter and heiress to Waltheof Earl of Northumberland, Cumberland, and Huntingdon, widow of David I. King of Scotland, and mother of Prince Henry. After Simon's death, the earldom of Huntingdon descended to her grandchild David, brother to King William of Scotland.

The surname of Ruthven with us, pale of six, {argent} and {gules}, as fig. 12. The chief of this name was Ruthven Lord Ruthven, and thereafter Earl of Gowry. They are said by some to be originally from Arragon, from the similitude of their arms; but this is no certain evident of itself, without other documents. This ancient family, as others, took their surname from their lands, called Ruthven; and was dignified with the title of Lord Ruthven by King James III. Thereafter that family marrying one of the daughters and co-heirs of Patrick Halyburton Lord Dirlcote, quartered their arms with those of Halyburton, being {argent} on a bend {azure}, three {mascles} or. William Lord Ruthven was by King James VI. created Earl of Gowry, 1581. The family ended when the lineal succession was cut off for their reasonable practices against that king. The next branch of that name was Ruthven Lord Ruthven of Freeland, who carried only the arms of Ruthven, pale of six, {argent} and {gules}; crest, a goat's head; with the motto, {Deed show}; and for supporters, two goats, proper, which were the same used formerly by the Earls of Gowry, as relative to that title, which signifies a goat.

Fig. 13. Plate III. pale of six, {argent} and {gules}, over all, on a bend {azure}, three cushions, or, by the name of Lundy of that Ilk in Fife, as in our books of blazons; and are so illuminate, as I have seen them, with those of other Scots barons, on the roof of Falls-hall, an ancient monument of arms. {Over all} is said of the ordinary, and other things, when placed over figures proper or natural. And for over all, the French use the term {brochant}, and blazon the foiled coat thus, pallé d'argent, et de {gules}, de six pieces à la bande {brochant} d'azure, charge de trois cousins d'or. The Latins, for over all, say, in totam aream protemum; or, toto {inlucem}, (as Uredus, in his Blazon of Sax. Modern.), or omnibus {impositum}. LUNDIE of that Ilk carries now the arms of Scotland, within a bordure gobonated; of whom afterwards.

Fig. 14. Plate III. Paly of six, {argent} and {sable}, surmounted with a fesse of the first, charged with three stars of the second, by the name of Jaffrey of Kingswells. JOHN JAFFRAY of Dilspro, as a second son of Kingswells, the same, with a crescent for difference; with the crest of the family, the sun beaming through a cloud, proper; and motto, Post nubila Phoebus: As in the Lyon Register.

Fig. 15. Paly of eight pieces, others say, eight pieces pale-ways, or and {gules}, over all a bend sinister {azure}, charged with a crescent {argent}, between two stars of the first, by the name of Macky.

These examples may seem to some to be contrary to the received rule in heraldry, that metal should not be placed upon metal, nor colour upon colour: For, the above chevron, bends dexter and sinister, being of colour, lie upon colour. But there is an exception of this rule, besides others, which will occur as we go along, viz. that, when the field is filled with pieces alternately of metal and colour, whether paly, barry, bendy, cheverony, fusily, lozengy, flower-de-lucy, it is then a compound field, and may receive a charge either of metal or colour, as the fields of furrs do. Sylvester Petra Sancta, in his 83d. Chap. intitled, An {Metallum in
OF THE PALE.

Metallo esse, aut Color in Colore recte possint? says, "Satis est res comperta in par- mulis colore simul ac metallo, seu virgatis, seu scutulatis, recte iconem totum exarari posse, aut ex colore, aut ex metallo."

Yet some are so nice as to make the charge counter-change to the metal and colour of the compound fields above, as in the following example:

Fig. 16. Paly of six, or and sable, a bend counter-changed of the same, by the Lord Calvert, Baron of England: The French blazon it, pallé d'or, et de sable, of six pièces, à la bande brochante de l'en l’autre; and the Latin, sex pales, aureos, & atros, cum buiter humerali in totidem tessulis (c dictis coloribus subalter- natum commutatis) subdivisio.

The pallets are subject to accidental forms, as well as the pale; to be ingrailed, invected, waved, &c. I shall add here one example out of the book, intitled, Synopsis of Heraldry; argente, three pallets wavy gules. There are other forms and variations of pales, of which I shall add a few instances.

Fig. 17. Paly of four, azure and argent, counter-changed per fesse. The French say, contre palle d'azur et d'argent de huit pièces, by the name of Joway in France, as Monsieur Baron. Such another bearing Sylvester Petra Sancta gives, being paly of six, gules and argent, counter-changed per fesse; which he thus describes, rather than blazon: "Sed pulcra lumen reciprocant dimidi atque obversi pali tesserari numero sex, nunc punicei argentieique, quae est tesser Rosenbergiorum in Francus.

Fig. 18. Plate II. Paly of six, gules and argent on a chief of the field, as many crescents all counter-changed. Which blazon is given by Guillem, but he does not tell us by what family it is carried: He tells us, in his Display of Heraldry, Sect. 8, that arms paly represent strength; and that the bearing of piles, pales, bends, bars, and other extracted parts, meaning the diminutives of the ordinaries, were called of old by herals, restrict, in respect of their strength and solid substance: And Sir John Erne, in his Glory of Generosity, says the same, page 185, where he also tells us, that if these pieces be diminished, tierced, or voided, they show weakness. I shall here give an example of pallets voided.

Fig. 19. Plate III. Sinople, three pallets or, voided gules. Voided is said when the middle part of figures are cut out, so that the-field is seen through the middle of them, or another tincture in its place; as in the present example, thus blazoned by the French, Sinople, à trois pales d'or, vuides et rempliées de gueres. Such arms as these, whose pieces are voided, are not so commendable as those that are entire, by the fore-named heralds; nor one pallet so commendable in arms as many; and far less an endorse or verget, except there be a pale betwixt two of them.

Having treated sufficiently of a pale and its signification in armories, together with its accidental forms, as ingrailed, &c. as also of its diminutives, pallets, and endorses; and shown by blazoned, that we say, a pale, when it stands alone, as in the arms of Erskine Earl of Marr; and how we say, on a pale, when it is charged with a figure, as in the arms of Erskine of Dun; and how we blazon, when a pale is betwixt, or accompanied with figures: I proceed now to show when to say, in pale, and pale-ways.

The common charges, such as figures natural and artificial, as I said before, keep their proper names in blazon; but they have additional ones, according to their disposition and position in the field, from the position of the ordinaries, as the pale, fesse, &c. When three or more figures are placed or ranged one above another in the field, after the position of the pale, then they are said to be in pale: The French say, l'un sur l'autre, i.e. one above another, or rangé en pale: The Latin say, in palum collocata, or, alter alteri super impositum, as Plate II. fig. 20. azure, three stars in pale argent, by the name of Lamberdt in France: And the royal bearing of England has such a blazon, gules, three lions passant gardant in pale, or.

Fig. 21. Azure, three salmons naiant in pale, proper, (l'un sur l'autre, say the French), by the name of Fisher. And, azure, three fishes (called Garvin fishes), naiant, in pale argent, that in the middle looking to the sinister, and the two to the dexter, by the surname of Garvey. Mackenzie's Heraldry.

We need not say of fishes, as some, naiant fesse-ways, in pale; nor of beasts, passant fesse-ways: For all fishes naiant, and all beasts passant, are fesse-ways.
OF THE PALE.

So the terms, in pale, in fesse, in bend, respect the disposition or situation of figures; and to say pale-ways, fesse-ways, bar-ways, respects the position of figures: And this is the distinction betwixt in pale, and pale-ways.

The ordinary disposition of small figures of the number three, are two in chief, and one in base; and it is not necessary to mention their disposition, but to say, he carries azure, three flower-de-luces or, which are understood always to be so disposed; but if they be otherwise situate or disposed, then their situation must be named in pale, in bend, &c. And when oblong figures are situate, two and one being either erect, or diagonally inclining to the right or left, then we say pale-ways, bend-ways, and bend sinister-ways; for example:

Fig. 22. Argent, three sinister hands, couped gules, pale-ways; we are not to say in pale, for then three hands in pale would stand one above another.

Fig. 23. Neilson of Grangen, argent, three sinister hands bend sinister-ways, couped gules; we must not say in bend sinister, for then would they be situate after the position of the bend sinister.

When one oblong figure is placed in the field, as a sword or spear, after the position of the ordinaries, it may be either blazoned in pale, in bend, &c. or pale-ways, bend-ways; but when there are three swords, or other oblong figures, they must be blazoned pale-ways, and not in pale, as Plate III. fig. 24. azure, a sword in pale argent, hilted and pommelled or, between three crescents of the second, by the name of Paton of Kinaldy; crest, a sparrow-hawk perching, proper: motto, Virtus laudando, L. R. where may be seen also the arms of Mr Roger Paton of Ferrochie, azure, three crescents argent (without the sword); crest, a sparrow-hawk, with wings expanded, proper: motto, Virtute adepta.

Plate III. fig. 25. Parted per pale, argent and sable, three flower-de-luces in pale, counter-changed of the same, as Sylvester Petra Sancta, in his Blazon of the Arms of the Vasani in Venice, " Lilia tria, loco pali-tessarrii composita et semi-atria " semi-argentea, illic in semisse argento, hic autem in semisse atro."

BLAZONS OF ARMS BELONGING TO THIS CHAPTER WHICH HAVE THEIR FIGURES AFTER THE FORM OF THE PALE.

The Right Honourable Henry Lord Cardross, grandson to Henry first Lord Cardross, who was second son to John Earl of Marr, Lord High Treasurer of Scotland, by his second wife, Lady Mary Stewart, daughter of Esme Duke of Lennox, carried quarterly, first gules, an eagle displayed or, armed and membered azure, looking towards the sun in his splendour, placed in the dexter chief point, as a coat of augmentation for the lordship of Cardross; second grand quarter, quarterly first and fourth azure, a bend between six cross crosslets fitcheé or, for Marr, second and third argent, a pale sable, the paternal coat of Erskine; third grand quarter, quarterly first and fourth or, a fesse chequé, azure and argent; second and third, azure, three garbs or, on account of his lady, daughter and heir of Sir James Stewart of Kirkhill; fourth grand quarter as the first; and for crest, on a wreath, argent and sable, a hand holding up a boar's head erased, on the point of a skein, thrust through the same, all proper; supported on the dexter by a horse argent, furnished gules; and on the sinister, by a griffin, parted per fesse, argent and sable, armed and membered gules, with this motto, Fortitudine.

The Right Honourable David Earl of Buchan, Lord Auchterhouse and Cardross, eldest son and heir of the above Henry Lord Cardross, by his said lady, daughter and heir of the said Sir James Stewart of Kirkhill, having, anno 1695, succeeded in the earldom of Buchan, as nearest heir-male of his cousin William Erskine Earl of Buchan, (in whom ended the issue-male of James, eldest son of John Earl of Marr, by his second wife the Lady Mary Stewart, daughter of Esme Duke of Lennox, and immediate elder brother of Henry first Lord Cardross, great grandfather of the said David now Earl of Buchan), carries quarterly, first grand quarter azure, three garbs or, being the feudal arms of the earldom of Buchan; second grand quarter, quarterly, the paternal arms of Marr and Erskine, as a son of the house of Marr; third grand quarter, the arms of Stewart of Kirkhill, (on account of his mother as above), blazoned in the Lord Cardross's achievements; fourth grand quar-

so second in bordure crest for sword, second demi-lion with and His Arms, pale and for brotherly have on that of his predecessors the ears of Buchan, Judge nought, as in the Plates of Achievements.

The younger sons of David Lord Cardross, father of the above Henry Lord Cardross, carry the arms of their father, as in the Lyon Register, thus:

WILLIAM ERSKINE, sometime governor of Blackness Castle, and second son to David Lord Cardross, his father's arms within a bordure or.

JOHN ERSKINE of Carnock, third son, and some time governor of Stirling Castle, the same arms within a bordure, parted per pale, or and argent.

CHARLES ERSKINE, fourth son to the said David Lord Cardross, the same within a bordure tierced in fesse, or, argent, and gules; crest and motto to all of them the same with that of the Lord Cardross, as above.

CHARLES ERSKINE, Advocate, and one of the Commissioners of the Court of Police, brother-german to David now Earl of Buchan, and second son to Henry late Lord Cardross, carries the arms of his father Henry Lord Cardross, within a bordure ermine for difference; crest and motto the same as his father.

Sir WILLIAM ERSKINE of Brechin, who was Secretary to King James V. descended of Erskine of Dun, carried quarterly, as by his seals which I have seen, first and fourth Erskine of Dun, second and third argent, three piles issuing from the chief gules, for Brechin, but upon what account I know not: His representative is Erskine of Pittodrie.

The Right Honourable ALEXANDER ERSKINE, Earl of Kelly carries quarterly, first and fourth gules, an imperial crown within a double trellace, flowered and countered, flowered with flower-de-uces or, as a coat of concession, second and third argent, a pale sable for Erskine; and for crest, a demi-lion gardant gules; supports two griffins or, armed gules, and on their breasts a crescent sable: with this motto, Decori decus addit usito. He is lineally descended of Sir Thomas Erskine, second son to the Earl of Marr, who, with Sir John Ramsay, rescued King James VI. from the Earl of Gowrie's bad attempts anno 1605, for which he was honoured with the foresaid coat of augmentation, and created Lord Baron of Dirleton, then Viscount of Fenton, and afterwards Earl of Kelly, anno 1619.

Sir JOHN ERSKINE of Alva, as a cadet of Erskine Earl of Marr, carries that earl's quartered arms as before, within a bordure quartered, or and vert; and for crest, a dexter arm from the shoulder, in armour, grasping a sword, proper: with this motto, Je pense plus: so matriculated L. R.

Sir ALEXANDER ERSKINE of Cambo, Lord Lyon King at Arms, whose father Sir Charles, also Lyon King at Arms, was a second brother of the Earl of Kelly, carries that earl's quartered arms as before, with a crescent for a brotherly difference. More of which family afterwards.

JOHN ERSKINE of Balgounie, descended of a second son of the Earl of Marr, quarterly, first and fourth azuré, a bend between six cross croislets fitchet or, for Mar; second and third argent, a pale within a bordure sable. L. R.

CAPTAIN PATRICK ERSKINE, in Colonel George Hamilton's regiment, third lawful son to David Erskine of Kirkbuddo, lineally descended of the family of Dun, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a pale sable, for Erskine; second and third gules, a sword pale-ways argent, hilted and pommelled or, for the name of Dun, all within a bordure embattled azuré; crest, a griffin issuing out of the wreath, holding in his dexter talon a sword, proper: motto, Ausin & confido. L. R. These letters stand for the present Lyon Register, where the arms of our nobility and gentry have been recorded since the year 1662.

JOHN ERSKINE of Sheeffield, descended of the family of Balgounie, bears argent on a pale sable, a cross croislet fitchet or, within a bordure azuré; for crest, a motto, Think well. L. R.

GRANDMAN in England, gules, a pale or.

The family of Abati in France, d'azure, a pale d'argent.

The old Earls of Athol, pale of six, sable and or, which after became the feudal ones of that dignity, to the families that were invested therewith. As to the Cummins, Stewarts, and Murrays, for which see the arms of Murray Duke of Athol.

OF THE FESSE.

This honourable ordinary possesses the third middle part of the field horizontally. Guillim says, it is formed by two lines drawn traverse the escutcheon, which comprehends in breadth the third part of the field. Menestrier describes it, " Une pièce honorable qui occupe le tiers de l'écu horizontalement." And Syllvester Petra Sancta, in his 26th chap. De Facion Tesseraria, says, " Tencia hae medi-" am scuti, regionem occupat, tertiamque ibi area partem implet; refert vero mili-" tarem cingulum quemadmodum scutaria coronis refert capitis diadema;" and so will have it to represent the military belt, as the chief does the diadem of the head.

It is written by us and the English fesse, and anciently faisce; by the French, faute, who bring it from the Latin word fagia, which signifies a scarf; which word, Chiffletius uses in many of his Blazons, as in his arms of Bethune, fagia comme scuto argentoe impressa, i.e. argent, a fesse gules, Plate III. fig. 26. Sir George Mackenzie, in his Science of Heraldry, tells us, it represents the scarf of a warrior en ecbarpe, and from bearing argent, a fesse azure, the first of the Sharps, who came from France with King David, was called Monsieur d'Estaing, and by corruption Sharp, of which name there are several families with us, who carry the same arms with additional figures, as at the end of this chapter, among other Blazons.

The fesse, in armories, is generally taken to represent the military belt and girdle of honour, used in the ceremonies of old at the investiture of the nobility and knighth. Cambden, in his Blazons, calls it baleum militare; Minshew, cingulum honoris; and Guillim, in his Display, makes use of both these words: Who says, That the girdle of honour was anciently bestowed by emperors, kings, and generals, upon soldiers for their special services; and quotes that saying of Joab to the man that brought him the news that Absalom was hanging by the hair of the head on an oak tree, 2 Sam. xviii. 11. " Why didst thou not smite him there to the " ground, and I should have given thee ten shekels of silver, and a girdle," which some translations have, an arming belt. Some latinize it, cingulum or baleum, which was used as a sign of honour by all nations, and in all ages; called by the French of old, baudricle, the knightly belt, because kings and princes, in the ceremony of knitting their favourites, girded them with the belt. Favin, in his Theatre of Honour, tells us, That when Charlemagne went to the battle against the Hungarians in the town of Ratisbon, he created his son Lewis Debonnaire knight, by engirthing him with the baudricle; which he describes to be a military belt or girdle, to which was fixed, on the left side, a sword, and, on the right, a long po- niard or war-knife, much like, says he, to the daggers used in Scotland.

Spelman also tells us, That knighthood was of old conferred by the cineture of the military belt. And Selden, in his Titles of Honour, says, The girding with the belt was an essential part of that ceremony: And, therefore, we find the portraits and statues of great men, on monuments and grave-stones, with this girdle or belt, as a sign of nobility or knighthood, variously adorned with figures, precious stones, and studs of gold and silver, to represent their eminency. Such an one has been anciently carried in the armorial ensigns of the noble and princely family of Stewart, which we call a fesse chequè, as Plate III. fig. 27.
The term fesse, in heraldry, is said of the field or any other charge or figure filled with square pieces alternately of different tinctures; which pieces Monsieur Baron will have to represent, in armories, battalions and squadrons of soldiers, and so a fit bearing for chief commanders of armies, as those of the ancient family of Stewart have been.

Other heralds tell us, the term fesse is from the French word echiquier, a chess-board; because the accountants in the office of the King's Exchequer did, of old, use such boards in calculating their accounts: And arms thus chequered, are called by heralds arma scaccata or scaccis; and the Court of Exchequer with us is called, Seacarium Regin.

The English writers of the Ancient and Present State of England tell us, That their Court of Exchequer is so called from a chess-board used by accountans, or from a chequer-wrought carpet which covered the table of the Court; as the Court of Green-cloth in the King's Palace is called from the green carpet. But they that would have more of this derivation may see Skene De Verborum Significatione.

How agreeable, then, are the armorial ensigns of the Stewarts to their employments and offices; who, long before they ascended the throne, were commanders in chief of armies under our ancient Kings, and Lords High Stewards of Scotland, and were always in use to carry for their paternal ensign, or, a fesse chequed, azure and argent; by the French, d'or, & la face echiquet, l'azur & d'argent; and by the Latins, scutum aurum exaratum balteo militari transverso, cyan & argentii, duc-tu tripli:scaccato: The Latins ordinarily tell of how many tracts chequed consists,—but more of this afterwards in the title of Cunnag.

I have seen the seal of Walter, hereditary Lord High Steward of Scotland in the reign of Alexander II. appended to a charter of his, for the south part of the forest lying upon the water of Ayr, which his father Allan had granted, Allana Parva, as the charter has it; wherein he gives these lands a new to the Religious of Melrose. The seal appended is large, and of an equestrian form, having the picture of a man on horseback in a coat of mail, brandishing a sword with his right hand, and on his left arm a shield charged with a fesse chequed of three tracts, and above his helmet, on his head, was also a wreath chequé, and round the seal were these words, Sigillum Walteri filii Allani. This seal has no reverse: He died 1241. The seal of his son Alexander, (which I have also seen), was after the form of his father's; but on the reverse was a triangular shield, charged with a fesse chequé haute; that is higher up towards the top of the shield; for which the English say transposed. Such a fesse is carried sometimes on the account of singular virtues;—of which afterwards.

I shall only here mention the seal of his son James, seventh Lord High Steward of Scotland, appended to a charter of his, granting some lands to the Abbacy of Melrose, "Pro salutete animae nostre & omnium ante cessorum & successorum meorum, & specialiter pro salute Alexandri patris mei charissimi." On which seal, a man is represented on horseback, in his coat of mail, brandishing a sword, and on his left arm a shield, charged with a fesse chequé; which fesse chequé was also on the caparisons of his horse, both behind and before: and on the reverse of the seal was a large triangular shield, with a fesse chequé haute.

Other instances of the bearing of the fesse chequé, by the name of Stewart and others, will be added at the end of this chapter. But to proceed to the other forms of fessses.

The ancient arms of Austria were five birds called larks, situate 2 2 and 1 or, relative to the name of a Roman governor of that province named L'Alouette, which signifies a lark. But, afterwards, Leopold Jasper Duke of Austria, fighting against the Saracens in a white surcoat and scarf, and returning from the battle all bloody, when the scarf was loosed, his surcoat appeared as a coat of arms thus: gules, charged with a fesse argent; which became, after that, the armorial ensign of Austria. Yet others tell us, that these arms represent the country of Austria, being of a red soil, thwarted with the silver river of the Danube like a fesse argent; as the four white fessses in the arms of Hungary do represent the four principal rivers which water that country.

The surname of Charters with us gives for arms argent, a fesse azure; the two principal families of this surname who contended for chiefship, were Charteris of Amisfield, who carried the foresaid blazon alone, and Charteris of Kinfaisauns, who carried the same, but within the double treasure flowered and counter-flowered gules.

The surname of CRAWFORD anciently gave for arms, gules, a fesse ermine, fig. 29. Plate III. Others of that name have argent, three stags' heads erased gules;—of whom afterwards.

Captain THOMAS BASKIN of Ord, in the Lyon Register, gules, a fesse vair; crest, a sword and stalk of wheat crossing each other saltier-ways, the last being depressed of the first: motto, Armis & diligentia.

The fesse is sometimes carried as if it were cut off from the sides of the shield, as fig. 30, it is then blazoned, couped, or aliécé or, a fesse couped azure.

A fesse wreathed of divers tinctures, is called by the French tortillé, or cable; it is as it were formed like a rope or cable of different colours, borne by the surname of CARMICHAEL, argent, a fesse tortillé, azure and gules, fig. 31.

The fesse is sometimes also variegated of different tinctures, being counter-changed by the partition of the shield, as fig. 32. The arms of the name of STANHOPE, given us by Workman in his Book of Blazons, parted per pale, gules and or, a fesse indenté between three stars, two in chief and one in base, all counter-changed.

Mr Thomas Crawford gives us the arms of MACKREY of Dumpender; argent, a fesse quartered sable and or, fig. 33. Plate III.

The fesse, as other ordinaries, is often charged and surmounted with proper or natural figures. When charged, the figures are contained within the breadth of the fesse; and for the word charged, we say also on a fesse: But when the figures, are oblong, and lie over the fesse, then the fesse is said to be surmounted of such a figure; and these super-charges are not to be mentioned in the blazon, but after the figures which lie immediately on the shield, and accompany the fesse; as by the following examples.

Fig. 34. Argent, on a fesse azure, three stars or, (some call them mullets) the principal bearing of the surname of MORE. The chief of that name is Muir of Rowallan, a considerable family in the reign of Alexander III. and more eminent after, in the reigns of the Bruce; who quartered the arms of Cummin, upon marrying one of the heiresses of a principal family of that name. King Robert II. married Elizabeth Mure, daughter of Rowallan, mother of King Robert III.

Fig. 35. Argent on a fesse sable, three cinquefoils of the first, by the name of BOSWELL. The first of this name is said to have been a Norman, and to have come to Scotland in the reign of Malcolm III. and possessed lands in the Merse, called after them Boswell-Lands. The last possession they had in that shire was Oxmuir, of which I have seen a charter in the reign of King Alexander II. Of them is descended BOSWELL of Balmuto, in the shire of Fife, now the principal family of that name, who got these lands of Balmuto by marrying the heiress of GLIN of Balmuto; upon which they quarter the arms of ABERNETHY, or a lion rampant gules, bruised with a ribbon sable; which the Glen of Balmuto quartered with their own, viz. argent, three martlets sable; which were more proper to have been quartered with Boswell, than the lion of Abernethy.

Having so far treated of a fesse charged, it follows now, to give examples of a fesse interposed betwixt figures. The English and we use only the word between; and some the Latin word inter, as Sandford; the French say accompagné.

Plate III. fig. 28. Gules, a fesse chequé, argent and azure, between three crescents or; by the name of Row. Others of the name change the tinctures, and give or, a fesse chequé, azure and argent, between three crescents gules; as ARCHBOLD ROW, Colonel of the Regiment of the Scots Fusiliers; with the addition of a canton dexter azure, charged with an orange, stalked and slipped, proper; ensigned with an imperial crown; and for crest, an arm, issuing out of a wreath, armed, holding a sword, proper; with this motto, Non desistam. He is descended by the father's side, from Mr John Row, an eminent reformer, and, by the mother's side, from that eminent lawyer, Sir John Skene, Clerk-Register in the reign of King James VI.

Plate IV. fig. 1. Argent, a fesse waved gules, betwixt three boars' heads erased sable, carried by ALLARDICE of that Ilk. This family got a charter from King
OF THE FESSE.

William of the lands of Allrethis, in the sheriffdom of Kincardine, afterwards called Alyrads, now Allardice; which has been ever since the surname of the family. Thomas Allardice of that ilk got a charter from King David II. of the lands of Little-Barras: And in the reign of King James IV. John Allardice of that ilk granted a charter to his brother Robert Allardice, of the half of the lands of Little-Barras, which was confirmed by that King; of whom is descended the present Allardice of that ilk. James Allardice of Balmany in Fife, Arch-Dean of Glasgow, grants a charter in the year 1459, of the lands of Balmany, to Sir Alexander Home of that ilk, Great Chamberlain of Scotland, to which was appended his seal, leaving a formal shield, charged with a fesse, waved between three boars' heads erased: The shield had no trimmings, but was environed with two palm branches.

Allardice of Duninald, a second son of Allardice of that ilk, argent, a fesse waved gules, between three boars' heads erased sable, within a bordure of the second; crest, a stalk of wheat and a branch of a palm-tree disposed in salter; with this motto, Bene qui pacific; so matriculated in the Lyon Register.

Cornwall of Bonhard, gules on a fesse argent, between three mullets or, as many Cornish kae (daws) sable, beaked and membered of the first, as fig. 2.; and for crest, a Cornish kae hatching in the face of a rock, proper: motto, We biff you see warly; in the Lyon Register. The first of this name in Scotland, is said to have come from Cornwall in England, and to have taken his surname from that country, and the Cornish kae in relation thereto. John Cornwall of Bonhard was slain with King James IV. at the battle of Flodden: His son Peter, being minor, was infliged in these lands, in obedience to a brief directed from the chancery, mentioning his father to have been killed at Flodden.

Cuthbert of Castlehill, in the shire of Inverness, or, a fesse gules, and in chief a serpent azur; crest, a hand in a gauntlet, holding a dart: motto, Nec minus fortiter. Lyon Register.

Fig. 3. Plate IV. Alexander Cuthbert, sometime Provost of Inverness, vert, a fesse ingrailed between four mullets argent, and an arrow in pale, surmounting the fesse, point downward, proper.

John Cuthbert, merchant in Inverness, and sometime one of the magistrates of that town; his arms as the last; but, for difference, has the fesse indented in the upper, and ingrailed in the nether side.

Or, on a fesse azur, between a bull's head couped in chief; and in base, a galley with oars erected salter-ways sable, a St Andrew's cross argent, by the name of Richardson of Smeiton.

The surname of Craig, or Craigie, carry ordinarily ermine, as observed before. The original family was Craig of Craigie in West-Lothian, now called Craigiehall. In our histories, we meet with one John Craig, a valiant man, and captain of the castle of Kildrummy for King David II. who being besieged by Edward Baliol's followers, upon the advancing of the king's forces, under the command of Robert, High Lord Stewart, and John Randolph Earl of Murray, who joined a doubtful battle with the besiegers, Captain Craig issued forth of the castle with his party, and gave victory by a notable overthrow of King David's enemies; amongst whom fell David Cummin Earl of Athol, with many of his friends on the Baliol's side.

Sir Thomas Craig of Rickarton in Mid-Lothian, an eminent lawyer and advocate to King James VI. carried ermine on a fesse sable, three crescents argent, as fig. 4. Plate IV. which afterwards were matriculated in the Lyon Register; and for crest, a chevalier on horseback, holding a broken lance in bend, proper; with this motto, Vive des, ut vivas.

When any oblong figure, proper or natural, lies over a fesse, beyond the limits of it, as in the bearing of Alexander Cuthbert, just now given, fig. 3. in blazon, the fesse is said to be surmounted: And if the fesse lies over another oblong figure, the fesse is said also to surmount it; for surmounting, the French say brochanté, as fig. 5. argent, an oak tree growing out of a mount, in base, vert surmounted of a fesse azure, by Watson of Saughton.

But if the super-charge be comprehended within the limits of the fesse, then it is said to be charged, or as we say commonly, on a fesse, of which I have given already several examples; but here I shall add one more, with some variety as to the fesse.

Heriot of Trabrown, argent, on a fesse azure, three cinquefoils of the first. As for the antiquity of this surname, Buchanan says, William, John and Gilbert Heriots, safely conducted Robert, High Steward of Scotland, out of the reach of his enemies, being narrowly sought after by Edward Baliol and the English. In the Earl of Haddington's Collections, in the Lawyers' Library, there is a double of a charter granted by Archibald Earl of Douglas, of the lands of Trabrown, to John Heriot, designed, Kilis & haeres dilecti conferendori nostri Jacobi de Heriot, de Nudarie Mariscall; which charter I find confirmed by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Wigtown, Lord Eskdale, anno 1423, with these witnesses, James Douglas, our brother, William Seaton, son and heir of John Lord Seaton; which charter is also conformed by King James I. the 16th year of his reign.

The Heriots of Trabrown, continued in the possession of these lands, lying within the shirility of Berwick, till the latter end of the reign of King Charles I. and about that time got the lands of Elphingston in East-Lothian, which they called Trabrown; of whom are the Heriots of Long-Niddrie, old tenants to the earls of Winton: As also, George Heriot, jeweller to King James VI. famous for his piety in erecting hospitals in England and Scotland; especially that at Edinburgh, of a curious structure, upon the front and other places whereof are his arms; argent on a fesse transposed, a crescent between two stars of the first, fig. 6.
Plate IV.

A fesse transposed, is said, when it is placed higher than the centre, and is then a mark of some eminent virtue, as the fesse ebequé, in the arms of the High Stewards of Scotland before mentioned.

The French have the same practice of transposing, as also of depressing the fesse, either above or below the centre; and they term it then a fesse baisée, when it is high, and when depressed below the centre, abaissé. Hausse, says Monsieur Baron, is said of the chevron and fesse when they are placed higher than their ordinary situation, and gives us examples thereof in his L'Art Heraldique.

I shall add some examples of a fesse, under other accidental forms.

Fig. 7. Plate IV. Argent, a fesse nebule or three escutcheons gules; borne by Mr John Hay, sometime one of the Under-Clerks of the Session.

Item, Argent, a fesse embattled azure, by the name of Battlewall in England; this fesse, being only embattled on the upper side, is termed by the English embattled or crenelled; but if on both sides, then it is termed counterembattled; the French say, bretessed; azure, a fesse counter-embattled argent; which Mr Holme, in his Academy of Armories, gives to the name of Barnes in England, with various other examples of counter-embattling, which I pass over, as mere fancies of his own.

Fig. 8. Plate IV. Vert, a fesse dancetté ermine, between a buck's head cabossed in chief, and two escalops or, carried by the surname of Duff, as in Point's MS. of Blazons; which blazon is matriculated for Duff of Craighed, and given to Alexander Duff of Kenthmore, in the L. R.

Dancetté, as I observed before, is a large indenting, with great and few teeth; the fewest are three, and when but of two great teeth, it is like a capital M, with its legs extended to the two sides of the shield, and it is called a fesse vivre. Mesne-trier gives us several examples of such, as fig. 9. Plate IV. Azure, a fesse vivre, surmounted of a little cross argent, borne by the family Masalki in Poland; and is of opinion, that the fesse vivre is carried in arms for the letter M, because the most part of the families who carry it have their names beginning with that letter:
Mr Holme gives us such an example, which he calls a fesse double dancetté, like unto two cheverons conjointed in fesse. In coats of this nature, says he, it is very necessary to number the points, else the trickier of coats may be deceived by its term of blazon: Such a coat he gives to the name of Flower, a fesse dancetté counter-flowery gules.

As the pale is carried in arms, as before, between two endorse, so the fesse is between two barrulets, the diminutives of the bar, which are sometimes called co-tisses, but not so properly, being the diminutives of the bend.
OF THE FESSE.

For example, I shall give the arms of Congalton of that ilk, as they stand recorded in our Lyon Register, quarterly, fig. 10. Plate IV. first and fourth argent, a bend gules, and in chief a label of three points sable; second and third, argent, a fesse sable betwixt two cottises compoûe azure, and of the second; crest, a bee, proper: motto, Magnum in parvo. And, in the same Register, David Congalton, portioner of Dirleton, descended of Congalton of that ilk, carries the same arms (without the cottises), and all within a bordure ingrailed gules.

The arms of Congalton of that ilk, which family is in East-Lothian, are otherwise illuminated in our old books of painting, as thus; quarterly, first and fourth or, a bend gules; second and third gules, a fesse or, betwixt two cottises compoûe argent and azure. And Sir James Balfour, in his Blazons, makes the cottises sable, argent, and azure. Sylvanus Morgan gives such another coat of arms, but with some variety, in his Treatise of Heraldry, borne by Sir John Hunny of Stewel, in Dorsetshire; argent, a fesse, parted per fesse, vert and sable, betwixt two cottises counter-changed.

Besides those accidental forms of the fesse, I shall add only two, couped and voided, which the other ordinaries are also subject to.

Couped is said of the fesse and other ordinaries, when their extremities do not touch the sides of the shield; or, a fesse couped gules, carried by Masham of Essex. The English call such a fesse sometimes a bunnet, as Morgan in his Blazon of the Arms of Brabant, argent on a fesse bunnet gules, three leopards' heads or; the French, for couped, say aloisé; and so of the other ordinaries, whose extremities do not touch the sides of the shield; for which, when the Latins blazon such figures, they say, a latera seuti disjuncti.

Voided is said of the fesse and other ordinaries when their middle is as it were cut out, and the field appears, for which the Latins say, fusia secta introrsum: Camden says for voided, coupeeata, and the French, vuidé, as Menestrer, " Vuidé " se dit des croix & autres pièces ouvertes au travers desquelles on voit le champ, " ou sol de l'ecu." As for example, argent, a fesse gules voided of the field, as Plate IV. fig. 11. But if the voiding be of a different tincture from the field, as supposing the voided part of this figure was or, it would be blazoned by the English, argent, a fesse gules charged with another.

The fesse, according to the English, is not to be diminished in its breadth, nor to be multiplied; but with the French it is frequently both diminished and multiplied: Of which in the following chapter.

BLAZONS OF ARMS BELONGING TO THIS CHAPTER WHICH HAVE FIGURES AFTER THE FORM OF THE FESSE.

I have given before the armorial bearings of the princely family of Stewarts, in carrying the fesse cheque, which continued in the right line of the family, till Robert the High Steward succeeded his uncle King David Bruce in the throne; he then laid aside the fesse cheque, and carried only the imperial ensign of the Kingdom of Scotland. His eldest son, John, before his father's accession to the throne, carried or, a fesse cheque, argent and azure, with a label of three points within a double tressure, flowered and counter-flowered gules, as by old paintings, and his seal appended to charters having the shield couebé; and for crest, issuing out of a wreath, a lion's head.

When his father came to the crown, he had another seal of arms, whereon was a shield couebé, charged with a fesse cheque, out of which issued a demi-lion rampant, all within a double tressure, to intimate his right of succession to the crown: Which shield of arms was supported by two wild men with long hair hanging down from their head; and for crest, a demi-lion, and the legend round the seal, Sigillum Johannes senescalli Domini de Kayle, appended to a charter of his father's, wherein he is witness with others to John Kennedy of Donnour, of certain lands, which for brevity's sake I omit. The charter ends thus, " Testibus venerabili in " Christo Patre Willielmo episcopo sancti Andree & Johanne primogenito nostro " comite de Carrick, & senescallo Scotie, Roberto comite de Monteith," &c. dated at Dundonald the 4th of September, the first year of his father's reign.
I have seen another seal afterwards used by John Earl of Carrick, appended to several evidences, which, for brevity's sake, I here forbear to mention as foreign to my purpose, but shall only take notice of the form of the seal, which was equestrian, having the picture of a man on horseback, in his surcoat of arms, brandishing a sword in his right hand, and on his left arm a shield, charged with a lion rampant, within a double trezure flowered and counter-flowered, and, in chief, a label of three points, to show that he was Prince and Steward of Scotland; which arms are repeated on his surcoat and caparisons of his horse, the head of the man being covered with a forstressing helmet, upon which is a crest chequy, and thereon, for crest, a lion's head betwixt two demi-vols; and the legend round the seal had these words, Sig. Johannis primogeniti Regis Scotiae, Comitii de Carrie, & Seneschali Scotiae. He is the first son of our Scots Kings that I observe carried the entire arms of the kingdom with a label, and was afterwards King of Scotland by the name of Robert III.

Robert, who obtained the earldom of Monteith, a younger son of King Robert II, and afterwards created Duke of Albany by his brother King Robert III. 1399, carricé first or, a fesse chequé, azure and argent, surmounted with a lion rampant gules; the shield was adorned with a close helmet, and thereupon a wreath of three tracts chequy, as the fesse, out of which issued a wolf's head with its neck, holding in its mouth a rose; supporters, two lions sejant gardant gules; and the same was on his seal, appended to a precept of his of the great customs of Edinburgh, Haddington, and Dunbar, anno 1399. Afterwards, as by our old illuminated Books of Blazons, he carries quarterly, first and fourth or, a lion rampant gules, and, in chief, a label of three points azure, for the title of Albany; second and third or, a fesse chequé azure and argent, with a label of three points in chief: He died 1419. His eldest son Murdoch succeeded him in the government, and his other titles of dignity; but, upon the restoration of King James I, he and his two brothers Walter and Alexander were attainted of treason, and lost their heads.

John Stewart, Earl of Buchan, Constable of France, second son of Robert Duke of Albany, carried for arms, quarterly, first and fourth, the arms of Scotland; second and third azure, three garbs or, for the earldom of Buchan: He died at the battle of Verneuil, 1429, and left issue only one daughter Jean, who was married to Sir George Seaton of that Ilk, progenitors of the Earls of Winton.

I shall proceed no further downward here in the right line of the Stewarts, being sovereigns, nor to their younger children, because they disused the fesse chequé, and carried the sovereign ensign, to show their royal descent, with suitable brises, or by marshalling the sovereign ensign with the arms of their dignified feus;—of which afterwards. But shall now proceed to give some blazons of other branches that came of the stock of Stewart before King Robert II, and who carried the fesse chequé, with other figures which they transmitted to their posterity with the surname of Stewart, except those two considerable old branches of the family of Stewarts, who, though they took the surname of Boyd and Monteith, yet they continued the chequer bearing, as Boyd, azure, a fesse chequé, argent and gules; and Monteith, argent, a bend chequé sable, and of the first;—of which afterwards.

Sir John Stewart of Bonkill, second son to Alexander High Steward of Scotland, born in the year 1246. He married Margaret, daughter to Sir Alexander Bonkill of that Ilk: She bore to him several sons, heads of great families of the name of Stewart; which Mr. David Simpson gives us fully in his Genealogical and Historical Account of the Family of Stewart; which families were known by the fesse chequé, bend, and buckles. The figures which Sir John Stewart carried in right of his wife, viz. or, a fesse chequé, azure and argent, surmounted of a bend gules, charged with three buckles of the first, for Bonkill.

His grandson, (by his eldest son Sir Alexander), John Stewart, Earl of Angus, Lord Bonkill and Abernethy, married the daughter of Alexander Abernethy. His son Thomas succeeded him; who quartered with his paternal coat, before blazoned, that of Abernethy, or, a lion rampant gules, bristled with a ribbon sable. He had one daughter and heir Margaret, who was married to William Earl of Douglas: He had by her George, first of the line of Douglass, Earls of Angus, for which they quartered the foresaid arms with their own;—of which in another place.
The second son of John Stewart of Bonkill was Allan Stewart; of whom Mr Simpson, in his foreshaid book, makes the Lords of Darnley, Earls and Dukes of Lennox, to be descended. Upon several documents, one of them relative to the arms, he says, Allan Stewart carried arms as his brother, a fesse chequy surmounted of a bend, charged with three buckles: But afterwards his posterity used a bordure gules, charged with buckles, which was carried by the Earls and Dukes of Lennox:—but more of this in another place.

Sir Walter Stewart, to whom King Robert the Bruce gave the barony of Dalswinton, was descended of a younger son of John Stewart of Bonkill, and was sometimes designed of Dalswinton, and sometimes of Garlies. His grandson, Sir Walter Stewart of Dalswinton, was contemporary with Robert III. His daughter, Marian Stewart, became his heir, and was married to Sir William Stewart, Sheriff of Ti-viotdale, descendant of the family of Darnley, progenitors of the Earls of Galloway, as Mr Simpson, historiographer, tells us in his forementioned book. The arms of this family are: or, a fesse chequy, azure and argent, surmounted of a bend ingrailed gules, (which bend is a part of the armorial figures of Bonkill, to show their descent from that family), within a double trezure flowered and counter-flowered of the last: The arms of this noble family are supported on the dexter by a savage, wreathed about the head and middle with laurel, holding in his right hand a baton, and on the sinister by a lion rampant gules; crest, a pelican feeding her young in a nest, all proper: and for motto, the word Virescit.

The cadets of the family of Stewart of Dalswinton and Garlies, now Earls of Galloway, are Stewart of Minto, or, a fesse chequy, azure and argent, surmounted of a bend ingrailed, and, in chief, a rose gules.

Walter Stewart Lord Blantyre, representative of the family of Minto, carries the same, with supporters as the Earls of Galloway; and for crest, a dove with an olive leaf in its mouth: with this motto, Sola Fvoal Virtus.

Stewart of Castlemilk, or, a bend gules, surmounted of a fesse chequy, argent and azure; so recorded in the Lyon Register for Sir Archibald Stewart of Castle-milk, Baronet, with the badge of Nova Scotia in the sinister canton; crest, a dexter hand holding a sword, proper: motto, Avant.

Stewart of Torrence, descended of James, second son of Sir Archibald Stewart of Castlemilk, and his lady, Anne, daughter to Robert Lord Semple, carries as Castlemilk, with a crescent gules, in the sinister chief point for difference.

From Sir James Stewart, fourth son of Sir John Stewart of Bonkill, are descended the Stewarts of Innermeh or Lorn, Durideer or Rosyth; and, again, from Lorn or Innermeh, the Stewarts Earls of Athol and Buchan; the Stewarts of Gairnfoth from the Earl of Buchan, as also the Earl of Traquair, the blazons of whose families I shall here insert as I find them in our old Books of Blazons.

Stewart of Innermeh got from King Robert the Bruce, for his good services, a grant of the lands of Carmelton and Dunnin in Perthshire, (as Crawfurd tells us in his History of Renfrew): and, thereafter, his family became possessed of the lordship of Lorn, by marrying the heiress of the surname of MacDougal. The ancientest blazon of Stewart of Innermeh that I meet with, is, quarterly, first and fourth or, a fesse chequy, azure and argent, and, in chief, a garb of the second; (some Books of Blazons, in the reign of Queen Mary, in place of the garb, have a flower-de-luce; and Sir James Balfour, in his Blazons, places a buckle azure, which speaks better to the descent from Stewart of Bonkill); second and third or, a lymphad or gallely, with flames of fire issuing out of the fore and hinder parts, and out of the top of the mast, commonly called St Anthony's fire, for the lordship of Lorn. This family came to a period in the person of John Lord Lorn, 1445, who died without issue male; and the lordship was shared betwixt his three daughters, co-heirs, married to Colin Earl of Argyle, Sir Colin Campbell of Glenorchy, and to Campbell of Otter;—of whom before.

Walter Stewart of Innermeh, as nearest heir-male of John Stewart Lord of Lorn, laid claim to the lordship, and was seized therein; but by an agreement with the Earl of Argyle, 1469, he resigned the lordship of Lorn in favour of Argyle, and, in place of it, was made Lord Innermeh, with the precedence of Lorn; and carried the quartered coat above blazoned, without the garb or buckle, supported by two fallow deers; and for crest, a unicorn's head argent, mained and horne or; with this word for motto, Wbadder; as in Workman's Book of Blazons. This family continued till the reign of King James VI. when James Lord Innermuth having married Mary Stewart, daughter of John Earl of Athol, was, by the favour of that monarch, created Earl of Athol upon the 25th day of March 1596, but he died without succession 1625.

Stewart of Craigie, now called Craigshall, quarterly, first and fourth or, a fesse cheque, azure and argent, in chief three buckles of the second, for Stewart of Bon-kill; second and third ermine, on a fesse sable, three crescents argent, for Craige or Craig, as in Sir James Balliour's and Esplin's Blazons.

Stewart of Durinsdeer or Rosyth, or, a fesse cheque, azure and argent, within a bordure gules, charged with eight buckles of the first. Esplin's Blazons.

Sir James Stewart, commonly called the Black Knight of Lorn, being a younger son of the Lord Lorn and Innermuth before-mentioned, married Jean, daughter of John Earl of Somerset, and Queen Dowager of King James I. of Scotland, by whom he had three sons: first, John; second, James Earl of Buchan; third, Andrew Bishop of Murray. The eldest, John, by the favour of King James II. his uterine brother, was created Earl of Athol; which earldom was then in the King's possession, by the forfeiture of Walter Earl of Athol, murderer of King James I. John, as Lieutenant to King James III. in his Majesty's minority, reduced the rebel Donald Lord of the Isles, and brought him to submission; for which action he got the motto, Forti Fortune et fide fletener: His arms were quarterly, first and fourth Stewart; second and third, pale of six, sable and or, for the title of Athol; crest, a hand holding a key bend-ways, with the foresaid motto; and, as relative thereto, two savages in forest for supporters.

From this John Earl of Athol, was John the fifth Earl in a direct line, who died without male issue, leaving three daughters by his wife Mary, daughter to William the first Earl of Gowrie. First, Dorothea, married, to William first Earl of Tullibardin. Second, Mary, wife to James Stewart Lord Innermuth, who, in her right, was Earl of Athol, (of whom I spoke before), and died without issue; so that the estate and dignity came to Dorothea Countess of Tullibardin, of whom John Duke of Athol is the lineal heir, and carries the forsaaid quartered arms marshalled with his own,—of which afterwards. The third daughter, Jean, was married to Henry Lord St Colm, and died without issue.

The next collateral branch of the Stewarts of Lorn, that came from Sir James Stewart, commonly called the Black Knight of Lorn, was James, created Earl of Buchan by King James II. about the year 1457, and got the lordship of Auchterhouse by his wife Margaret, daughter and sole heir of Sir Alexander Ogilvie of Auchterhouse. She bore to him Alexander Earl of Buchan, whose great grandson John, Master of Buchan, was killed at the battle of Pinkie, leaving only one daughter, Christian, his sole heir. She married Robert Douglas, son of William Douglas of Lochleven, and younger brother of William Earl of Morton, who was afterwards Earl of Buchan. His son, James Douglas Earl of Buchan, had only a daughter, Mary, his heir, who was married to James Erskine, eldest son of John Earl of Marr, by his second wife Mary Stewart, daughter of Esme Duke of Lennox, and with her obtained the estate and dignity of Buchan, which still continues in the name of Erskine. The Stewarts of Buchan carried the plain coat of Stewart, quartered with these of Buchan, viz. azure, three garbs or, but left out the buckles, which showed their descent from the Stewarts of Bonkill. The like has been the practice of our heralds and painters of late, in giving the plain coat of a principal family to the cadets, without any difference, whenever they happened to be marshalled with any other bearing; which is a loss to the bearers, and confounding to others curious in genealogies.

The first of the family of Stewart of Traquair, was James Stewart, son of James Stewart first Earl of Buchan; who, by marrying Katherine Rutherford, one of the daughters and co-heirs of Rutherford of that ilk, in the reign of King James IV. got the lands of Traquair and others. From him was lineally descended Sir John Stewart, created a Lord Baron in 1628, and afterwards, in 1633, Earl of Traquair and Lord Linton by King Charles I.; he being that King's High Treasurer, and afterwards High Commissioner to the Parliament 1639. His son was Charles; and his son, again, John Earl of Traquair, who married Lady Anne Seaton, daughter of George Earl of Winton. Their son Charles, the present Earl of Traquair, married Mary Maxwell, daughter of Robert Earl of Nithsdale, by whom he hath a numerous hopeful issue: The eldest son is Charles Lord Linton. The bearing of the family consists of four coats quarterly: first or, a fesse chequè, azure and argent, for Stewart; second azure, three garbs or, for Buchan; third sable, a mullet argent; fourth argent, an orle of six gules, and three martlets in chief sable, for Rutherfield. The last coat was sometimes placed in the third quarter, as by the paintings on the roof of Fala-hall. Supporters, two bears, proper; crest, a crow standing upon a garb; with the motto, Judge nought.

Stewart of Gairntully, as descended from Stewart of Lorn, quarterly, first and fourth the plain coat of Stewart; second and third or, a lymphad or galley sable, with fire issuing out of the mast; as in Mr Pont's Manuscript of Blaizons. But now, as in the Lyon Register, Sir Archibald Stewart of Gairntully, quarterly, first and fourth Stewart; second and third argent, a galley, her oars in action, sable, for Lorn, (as now carried without the fire), all within a bordure azure, charged with eight buckles or; crest, two bees counter-volant proper: motto, Provide.

William Stewart of Inernytie, a second brother of Gairntully, quarterly, first and fourth or, a fesse chequè, azure and argent, in chief two stars of the second; second and third argent, a lymphad or galley with oars in action sable, with St Anthony's fire on the top-mast; and, in the centre of the quarters, a crescent, for brotherly difference. L. R.

William Stewart of Tongorth, descended of the house of Gairntully, the same as Gairntully, with three garbs azure, in chief above the fesse chequè, for his difference; crest, a bee volant en arrière proper: motto, Providentia fido. L. R.

But, to proceed to other families of the surname of Stewart, I observe they surmounted or accompanied their fesse chequè with other figures, but especially lions, which I think was in imitation of the sons of Robert III. For, as I observed before, the arms of John Stewart, eldest son to King Robert II. had a demi-lion náissant out of the fesse, before he carried the entire lion of Scotland with a label. And his brother, Robert Earl of Monteith, after Duke of Albany, had a lion rampant argent, surmounting the fesse chequè, before he carried quartered arms.

John Stewart of Ardgowan, a natural son of King Robert III. afterwards designed of Blackhall, carried the same arms which Robert Duke of Albany first carried, and have been continued in the family, and are still carried by the present Sir Archibald Stewart of Blackhall, Baronet, viz. or, a fesse chequè, azure and argent, surmounted of a lion rampant gules, langued and armed azure; and for crest, a lion's head erased gules; with the motto, Spero meliora; as matriculated in the Lyon Register; and sometimes, Integritate stabit ingenium.

Mr Walter Stewart, Advocate, brother-german of Sir Archibald Stewart of Blackhall, carries or, a fesse chequè, azure and argent, surmounted with a lion rampant gules, the same with his brother, and, for his difference, a bordure ermine, (upon account that his mother, Anne, eldest daughter and co-heiress of Sir Alexander Crawford of Kilbirny, Baronet, carried gules, a fesse ermine,—of which afterwards); and for crest, a lion's head erased gules; with the motto, Ledere noli; as in the Plate of Achievements.

Stewart of Scotston, descended of Archibald, a second son of Archibald Stewart of Blackhall, who got the lands of Scotston by marriage with Margaret, daughter and heiress of Mr John Hutcherson of Scotston, carried the same figures with Blackhall, but, for difference, transposed them thus: or, a lion rampant gules, surmounted, or bruised, with a fesse chequè, azure and argent; matriculated in our New Register; for crest, a boar's head couped of the field: motto, A virtute orta.

Stewart of Garth, in the same Register, has the fesse surmounting of the lion, and quartered with the coat of Cummin, azure, three garbs or.

Stewart of Ladywell, descended of Garth, the same within a bordure argent; crest, a man's head couped proper: motto, Pro rege & patria. L. R.

David Stewart of Inchbroch, descended of a second son of the Stewarts of Johnston, who was a second son of the house of Ochiltree, or, a fesse chequé, azure and argent, between a lion passant in chief, and a rose in base gules, all within a bordure ingrailed and gobonated of the second and third; crest, a civet cat couchant proper; motto, Semper paratus. L. R.

Stewart of Allanton, or, a fesse chequé, azure and argent in chief, a lion passant gules, armed azure. Poit's MS.

Stewart of Dalwinton, or, a fesse chequé, azure and argent, betwixt three unicorns' heads couped sable.

Stewart of Davingstone, the arms of Stewart, within a bordure ingrailed gules. Balfour's MS.

Stewart of Corne, or, a fesse chequé, argent and azure, between three wolves' heads couped sable. Ibid.

The Stewarts of Athol and Buchan, of old, says Jacob Imhoff, in his Blazons, Regum pariumque magnae Britanniae, accompanied their fesse with wolves' heads; which I have sometimes met with in old illuminated manuscripts, but by whom done I could not learn.

Stewart of Craigins accompanied the fesse with three otters' heads couped gules; Balfour's MS. of Blazons, where he gives us an old coat of Stewart of Bute, thus, quarterly, first and fourth or, a bend chequé, azure and argent, for Stewart; second and third or, a ship, and in chief three buckles sable, which I take as belonging to one of the sons, or grandsons of Sir John Stewart of Bonkill, upon the account of the buckles, and that the fesse chequé was turned to a bend, since all his issue, as before, carried buckles or bonds; and our historians tell us, that Sir John of Bonkill, was designed also of Bute, and had an interest there.

As for the Stewarts, Sheriffs of Bute, the first of them was Sir John Stewart, natural son to King Robert II. By several charters of King Robert III. he is designed, Frater noter naturalis: What that family carried of old, I know not, but in the Books of Blazons of Workman, Pont, and others, Stewart of Bute carried the single coat of Stewart. James the present Earl of Bute, and Lord Mount-stewart, has on his paintings and utensils or, a fesse chequé, azure and argent, within a double trezure flowered and counter-flowered gules; for crest, a lion naissant out of a wreath of his tinctures; with the motto on an escrol, Nobilis ira; supported on the dexter by an horse argent, bridled gules, and on the sinister, by a deer, proper, attired or, standing on a compartment, whereon are these words, Asit viret honore. As for the other families of the surname of Stewart, I shall subjoin the blazons of their arms as I find them recorded in the Lyon Register since the year 1661.

Alexander Stewart of Newhall, lineal representative of Sir John Stewart of Craighill his grandsire; quarterly, first and fourth or, a fesse chequé, azure and argent, in chief three buckles of the second; second, ermine on a fesse sable, three crescents argent, for the name of Craig; crest, a trunk of an old tree sprouting out, a branch on the right side acorned, proper: motto, Resurgam.

Mr John Stewart of Ascog, advocate, descended of Bute, the arms of Stewart within a bordure sable, charged with eight mascles argent; crest, a greyhound courant within two branches of bay, proper: motto, Fide & opera.

Sir William Stewart of Strabrok, quarterly, first and fourth Stewart, second and third azure, three garbs or for Buchan; crest, a phœnix in flames of fire, proper: motto, Virtuti fortuna comes.

David Stewart of Inchbrock, descended of a second son of the family of Stewart of Johnston, which was a branch of the house of Ochiltree; or, a fesse chequé, azure and argent, between a lion passant in chief, and a rose in base gules, all within a bordure ingrailed, and gobonated of the second and third; crest, a civet cat couched, proper: motto, Semper paratus.

Captain James Stewart of Rosling, or, a fesse chequé, azure and argent, in chief a lion rampant gorgant gules; crest, an anchor in pale azure, ensign'd on the top with a man's heart, proper: motto, Fixus ac solidus; as also at other times, Tam fidus quam fixus.

Robert Stewart of Burnay, second son of Mains, who was a brother of the Earl of Galloway, carries as the Earl of Galloway, within a bordure indented gules; crest, a pelican vulnerate, proper: motto, Virescit vulnera.
OF THE FESSE.

LAURENCE STEWART of Bighton, in Orkney, or, a fesse chequé, azure and argent, between three muscles of the second; crest, a holly leaf slipped vert: motto, Sia vivescit industria.

ROBERT STEWART of Newark, carries Stewart within a bordure gules, charged with three lions rampant, and as many ships at anchor, interchanged or; crest, a lion's paw and a palm branch crossing other saltier-ways, proper: motto, Christus mibi incurum.

THOMAS STEWART of Drummin, descended of the family of Kinnerchly; or, a fesse chequé, azure and argent, between three cross croslets, fitched in chief, and as many cushions in base gules, all within a bordure ingrailed azure; crest, two hands conjoined, and holding a man's heart, proper: motto, Corde & manu.

JAMES STEWART merchant in Dundee, descended of Stewart of Garth; the quartered coat of Garth, over all a lion rampant gules, all within a bordure argent, charged with six wolves' heads erased gules; crest, a savage head couped, proper: motto, Reddunt commercia mitern.

WALTER STEWART merchant in London, and third son to Sir Thomas Stewart of Coltness, descended of the family of Allanton, descended of Castlenilk; or, a bend gules, surmounted of a fesse chequé, azure and argent, within a bordure chequé of the same; crest, a thistle and a sprig of a rose tree crossing other in saltier, proper: motto, Fervent aspera probum.

Having insisted upon the fesse chequé of the family of Stewart, and its branches, some of whom anciently, though they took not upon them the surname of Stewart, but other surnames, as Boyd and Monteith, yet they carried their figures, chequé, to show their descent. I shall now speak of them.

The first of the surname of Boyd, was Robert, son of Simon, third son of Allan, second Lord High Steward of Scotland, who died 1153; which Robert is described in the charters of Paisley, nephew to Walter, the son of Allan Dapifer, Great Steward of Scotland. Robert Boyd is witness in a charter, in the year 1205, as Crawford in his History of Renfrew, page 55.; and Sir James Dalrymple, in his preface to his Scots Collections, page 80, says, I find Robertus dictus de Boyd, in a charter by Sir John Erskine about the year 1262. And doubtless he was predecessor to the Lords Boyd, and Earls of Kilmarnock, who carried azure, a fesse chequé, argent and gules; crest, a hand issuing out of a wreath, pointing with the thumb and two fingers: motto, Confido; supporters, two squirrels collared or.

Boyd of Pinkell, a second son of one of the Lord Boys, azure, a fesse chequé, argent and gules, and in base a cross moline or; and for crest, another cross moline sable; with the motto, Prudentia me sustinet. L. R.

Boyd of Pitcon, a second son of another Lord Boyd, the arms of Boyd, within a bordure or; crest, a hand couped, pointing two fingers to the heavens, proper: motto, Specie mea eritis. L. R.

Boyd of Troughig; azure, a fesse chequé, argent and gules, between two cross croslets fitché in chief, and as many stars in base of the second; and for crest, a sun-dial: motto, Eternitatem cognita. L. R.

John Boyd, sometime bailie in Edinburgh, azure, a fesse chequé, argent and gules, between three roses in chief, and a crescent in base of the second; with the crest and motto of the Lord Boyd. L. R.

As to the surname of Monteith, I shall speak to it in the chapter of the bend. There are many other families of different surnames, who, in imitation of the Stewarts, or as vassals to them, have chequered their armorial figures, as the Semple, Rosses, Houston, Spruel, Brisbane, Fleming of Barachan, and Shaw of Bargarton; of whom in their proper places.

The ancient and honourable family of the surname of Lindsay, gules, a fesse chequé, argent and azure. The first of this family and name, says Hector Boyes, came to Scotland with Edgar Atheling, and Margaret his sister, queen to King Malcolm Canmore. As for the antiquity of the name, Sir James Dalrymple tells us, in his Collections, page 351. that Walterus de Lindsaya and William de Lindsaya, are witnesses in King David I.'s charters. As for the descent, see Mr Crawford's Baronage, and Sir Robert Sibbald's History of Fife.

There were two eminent families of this name, the one designed of Crawford, and the other of Byres. The family of Lindsay of Crawford, was dignified with O the title of Earl of Crawford, about the year 1398, the 9th year of the reign of Robert III. and carried for their armorial bearing as before: Who, after they marmried a daughter and heiress of the Lord Abernethy, quartered the arms of Abernethy with their own, and that very early; and have been in use to have for supporters, two lions sejant gules, armed or; crest, an ostrich, proper, holding in its beak a key; and for motto, Endure fort.

The other family, Lindsay of the Byres, was William de Lindsay Dominus de Byres; by the production of whose rights at the ranking of the nobility 1626, says Sir Robert Sibbald, he was found to have been a peer of the degree of a lord, by marrying Christian, daughter to Sir William Mure of Abercorn. He got with her Abercorn, and Dean, near to Edinburgh, the Mills, and several other lands; and added to his arms, being gules, a fesse chequy, argent and azure, three stars in chief of the second, the figures of his father-in-law; supported by two griffins gules, armed and membered or; and crested with a swan with its wings expanded, proper; and for motto, Love but dread. His successor, John Lord Lindsay of Byres, was created Earl of Lindsay 1633. Betwixt him and Lewis Earl of Crawford there was a tailzie, by means of which, when Earl Lewis was forfeited, Earl John succeeded to the titles, arms, and fortune of the Earl of Crawford.

Lindsay of Edziell, the male-heir of Lindsay of Crawford, carries the arms of the Earl of Crawford as above, as the representative of that noble family, and was for some time earl.

The first of the family of Lindsay of Balcarres, was Sir John, of the family of Edziell, who was one of the Senators of the College of Justice in the year 1595, and the next year Secretary of State to King James VI. in which office he died.
His son was created Lord Balcarras 1633; and his grandson Colin was created Earl of Balcarres by King Charles II. They carry arms as the Earl of Crawford and Edziell; within a bordure azure, charged with fourteen stars or; supporters, two lions sejant gardant gules, with collars about their necks azure, charged with three stars or; for crest, a canopy semé of stars or, and fringed of the last, topped with a pennon gules; and for motto, Astrae, castra, nomen, lumen.

Lindsay of Balgays in Angus, another younger son of Edziell, who was Earl of Crawford, carried the quartered arms of Lindsay, Crawford, and Abernethy, as his father. Pont's Manuscript.

Alexander Lindsay, Lord Spynie, a younger son of David Earl of Crawford, and Edziell, who made a resignation of the earldom, carried his father's arms, with a label of three points argent: (some books have a crescent in place of the label), supporters, two lions sejant, armed and langued or; crest, an ostrich head erased, proper, with an horse-shoe or in its beak, and a label of three points about its neck, as have also the supporters. This family is now extinct: It was dignified with the title of lord on the 12th day of November 1592. Pont's Manuscript.

The other cadets of the name of Lindsay, whose blazons I find in our old books, especially in Sir James Balfour's Books of Blazons, are these following:

Lindsay of Linbank, gules, a fesse chequy, argent and azure, betwixt two stars in chief, and a hunting-horn in base of the second.

Lindsay of Dunrodis does accompany the fesse with three stars argent, two and one. Which family was represented by George Lindsay of Blackholm, whose arms, as recorded in the Lyon Register, are, gules, a fesse chequy, argent and azure, and in chief a label of three points of the second; crest, a withered branch of oak sprouting forth green leaves, proper: motto, Mortua vivescunt.

David Lindsay, merchant in Edinburgh, descended of Dunrodis, as in the Lyon Register, carries gules, a fesse chequy, argent and azure, betwixt three garbs of the second, and banded of the first; crest, a dexter hand holding a branch of olive, proper: motto, Mutuo amore cresco.

Lindsay of Corsbasket accompanies the fesse chequy with two stars in chief, and in base a cinquefoil argent.

Lindsay of Payetston accompanies the fesse chequy with three stars in chief, and in base a mascle argent. Which family is now represented by Lindsay of Wormston.

Lindsay of Kirkforther places the fesse chequy betwixt three stars in chief, and a hunting-horn in base argent.
LINDSAY of Wauchope placed above the fesse chequè in chief a label of three points argent.

LINDSAY of Covington carried below the fesse chequè in base a mascel or. All those are in Sir James Balfour's Blazons: But Mr Thomas Crawford's Manuscript gives the fesse chequè of Lindsay of Covington, between three mascel argent.

LINDSAY of Dowhill, an ancient family of the name, as in an illuminated manuscript in the reign of Queen Mary, gules, a fesse chequè, argent and azure, a star of the second in chief.

LINDSAY of the Mount, who was Lyon King at Arms, gules, a fesse chequè, argent and azure, between three stars in chief, and a man's heart in base argent.

Sir Alexander Lindsay of Eveleck, baronet, descended of the old Earls of Crawford, bears the quartered arms of the Earl of Crawford, within a bordure argent. And William Lindsay of Kilspindy, brother to Eveleck, carries the same; but charges the bordure with eight roses gules, recorded in the Lyon Register.

James Lindsay of Cavill bears first and fourth gules, a fesse chequè, argent and azure, for the name Lindsay; second and third or, a lion rampant, gules brised with a ribbon sable, for Abernethy, being the armorial bearing as before of the Earl of Crawford, within a bordure quartered or and gules, charged with eight martlets counter-changed; for crest, an ostrich head erased, proper: motto, Sir fortis. L. R.

Henry Lindsay of Cairnie, descended of the family of Pitcarly, quarterly, first and fourth gules, a fesse chequè within a bordure compone, argent and azure, second and third, Abernethy, as before; crest, two stalks of wheat disposed saltierways, proper: motto, Non solum armis. L. R.

John Lindsay of Pitscandyly, gules, a fesse chequè, argent and azure, a dark or dagger paleways in base, proper; and in chief, a mullet for difference. L. R.

William Lindsay of Culsh, descended of the family of Dowhill, gules, a fesse chequè, argent and azure, in chief, a mullet of the second, and the base undé as the third, all within a bordure ingrailed or, for difference; crest, a tower, proper, ensign on the top, with a crescent argent: motto, Firmiter maneo. L. R.

The surname of Crawford, anciently gave for arms, gules, a fesse ermine. And others of that name gave argent, a stag's head, erased gules. I shall here give the arms of those Crawford's who carry the fesse ermine.

Crawford of Loudon, gules, a fesse ermine; which family, ending in an heirress, was married to Sir Duncan Campbell, who were progenitors of the noble family of Campbells Earls of Loudon; upon which account half of their girons are ermine, of which before.

Laurence Crawford of Kilbirny, the male representative of Crawford- John, carried gules, a fesse ermine; he in the year 1528, excambed part of the lands of Crawford- John, with Sir James Hamilton of Finart, for the lands of Drumray, in the shire of Dumbarton, which continues with his descendants, by the title of Lord Drumray. He quartered the arms of Barclay of Kilbirny, as his grandfather John Crawford of Kilbirdy did; upon the account his father Malcolm Crawford of Garnock married Marjory, daughter and sole heir of John Barelay, Baron of Kilbirny, in the reign of King James III. and got with her that barony; who carried azure, a chevron betwixt three cross pates argent.

Sir John Crawford of Kilbirny, lineally descended from them, who for his loyalty to King Charles II. was made a knight-baronet, he left behind him only two daughters; Anne, the eldest, married to Sir Alexander Stewart of Blackhall, and borne to him Sir Archibald of Blackhall, and his brother Mr Walter Stewart, advocate, who carries his paternal coat as before, within a bordure ermine, for his difference, upon the account of his mother, as in the Plate of Achievements: The second daughter was Margaret, on whom her father Sir John settled his estate, and to the heirs of her body; obliging them to carry the surname of Crawford, with the arms: She married Mr Patrick Lindsay, second son of John Earl of Crawford, to whom she had issue, three sons and as many daughters. John the eldest was created Viscount of Garnock, Lord Kilbirny, Kingsburn and Drumray, the 10th of April 1703. He married Margaret Stewart, daughter to James Earl of Bute; she bore to him Patrick, the present Viscount of Garnock, who carries quarterly, first and fourth gules, a fesse ermine, for Crawford; second and third azure, a chevron between three cross pates argent, for Barclay; supporters, two grey-hounds, proper; and for crest, the beast ermine; with the motto, Sine labe nota.

CRAWFORD of Auchinames, an ancient family in the shire of Renfrew, a branch of Crawford of Loudon, as in Crawford's History of Renfrew, who says the family carried argent, two spears saltiers-ways, between four spots of ermine; but Balfour, in his Blazons, says, Crawford of Auchinames, carried gules, a fesse ermine, surmounted of two lances in saltier argent.

CRAWFORD of Haining, gules, a fesse ermine, betwixt two stars in chief, and a hart's head coup'd in base or,—Workman's MS. And John Crawford, sometime Dean of Guild in Linlithgow, descended of Haining, carries, as in the Lyon Register, gules, a fesse ermine, betwixt two mullets in chief argent, and a hart's head cabossed in base or, attired sable; crest, a hart's head coup'd proper: motto, Haec venus invictus.

CRAWFORD of Lefnoris, or Loehnoris, gules, a fesse ermine, and in chief two stars or; so illuminated in the house of Falu-hall.

CRAWFORD of Ardmillan, alias of Bedland, descended of Crawford of Loudon, gules, on a fesse ermine, between three mullets argent, two crescents interlaced of the field: and for motto, Durum patientia frango. L. R.

HENRY CRAWFORD of Easter Seaton, descended of Kilbirny, gules, a fesse waved ermine, between three mullets argent, pierced azure; crest, an increscent chevqué argent and azure: and for motto, Fide & diligentia. L. R.

THOMAS CRAWFORD of Jordanhill, a younger son of Laurence Crawford of Kilbirny, carried the quartered arms as his father, Crawford and Barclay; but under the fesse, for his difference, he had two swords in saltier, answerable to his military profession, being an eminent captain in the minority of King James VI.: motto, God show the right.

CRAWFORD of Cartsburn, a second son of Crawford of Jordanhill, gules, a fesse ermine, between three mullets in chief argent, and, in base, two swords saltier-ways proper, hilted and pommelled or, all within a bordure waved of the third; crest, a sword erect in pale, having a pair of balances on the top or point, all proper: motto, Iguod tibi hoc alteri.

CRAWFORD of Cloverburn, gules, a fesse ermine, between three crows argent; crest, a garb proper: motto, God feeds the crows.

JOHN CRAWFORD of Crawfordland, gules, a fesse ermine; and for crest, a marble pillar supporting a man's heart, proper: motto, Stant innixa Des.

All these blazons of the name of Crawford are so recorded in the Register of our Lyon Office. I proceed to give examples of bearing the fesse by other surnames, which are to be found there, and other Books of Blazon.

The achievement of the Right Honourable the Earl of Hyndford, argent, a fesse tortillé, azure and gules, timbred with crown, helmet, and mantlings befitting his quality, and issuing out of a wreath of his tinctures, an arm in armour holding a broken spear, all proper; supported, on the right, by a man in complete armour, holding in his right hand a batton royal, all proper; and, on the left, by a horse argent, furnished gules; and, over all, on an esorl, for motto, Toujours prêt, as in the Plate of Achievements: Where may be seen, also, the achievement of his brother-german, WILLIAM CARMICHAEL, Esquire, Advocate, who carries as his brother the Earl, within a bordure ermine, for his difference; crest and motto as the Earl.

CARMICHAEL of Balmeady, or, a fesse wraithed, azure and gules, charged with a crescent argent.—Balfour's Manuscript.

The first of this family was one Captain CARMICHAEL of the Castle of Crawford, so designed in our Histories, who married the Countess Dowager of Angus, in the reign of King James III. and got the heritable Ballyery of the regality of Abernethy.

CARMICHAEL of Balnblae, descended of Balmeady, argent, a fesse wraithed, azure and gules, within an orle of eight crescents of the last.—Mackenzie's Heraldry. But, in the New Registers, a bordure of the second, charged with eight crescents of the first; crest, a woman's head and neck issuing out of the wreath: motto, Fortune helps the forward.

JOHN CARMICHAEL, portioner of Little-Blackburn, argent, a fesse wreeathed, azure and gules, within a bordure counter-compone of the second and first, recorded in the Lyon Register; with the motto, Pro meipso & aliis.

The surname of Wilkie carries (almost the same with the surname of Carmichael) argent, a fesse wreeathed, azure and gules, betwixt a crescent in chief, and a cinquefoil in base of the second; as in Workman's MS.

The surname of Edeker, argent, a fesse wreeathed, gules and vert, between two mullets in chief, and a crescent in base of the second, in Ogilvie's Collection of Blasons.

Mure of Caldwell, descended of the Mures of Abercorn in West Lothian, argent, on a fesse azure, three stars of the first, within a bordure in grained gules, which stand illuminate in the house of Fala-hall.

Mure of Clanderson, descended of Caldwell, carries the same with Caldwell, with a crescent in base gules, for a brotherly difference.

Archibald Murie of Riccartoun, sometime Provost of Edinburgh, descended of the family of Caldwell, carries as Caldwell; but, for his difference, ingrats both the fesse and bordure; and for crest, a savage's head and neck from the shoulders, and about the temples of the head a wreath of laurel, proper: motto, Darii non franger.

Mr James Murie, Parson of Philorth, argent, on a fesse azure, three mullets or, and in base a book expanded, proper: motto, Oras & labora. L. R.

Boswell of Glassmont, descended of the family of Balmuto, quarterly, first and fourth argent, on a fesse invected sable, three cinquefoils of the first; second and third or, a lion rampant gules, surmounted of a ribbon sable, for Abernethy; so recorded in the Lyon Register; with the motto, Nothing venturium nothing base. Where are also, without a crest, the arms of Boswell of Downen, another cadet of Balmuto, being the quartered coat of that family within a bordure indented gules.

Mr James Dalrymple observes in his Collections.

Runolphus de Weir is mentioned in the registers of Kelso, Paisley, and Murray, to have lived in the reign of King William, and Thomas de Weir in the reign of Alexander II. Of this surname there are several families in Clydesdale, the two principal of which are those of Blackwood and Stonebyres.

Sir George Weir of Blackwood, argent, on a fesse, azure, three stars of the first, with the badge of Nova Scotia in the dexter chief point, as the Knights Barons use; and for crest, a demi-horse in armour, proper, issuing out of a wreath of his tinctures, bridled and saddled gules, and for motto, Nobilis viator. His grandfather was of the name of Lawrie, who married the heiress of Weir of Blackwood, and took upon him the name and arms of Weir.

The surname of M'Michael, sable, a fesse betwixt three crescents or—Pont's MS. And, in the same Book, the arms of the surname of Lecky, argent, on a fesse vert, three roses of the first; but, in Crawford's MS. Lecky of that ilk, argent, a chevron betwixt three roses gules.

Sir William Craie of Gearsay in Orkney, a family of an old standing there, carries ermine, a boar's head couped gules, armed and langued or; and for crest, a boar passant argent, armed and langued azure: motto, Timor omnium avert. in the Lyon Register.

Laurence Craige of Kilgraston, parted per pale, azure and sable, a chevron argent, between three crescents or; crest, a pillar proper: motto, Securum praediam.

John Craige of Dumbarnie, parted per pale, azure and sable, a chevron in-grailed argent, between three crescents or: motto, Honeste vivere. L. R.

The surname of Roger, designed of that ilk in Workman's MS. vert on a fesse argent, between three piles in chief, and a cinquefoil in base of the last, a saltier of the first. But Mr Pont, in his Book of Blazons, gives to the name of Roger only vert, a fesse argent; and, to another family of that name, sable, a stag's head erased argent, holding in its mouth a mullet or.

Brymer of Westerton, or, a fesse ermine, betwixt three dragons' heads erased
OF THE BAR.

... gules; crest, a dexter hand, armed with a gauntlet, proper, holding a phœn: motto, Per tala per hostes,—so matriculated in the Lyon Register.

Dick, argent, a fesse waved azure, between three stars gules, in Mr Pont’s Blazon.

Sir James Dick of Prestonfield, near Edinburgh, ermine, a fesse azure, between two mullets in chief and a hart’s head erased gules, in base; and for crest, a ship in distress, proper: motto, Spes invicta, matriculated in the Lyon Register; where is also,

Scott of Logie, argent, a fesse counter-embattled between three lions’ heads gules.

The surname of Rowan, or, a fesse chequè, azure and argent, between three cross crosetis fitchèd in chief, and as many crescents in base gules.—Pont’s MS.

McKach, argent, a fesse between three mullets in chief, and a lion rampant in base gules.

McBair, argent, a fesse gules, between three stars in chief, and a lion rampant in base of the second.

The surname of Der, argent, a fesse wavy azure, between three mullets gules, in Ogilvy’s Collections.

The surname of Dalgarner, gules; a fesse between three bars’ heads couped argent. Pont’s MS.

C H A P. XI.

THE Bar is one of the honourable ordinaries, which the English, as Guillim, describe, saying, “That it is formed by two lines equidistant, drawn over-... behalf the escutcheon, (after the manner of a fesse before-mentioned), and containeth only the fifth part of the field.”

Seeing then, according to the English, there is no other difference between the fesse and the bar, but that the one possesseth the third part of the field, and the other only the fifth part, and both horizontally, it is evident, that the bar is but naturally a diminutive of the fesse; and if so, why a distinct ordinary more than the diminutives of the other ordinaries, as the pallet, bendlet, and cheveronel?

To this some answer, That the fesse must always possess the centre of the shield, and the bar may be placed in chief, or in base. Yet it is still to be observed, when there is but one bar in the field, it must possess the centre as well as the fesse: And there is no more special reason for the bar to be counted an ordinary by itself than a pallet; for when one pallet appears in the field, it then possesses the centre.

As for the signification of the bar, it is known, by the name, to represent a piece of timber, or other matter, laid traverse over some passes, bridge, or gates, to stop and debar enemies from entrance; and for that effect, says John Ferne, they are called bars, which do represent, in armories, force, valour, and strength: And the same says of the pallets, bendlets, and cheveronels, which do represent the pieces of timber in the fortifications of camps, cities, and the barriers of places where tournaments and joustings were celebrated; and from the various position of these pieces came their different names.

To speak generally of the bar, all oblong pieces which thwart or traverse the shield, as the honourable ordinaries do, have been called bars by all nations, speaking generally of them. The Spaniards give the name bar indifferently to pales, fesses, and bends: Speaking of the arms of Arragon and Barcelona, which are pale and gules, they call them barras longas, as relative to the name Barcelona. The Italians call them ibars, as Menestrier observes; who adds, that some French heralds have likewise called the ordinaries indifferently barras. The house of Barr in France, says he, carried azure, a bend argent, betwixt two stars of the last; which bend is called a bar, as relative to the name of the family: But, since the term bar has been appropriated particularly to the bend sinister, by the French, this family have made their bend dexter a bend sinister, to make the allusion more direct to the name of the family of Barr. With us, I find a bend and fesse blazoned indifferently a bar, in allusion to the bearer's designation or surname.

Lockhart of Barr, an old family of that name, carried argent, on a bar sable, (which was a bend dexter), three letter locks or.

The name of Barr, or Barry, gave azure, an eagle displayed argent, surmounted of a bar, which is represented as a fesse sable, charged with two mullets of the second.

Sir George Mackenzie, in his Science of Heraldry, chap. 13, observes, that a fesse of old with us was taken for a bar, as in the blazons of the arms of the surname of Dempster, gules, a sword argent, hilted and pommelled or bend-ways, surmounted of a bar of the last, now called a fesse, to show they were heritable Dempsters; who are criminal officers, an honourable office of old, and therefore carry a sword as a sign of power in criminals, which is called jus Gladius; and because the Dempsters used to stand at the bar, and pronounce the verdict, therefore they got the bar, which seems to represent the same. Which arms quartered with those of Abernethy, viz. or, a lion rampant gules, brushed with a ribbon sable, were carried by John Dempster of Pitdive, descended, and representative of the family of Muirsk; and for crest, a demi-lion gules naissant out of the torse, holding in his dexter paw a sword erect, proper; with the motto on an escrol, Fortiter & strenue, as in the Plate of Achievements, which family ended in an heiress who was married to Sir James Campbell of Aberuchill, baronet; of whom before.

Mr John Dempster, minister of the Gospel, carried the same quartered arms within a bordure, parted by pale, argent and sable; for crest, a leg bone of a man, and a branch of palm, disposed saltier-ways, proper; with the motto, Mars aut vita decora. L. R.

The bar then, according to the English, possesses the fifth part of the field, whereas the fesse occupies the third part. And it is not confined to any certain or prescribed place as the fesse is, but may be transferred to any part of the escutcheon; yet if there be but one in the field, by the rules of heraldry, it is ever blazoned a fesse, and not a bar. For, says Holme's, it cannot be a bar, except there be two or more in the field:

I have not met with one bar, and so called, carried by the English for arms, save in one book called, The Art of Heraldry, printed at London 1693, which gives for arms, to Captain John Burken of London, Esq. argent, a bar azure, as fig. 12. Plate IV. to show the diminution of the bar from the fesse, which the French blazon a fesse en divise, the Latin heralds, trahs, as John Ferne; but Mr Gibbon calls it velitis: Sylvester Petra Sancta has for a bar, tenea transversa, and the German, Jacob Imhoff, uses the word fisciola. In carrying of one bar in a field, I find but one instance in our books of blazon, which is the bearing of the surname of Meldrum, argent, a demi-otter issuing out of a bar waved sable, as fig. 13. Plate IV. but here the bar is made too large by the engraver.

By the practice then in Britain, there are to be two in a field before they can be properly called bars; but by the French they are still called faces, for the bar with them is the bend-sinister; of which afterwards. The family of Refuge in France, argent, two bars gules, surmounted of as many serpents nowed, and affronté in pale azure; Menestrier blazon these arms thus, d'argent à deux faces de guêtres et deux serpents d'azur, tortillés, où ondoyons en pal et affrontez brochans sur le tout; as fig. 14. Plate IV.

The surname of Gifford, gules, three bars ermine, fig. 15. The first of this surname with us, is said to have come from England to Scotland, in the reign of Malcolm Canmore; and Hugo de Gifford is to be met with as a witness in charters of William King of Scotland. The principal family of the name was Gifford of Giffordhall, in East-Lothian; which family ending without issue-male, having only daughters: The eldest was married to Hay of Lochquharat, of whom is descended the present Marquis of Tweeddale, the family has been in use ever since the fore-said match to quarter the arms of Gifford with their own.

Gifford of Sheriff-hall, in Mid-Lothian, a cadet of Gifford-hall, carried gules, three bars ermine within a bordure argent. John Gifford of Sheriff-hall was forfeited by King James III. for keeping correspondence with the English, and entertaining the English pursuivant, called Blue-mante. Those of the surname of Gifford, in Devonshire in England, carry gules, three lozenges ranged in fesse ermine, as Morgan gives them, retaining the tinctures of the Giffords in Scotland.

FOTHERINGHAM of Powrie, ermine, three bars gules, as in fig. 16. Plate IV.; crest, a griffin argent, proper; supporters, two naked men wreathed about the head and middle with laurel, proper. The like arms are thus blazoned by Mr Gibbon, Gevite tres fasciolas coccinæas in formula argentæa muris Arminiae maculis intersecta. The first of this family is said to have come from Hungary with Margaret, King Malcolm Canmore's queen. Sir George Mackenzie observes, as in his Manuscript of Genealogies, that this family got the lands of Wester-Powrie by marrying a daughter of the family of Ogilvie of Auchterhouse, about the year 1399, of whom is lineally descended the present Laird of Powrie.

The surname of MAIR, of old De la Mare, carried or, three bars dancetté gules; as in Balfour's Manuscript.

The surname of AUCHENLECK, alias Affleck, argent, three bars sable, as in the Lyon Register. The chief of this surname was in the shire of Angus, and had their name from their lands; as Sir George Mackenzie, who tells us in his Manuscript, they had a charter of the lands of Auchenleck from King David I. There was another family of this name in Kyle, called Auchenleck of that ilk, of which family Sir John Auchenleck of that ilk, having only two daughters, the eldest of whom being married to William Cunningham of Craigen, anno 1499, disposed his estate to him and his said daughter, and to the heirs-male of that marriage, they bearing the name and arms of Auchenleck. But the conveyance being without consent of the king, who was superior, the barony of Auchenleck fell into the king's hands by recognition. King James IV. gave these lands to Thomas a younger son of Balmuto in Fife, who married the other daughter and co-heiress of Sir John Auchenleck of that ilk; of whom is lineally descended Mr James Boswell of Auchenleck, advocate; as in Crawford's History of Renfrew.

There was another family of the surname of AUCHENLECK, in the shire of Perth, designed of Balmanno, who carried for arms, argent, a cross counter-embattled sable, being the arms of Balmanno, which the first Auchenleck of this family took when he married the heiress of Balmanno of that ilk, as Sir George Mackenzie in his Manuscript and Science of Heraldry.

Sable, three bars waved or; by the surname of LOGIE, being those of Sir John Logie of that ilk; as in Balfour's Manuscript, whose daughter Margaret was second wife to King David II.

The name of LAUCHLAN,azure, two bars waved argent, between as many crosslets fitchet or in chief, and a swan in base, proper; crest, a swan; with the motto, Divina sibi canis, as in Pont's Manuscript.

Bars do sometimes represent in armories, especially when waved orundy, as we blazon them, waves of the sea and waters.

The arms of the surname of DRUMMOND, or, three bars waved gules, relative to the name Drummond. Drumm, in old Scots, says Hawthorncl, a famous historian and antiquary, signifies high, and und, or und, from the Latin word unda a wave; and so Drummond, an high wave. The first ancestor of this family; is said by Vanbassan, a Dane, as in his Manuscript in the Lawyers' Library, to have been one Maurice, son of George, a younger son of Andreas King of Hungary, who succeeded his brother Solomon, whose queen was aunt to St Margaret, with whom Maurice came to Scotland; and to make good this extract, he urges the similitude of the arms of Drummond, with those of Hungary, consisting also of bars; of which immediately.

John Abel, a Franciscan friar, and John Leslie bishop of Ross, make also the first of the family of Drummond an Hungarian, and captain of the ship in which Edgar Atheling and his sister Margaret arrived in Scotland, at the place now called from her Queensferry. The same, says William Drummond of Hawthorncl, viz. that one Maurice was captain of that ship; and, besides his former derivation of the surname of Drummond, says, Drummont, or Drummon; for which he quotes William of Newberry in his Guide to Languages. And the Honourable William Drummond, first Viscount of Strathallan has writ a full Genealogical Account of the family of Drummond, with its rise from the Hungarian Maurice to this time, with the collateral branches of the family; some of which I shall only mention here, with their arms, as I have found them in old and new books of blazons.

The first then of the ancient and noble family of Drummond, was Maurice, who took the name and arms upon the account abovementioned: He is said to have got from King Malcolm III. a barony in the shire of Dumbarton, and the stewardship of Lennox; which barony and office was enjoyed by his successors. Sir William Drummond, the fifth in a lineal descent from Maurice, is mentioned in the Ragman-Roll, who was the father of Malcolm Drummond, who married a daughter of Maldwin Earl of Lennox. She bore to him several children: Their eldest son, Sir John Drummond, married Mary Montifex, one of the daughters and co-heiresses of Sir William Montifex, with whom he got several lands in Perthshire, near to other lands which formerly belonged to his progenitors, as the baronies of Stobbhall and Cargill, where he fixed his residence; which gave occasion thereafter to his posterity to be sometimes designed barons of Stobbhall, and sometimes of Cargill. He had several sons and daughters: The eldest of the last, the beautiful Annabella Drummond, was queen to King Robert III. and mother of King James I. of Scotland.

The fifth, in a lineal descent from him, was John Drummond of Cargill, who entered into an indenture and contract with Colin Earl of Argyle, anno 1472, that his eldest son, Malcolm, should marry Lady Isabel Campbell, Earl Colin's daughter; and in case of failure by death, the next son and daughter were substitute to marry. But Malcolm died young, and his immediate younger brother William married Lady Isabel, in his father's lifetime; whom I find, in a discharge of 450 merks, as a part of the tocher, designed John Drummond of Cargill, anno 1478; to which he added arms, having a shield couche by the sinister chief point, charged with three bars waved, tinctured with an helmet; and thereupon for crest, an eagle or falcon volant; and supported by two wild men, with battons in their hands: But there was no compartment as now used. This John Drummond of Cargill, was created a Lord of Parliament, by the title of Lord Drummond, in the year 1487: He married Lady Elizabeth Lindsay, daughter to David Earl of Crawford, commonly called Earl Bardy, and with her he had issue; and from whom was lineally descended,

James sixth Lord Drummond, who was created Earl of Perth 1605: He married Isabel Seaton, daughter to Robert first Earl of Winton, and with her had only one daughter, (being succeeded by his brother John in the earldom of Perth) Jean Drummond, who was afterwards married to John Earl of Sutherland, of whom is descended the present Earl of Sutherland. James Earl of Perth died in the palace of Seaton, and was interred in the collegiate church of Seaton: Over him his lady caused erect a stately marble monument, where his achievement is curiously carved; as by the following blazon used by his successors, Earls of Perth, viz.

Or, three bars waved gules, adorned with crown, helmet, and mantlings, befitting their quality; and, upon a ducal crown, in place of the wreath, standeth a howhound, proper, collared and leashed gules; supporters, two savages, proper, wreathed about the head and middle with oak leaves, holding battons over their shoulders, standing upon a compartment, like to a green hill semé of gall-traps; and for motto, Gang warily. As for the arms of the branches of this family, several of them shall be added in the end of this chapter.

Fig. 18. Argent, four bars counter-embattled sable, in the centre an inescutcheon gules. Counter-embattled is said of the fesse, bar, bend, and cross, &c. when both the sides of these figures are embattled. These arms were carried by the name of Straiton of Lauriston. Alexander Straiton of Lauriston was killed in the battle of Hairston 1411; and another Alexander Straiton of Lauriston is witness in a charter of King James III. confirming the lands of Kinmaid to Allan Kinmaid of that ilk.

There was an old family of this name, designed of that ilk, from the lands of Straiton, of which King David I. gave them a charter. Alexander Straiton of that ilk, and Andrew Straiton of Craig, are two of the inquest of serving Sir Alexander Fraser of Philorth, heir to his grandfather Sir Alexander, in the thanedom of
OF THE BAR.

Cow. Sir James Balfour, in his Book of Blazons, gives for arms to Stratton of that ilk, barry nebule of ten pieces, argent and azure. Bars then are carried plain, ingnailed, waved, embattled, and of other forms of lines before given in Plate II.

There are divers opinions concerning the number of bars that can be contained in one field: Some say more, others less; but, according to the proportion of the bar, without diminishing it, the field will contain but three: Yet to the number of four they are ordinarily blazoned bars; and if they be above that number, they are termed barules or closets.

When the field is filled with such pieces, as fessés and bars, we must consider whether they be of equal or unequal numbers; if of the last, we mention those of the greatest number first, taking the same for the field, and the smallest number last, as being the charge. Thus, in the former blazons, for example, that of Stratton of Lauriston, argent, four bars counter-embattled azure: Here there are five pieces of argent, the field, and four of azure, the charge. But, when the pieces are of equal number, then we say, fessy, barry, and barruly of four, six, eight, or ten, as in the following examples:

Fig. 19. Plate IV. The province of Zealand in the Netherlands, barry wavey of four pieces, argent and azure, on a chief or, a lion naissant gules. Which Chiffletius blazons thus, Fascie quatuor ex argenteo & cyano undulatim fuso, caput sect. aurem, leone coccineus (qui symbolum Hollandicum est) emergente impressum. Here the bars waved, as in the arms of Meldrum, Lochlin, Drummond, and Zealand, as we observed before, are taken for the waves of the sea, or of water; so also in the following blazon. The arms of Hungary, barry of eight pieces (the French say facet, the Latin, fasciola) argent and gules. The four pieces argent, are said, by heralds, to represent the four principal rivers that thwart the country of Hungary; and the other four pieces gules, the fertile red ground of the country.

When the number of these pieces exceed eight, the French, in place of barry, say burrellet of ten; and some of the English will say barry of ten: As Sandford, in his Blazon of the Arms of Valentia, barry of twelve pieces, argent and azure, an orle of eight martlets gules; which John Hastings Earl of Pembroke quartered as a coat of alliance with his own. And our heralds also say, barry of ten pieces, argent and azure, over all a lion rampant gules, carried by the name of Jackson; as Mr Pont, in his Manuscript.

The abstract or diminutive of the bar to the half, is called by the English a closet, and the fourth part of a bar is called by them a barulet; yet when the field consists of twelve of them, they do not say closet or barulet, but barry of ten or twelve, and say also sometimes, twelve pieces bar-ways: So that closets and barules are not mentioned in English blazons, but when the pieces are of an odd number, as argent five closets azure: The French, as is said before, for a bar, say, face en devole; and the diminutive of it, they call a triangle; which I take to be the same with the English closet, of which Menestrier gives an example, viz. argent, five triangles gules; and says, that triangles are never borne in arms, but of an odd number: So that the French never say triangle, nor the English closeté, when the pieces are of an even number. Menestrier in his description of the triangle, or triangle, says, it is a straight line made by a carpenter's rule, and that the glaziers in France, call the bars of windows, to which the glass is fastened, trianglet and the ropes, which are stretched from one side of a river to the other, for drawing boats back and fore, are called triangles.

When these diminutives of the fesse or bar, are placed two and two in a shield, they are called, bars gemels, from the word gemelli, twins; being in couples: And upon the same account, the French call them jumelles; the Latins, fasciola gemina, or geminate; and when three and three are joined together, they are called by the French, tierces; as by the following examples; argent, three bars gemels gules; over all, a lion sable, by Fairfax Lord Fairfax in England. Our heralds make these arms barruly of twelve, argent and gules, a lion rampant sable; and do not join the bars gules, two and two, as in fig. 28; for example of tierces, azure, three tierces or, which Menestrier gives; as also Monsieur Baron, for the arms of Bourbourg in France.

The French say of the facés, as of the pales before, when they are opposite to one another in metal and colour; and call them then contre facé, fig. 21. as in the Blazon of the Arms of Juron in France, by Menestrier and Baron, Contre facé d'or et de gueules de six pieces: We would say of such a bearing, parted per pale, barry of four, or and gules counter-changed; or as Mr Morgan, in his Blazon of the Arms of Sir Edward Barrett of Avely in Essex, parted per pale, argent and gules, barry of four pieces counter-changed: Sir James Ballour, in his Blazons, gives us the arms of the surname of Per, thus, parted per pale, argent and gules, barry of six counter-changed. It may be objected, that there cannot be six bars in one field, since one bar possesses the fifth part of the field; notwithstanding which, the English and we say, ordinarily, barry of six or more, understanding, as I suppose, that there are six pieces bar-ways.

Having spoken to the bar, and the diminution of its breadth, I shall speak a little as to the losing of its length. When it does not touch the sides of the shield, it is said, with us, to be couped; and almisé or alcisé with the French; as fig. 22. or, three bars couped gules, by the family of Hamydes in Flanders, which Mr Gibson blazons thus, In campo aures tres minutios vectes a latera senti disjunctos: French heralds blazon these arms, d'or à trois banydes de gueules. And from them Gerard Leigh, when a fesse is couped, says it is bumet, from the bunnyles, which signify a cut or piece of a tree; and therefore, Menestrier takes them in the above blazon of the family of Hamydes, to represent what we call gautrees, or oblong pieces of trees, after the form of fesses couped, upon which they set hogheads and barrels of wine, called in Flanders bumes; and from which the surname and blazon of Hamydes. The Dictionary of Arms, lately published by Mr Kent, gives the arms of the name of Abriscourt, ermine, three bars bumetti gules.

Having thus treated of the fesse and bar, in their forms, multiplication and diminutives, I am now to show what denomination other figures have, when situate after their position; as when many small figures are ranged in the middle of the field, after the position of the fesse, they are said to be in fesse; the French say, Rangés où misès en face, and the Latins, Faciatim in loco ascie, or, ad modum face; as in the bearing of Montague Earl of Salisbury, argent, three fusils, (some call them lozenges) in fesse gules, and with us argent, five fusils in fesse sable; for which some of our heralds say, argent, a fesse fusilly sable, by Leith of Restalrig, as fig. 23. Others of the name have them otherwise disposed; of which in the chapter of fusils.

When small figures are ranged horizontally, above or below the middle of the shield, they are said then with us, to be in bar; but the French, whether figures be ranged in chief or in base, say en face. As for example, some of the surname of Ouston, with us, give for arms, gules, a crescent between two stars ranged bar-ways in chief, and three stars bar-ways in base argent, as in Mr. Workman's Illuminated Manuscript. The French would blazon this bearing thus, gules, a crescent between two stars in fesse baussé, or transposed, and other three stars in fesse abaissé argent, as Menestrier, in his blazons of the arms of Grolier in France, just such another as the former, fig. 24. viz. d'azur à trois estoiles d'argent, en face sur trois besants d'or, disposés de meme en face abaissé, i. e. azure, three stars in fesse, and as many besants in fesse below the middle of the shield. Abaisé is a term used by the French, when a chief or fesse is situate in the shield below their proper and fixed places: For example, the chief is always placed on the top of the shield; but when another chief is placed above it, (as in the following chapter of the chief, Plate IV. fig. 31, and 32.) then the lowermost of the two is called a chief abaissé, and so of a fesse, whose proper place is the middle third part of the field; but if it be placed below that, it is called a fesse abaissé, in opposition to the fesse baussé, of which before; and they say the same of other figures situate after the position of these fesses high or low.

When oblong figures are placed in the field of arms horizontally, one above another, they are said to be bar-ways; as some do blazon the arms of England, gules, three leopards bar-ways in pale or, but these being lions passant gardant, need not, by their position after that of the bar, be said to be bar-ways, since passant intimates the same. For a more specific example of which, I shall here give the arms of Bertie Marquis of Lindsey, in England, argent, three battering rams bar-ways, proper, armed and garnished azur. This family was dignified with the title of Lord Willoughby of Eresby, 1585; and, in the year 1626, with the title of Earl of Lindsey, and honoured with the office of Great Chamberlain of England, which is hereditary to the family since the death of Henry de Vere Earl of Oxford, and, afterwards, with the title of Marquis of Lindsey, 1766. The first of this family is said to be one Leopold de Bertie, Constable of Dover Castle, in the time of King Ethelred, whose ancestors are said to have come from Bertiland, on the borders of Prussia, with the Saxons. The above arms they quarter with those of Willoughby, being or, a fret Azure. There are several noble branches of this family, as Bertie Earl of Abingdon, as in the Peerage of England, who carries the same arms, with an annulet, for his difference.

BLAZONS BELONGING TO THE CHAPTER OF THE BAR.

The surname of Hare with us, azure, two bars, and a chief indented or.—Balfour's MS.

Sir Thomas Hare of Howbardolph, in Norfolk, Baronet, gules, two bars and a chief indented or.

Kirby of Kirbyhall, in Lincolnshire, argent, two bars and a canton gules, charged with a cross moline or.

Or, three bars azure, these were anciently the arms of one Fulk de Ovray, an English Baron, whose only daughter and heiress was married to one of the name of Constable, who assumed the arms of the said Fulk, his father-in-law; and from him was lineally descended Henry Lord Constable of Halsham, who carried the same arms as his paternal ones. He was, by King James I. of Great Britain, created Viscount of Dunbar, 1621.

Fotheringham of Lawhill, a second son of the family of Powrie, ermine, three bars gules, and, for his difference, charges each bar with a buckle or; crest, a griffin's head couped, proper: motto, Be it fast.

Fotheringham of Bandon, another younger son of Powrie, carries the arms of the family within a bordure gules, for difference; crest, a griffin's head erased, proper: motto, Be it fast. Both matriculated in the Lyon Register.

The Right Honourable John Earl of Melfort, second son of James Earl of Perth, and his lady Anne Gordon, eldest daughter to George, second Marquis of Huntly, and Lady Anne Campbell, daughter to Archibald Earl of Argyle. John, before he was dignified with any titles of honour, married, first, Sophia Lundin, heiress of Lundin, and with her had issue; secondly, he married a daughter of Sir Thomas Wallace of Craige, sometime one of the Senators of the College of Justice, and Lord Justice Clerk, and with her he has issue. He was first made Constable of the Castle of Edinburgh, and Master of the Ordnance; he was a Privy Counsellor, and soon after made Secretary of State by King Charles the II. and was continued in that post by King James VII. who farther honoured him with the title of Earl of Melfort, Viscount of Forth, Lord Drummond of Riccarton, Castlemain, and Gaston. His armorial bearing, quarterly, first and fourth or, three bars waved gules, for Drummond; second and third or, a lion rampant within the double treasure, flowered and counter-flowered with flower-de-luces gules, all within a bordure gusdonated, argent and azure, the arms of Lundin of that Ilk, as descended of a natural son of William King of Scotland.

The royal bearing, within the foresaid bordure, was granted by a special concession of King Charles II. under his royal hand, to John Laird of Lundin, (afterwards Earl of Melfort), the tenor of which concession, or allowance, is as follows:

Charles Rex,

Whereas by a declaration, under the hand of our Lyon-Depute, in our ancient kingdom of Scotland, bearing date the 2d of September last, it doth appear to us, that it is sufficiently instructed, by original charters and other ancient documents, that the ancient family of Lundin, (or London), in our said kingdom, is lineally descended of Robert of London, natural son of William the Lion King of Scotland, and brother to King Alexander II. and that in regard of this descent, it may be proper (if we please to allow the same) for the Laird of Lundin to bear the royal arms of Scotland, within a bordure compose, or gobonated, argent and azure; and for the crest, a lion gules, issuing forth of an open or antique crown or; and, for supporters, two lions gardant gules, having collars or, charged with three thistles vert: with this motto, Dei dono sum quod sum. And we being graciously desirous, upon all fit occasions, to give testimony of the es-tem we have of that ancient and honourable family, do, by these presents, give full power, and warrant, and authority, to the present Laird of Lundin, and his lawful successors of the name of Lundin, and descending from that family, to bear &c. as above. For doing whereof, this shall be to him, and to our Lyon King at Arms in that our kingdom, now for the time being, for extending and giving out the said arms in due form, a sufficient band. Which we do hereby appoint to be recorded in the Books of Registers of our Lyon Office, and this original band to remain in custody of the said Laird of Lundin and his successors aforesaid.
OF THE BAR. 65

Given under our royal band and signet, at our Court at Whitehall, the 27th day of October, One thousand six hundred and seventy-nine, and of our reign the thirty-one year.

By His Majesty's Command, LAUDERDALE."

The Lairds of Lundie, or Lundin, have been, and still are in use to carry only these arms in the above grant, disusing their old bearing, (of which before in the Chapter of the Pales). And in the Lyon Register it is added, " That it is further
" allowed to the said Laird of Lundin, to add to the lion, the crest, a sword erect " in his dexter paw, and a thistle slipped in the sinister, all proper." See the same engraven among the Achievements.

Drummond of Carnock, or, three bars waved gules, within a bordure of the last.
William Drummond, the first of this family, was a second son of Sir John Drummond, and brother to Annabell, Queen to King Robert III. and mother of King James I.

Drummond of Midhope, or, three bars waved gules, within a bordure of the last, charged with eight crescents of the first for his difference, being a younger son of Carnock.

Drummond of Hawthornden, or, three bars waved gules, within a bordure of the last, being the same with Carnock, as representative of that family; crest, a pegasus proper, maned and winged or: motto, His gloria reddit honores. The first of the family of Hawthornden was Sir John Drummond, second son to Sir Robert, first Laird of Carnock, and his wife Marjory, daughter to Robert Lord Elphinston.
Of them was lineally descended William Drummond of Hawthornden, a learned gentleman, a famous antiquary, a renowned poet, and author of the History of the five King James's; whose son was the late Sir William, father of the present Laird of Hawthornden. L. R.

George Drummond of Blair, descended of a third son of Sir Walter Drummond of Cargill, and his lady, a daughter of Graham of Gorthy, carries or, three bars waved gules, each charged with an escalop of the field, being a part of the Graham's bearing; crest, a nest of young ravens, proper: with the motto, Deus Providet.
L. R.

Drummond of Innermay, or, three bars waved gules, on a canton argent, a fountain azure; crest, a hand holding a flaming heart erected proper: motto, Loyal au mort. The first of this family was David, second son of John Drummond of Drummerinock, a fourth son of Sir Malcolm Drummond of Cargill, and his lady, a daughter of Tulibardin. L. R.

George Drummond of Riccarton, quarterly, first and fourth or, three bars waved gules, within a bordure azure; second and third argent; a lion rampant azure, for Crichton; crest, a lion azure, issuing out of a wreath: motto, Dum spiro spero.
He was descended of a second son of Innerpeffry, younger son of the first John Lord Drummond. N. R.

James Drummond, a younger son of David Lord Drummond, and his lady, a daughter of William Lord Ruthven, was first styled Lord Incharffy, being Commendatory of that Abbacy, and afterwards created Lord Maderty, by King James VI. in the year 1627. He married Jean, daughter to Sir James Chisholm of Cromlucks, and with her got the lands of Innerpeffry, which were her mother's portion, being heiress of Sir John Drummond of Innerpeffry. He had by his said lady two sons, John Lord Maderty, and Sir James the first Laird of Machony. The achievement of the Lord Maderty is, or, three bars undé gules, and, on a canton argent, a lion's head erased, within a double pressure counter-flowered gules; crest, a falcon proper, armed, chained, and belled or; supporters, two savages proper, holding clubs over their shoulders, wreathed about the head and middle with laurels, standing upon a hill semé of gall-traps: and for motto, Lord have mercy.

Sir James Drummond of Machary, descended as above, carries the same with the Lord Maderty, with a crescent for a brotherly difference; crest, a falcon hooded, chained, and belled, proper: motto, Prius mori quam fidelam fallere.

William Drummond, Viscount of Strathallan, Lord Drummond of Cromlicks, eldest son of William Drummond, a younger son of John second Lord Maderty, was a Lieutenant-General in Muscovy; and, upon his return home, was advanced, for his merit, to the like post in Scotland; and, by King James VII. created Viscount of Strathallan. He was succeeded to that same title of honour by his son William, who also succeeded to the last Lord Maderty, who died without heirs-male of his body; and carried, for arms, quarterly, first and fourth or, three bars waved gules, for Drummond; second and third or, a lion's head erased gules, within a double pressure flowered and counter-flowered of the last, as a coat of augmentation; crest, a goshawk with wings displayed, proper; motto, Lord have mercy; supporters as the Earl of Perth, without the compartment. In some paintings, his crest is a falcon standing upon one foot, and holding up with the other a garland of laurel: with the motto, Virtutem coronat bonus.

Sir John Drummond of Logicalmond, as a third son of John second Earl of Perth, the arms of Drummond, within a bordure waved gules; crest, a dexter arm from the shoulder holding a broad sword: and for motto, Nil timeo. N. R.

John Drummond of Colquhalzie, descended of the Earl of Perth, or, three bars waved gules, and, in chief, as many stars auree; crest, a turtle dove standing on the top of a rock, proper; with the motto, Sto nobili. N. R.

John Drummond of Pitkellanie, descended of Concriag, or, three bars undé and, in chief, a boar's head erased gules, for Chisholm of Cromlicks, with whom this family matched; crest, a sword and garb, proper, placed saltier-ways: motto, Et marie & arte. N. R.

Mr James Drummond of Cultmalundy, descended of the Earl of Perth, or, three bars waved gules, in the centre a man's heart counter-changed of the same; crest, a hand grasping a man's heart, proper: motto, Cun corde. N. R.

Mr David Drummond, sometime Minister at Monedie, a younger son of Colquhalzie, carried as Colquhalzie, all within a bordure gules, for his difference; crest, an anchor in pale, and a dove standing on the top of it: with the motto, Spes mea res mea. N. R.

George Drummond of Carlowrie, or, three bars waved gules, and, for a brotherly difference, a mullet surmounted of an annulet; crest, a dexter hand holding a curling stone: with the motto, Have at all.

Sir George Drummond, sometime Provost of Edinburgh, or, three bars waved, and, in chief, a martlet betwixt two crescents gules; crest, a pheon or: motto, Consequentur quodcumque petit. N. R.

Gavin Drummond, descended of Kildies, who was a cadet of the family of Pitkellanie, or, three bars undé gules, over all a naked man naissant in pale, grasping in his dexter hand a sword, and having his sinister hand and feet in action, all proper; crest, a dexter hand holding a spear, proper: motto, Per mare per terras.
N. R.

Mr John Drummond, representative of Midhope, or, three bars wavey gules, within a bordure of the last, charged with eight crescents of the first; and for crest, three stars placed in chevron or: motto, Ad astra per ardua. N. R.

The chief, who upon Thynne, till So Font's and Une points reign.

The two branches of the family of Cecil, Thomas and Robert, two brothers, were both created Earls by King James I. of Great Britain, the third year of his reign.

Thomas, (the eldest by birth, though the youngest in the title), Earl of Exeter, carries the principal bearing, viz. barry of ten argent and azure, over all, six escutcheons sable, each charged with a lion rampant of the first: And Robert, the younger, though first in the dignity of Earl, by the title of Salisbury, carries the same arms, with a crescent for his difference.

The family of the surname of Thynne in England were anciently surnamed Bouteville. The first of that name came from the countries of Ponton and Gascony in France, with forces to assist King John of England in his wars against the Barons; and his successors, for a long time famous in England, went under the name of Bouteville, till the reigns of Edward IV. and Richard III. that John Bouteville of Stratton was first named John le Thynne, and from him the name of Thynne was derived to the family of Boutevilles. His grandson, Thomas Thynne, alias Bouteville, in the reign of Henry VIII. married the daughter and heir of Bleek, and Bleek a daughter and heir of Gataker, who married with a daughter and heir of Sir John Burleigh; upon which account, the Thynnes now quarter the arms of those three families with their paternal arms, viz. barry of ten or and sable. This family was raised to the honour and dignity of Baron Thynne of Warmminster, and Viscount of Weymouth, by letters patent, bearing date 11th December 1662.

The surname of Macalson with us, or, five bars gules, accompanied with two spear-heads in chief, three martlets in the centre, and four spear-heads in base of the last. Pont's Manuscript.

Montague Earl of Montague, argent, three fusils in fesse gules, within a bordure sable, for his difference from Salisbury, who carries only the plain coat. Montague Earl of Manchester, descended of Montague Earl of Montague, carries as he does, with a crescent for a brotherly difference: And Montague Earl of Sandwich, another younger brother, carries the same with Montague Earl of Montague, with a star for his difference.

The surname of Leith, of old, argent, five fusils in fesse sable: Some say, argent, a fesse fusil sable.

Leith of Leith-hall, or, a cross croslet fitched sable, between three crescents in chief, and as many fusils in base gules, bar-ways.

Leith of Overhall, or, a cheveron between three fusils azure, here the fusils are two and one; and Leith of Hearthill carries his figure that same way, viz. or, a cross croslet fitched azure, between two crescents in chief, and a fusil in base gules.

OF THE CHIEF OR CHEF.

OF THE CHIEF OR CHEF.

The Chief is that honourable ordinary which possesses the third upper part of the shield horizontally; and the French describe it, une piece honorable qui occupe le tiers le plus haut de l'ecu. The Latins call it seu coronis vel coput, taking it to represent the crown or sign of sovereignty and eminency; upon which account, the republics in Italy, jealous of any thing that may be said to represent sovereignty, will not allow a chief to be used in the armorial ensigns of their nobility: So that most of their arms are couple, in imitation of the chief, as Menestrier and others observe; who likewise tell us, that the chief, in arms, represents the upper part of the consular garment, called capicium, (which word is used in blazon by some for a chief), and that none can carry a chief in those republics, but by a special licence or concession; but in other countries, and with us, it is not in so high esteem.

It is generally taken as a mark of wisdom and prudence, for chief signifies the head. And any concessions of armorial figures, granted by sovereign princes to their deserving friends and subjects, are ordinarily placed on a chief, or in chief, as all these concessions of armorial figures, made by the emperors to the free states in Italy, viz. Genoa, Mirandula, Massa, &c. are placed in chief. And Sir George Mackenzie very well observes, that the reason why this ordinary, the chief, is so frequently charged with figures, or that figures are placed in chief, is the respect our gentry had to their superiors or over-lords, by using some of their figures on a chief, or in chief, in their bearings.

When there is a chief of concession to be added to any coat of arms that has a bordure about it, the bordure must not go round the chief but cede to it.

The chief, saith Leigh and Guillim, containeth in depth the full third part of the field; which may in some cases be augmented or diminished a little, notwithstanding of this rule, but in no case divided into halves horizontally,—of which afterwards.

Fig. 25. Plate IV. argent, a chief gules, by Sir Alexander Menzies of that Ilk; crest, a savage's head erased, proper: motto, Will God, I shall. N. R.
Menzies of Weem, and others of that name, of whom afterwards, give ermine a chief gules. This surname is ancient with us, and our historians, as Hector Boyes and others, mention it among the first of our surnames in the reign of Malcolm Canmore; of which surname there have been many eminent families, who stood firm for their country against the English, under the usurpations of the Edwards, Kings of England.

Argent, a lion rampant gules, armed and langued azure, a chief ermine, by Sir John Moncrief of that Ilk, Baronet, in the shire of Perth; crest, a demi-lion rampant as the former; supporters, two men armed cap-a-pie, bearing pikes on their shoulders, proper: motto, Sur espérance. N. R. Which surname is from their land: Alexander III. grants a charter of confirmation of the lands of Moncrief to John de Moncrief, whose family was chief, and continued till of late.—More examples of bearing a chief plain at the end of this chapter.

The chief may be parted per pale, bend, dexter or sinister, as also quartered; but the English say it cannot be parted per fesse. It is also subject to be counterchanged, and to all other accidental forms of lines above-mentioned, of which I shall add a few examples.

Fig. 26. Plate IV. or, a chief parted per pale, azure and gules, by Archibald of that Ilk, with us. The French say, d'or au chef parti d'azur et de gueules. Sylvester Petra Sancta gives us such another bearing, thus: scutum aureum eum coronide scutaria bipartita ex ciano et astro.

Fig. 27. Plate IV. parted per pale, argent and sable, a chief indented and counter-changed of the same, by the surname of Laing, as in Pont's Manuscript. Where also Shewel of that Ilk, argent, a bour's head erased sable, on a chief invected of the last, three mullets of the first. Having given examples of arms with a chief, and of its accidental forms, I shall now give a few with a chief charged, for which we ordinarily say on a chief; and afterwards a few examples of what we call in chief.

By one of the rules of blazon, when a chief is in a coat of arms, it is the last figure to be mentioned, except it be surrounded with a bordure.

Fig. 28. Plate IV. argent, on a chief gules, three pallets or; but in several paintings, the chief is paly of six pieces, or and gules, the ancient bearing of the surname of Keith. The occasion of this bearing is not unlike that of the Prince of Catalonia, his carrying such figures, of which before; but of a more general and certain tradition, being of a later date. Thus, in anno 1006, at the battle of Panbridge, one Robert, a chieftain amongst the Chatti, (from which it is said came the surname of Keith or Keith), having joined Malcolm II. King of Scotland with his followers, was very instrumental in obtaining a notable victory over the Danes, where their King Camus was killed by the hands of this Robert, which King Malcolm perceiving, dipped his fingers in Camus's blood, and drew long strokes or pales of blood on the top of Robert's shield, which have ever since been the armorial figures of his descendants. All our historians and antiquaries agree in this action; and Hector Boyes, in his Book 11. chap. 17. tells us, Camus was slain in the fight by a young man called Keith; who, for his singular valour, got lands in East Lothian, which he called after his own name. And Sir Robert Sibbald, in his History of Fife, page 42, says, The chief of the family of Keith was, in the year 1010, by Malcolm II. advanced to the hereditary dignity of Marischal of Scotland, for his eminent valour against the Danes, and got a barony in East Lothian, which was called Keith after his name, and the isle of Inch-Keith in the Forth, likewise called after his name. And Sir George Mackenzie, in his Science of Heraldry, gives us the same account of the rise of the arms of Keith; as also in his Manuscript of Genealogies, amongst which is the genealogy of this noble family; where he, by charters, instructs, that this family was in possession of the office of High Marischal of Scotland long before the reign of King Robert the Bruce. Afterwards it was unquestionably hereditary in the family; which was, by James II. dignified with the title of Earl of Marischal, and the succeeding Earls in a lineal descent, heads of that ancient and noble family, ever since have carried the above arms, (never marshalled with any other), adorned with crowned, helmet, and mantlings, befitting their quality; and, on a wreath of their tinctures, and sometimes, in place of it, a ducal coronet; for crest, a hart's heart erased, proper, armed with ten tythes or; supporters, two harts proper, armed as the crest: and for motto, Veritas vincit. And behind the shield, two buttons gules, seme of thistles, ensign'd on the top with imperial crowns placed saltier-ways, as badges of the office of High Marischal of Scotland.

The blazons of the arms of several branches of this family will be found in the end of this chapter.

Fig. 26. argent, a man's heart gules, ensign'd with an imperial crown proper, on a chief azure, three stars of the first, now the paternal coat of the name of Douglas. The old arms of the family, before Douglas became a surname, were azure, three stars argent, two and one. Some say, azure, three stars in chief; which were carried by all the ancient branches of that family, of different designations, long before Douglas became a surname to all the descendants.

The same arms were carried by the Scoti, a considerable family in Plaisance in Italy; who were descended of one William, a son of one of the old ancestors of the family of Douglas, who accompanied (with many other brave Scotsmen) William, brother to Aeclanus,' in an embassy to Charlemagne King of France; and who assisted that King in his wars in Italy. Some of those Scotsmen were founders of great families in Italy, amongst whom was this William (of the Douglases ancestors) designed Scotus, of whom the Scoti in Plaisance. From other Scotsmen also, who settled there, came the Riaeni Scoti in Bononia, Mariscoti in Mantua, the Baronii Scoti in Florence, and the Paperoni Scoti in Rome; all of which carried the paternal arms of their respective families in Scotland, from whom they were descended; and by their arms they were known: For surnames were not in use for a long time after, as John Leslie in his History, "Utri etiam, ante aliquot secula, alii Scoti, (fixis in Imbria ac Italia sedibus) clarissimarum familiarum cognominibus oblivione deletis," &c. "Ex insignibus, tamen, quae praefurent, facile collegi potest, ex quibus, quaque familia, parentibus Scotis, profluerit." And the same author, speaking of William, the ancestor of the Scoti in Plaisance, and of his arms, which were the same with those of the ancestors of the Douglases, Lib. 8, says, "Unde, certissima conjectura assecuratur, illam per-antiquam comitum familiam, quibus Scoti cognomen tum confirmatur, et usus loquendi, Placentiae florentem, ex nobilissima nostrorum Douglassiorum comitum (cadem "namque sunt insignia) prosapia oriundam fuisse." Hume of Godscroft, in his History of the Douglases, tells us also, that the arms of Scoti in Plaisance, were the same with those of the Douglases of old, viz. azure, three stars argent, which were to be seen in St Laurence's church in Plaisance, where that family have twelve monuments. And further adds, that he saw a letter from Mark Anthony Scoto d'Aquaaro, to the Earl of Angus, by which it was evident enough, that the arms of the Scoti in Plaisance were once the very same with the old arms of the Douglases, and continued so till the war between the Guelphs and Gibelines; at which time the Scoti being of the French interest, were chosen to head the Guelphs; and because the Gibelines had all of them in their arms, figures of an odd number, the Scots, during that war, carried only two stars, with the addition of a bend dexter, to distinguish themselves from the Gibelines, who bore a bend sinister; and that the Emperor Henry IV. afterwards honoured the Scots in Plaisance with a pelican for their crest.

The ancient arms of the Douglases then, were azure, three stars argent; which, it seems, were altered, after that Good Sir James Douglas carried King Robert the Bruce's heart to Jerusalem, thus, argent, a man's heart gyules, on a chief azure, three stars of the first, by some called mullets.

William Lord Douglas, and Baron of Cavers, nephew to Good Sir James, carried these last arms, as by his seal of arms, which I did see appended to a charter of his, granting the church of Meikle-Cavers to the abbacy of Melrose; which charter was in the custody of Mr David Simpson historiographer: The seal was of red wax, on which was a shield couche, charged with a man's heart, and on a chief three stars, supported by one lion only, seiant, having his head in a helmet, which timbred the sinister high angle of the shield. The man's heart was not ensign with an imperial crown in the arms of Douglas, till some ages after.

The Earls of Douglas, of this line, afterwards quartered other arms with their own, upon the account of alliances and noble feuds. They ordinarily carried, quarterly, first Douglas, as before; second, azure, a lion rampant argent, for Galloway; third, azure, three stars argent, upon what account I cannot learn, being the same with their old arms before mentioned; fourth, argent, a saltier and chief gyules, for the lordship of Annandale. And when Dukes of Touraine in France, they quartered that duchy's arms in the first quarter; being azure, three flower-de-luces or.

I shall give the arms of the branches of this noble family, in the end of the chapter, after I have treated of the chief and its various attributes more fully.

Fig. 30. Plate IV. Or, on a chief sable, three escalops of the first, by the surname of Graham; which, when surnames came in use, is said to have been taken in memory of that valiant man, called Graham, general of King Fergus II's army, who made a breach upon the trench or wall, which the Emperor Severus had made betwixt the Scots frith and the river Clyde, as the remotest bounds of the Roman Empire, to keep out the Scots from molesting them in their possessions; which Graham threw down; and ever since it has been called Graham's Dyke. He was the progenitor of a noble family in Scotland, who, when surnames came in use, as is said, took the name Graham from this their famous ancestor.

The principal family of the name is that of the Earls of Montrose, now honoured with the title of duke; and, for their antiquity, I shall mention here some documents. In the charter of foundation of the abbacy of Holyrooquiehouse by King David I. William de Graham is a witness; which principal charter I saw lately, and is now in the archives of the town of Edinburgh. King William gave a charter of the lands of Kinnabry, Davide de Graham milliti, pro hono rigio & servitio suis; and the same Sir David got also the lands of Muckram. To him succeeded his son Sir David, who lived in the reign of Alexander III. and got from that King the lands and barony of Kincardine. This family was very zealous in vindicating the independency of Scotland against the English, and was sometimes designed of Dundaff, sometimes of Kincardine, and sometimes of Mugdock. Sir Patrick Graham, son and heir of David de Graham de Dundaff, is one of the hostages sent to England, for the ransom of King David II.; which Sir Patrick was sometimes designed of Kincardine: His son and successor, Sir William Graham, was, designed of Mugdock; and his grandson, Sir Patrick Graham, was, by our King James II. created Lord Graham: His grandson again, William Lord Graham, was, by King James IV. in the 5th year of his reign, anno 1524, created Earl of Montrose, and had those lands erected into a free barony and earldom, which formerly belonged to his progenitors, by the gift of King Robert the Bruce, narrated in a charter of King James IV's, which is to be seen in the chartulary of Dunfermline, and in the Earl of Haddington's Collections, in the Lawyer's Library.

This Earl of Montrose was killed with King James IV. at the battle of Flodden, the 9th of September 1513. Of him was lineally descended James Earl of Montrose, who was created Marquis of Montrose 1643, by King Charles I. He was that King's High Commissioner, and Lieutenant-General of Scotland; who, with a small army for the King, did feats beyond belief against the Covenanters. His great-grandson James, the fourth Marquis of Montrose, was raised to the dignity of a duke 1727; whose achievement is, quarterly, first and fourth, or, on a chief sable, three escalops of the first, for the name of Graham; second and third, argent, three roses gules, for the title of Montrose; crest, a falcon, proper, armed and beaked or, standing on an heron argent, membred gules: motto, Ne oblibie; supporters, two storks, proper. As for the arms of the honourable branches and cadets of this noble family, they are to be found at the end of this chapter.

Having treated of a chief, and on a chief, or a chief charged, as we sometimes speak, and having illustrated them by suitable examples, before I proceed to blazons in chief, I shall speak to those arms we sometimes meet with, which have two chiefs, or the diminutive of a chief.

The English tell us, that the chief is subject to all the partition lines in heraldry, but cannot be parted per fesse, that is, couped horizontally through the middle: Yet, say they, such a partition may be, when three parts of the chief are above, and but one below; and this they call a combel or fillet, viz. the diminutive of a chief, representing that ligament which ties up the hair, like what our common people in Scotland call a woman's snood: And heralds call it a fillet, because of the length and narrowness of it, as also because of the place where it is placed; for did it occupy any other place than the chief, it should go under another name.

We frequently meet with two chiefs in one coat, especially of foreign arms; as those of Pope Innocent III. who was of the family of Ediscleia, thus, vair, on a chief gules, a leopard argent, surmounted of another chief or, charged with an eagle displayed sable, crowned gules. Here the chiefs are not the diminutives of another, but both of an equal breadth, and proportioned as a chief should be to the body of the escutcheon; and when it so happens, then the two chiefs take up the half of the escutcheon.

That which occasions two chiefs, in one coat, is the concessions made by sovereign princes, of their royal figures to their deserving friends or subjects; who having before, a chief in their paternal arms, place those of their sovereign's on another chief, as those of the emperor's, in the last example, and several others I could here add, so carried by subjects of the empire.

The Knights Templars of St John of Jerusalem, have ordinarily two chiefs, especially those knights who have a chief in their paternal bearings; who, in that case surmount it, with another of the arms of that order, which they are by custom obliged to do, being gules, charged with a cross argent: For example, fig. 31. the arms of Le Bailli de Valence, of the House of Estampes in France, being a principal Knight of that Order, carried azure, two girons placed chevronways or, on a chief of the last, three ducal crowns gules, being the paternal coat, surmounted with another chief, (of the order of St John of Jerusalem) gules, a cross argent.

Which arms Menestrier blazons thus, d'azure a deux girons d'or, misés en chevron au chef d'or, chargés de trois couronnes d'or, ces chefs sont abaissé sur celui de la religion: The term abaissé, as I have observed already, is said of all the proper figures in armories, that are lower situate than they should be; and the chief of this Order, he calls a chief of religion: So also, Mr Thomas Crawford calls it; who tells us, that one of the name of Dundas, Lord St John, principal Knight of the Order of St John of Jerusalem with us, carried argent, a lion rampant gules, for Dundas, and a chief of the last, charged with a cross argent, the cross of religion.

When the uppermost of the two chiefs is broader than that below, then it is said to be soutenu, that is, supported by the undermost; which being a diminutive of a chief, is called a triangle by the French, and a fillet by the English; as in the arms of the family of Urgins in France, fig. 32. thus blazoned by Menestrier, Bandé d'azure et d'argent, au chef de membre, chargé d'une rose de gueules, et soutenu d'un triangle d'or, chargé d'une aiguille ondoyante d'azure, i.e. bendy of six gules, and argent, on a chief of the last, a rose of the first, supported by a triangle, (the diminutive of a bar, a fillet, with the English, for the diminutive of a chief, of which before), or, charged with a serpent gliding azure. Sylvester Petru Sancta describes these arms, beginning first at the chief, thus, Gerunt Urcini, rosam punicam, in coronide scutaria argentg illusus, cum subjecta insita (the diminutive of a

With the French, there is a chief, which they call chef coau, that is, when a chief is of metal upon metal, and of colour upon colour; which cannot be said to be laid upon a field as other chiefs are; being contrary to the general received rule, that metal must be upon colour, and colour upon metal; and is called a chief coau, that is, sewed and not laid on the field, but added to the upper part of the shield. Consu, says Menestrier, Se dit au chef quand il est de metal sur metal, ou de couleur sur couleur; Sylvester Petra Sancta calls it, Scutarium coapat ascitium, adventitium, ac subtile. There are several examples of this chief in French books of blazons, as that of the family of Bonne de Lesdiguieres in France, gules, a lion rampant or, on a chief cousu, azure, three roses argent, as fig. 32 I have met with no such practice of carrying a chief cousu, in the arms of any family in Britain.

There are several other accidental forms of a chief used abroad, and to be found in English books; as a chief couvert, chaperonné, mantelé. Couvert they say when the chief is shadowed with hangings of tapestry; and chaperonné, which the English call chapournet, derived from the French word chaperon, which signifies a hood, which they place upon a chief; Mantelé is said, when a chief is covered with a mantle of a different tincture, like tierce en mantelet beforementioned. There are several other varieties given us by French and English heralds, particularly Mr. Holme, in his Academy of Armories, which I pass over as mere fancies; seeing they are carried by no families in Britain, nor by any considerable family in other nations, and proceed to speak of the blazon in chief.

In chief, is said, when natural or artificial figures are placed in the upper part of the shield, where the ordinary, the chief, is placed, and that without any purflle, or line, separating them from the under part of the shield.

Fig. 34. Azure, in chief three stars (called spur-rowels in the Lyon Register) argent, the armorial bearing of Dalmahey of that Ilk, an ancient and honourable family in Mid-Lothian, now honoured with the dignity of baronet. Amongst the gentlemen of Inquet, at serving William Lord Somerville heir to his father Thomas, the first lord of that name, in the year 1435, there is mentioned Sir Alexander Dalmahey of that Ilk. The lards of Dalmahey having been for a considerable time Under-Masterhouseholds to our kings; and for supporters, they have two serpents nowed, cottsising the shield; and for crest, a hand brandishing a sword: motto, Absque metu.

Fig. 35. Wauchope of Niddry, azure, or, in chief two mullets of the last; more of which family near the end of this chapter. So much then shall serve for the various forms and attributes of the chief; I shall add here several blazons of noble families, whose bearings are relative to the chief in the same order as I have treated of it from the beginning of this chapter.

The surname of Dewar, or, a chief azure; the surname of Square, or, a chief gules; the surname of Airth, argent, a chief sable, as in Sir George Mackenzie's Heraldry.

Durward, of old Lord Durward, as in Sir James Balfour's Blazons, argent, a chief gules. Alanus Durward, Ostiarius Regis, after the forfeiture of David Hastings, Earl of Athol, was by King Alexander II. created Earl of Athol. He lived but two years after he was made Earl, and died without issue. He carried for arms, argent, on a chief gules, a lion passant gardant of the first.

Belches of that Ilk, paly of six, or and gules, a chief wair; crest, a greyhound's head couped argent, coloured azure: motto, Fulget virtus intaninata. L. R.

Belches of Tofts, in the Merse, or, three mullets gules, a chief wair; crest, the trunk of an oak tree erudicate, with leaves sprouting out, proper; the motto, Retiresee. L. R.

The surname of Causton, argent, two stars and a crescent in base sable, a chief chevron, argent and vert. Pont's Manuscript.

The surname of Bruce carries or, a saltier and chief gules; but more of them in the chapter of the saltier.

Burnet of Barns sometimes designed of Burnotland, in the shire of Tweeddale, carries argent, three holly leaves vert, and a chief azure.
Mr. Robert Burnet, Commisary of Peebles, a younger son of Barns, the same; and for his difference, the undermost line of the chief is embattled; but more of this name afterwards.

The surname of Bigolme, argent, an oak tree eradicate vert, a chief chequed, or and azure.

His Grace the Duke of Ormond, Earl of Ossory, &c. or, a chief indented azure: This noble family is said to be descended from the old counts of Brian in Normandy, and were hereditary chief butlers of Ireland; who, by reason of the office, introduced the surname of Butler into the family; as also took arms relative to the name and office, azure, three cups or; which they quarter with their paternal coat. James Butler was created Earl of Ormond by King Edward III. of England. Of him was descended James Duke of Ormond, who was made a peer of England, by the same title, by King Charles II. the 34th of his reign, 1682.

The Right Honourable Charles Butler Earl of Arran in Ireland, and Lord Butler of Weston in England, gives the same quartered arms, with a crescent for difference.

Sir Robert Paston of Paston, descended of a family in the county of Norfolk; for his loyalty to King Charles I. and assisting in the restoration of King Charles II. was created by that king a baron, by the title of Lord Paston Viscount of Yarmouth, in 1673, and thereafter Earl of Yarmouth, 1679. He carries azure, six flower-de-luces, 3, 2, and 1, and a chief indented or.

Manners Earl of Rutland, and Baron Roos of Harnlock; so dignified by King Henry VIII, and Baron Manners of Haddon by King Charles II. 1679, or, two bars azure, a chief quarterly of the second and gules, the first charged with two flower-de-luces or, and the last with the lion of England; which figures were given to this family, as an augmentation of honour by Henry VIII. as being descended of the royal blood of England, the chief formerly being altogether gules. And, as it is observed before, the chief is the ordinary place for receiving additional marks of honour.

The Right Honourable John Keith Earl of Kintore, Lord Keith of Inverury and Keith-hall, and Knight Marischal of Scotland, second son to William Earl Marischal, and Lady Mary Erskine, daughter to John Earl of Marr, by her lady Mary Stewart, sister to Ludovic Duke of Lennox and Richmond. He, for his loyalty and faithful services to King Charles II. and for being instrumental in preserving the regalia of the kingdom from falling into the hands of the English, in the usurpation of Oliver Cromwell, had these regalia added to his own arms by way of augmentation; and was honoured by the said King with the titles of dignity above-mentioned. His achievement is quarterly, first and fourth gules, a sceptré and sword in saltier, with an imperial crown in chief, within an orle of eight thistles or, as a coat of augmentation; second and third argent, on a chief gules, three pallets or. Sometimes the chief, as I observed before, is represented paly of six, or and gules; and sometimes the chief, for the name of Keith, is argent, three pallets gules, which is not good armour to lay a chief argent on a field or; so that the first is better than the last. This noble family has been in use to carry for crest, a demi-woman, richly attired, holding in her right hand a garland of laurel, proper; and, for supporters, two men in complete armour, each holding a pick in a sentinel's posture, proper: and for motto, Lige amissa talon, relative to the regalia: For it was given out that he had carried them over to King Charles II. who was then in France, and, by this means, they were preserved at home. He married Lady Margaret Hamilton, sister to the Earl of Haddington, by whom he had several children. He was succeeded by his eldest son William Earl of Kintore, who married a sister of the Viscount of Stormont, and left issue.

Sir Alexander Keith of Ludevairn, Baronet, argent, a cross croset fitbe, and an esclop in fesse azure, on a chief gules, three pallets or; crest, a dexter hand casting an anchor in the water; motto, Remember thy end. N. R.

Keith of Ravenscrag, argent, on a chief gules, three pallets or, quartered with or, three cushions gules, within a double trezure counter-flowered of the last, for Randolph. Port's MS.
OF THE CHIEF OR CHEF.

Keith of Hatchill, or, a cross croset fitched azure, between two crescents and a fess in base gules. Don't MS.

Keith of Troop, an old cadet, quartered the arms of Keith with azure, a garb between three falcons' heads or,—as in Pont's MS.

Keith of Tillygon, parted per fesse, or and argent, on the first three demi-pallets gules, and in base a man's heart of the last; crest, a lure proper: motto, Venit ab astra. L. R.

Major George Keith of Arthurhouse, Sheriff-depute of the Sheriffdom of Kincairdine, descended of the family of the Earl Marischal, argent, a saltier and chief gules, the last charged with three pallets or, all within a bordure compone azure, and the first; crest, a dexter hand holding a pick erect, proper, headed argent: motto, Justa sequor. L. R.

Keith of Aukhorsk, descended of the Earl Marischal, argent, a chief paly of six, gules and or, on the second a buckle of the first. L. R.

Major Robert Keith of Craig, argent, on a chief embattled gules, three pallets or, a bordure crenelé of the second; crest, a stag standing at a gaze or, in a watching posture under a bush of holly, all proper: motto, Fortiter qui sedet. L. R.

Keith of Inverugie, argent, a chief paly of six pieces, or and gules, within a bordure ingrailed sable. Esplin's MS.

They of the surname of Dickson, as descended of one Richard Keith, said to be a son of the family of Keith Marischal, took their name from Richard, (called in the south country Dick), and to show themselves to be descended of Keith Earl Marischal, they carry the chief of Keith. There are several families of the name of Dickson, of a good old standing, in the shire of Berwick.

Dickson of Bughtrig there, azure, three mullets argent, on a chief or, as many pallets gules; crest, a hand holding a sword in bend, proper: with the motto, Fortes fortuna juvet. L. R.

Dickson of Belchester, now the only old family of that name since Bughtrig has failed, carries the same as Bughtrig. The next to it is Dickson of Newbigging, who carries the same also, with additional figures for his difference.

Mr Alexander Dickson of Wester-Binning, descended of Bughtrig, carries as Bughtrig, within a bordure ingrailed gules; crest, a man's heart, proper, winged argent: motto, Celum versus.

Sir Robert Dickson of Sornbeg, now designed of Inneresk, argent, three stars gules, on a chief of the last, as many pallets or; crest, a hart couchant and gardant proper, attired or, within two branches of laurel disposed orle-ways. L. R.

The arms of the branches of the principal family of Douglas, which were nobilitate, as they are to be found in our old Books of Blazon, are as follows:

William Douglas Lord Liddisdale, natural son to Archibald Earl of Galloway, quarterly, first and fourth Douglas, bruised with a baton sinister sable; second and third sable, a lion rampant argent, for Liddisdale.

Archibald Douglas Earl of Murray, third son of James Earl of Douglas, quarterly, first and fourth argent, three cushions within a double trellis flowered and counter-flowered with flower-de-luces gules, for the earldom of Murray; second and third argent, a man's heart gules, on a chief azure, three stars of the first, for Douglas.

Hugh Douglas Earl of Ormond, fourth son of James Earl of Douglas, ermine, a man's heart gules, on a chief azure, three stars argent. Which two last Earls were forfeited for their rebellion, in going with William Earl of Douglas against King James II. and III. so that in this William the chief family of the Douglasies ended.

The principal and chief family of Douglas, since the extinction of the old line of the Douglasies, is that of Angus; the first of which family was George Douglas, son of William first Earl of Douglas, by his third wife Margaret Stewart, daughter and heiress to John Stewart Earl of Angus, son to Sir Alexander Stewart of Bonkil, son of Sir John Stewart of Bonkil, brother to James Lord High Steward of Scotland, father to Walter Lord High Steward, father to King Robert II.

Margaret, Countess of Angus, bore to her husband William Earl of Douglas, a son George, in whose favour she resigned the earldom of Angus in Parliament, the 9th of April 1389: This George Douglas Earl of Angus, married Mary, eldest daughter to King Robert III. and had issue William Earl of Angus, father of James and George, successively Earls of Angus. I have seen the seal of arms of this James Douglas Earl of Angus, Lord Abernethy, appended to a charter of his to one Robert Imrie, of the lands of Stukerland, in the shire of Perth, dated at Tanstallan, the 8th of May 1434: On which seal was a quartered shield, first, a lion rampant; second, a man's heart, and on a chief three stars; third, a fesse chequed, surrounded of a bend, charged with three buckles; fourth, a lion rampant, brusht with a ribbon: Which shield was ensigned with an old fashioned helmet; and, upon the top of it, for crest, a plume of feathers, supported, on the dexter, by a hart or deer, and, on the sinister, by a woman in a genteel habit. The whole achievement was surrounded with the impalement of a wood or forest, such as that now used as a compartment under the present achievement of the family,—as in Sir George Mackenzie's Heraldry; and the legend round the seal was, S. Jacobi Comitis Angusiae Dom. de Abernethie & jetsworth forest.

He was succeeded by his brother George Earl of Angus, of whom was lineally descended William Earl of Douglas, who was created Marquis of Douglas the 17th of June 1633, and from him the present Duke of Douglas, who have been in use to carry, as at this time, quarterly, first azure, a lion rampant argent, crowned or, for the earldom of Galloway; second or, a lion rampant gules, surmounted of a ribbon sable, for the Lord Abernethy; third argent, three pales gules, for Wishart of Breauch; fourth or, a fesse chequed, azure and argent, surmounted of a bend gules, charged with three buckles of the first, for Stewart of Bonkill; over all, on an escutcheon argent, a man's heart gules, ensigned with an imperial crown, proper, and, on a chief azure, three stars of the first, the paternal coat of Douglas; above the shield, a crown, helmet, and vollets, befitting their dignity; and, in place of a wreath, a chapeau, or cap of state gules, turned up ermine, and, upon it, for crest, a salamander vert, in the middle of flames of fire: motto, Jamais arriéré supported, on the dexter, by a savage, proper, holding a batton erected, and wreathed about the middle with laurel vert, and, on the sinister, by a stag, proper, armed and unguled; both which supporters stand within a pale of wood wreathed and impaled, for a compartment.

The Right Honourable the Douglases Earls of Morton, were originally from the Douglasses of Dalkeith; who were descended of John Douglas, half-brother to good Sir James Douglas, in the reign of Robert the Bruce: Which John Douglas was Captain of the Castle of Lochleven in the reign of David II. His son and heir was Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith and Aberdour; who had by his lady, Agnes Dunbar, daughter to the Earl of March, James Lord Dalkeith, who married the Lady Elizabeth Stewart, daughter of King Robert III. by whom he had James, his successor, Lord Dalkeith, father of James Lord Dalkeith, who, by King James the II. was raised to the dignity of Earl of Morton, in Parliament, the 14th March 1457, as by charter and instrument in the custody of the present Earl of Morton; which Earl married Lady Jean, daughter of King James the I. Dowager Countess of Angus, by whom he had John, his successor, the father of James Earl of Morton.

Which James married Katherine, natural daughter of King James IV. with whom he had only three daughters, Margaret, married to James Earl of Arran; Beatrix, to Robert Lord Maxwell; and Elizabeth, to James Douglas, son of Sir George Douglas of Pittendrich, brother to the Earl of Angus. He, in her right, was Earl of Morton, upon the renunciation of the Earl of Arran and Lord Maxwell, who married the two elder daughers. This James Earl of Morton was Regent of Scotland in the minority of King James VI. He died without issue, and was succeeded by his nephew Archibald Earl of Angus, who also died without issue; and William Douglas of Lochleven, by virtue of, a talzie, became Earl of Morton, Lord Dalkeith and Aberdour. He was succeeded by William, his grandson and heir, who was High Thesrauer of Scotland, and one of the Knights of the most noble Order of the Garter, in the reign of King Charles I. He married Anne, daughter to the Earl Marischal, by whom he had Robert Earl of Morton, his successor; who married Anne Villars, daughter to the Viscount Grandison, by whom he had William Earl of Morton, his successor; who married Grissel, daughter to John, first Earl of Middleton, by whom he had Charles Lord Dalkeith, who died before his father, and was succeeded by Sir James Douglas, his uncle, second son to the Thesaurer. He married Anne Hay, daughter to Sir James Hay of Smithfield, by whom he had James Earl of Morton, his successor, who died a bachelor, and is succeeded by Robert, present Earl of Morton, his brother-german.

The achievencies of the Earls of Morton are quarterly, first and fourth Douglas as before; second and third argent, three piles issuing from a chief gules, on the last two stars of the first, for the Douglas of Dalkeith, who carried a chief gules, and the Douglas of Lochleven, who carried the three piles in chief, charged with two stars; but since these two families were united in the house of Morton, they join the chief and piles together: The Earl of Morton's crest is a sugnleri, proper, sticking between two claits of an oak-tree, with a chain and lock holding them together: motto, Lock sicker; supporters, two savages, proper, wreathed about the head and middle with oak-leaves vert, as in the Plate of Achievements of the Nobility.

Douglas Duke of Queensberry, Marquis of Dumfries-shire, Earl of Drumlanrig, Viscount of Nith, and Lord Douglas of Kinmount, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a man's heart gules, ensigned with an imperial crown, proper, on a chief azure, three stars of the first, for Douglas; second and second azure, a bend betwixt six cross creslets fitched or, for the title of Marr, all within a bordure or, charged with a double treasurers gules; crest, a man's heart proper, winged and ensigned with an imperial crown or; supporters, two pegasses argent, winged or: with the motto, Forward.

The first of this family was Sir William Douglas, son of James second Earl of Marr; who got from his father the lands of Drumlanrig, Hawick, and Selkirk, which were afterwards confirmed by King James I. to the family. Of him was historically descended Sir William, the tenth laird of Drumlanrig, who was created a Lord of Parliament, and honoured with the title of Viscount of Drumlanrig; anno 1630; and, in the year 1633, was advanced by King Charles I. to the dignity of Queensberry: His grandson William, third Earl of Queensberry, was, by King Charles II. dignified with the title of Marquis, and soon after with the title of Duke of Queensberry. He had issue by his lady Isabel, daughter to William Marquis of Douglas, James, who succeeded him, and William, the first Earl of March.

William Douglas, Earl of March, Viscount of Peebles, Lord Douglas of Neidpath, Lynn, and Mannor: His achievement quarterly, first and fourth as Queensberry; second and third gules, a lion rampant argent, within a bordure of the last, charged with eight roses of the first, for the title of March; supported on the sinister by a lion gules, and on the dexter, by one of the supporters of Queensberry; with his crest and motto as above.

Sir James Douglas of Keilhead, Baronet, descended of a second son of William first Earl of Queensberry, and his lady Isabel Ker, daughter to the Lord Newbattle, afterwards Earl of Lothian, and now Marquis of Lothian, carries the quartered arms of Queensberry within a bordure engrailed gules, charged with eight besants or; crest, a man's heart proper, powdered with besants, crowned and winged or: motto, Forward. N. R.

Douglas, Lord Carlyle, first and fourth argent, a cross flory gules, for Carlyle; second and third gules, a cross or, for Corsby; over all, by way of surlor, the paternal coat of Douglas; crest, two dragons' heads and necks in pale addorsed azure; supporters, two peacocks, proper: motto, Humilitate. The first of this family was George Douglas, natural son to Sir George Douglas of Pittendrigh, who married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of James Douglas of Parkhead, and with her had two sons, first, Sir James Douglas of Torthorald, his son and heir.

Second, Sir George Douglas of Mordington, of whose armorial bearing I have seen no vestige or memorial.

Sir James was succeeded by his son Sir James, who, marrying Elizabeth, grandchild and heir of Michael Lord Carlyle, was, in her right, Lord Carlyle of Torthorald; their son, James Lord Carlyle, married Elizabeth Gordon, daughter of Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar, but having no issue, he resigned his honours to William first Earl of Queensberry, in the year 1638, who had acquired his estate; and thereby the title became extinct in this family.

The Right Honourable Archibald Earl of Forfar, Lord Berredale, only son of the second marriage of Archibald Lord Angus, who in his father's lifetime, Wil-
OF THE CHIEF OR CHIEF.

James Marquis of Douglas, was advanced to the dignity of Earl of Angus and Forfar, by King Charles II. 1651; which last title of Earl of Forfar, was to descend to the eldest son of the second marriage with Lady Jean Wemyss, daughter to the Earl of Wemyss, who bore the above Archibald Earl of Forfar. He married Mrs Rabina Lockhart of the house of Lee, with whom he had Archibald late Earl of Forfar, who died at Stirling of the wounds he received at the battle of Sheriffmuir. He and his father carried for their achievement, quarterly, first azure, a lion rampant argent, crowned or, for the earldom of Galloway; second or, a lion rampant gules, bruised with a ribbon sable, for Abernethy; third argent, three piles issuing from the chief, conjoined at the points in base gules, for Wishart; fourth or, a fesse chequy, azure and argent, surmounted of a bend gules, charged with three buckles or, for Stewart of Bonkill, and over all the coat of Douglas, (where I must observe by the way, that these arms differ not from the bearing of his elder brother the Marquis of Douglas, but by transposition of the quarters, which, in my opinion, is not a sufficient difference for a younger brother, some diminution or addition of other figures being necessary); which arms are adorned with crown, helmet, and mantlings, befitting his quality; and, on a wreath of his tinctures, for crest, a salamander in flames, proper: motto, Extinctus orior. Supported on the dexter by a savage, wreathed about the middle with laurel, proper, and about the neck a chain of gold, at which did hang before his breast a heart gules, ensignified with an imperial crown, and holding in his right hand a baton erected, on the sinister, supported by a hart, proper, attired or, with a collar azure, charged with three stars argent, having a heart ensignified with an imperial crown hanging thereon.

Lord William Douglas, son of the foresaid William first Marquis of Douglas, and younger brother of Earl Archibald, by a second marriage with Lady Mary Gordon, daughter to George the first Marquis of Huntly, was made Earl of Selkirk, and, upon marrying Anne Dutchess of Hamilton, Duke of Hamilton for life; and quartered the arms of Hamilton with those of the Marquis of Douglas, before blazoned,—of which afterwards.

Lord George Douglas, brother-german to the last mentioned Lord William, afterwards Duke of Hamilton, was created Earl of Dumbarton, and carried the arms of his father, the Marquis of Douglas, within a bordure of France and England, quarterly, viz. first and fourth azure, three flower-de-uces or; second and third gules, three lions passant gardant or, supported as the Duke of Douglas before-mentioned; and for crest, a peacock proper.

Douglas of Glenbervie, quarterly, first and fourth the paternal coat of Douglas; second and third argent, a cross counter-embattled sable, for Auchinleck. The first of this family was Sir William Douglas, second son of Archibald Earl of Angus, surnamed Bell-the-cat, who lived in the reign of King James III. Sir William married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Sir John Auchinleck, (or Affleck), of that Ilk, and with her he got the estate of Glenbervie; on which account the family quartered the arms of Auchinleck as above. Their grandson, Sir William, succeeded, as nearest heir-male, to the earldom of Angus, and had with his lady, Giles, a daughter of Robert Graham of Morphie, three sons; first, William Earl of Angus; second, Sir George, who died without issue; third, Sir Robert of Glenbervie, who married Elizabeth, daughter of George Auchinleck of Balmaino: He by her had two sons, the eldest Sir William of Glenbervie, whose issue failed in his grandson, Sir Robert Douglas of Glenbervie, Colonel of the Scots Royal Regiment; he had the bad fortune to be killed at the battle of Steenkirk in Flanders, 1692, leaving only one daughter, who died young. Sir Robert of Glenbervie's second son was George Douglas, Doctor of Divinity, who married Cicely Drury, daughter and co-heir to Sir Robert Drury of Ruchani in Sussex. Their eldest son, William Douglas of Airdit, married Agnes Scott, a daughter of Sir Patrick Scott of Anerum; and their son, Robert Douglas of Airdit, upon the death of his cousin, Sir Robert Douglas of Glenbervie, Baronet, killed as above, and the decease of his young daughter, succeeded as heir-male to the estate and honours of the family of Glenbervie. The present Sir Robert married first, Mary, daughter of Sir William Ruthven of Dundas, and his lady, Katharine Douglas, daughter of William first Marquis of Douglas, by his second lady, Mary Gordon, daughter of George the first
OF THE CHIEF OR CHEF.

Marquis of Huntly, the only son of which marriage is William. Secondly, he married Janet Paterson, a daughter of the Laird of Denmuir, and has with her issue. This account is taken from the genealogical tree of this knightly family, who have been in use, on their paintings and carvings, to adorn their above arms with the crest, motto, and supporters of the Marquis, now Duke of Douglas,—of which before.

Douglas of Cavers, descended of a son of James Earl of Douglas and Marr, and brother to Sir William, the first of the family of Queensberry, carries the paternal coat of Douglas, within a bordure gules; crest, a dexter hand holding a broken lance bend-ways, proper: with the motto, Do or die. So matriculated in the Lyon Office.

Douglas of Whittinghame was descended of a second son of James Lord Dalkeith, and his lady, a daughter of the Lord Borthwick. He carried ermine, on a chief gules, two stars argent, as in Esplin's and Pont's Books of Blazons; but Mr Thomas Crawford, in his Manuscript, says, he placed in base a cinquefoil sable, being his maternal figure for Borthwick.

Douglas of Bonjeduard carries only the paternal coat of the name, and, for difference, in the collar point, a label of three points gules; as on the paintings of the genealogical tree of the house of Douglas, which makes the first of the family of Bonjeduard to have been William Douglas, a third son of William Earl of Angus, and brother of George Earl of Angus, who married the daughter of Sibbald of Balgonie, sometime Thesaurer of Scotland.

Mr Walter Douglas, minister at Linton, and third son of George Douglas of Bonjeduard, carries the above arms within a bordure ingrailed gules; crest, a hand holding a scimitar: motto, Honor & amor,—as in the Plates of Achievements.

Douglas of Kilspindy was a third son of Archibald Earl of Angus, and a younger brother to Glenbervie. He was Provost of Edinburgh in the reign of King James V. and carried only the paternal coat of Douglas, with a mullet for difference, as I have observed.

Douglas of Moffat carried the same, but without the crescent.

Douglas of Pittendreich, ermine, a dart gules, ensignied with an open crown or, on a chief azure, three stars argent.

I shall add some other blazons of the name of Douglas, as they are matriculated in the Lyon Register.

Robert Douglas of Bridgeford, grand-child of a third son of the Earl of Angus, bears as the Marquis, now Duke of Douglas, quarterly, within a bordure indented or; and for crest, a dexter hand grasping a sword, erected proper: motto, Petit arduus virtus.

James Douglas of Bads, descended of the family of Dalkeith, argent, a man's heart with a dart piercing the same fesse-ways gules, on a chief azure, three mullets of the field: motto, Sapientia et veritas.

Robert Douglas, sometime Bailie of Musselburgh, argent, a heart crowned gules, betwixt three mullets azure.

John Douglas of Inchmarle, descended of Morton, the same as that Earl within a bordure counter-componed, or and sable: crest, a dexter hand appearing out of a bush, holding an oak leaf, proper: motto, Tandem fit surculus arbor.

John Douglas of Mains, argent, a fesse chequé gules, and of the first, between three stars in chief azure, and a man's heart in base, proper; crest, an oak tree proper, with a lock hanging upon one of the branches: motto, Quae serata secura.

Archibald Douglas of Cliftonhall, ermine, on a chief azure, three stars argent, a bordure gules; crest, a hand holding a man's heart proper, ensignied with a crescent argent: motto, Meliora speranda.

Robert Douglas, Esquire, only son to the deceased Sir Robert Douglas of Tillyquhally, quarterly, first, the paternal coat of Douglas; second, Douglas of Lochleven; third, argent, three masses sable, on a chief of the last, as many lions passant gardant: of the first, for the name of Ogston; crest, a dexter hand issuing out of a cloud, holding a sword erect, proper: motto, God for us.

Mr James Douglas of Earnslaw in the Merse, who got those lands by marrying the heiress thereof, whose name was Grafden: He was the eldest son of Mr Robert
OF THE CHIEF OR CHEF.

Douglas, a presbyterian minister, descended of the house of Lochleven, argent, three piles gules, and on a chief azure, as many stars of the first, within a bordure azur.

The blazons of the cadets of the noble family of Graham, which have occurred to me, are these:

Sir Patrick Graham, second son of Sir Patrick Graham of Kincardine, progenitor of the Duke of Montrose, married Eupham, daughter and sole heir of David Stewart Earl of Strathern, eldest son of the second marriage of King Robert II. and his Queen Eupham Ross. He, by his lady, was Earl of Strathern, and carried for arms, quarterly, first argent, on a chief sable, three escalops or, for Graham; second and third or, a chevron gules, for Strathern, (the old Earls of Strathern carried two chevronn); fourth or, a fesse chequy, azure and argent, for Stewart. Their son, Malise Graham, was one of the hostages sent to England for the ransom of King James I. and after he returned to Scotland, it was found, by the laws of the kingdom, that the earldom of Strathern was a masculine fief and could not descend to his mother; but, in place of it, King James I. invested him in the earldom of Monteith, which was in the King's hands by the forfeiture of Murdoch Stewart Duke of Albany, Earl of Fife and Monteith; which dignity continued in the posterity of Malise Graham till of late. The Earls of Monteith carried quarterly, first and fourth argent, on a chief sable, three escalops or, for Graham; second and third or, a fesse chequy, azure and argent, and, in chief, a chevron gules, for Stewart of Strathern; crest, an eagle's head, proper, beaked or; supporters, two lions gardant gules, collared sable, and charged with three escalops or: motto, Right and Reason.

Graham Viscount of Preston was descended of Graham Earl of Monteith, whose progenitor went to England, and got a good possession there. One of the family, viz. Sir Richard Graham of Netherby in Cumberland, Baronet, was honoured with the dignity of Lord Viscount of Preston in Scotland, by King James VI. whose shield of arms, as in Guillim's Display, is coupé one, parti two, which makes six areas or quarters; first or, a chief sable, charged with three escalops of the first; second or, a fesse chequy, azure and argent, and in chief a chevron gules; these two are the arms of Graham Earl of Monteith, of whom the Viscount of Preston and others are descended; third azure, five annulets, 2, 2 and 1; fourth argent, on a bend sable, three owls of the first; fifth argent, a cross gules, fretty or; sixth argent, on a bend azure, six flower-de-luces or, 2, 2 and 2, supported on the right by a heron proper, and on the left by a lion gardant gules, collared sable, charged with three escalops or; crest, a vol, proper: motto, Reason contents me.

Sir William Graham of Gartmore, Baronet, another branch of the family of Monteith, quarterly, first and fourth or, a pale gules, charged with a mullet argent, and, on a chief sable, three escalops of the first; second and third or, a fesse chequy, azure and argent, and, in chief, a chevron gules; crest, an eagle displayed, in his dexter talon a sword in pale, proper: motto, For right and reason. Sir William's only son, Sir John Graham of Gartmore, died unmarried 1758, and was succeeded by Robert Graham of Gallangad, his cousin-german; who is now the male representative of Sir John Graham of Kilbride, second son to Malise, the first Earl of Monteith, as in Mr Crawfurd's Peerage. The above armorial bearing of Gartmore is to be seen in the Plate of Achievements.

Walter Graham of Gartur, whose great-grandfather was a second brother of the Earl of Monteith, bears the arms of that family, as above blazoned, within a bordure chequy, sable and or; crest, a dove resting, with a twig of a palm-tree in its beak, proper: motto, Peace and grace. L. R.

Graham of Morphy, an ancient branch of the house of Graham, in the reign of King Robert the Bruce, got the lands of Morphy confirmed to the family by the charters of King David Bruce. Sir Robert Graham of Morphy was knighted by his chief John Earl of Montrose, Chancellor and Viceroy for King James VI. whose arms were sable, a chevron argent, between three escalops or, as in Balfour's Books of Blazons.

Robert Graham, son to Sir William Graham of Mugdock, (one of the progenitors of the Duke of Montrose), and his second wife, Lady Mary Stewart, daughter of King Robert III. and widow of William Earl of Angus, and of James Kennedy, of Dunmore; which Robert was the first of the family of Fintry. His arms, in the old Books of Blazons, are or, on a chief indented sable, three escallops of the first. But, by our modern Blazons, the indenting of the chief is as large as piles.
OF THE CHIEF OR CHEF.

and surrounded with the double trezure of Scotland, as a badge of their descent from the royal family, and so carried by the branches of this family.

Graham of Cleverhouse, a younger son of Fintry, of whom was lineally desccended John Viscount of Dundee, who carried or, three piles waved sable, within a double trezure counter-flowered gules, and, on a chief of the second, three escalops of the first.

Graham of Dunroon, descended of Cleverhouse, carries the same, but ingrains the chief for his difference; crest, a flame of fire issuing out of the torce: motto,

Graham of Pottento, another cadet of Cleverhouse, gives the same, but makes the chief indente for his difference; crest, a flame of fire issuing out of the torce,

Sir John Graham of Gogar, or, a cross crozant issuing out of a crescent gules, within a double trezure flowered and counter-flowered sable, on a chief of the last, three escallops of the first.

Sir William Graham of Claypots, or, three piles issuing from a chief sable, charged with three escallops of the first, and in base a rose gules, all within a doutreasure-counter-flowered of the last.

Sir William Graham of Ballangies carries the same, but, in place of the double tre-isure, he had a bordure azure: Which last three gentlemen, says Mr Workman, a famous herald, were descended of Fintry, and were knighted with Sir David Herring of Leithendy, by John Earl of Montrose, Chancellor and Viceroy to King James VI. the first day of May 1634, to which he was a witness, as in his MS.

James Graham of Monargan, a second son of Fintry, or, three piles sable, on a chief of the last, as many escaloops of the first, all within a double trezure counter-flowered gules, and a crescent for difference; crest, a flame of fire issuing out of the torce or wreath, proper: motto, Nunquam deorsum. N. R.

Graham of Incbrahkie, the first of this family was Robert, a younger son of William first Earl of Montrose, killed at the battle of Flodden. Incbrahkie gives for arms, or, a dike (or wall) fesse-ways, broken down in some places, and in base, a rose gules, on a chief sable three escallops of the first. The dike (or wall) here is assumed not only to differencce, but to perpetuate the valiant action of Graham beforementioned, in throwing down the wall and ditch, which the Romans made betwixt Forth and Clyde, to keep out the Scots, which is to this day called Graham's Dike; crest, a band holding a garland, proper: motto, A Deo victoria.
N. R.

Mungo Graham of Gorthy, descended of Incbrahkie, or, three roses within a bordure gules, on a chief sable, as many escaloops of the field; crest, two arms issuing from a cloud erect, and lifting up a man's skull incircled with two branches of a palm tree, and over the head a marquis's coronet; motto, Sepulcro viresco.
N. R.

Graham of Grahamsheil, descended of Gorthy, or, a lion rampant azure, between three roses gules, on a chief sable, as many escaloops of the first; crest, a lion couched under a sword in pale, proper: motto, Nec temere nec timitde. N. R.

Graham of Brackness, descended of Incbrahkie, or, a lion's paw erased and erected between three roses gules, and, on a chief sable, as many escallops of the first; crest, a lion's paw, as the former, grasping a sword erected in pale, proper: motto, Nec temere nec timitte. L. R.

Graham of Bachlavy, descended of Incbrahkie, or, a stag-current between three roses gules, on a chief sable, as many escaloops of the first. L. R.

John Graham of Killearn, descended of William Graham, Rector of Killearn, lawful son of William second Earl of Montrose, and Lady Janet Keith, daughter of William Earl Marischal of Scotland; quarterly, first and fourth or, on a chief sable, three escaloops of the first for Graham; second and third, argent, three roses gules, for the title of Montrose; and, on a chief of the last, three pallets or, as descended by the mother from Keith Earl Marischal; crest, a falcon killing a stork, JAMES GRAHAM of Orchill, descended of Mungo Graham, another lawful younger son of William second Earl of Montrose, and Lady Janet Keith, daughter of William Earl Marischal, quarterly, first and fourth or, a boar’s head couped gules, on a chief sable, three escalops of the first; second and third argent, three roses gules; crest, an eagle volant, proper: motto, Prosequor ait. L. R.

JOHN GRAHAM, sometime Commissary Clerk of Dumbane, descended of a third brother of a second son of the family of Montrose, argent, on a chief sable, three escalops or; and, for a brotherly difference, a crescent of the third, surmounted of a mullet of the second: motto, Prosequor ait. L. R.

Mr JAMES GRAHAM, Advocate and Solicitor to King James VII. a fourth son of Patrick Graham of Inchbrakie, descended, as before said, of the eldest son of a second marriage of the first Earl of Montrose, carries or, three roses 2 and 1 gules, and on a chief sable, as many escalops of the first; crest, a hand issuing out of a cloud, reaching to a garland, all proper: motto, Nomen & omnia. L. R.

Sir WILLIAM GRAHAM of Braco, Baronet, descended of a second son of John first Earl of Montrose, carries the quartered arms of the Earl of Montrose; but, for his difference, ingratils the chief; crest, two hands issuing out of a cloud, in cach a sword, the right hand flourishing aloft, the left holding it in a defensive posture: motto, Defendendo vice. L. R.

Colonel HENRY GRAHAM, whose grandfather was William Graham of Killearn, lawful brother-german to John Earl of Montrose, Viceroy and Commissioner to the Kingdom of Scotland, from King James VI. carries the quartered arms of Montrose, within a bordure quartered gules and sable, supported by a falcon, proper, on the dexter, and by a stork on the sinister; and for crest, a falcon, proper; with the motto, Pradeo nemor. L. R.

ROBERT GRAHAM of Newkirk, sometime Provost of Dumfries, or, a bear’s head erased sable, and, on a chief of the same, three escalops of the first; crest, a pelican’s head couped, proper. L. R.

GRAHAM of Garvock, descended of the family of Montrose, or, three piles gules, issuing from a chief sable, charged with as many escalops of the first; crest, a lion rampant gules; motto, Noli me tangere. L. R.

DAVID GRAHAM of Meiklewood, descended of the family of Montrose, the paternal coat of Graham; but for his difference, he has the chief embattled; crest, a star, proper: motto, Auxiliane resurg. N. R.

JOHN GRAHAM of Douglaslon, or, a heron volant, proper, and on a chief sable, three escalops of the first; crest, an escalop as the former: motto, Pignus amoris. N. R.

Mr JOHN MITCHELSON of Middleton, Advocate, argent, a demi-lion rampant naissant out of the base gules, armed and langued azure, and, on a chief indented sable, a star between two crescents of the first; on a wreath of the tinctures, for crest, an inescutcheon argent; with the motto, Crescam ut proxim so illuminated in Workman’s Manuscript; see Plate of Achievements. This family is of a good old standing in Mid-Lothian, being heritors of the lands of Mitchelston, Luggat, and Blackhaugh, for some generations past, and were designed of Mitchelston, before they purchased the lands of Middleton, about an hundred and fifteen years since, and have from that time been designed of Middleton; of which family the above Mr John Mitchelson is lineally descended, and representative.

The surname of SIMPSON, argent, on a chief vert, three crescents of the first, by George Simpson of Udoh, who has for crest, a falcon volant, proper: motto, Aliis nutrior. N. R.

HOWISON, argent, a man’s heart gules, on a chief azure, three flower-de-luces or. P. MS.

The name of SQUARE, or, on a chief sable, two mullets argent. P. MS.

COUSLAND of that ilk, argent, two mullets and a crescent in base sable, a chief chequed of the same tinctures. P. MS.

I shall add here, for examples of a chief charged, some honourable families in England, from Mr Dale, pursuivant, his Catalogue of the Nobility of England, and from Jacob Imhoff’s Historia Regum pariumque Mense Britanniae.

RUSSELL Duke of Bedford, argent, a lion rampant gules, on a chief sable, three escalops of the first; thus by Imhoff, Russellorum Comitum Bedfordiae tessera genet...
OF THE CHIEF OR CHEF.

titlitis leone rubro constat, qui scutum argentum implet cebalo nigro, cui tres concha argento tincte insertae sunt, distinctum. This noble family derives its descent from an ancient family in Dorsetshire: John Russel of Berwick, was advanced to the title of peacre by Henry VIII. and, in the third year of the reign of Edward VI. was created Earl of Bedford; and in April 1694, his successor William Russel Earl of Bedford, was created Marquis of Tavistock, and Duke of Bedford.

Henry Clinton Earl of Lincoln, Baron Clinton and Say, dignified with the title of Baron Clinton by writ of summons to Parliament the 6th of February 1298, the 27th of Edward I. and with the title of earl the 4th of May 1572, 14th of Elizabeth, as Dale, pursuivant, gives for his paternal bearing, argent, six cross creslets fitché, 3, 2, and 1 sable, on a chief azure, two mullets or, pierced gules: But of late the crosses have been disused: Imhoff says, Digna Clinitorum gentilium sex cruciaturas cruciatus & in imo spiculatae nigrae refert, impressas sucte argentoe, cui cephalus est coeruleus, stellis sive rotulis calcareis duabus aureis fulgens. This author, because the English do not make a distinction betwixt stars and mullets, says, stellis sive rotulis, for a mullet pierced, which is the rowel of a spur; and he makes use of the words rotula calcarius: But more of this afterwards under the title mullet.

Paulet St John Earl of Bolingbrooke, and Baron of St John of Bletsee; this family was dignified with the honour of baron by Elizabeth 1558, and earl by King James I. argent, on a chief gules, two mullets pierced or, as Mr Dale; but Imhoff, argent, a bend gules, and on a chief of the same, three stars or. Anno 1711, the title of the Earldom of Bolingbrooke became extinct upon the decease of Paulet St John, the last earl, without heirs of his body, and the barony of Bletsee devolved upon Sir Andrew St John, who carries argent, on a chief gules, two mullets pierced or.

Sir John Wauchop of Niddry, chief of the name, and head of an ancient family in Mid-Lothian, gives for arms, azure, two stars in chief, and in base a garb or; crest, a garb or; motto, Industria dedit. N. R.

They are said to have their surname from Wauchopdale, which they possessed of old, in the reign of Alexander II. Alanus Wauchope got the lands of Coulter, in the shire of Aberdeen, which were confirmed to him by that king, as Sir George Mackenzie in his MS. Which lands went with a daughter of Sir Adam Wauchope's to Cumin of Innerlachie, of whom is lineally descended Cumin of Coulter. The heads of this family of Wauchope of Niddry, were hereditary bailies to Keith Lords Marischal, and Marischal-Deputes in Mid-Lothian: From the Lords Marischal they had the lands of Niddry, designed Niddry-Marischal; and therefore on a tomb-stone in the chapel of Niddry, are engraven these words, This tomb was bigged by Robert Wauchope of Niddry-Marischal, 1537.

Amongst the gentlemen of the inquest that served James Forrester heir to his father James Forrester of Corstorphine 1547, is Gilbert Wauchope of Niddry-Marischal, who married Margaret Douglas, daughter to Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, grandfather to the first Earl of Queensberry; and in the inquest of serving Alexander Lord Home, heir to his father Lord George 1551, there is mentioned Cuthbert Wauchope of Niddry-Marischal. There is honourable mention made of one Robert Wauchope of Niddry-Marischal, Doctor of the Sorbonne, and Primate of Ireland, by Leslie, in the tenth book of his History, by Labeus a Jesuit, in the 14th tom. of his Chronicle, and by John Cone a Scotsman, in his Book De Duplici Statu Religionis apud Scotas. Several sons of this family were very eminent in military affairs, and in high posts abroad and at home.

John Wauchope of Edmonstone, a second son of Wauchope of Niddry, and sometime one of the Senators of the College of Justice, his arms in the Lyon Register are two coats impaled, viz. first, azure, two mullets in chief, and a garb in base or, for Wauchope, differenced with a crescent in the collar point argent; second, or, a cross ingrailed sable; having married Rait the heiress of Edmonstone; crest and motto as Niddry. L. R.

They of the name of Wauch, by our old books of blazons, carry the same with Wauchope, sometimes adding a fesse, as Wauch of Glenboy in the parochin of
OF THE CHIEF OR CHEF.

Methie, in the sheriffdom of Forfar. I have seen a charter of the lands of Glenboy, to Alexander Waugh, of the date 1587, and another to his son, Alexander Waugh, of these lands 1624, whose daughter and heir Eupham Waugh, was married to David Ogilvy son to John Ogilvy of Millhall.

Kirkaldy of Grange, gules, two stars in chief, and a crescent in base or; Esplin's MS. As for the antiquity of the name, we find William Kirkaldy submitting to Edward III. as in Prynce's History. Marjory Kirkaldy, daughter and heir to John Kirkaldy, was married to Reginald Kinnaird, who got with her lands in the barony of Inchture, as by a charter of King Robert III. 1399. James Kirkaldy of Grange is one of the witnesses in the charters of King James V. to Alexander Forrester of Corstorphine. Sir John Kirkaldy of Grange, baronet, gules, a chevron argent between three stars in chief, and a crescent in base or; crest, a man's head with the face looking upwards, proper: motto, Fortissima veritas. N. R.

The surname of Inglis, azure, a lion rampant, and in chief three stars argent. Inglis of Manor carried the same, as did Inglis of Torbet, who quartered them with the arms of Torbet or Tarvit of that Ilk; argent, a chevron between three wolves' heads, couped sable, as in Sir James Balfour's Blazons.

In the 6th year of King Robert III.'s reign, William Inglis got from that king the barony of Manor, for killing Thomas de Struthers, an Englishman, as the charter bears: "In remunerationem facti nobilis, viz. interfectionis Thomae de Struthers Anglici militis, quem super marchis in duello interfecit."

John Inglis of Manor obtains a charter of confirmation of his lands of Manor, to himself, and his son and heir Thomas Inglis, from his superior, Archibald Duke of Touraine, Earl of Douglas; and the three stars in chief, carried by the name of Inglis, I take to be arms of patronage, and carried by that name, upon the account that they were vassals to the Douglasses. Thomas Inglis of Manor made an excambion of his lands of Brankesholm, Branshaugh, Goldylands, Quhitelaw, Quhirig, Todshaw-hills, and Todshaw-wood, which he held of the Douglasses, with Sir Walter Scot of Murchouston, for the lands of Murthouston and Heartwood, lying in the barony of Bothwell in the shire of Lanark; as by the charter of excambion, dated at Edinburgh the 23rd of July 1446, in which he is described, Nobilis vir Thomas Inglis de Manners; and afterwards he and his family in other writs were designed, Domini de Murthoustoun, or Murdistoun.

John Inglis, portioner of Newtone, whose grandfather Cornelius Inglis was lawful son of Murdistoun, azure, a lion rampant argent, on a chief inrailed of the second; three stars of the first; crest, a star environed with clouds, proper: motto, In tenebris lucidior. N. R.

Sir John Inglis of Cranond, Baronet, azure, a lion salient argent, on a chief or, three mullets of the field; crest, a demi-lion rampant argent, holding in his dexter paw a mullet or: motto, nisi dominus frustra. N. R. As in the Placits of Achievements.

Mr John Inglis, Advocate, descended of Inglis of Manor; azure, a lion rampant argent, on a chief of the last; three stars of the first within a bordure gules; crest, a demi-lion as the former, issuing out of the wreath: motto, Recte faciendo securus. N. R.

Grey Earl of Kent, chief of the ancient and illustrious House of Grey, so dignified in the reign of Edward IV. from whom are descended and branched the Barons of Rotherfield, Codmore, Wilton, Ruthine, Groby, and Rugemont, the Viscount of Lisle, the Earl of Stamford, the Marquis of Dorset, and the Duke of Suffolk, all of that surname, derived from the Castle and honour of Grey (or Croy as some write) in Picardy, their patrimony before the conquest, give for their paternal bearing, barry of six, argent and azure, in chief three torteauxes gules; as Robert Dale, pursuivant, in his Catalogue of the Nobility of England. Henry Earl of Kent 1706, was created Marquis of Kent, Earl of Harold, and Viscount Goodrich; and afterwards in the year 1710, was advanced to the dignity of Duke of Kent. In an old manuscript of arms, illustrated by the monks of Ely in the reign of William the Conqueror, are the armorial bearings of his chief officers; amongst whom is Paganus de Grey, equum signifier to King William; his arms, thus, facé d'argent & d'azur, as Menestrier in his Origin of Armories, where he says, “That this Manuscript is in the English College of Benedictines at Douay;” for the antiquity of the family of Greys, see the Peerage of England.

Edward Devereux, Viscount of Hereford, argent, a fesse gules, in chief three torteauxes. This family has its surname from a town in Normandy, from whence they came; and was dignified with the title of Viscount of Hereford 1549, by Edward VI. and is the Premier-Viscount in England, as in the foresaid book.

C H A P. XIII.

OF THE BEND.

The bend, say the English, is made by two lines drawn over-thwart the escutcheon, from the dexter chief to the sinister base point, by an equal distance, containing the fifth part of the field, when not charged, and the third part when charged: But others make no such distinction, and tell us, that the bend possesses the third middle part of the field diagonally, from the right chief angle, to the left angle in base.

Menestrier says, “Bande est une pièce honorable, qui occupe diagonalement le tiers de l’écu par le milieu de droit a gauche.” Some bring bend or bande from a barbarous Latin word, bandum, which signifies an ensign, made of a piece of silk or stuff, more long than broad, which distinguished companies of men; and from whence we say bands of soldiers; but the bend is more generally taken, to represent in arms the shoulder-belt, and is commonly Latined balteus. Sylvester Petra Sancta, in his 29th chap. De Balteo Teserario, says, “Balteum voco vitam oblique ab latere dextro exaratum, que triumtam continens parmula nostrae tesserarie, eam perinde ac militem balteus praecipit.”

The old Latin Blazoners for a bend-said bendis. The author of the book Le Trophée d’Armes Heraldisques will have the bend to represent the baudrier, which Peacham describes to be a sign of honour, called the baudrick, which knights used to wear of old over their shoulder, and under the left arm, whereat hung the sword: But Camden and Minshew will have the fesse to be the knightly belt, or cingulum honoris; yet, with others, I think, the bend may represent that piece of honour as well as the fesse, since some nations used the girding of the belt close about the waist at their making of knights, and others, in the like ceremony, by putting it loose over their shoulder, so that both bend and fesse may be latined balteus or balteum, with a proper adjective annexed for distinction, such as obliquus or humeralis balteus for a bend, and transversus or huminis balteus for the fesse.

What I have said before of the fesse chequé, the armorial figure of the Stewarts, I shall not here repeat again, but give some examples of a bend of that form.

Fig. 7.-Plate V. or, a bend chequé, sable and argent, by the name of Monteu. The first of this name was Walter, third son to Walter, and brother to Alexander High Steward of Scotland, who being made Earl of Monteu, took the surname of Monteu, which descended to all his posterity; and, to show they were originally of the stock of the Stewarts, they turned the fesse chequé to a bend; for, to change a fesse to a bend, and a bend to a fesse, has been an ancient practice for differencing descendants with us; thus, Leslie of Balquhan turned his figure, the bend, to a fesse, of which afterwards, and so of several other cadets.

Anno 1291, Walter Earl of Monteith is one of the arbiters, or auditors, of the competition for the crown, betwixt John Baliol Lord of Galloway, and Robert Bruce Lord of Annandale. He had for wife, one of the daughters and co-heirs of Walter Cumin Earl of Monteith, and, in her right, succeeded to the honours, and a part of the estate. She bore to him two sons, the eldest Alexander, designated, in his father’s lifetime, in charters, Alexander de Monteith, filius Comitis de Monteith; the second son John, anno 1297, (Federam, tom. 2. pag. 782.), is designed, Johannes de Monteith, frater Comitis de Monteith. These two gentlemen were the first that assumed the surname of Monteith; and all of that name are supposed to be descended from them. In anno 1296, Alexander Earl of Monteith is ranked, by Pryme, with others, in that concussive bond commonly called Ragnan’s Roll, extorted by Edward I. from the most considerable of the Scots nation, and designs him, Alexander de Monteith. He had three sons, Allan and Murdoch, successively Earls of Monteith, and the third son, Alexander, was the first of the family of Monteith of Ruskie; which family was in use to carry quarterly, first and fourth or, a bend chequy, sable and argent, for Monteith; second and third azure, three buckles or.

The Monteiths of Carrs were in use to carry quarterly, first and fourth, Monteith as before; second and third or, a lymphad, or ship, with one mast sable, and, in chief, three buckles azure, as in Sir James Balfour's Manuscript of Blazons.

Allan Earl of Monteith, before-mentioned, died without issue, and was succeeded by his brother Murdoch, who left behind him a daughter, his heir, who was married to Sir John Graham in the year 1341.

Johannes de Graham Comes de Monteith, is frequently mentioned in charters. He was taken prisoner in the battle of Durham, the 17th of October 1346; and, by order of Edward III. was barbarously murdered with Duncan, tenth and last Earl of Fife. The wife or daughter of this John Graham Earl of Monteith, was married to Robert Stewart, third son to King Robert II. who, in her right, was Earl of Monteith, and thereafter Duke of Albany. She bore to him several children, the eldest Murdoch Stewart, second Duke of Albany Earl of Monteith, who was executed and forfeited by King James I. That King gave the earldom of Monteith, in lieu of the earldom of Strathern, to Malise Graham, of whom before.—— But to return to the bend.

Fig. 2. Plate V. azure, a bend argent; by some Books, argent, a bend azure, by the name of Bisset. There was an ancient family of that surname with us in the reign of King Alexander II.; One Walter Bisset is a witness in a charter, by that King, to the abbeay of Paisley; and again I find him a witness, with William Bisset, in another charter of that King's to the abbeay of Dunfermline; and, by the chartulary of Melrose, Walter Bisset, in the year 1233, married a daughter of Rowland Earl of Galloway.

In the year 1258, Sir John Bisset of Lovat mortifies an annuity out of his lands to the Bishop of Murray. He died without heirs of his own body, leaving his estate to his three daughters; the eldest married to David Graham, thereafter designed of Lovat, as in an agreement betwixt him and the Bishop of Murray, concerning the fishing of the water of Torn; the second daughter was married to Sir William Fenton of Beaufort; and the third to Sir Andrew de Bosco. In the year 1291, amongst the Barons convened at Berwick, at the desire of Edward I. as arbitrators between the competitors for the crown of Scotland, is William Bisset, on whose seal of arms there is a shield charged with a bend, and over it a label of three points. His grand-child, Thomas Bisset, by marrying Isabel M'Duff, eldest daughter and heiress of Duncan Earl of Fife, was Earl of Fife four years, and died without issue, in the reign of David II.

Bisset Lord Beaufort, carried azure, a bend argent, as Workman in his Manuscript. Sir James Balfour, says in his Blazons, azure, a bend sinister argent; and that Bisset of that ilk carried argent, a bend gules:

Fig. 3. Plate V. argent, a bend ingrailed gules, by the ancient name of Colepeper in England. Sir Thomas Colepeper of Bedegbury, was governor of one of the Cinque-ports in the reign of Edward II. whose arms were argent, a bend ingrailed gules; of which the famous Drayton, in the Barons' wars, in the reign of Edward II. enumerating the arms of the noted families of each side, says,

"And Colepeper, with silver arms inraill'd,
"Bare thereupon a bloody bend inraill'd."

Sir John Colepeper, a branch of the family of Bedegbury, was a knight of the shire of Kent in the Parliament which met in the year 1641. He was a man of perfect loyalty and great ability, as appears by all the accounts of these times, being one of the first, that, on the irruption of the civil wars, stood up for the King; and, after twenty years service to the crown, and twelve years exile with King Charles II. he returned with his said Majesty into England, and died Master of the Rolls, in July 1660. The supporters to the arms of this Lord, granted by Sir Edward Walker Garter, principal King of Arms, are two dragons argent, each of them collared with a ducal coronet. He was created Lord Colepeper by letters patent, the 21st of October 1644, from whom is John, now Lord Colepeper. For other examples of carrying a bend, by honourable families in Britain, they are to be found in the end of this chapter; and, to follow my former method, I shall add here an example or two of a bend charged with figures, for which we say on a bend; and I observe it has been a custom anciently to charge the bend, rather than to accompany it with figures.

Fig. 4. Plate V. the ancient surname of Leslie gives argent, on a bend azure, three buckles or.

The first of this name is said to be one Bartholomew, son of Walter de Lesblin, from a castle so called in Hungary where he was born, and a near friend to Margaret, Queen to Malcolm Canmore, who came to Scotland with her, and got several lands there, as in a fragment of history, of a Norwegian, in the Lawyers' Library. In Sir Robert Sibbald's History of Fife, Andrew Leslie, the sixth in descent from the above Bartholomew, married one of the co-heiresses of Abernethy about the year 1317, on which account they have since quartered the coat of Abernethy with their own; and the fourth in descent from the above Andrew, was Normand Leslie, first of Rothes, great-grandfather of George Leslie, son of Normand Leslie, and Christian Seaton, daughter to William Lord Seaton, which George was served heir to his father Normand, 1439, and married Christian Haliburton. In a perambulation, anno 1457, of Easter and Wester Kinghorns, he is designed Lord Leslie, and was created Earl of Rothes by King James II. anno 1457. John the seventh Earl, lineally descended from George the first Earl, was created Duke of Rothes, for his lifetime, by King Charles II. in the year 1660: He died 1681, and left issue by his lady, Anne Lindsay, daughter to the Earl of Crawford, two daughters; Margaret Countess of Rothes, married to Charles Earl of Haddington, whose eldest son, John, takes upon him the name and arms of Leslie, and is the eighth Earl of Rothes, and married Lady Jean Hay, daughter to the Marquis of Tweeddale. His Lordship's achievement, as in the Copperplate, with others of the nobility, is quarterly, first and fourth argent, on a bend azure, three buckles or, for Leslie; second and third or, a lion rampant gules, bruised with a ribbon sable, for Abernethy; which are adorned with crown, helmet, and violets, befitting his quality; and, issuing out of a wreath of the tinctures, for crest, a demi-griffin; supporters, two griffins, proper: motto, Grip fast.

The blason of other families of the name of Leslie, with those of other surnames who carry bends, are to be found at the end of this chapter, and, therefore, I proceed here to treat of the bend under its various forms.

Fig. 5. or, on a bend azure, a star betwixt two crescents of the first, by the surname of Scott. As for its antiquity, amongst the witnesses in a charter of King David I. to the abbacy of Selkirk, there are Uchtred filius Scott, and Ranulpbus Anglus, who may have been the first of the surname of Scott and Inglis.—see Sir James Dalrymple's Collections.

The eldest family of the name of Scott was that of Balwyrie, as Sir George Mackenzie, in his Science of Heraldry, and MS. of Genealogies, tells us; and that one Walter Scott, a son of that family, married the only daughter and heiress of Murdison of that Ilk, in the reign of Robert the Bruce; who, though he retained the surname of Scott, yet he laid aside his paternal arms, viz. argent, three lions' heads erased gules, and carried those of Murdison, or, on a bend azure, a star betwixt two crescents of the first. Walter Scott, his grand or great-grandson, designed of Murdison, excambled these lands, with Thomas Inglis of Manor, for other lands, as I mentioned before. Sir Walter Scott got several lands from King James II. for killing Archibald Douglas Earl of Murray, and apprehending Hugh Douglas Earl of Ormond, the King's enemies; his son and successor Walter Scott, designed of Kirkurd, for his special services against the Douglases, the King's enemies, got from King James III. at Edinburgh, the 7th of December 1463, a new charter to himself and to David Scott, his son and apparent heir, erecting the lands of Branksholin into a free barony, with several other lands: " Pro fideli & laudabili servitio progenito
OF THE BEND.

"noster & nobis, per dilectum militem Walterum Scott de Kirturd & Davidem Scott, silium ejus & hæredem apparentem, in rebellione Jacobi dc Douglas & fratrum suorum, invasione & expulsione, multipliciter impenso." This family rose by the fall of the Douglases.

The above David Scott, son and heir of Walter, was designed Baron of Brunkholm; and from him was lineally descended, by four generations, Sir Walter Scott of Brunkholm, who was advanced to the dignity of a Lord in Parliament by the title of Lord Buccleugh, whose son, Walter Lord Buccleugh, was solemnly created Earl of Buccleugh at Holyroodhouse, the 30th of March 1619, by Alexander Sca-ton Earl of Dunterline, Commissioner to his Majesty King James VI. He married a daughter of Francis Earl of Errol, who bore to him Francis second Earl of Buccleugh. He married Margaret Leslie, daughter to John Earl of Rothes, and widow of the Lord Balgonie, who bore to him two daughters; Margaret, married to Walter Scott of Haychester, who was made Earl of Tarrae for life, but she died without issue; the second daughter, Anne, was created Dutchess of Buccleugh by King Charles II. and married to that King's natural son, James Duke of Monmouth, to whom she had two sons, James Earl of Dalkeith, who died 1705, left issue by Henrietta his wife, daughter of Laurence Earl of Rochester, Francis, now Lord Dalkeith, and other two sons and two daughters; her Grace's second son, Lord Henry Scott, was, in the year 1706, created Earl of Deloraine, Viscount Hermitage, and Lord Scott of Goldilands, all in the county of Roxburgh, she married a second husband, Charles Lord Cornwallis, and to him has a daughter, Lady Isabella. Her Grace's achievement is, or, on a bend azure, a star betwixt two crescents of the first; crest, a stag passant proper, armed and unguled or; supporters, two women, richly attired, in an antick habit, with their hair hanging down over their shoulders; and, for motto, the word, Amo.

The bend, is not only subject to all the accidental forms of lines, which compose it, but to be voided. Voided is not only said of the honourable ordinaries when so, but of other figures natural and artificial; that is, when the middle of the figure is cut out, as fig. 6. ermine, a bend gules voided of the field, by the name of Hacket in England, as in Holmes's Academy of Arms.

Fig. 7. Plate V. argent, a bend sable voided of the field wavey, by the name of Wigmur of Wigmur, as in Workman's Manuscript of Blazons. This last example would be blazoned by some, argent, a bend sable, charged with another waved of the field; because the term wavey being an accidental form of the ordinaries, cannot be properly attributed to the field; wherefore they say, that the bend sable is charged with a bend argent wavey, because of the accidental form. For if it had been voided with plain lines, it would have been blazoned properly, a bend voided of the field.

William Bohun Earl of Northampton, Knight of the Garter in the reign of King Edward III. had on his seal of arms, as a Knight of the Garter, argent, on a bend gules, voided of the field betwixt six liones or, three stars sable; as Ashmole, in his Institution of the Garter, page 705.; and, in the same book; page
714. he gives us the arms of Sir Anthony Brown, Knight of the Garter, in the reign of King Henry VIII. sable on a bend argent, voided of the field, three lions of the second, as fig. 8.: But some would blazon this last bearing, sable, three lions in bend between two bendlets argent.

Having treated of a bend under accidental forms, and a bend charged, or, as we say, in short, on a bend, I proceed to give examples of a bend cotoye, or accompanied, that is, when figures are placed in the field at the sides of the bend, and then we say with the English, a bend between such figures, for which the French say, accompagné ; but when the figures are placed diagonally after the position of the bend, they say cotoyé, and when figures are erected, we say betwixt or accompanied.

Fig. 9. Plate V. sable, a bend accompanied with six billets or, by the name of Callender, an ancient family with us, which ended in an heiress, who was mar-rried to William Livingston, a son of Livingston of Weems in Fife; of whom were descended the Livingstones Earls of Linlithgow, who quarter those arms of Callender, in the second and third places, with the arms of Livingston in the first and fourth,—of whom afterwards.
OF THE BEND.

JOHN CALLENDER of Kincardine, descended of Callender of Mayners, sable, a bend chequè, or and gules, betwixt six billets of the second; crest, a hand holding a billet or; with the motto, I mean well. N. R.

The ancient Earls of Marr carried azure, a bend betwixt six cross crosetts fitched or; which was afterwards quartered by other families honoured with the title of Earls of Marr:——But more examples of the bend, accompanied with figures, towards the end of this chapter.

A bend is said to surmount, when it lies over other ordinaries or other figures, keeping its just length and breadth; but by the French it is said to be brochante.

Sirence of Wormiston, an ancient family with us, said to be descended of the old Earls of Fife, has been in use to carry the lion of M'Duff, Earls of Fife, with an addition thus: fig. 10. or, a lion rampant gules, surmounted with a bend sable, charged with a buckle, between two muscles argent, as in Mr. Pont's Manuscript of Blazons. Sir James Spence of Wormiston was Ambassador for King James I. of Great Britain to the King of Sweden, to effectuate a peace betwixt that King and the King of Denmark.

The bend, as is said, is subject to all the accidental forms, as to be ingrailed, invented, wormed, nebule, and counter-embattled, to be couped and counter-changed, to be parted of divers tinctures, and carried quarterly: Of which accidental forms I have given already several instances; and the like will occur again in this Treatise, in other figures which I am to speak to in all their various forms, according to the practice of Great Britain.

In Germany, sometimes the ordinaries, or proper figures, are put under very odd fantastical forms, with which I forbear to fatigue my reader, and to swell my book beyond its designed bulk, but refer the curious to the Wapen Book of Germany, to Sylvester Petra Sancta, the Italian, and others; and shall proceed now to the diminutives of the bend, and the multiplication of them in one field, with their various blazons, by a few examples, to show their general practice and use with us.

The first diminutive of the bend is called a bendlet, which possesseth in breadth the sixth part of the field diagonally. The French call it a bend en divise; as Meunster, in his blazon of the arms of Toure in France, d'argent, à une bande en devise d'aure, enfilée dans trois couronnes ducales d'or; i.e. argent, a bendlet azure, inquired with three ducale crowns or, fig. 11. Plate V.

The bendlet, says Fern in his Lacies' Nobility, page 322, does represent a scarf which soldiers wore over their shoulder, from one side to the other under the arm. When there is but one in a field of arms, it is blazoned, by inadvertent heralds, a bend, and that is the reason, says he, we do rarely meet with a bendlet mentioned in a blazon. In Sir James Balbair's Blazons I have frequently met with a bendlet mentioned, as in the arms of the surname of Lanton, azure, an eagle with two heads displayed or, surmounted of a bendlet sable; and in the blazon of the arms of the name of Porterfield, in Sir George Mackenzie's Science of Heraldry, or, a bendlet betwixt a stag's head erased in chief, and a hunting-horn in base sable, garnished gules; so recorded in the Lyon Register for the arms of Alexander Porterfield of that Ilk; and for his crest, a branch of palm: with the motto, Sub poudre sursum.

I find no instance of a single bendlet carried in any arms of England except this, given us by Guillim, in his Display of Heraldry, fig. 12. Plate V. and the same by Kandle Holmes, in his Academy of Armories. And though they give us the figure of a bendlet, yet they do not tell us by whom it is carried, because they suppose that a bendlet is not carried singly; for, says Holmes, if the field contains more than one bend, then they are not called bends, but bendlets: Notwithstanding of which, Ashmole, in his Institutions of the Order of the Garter, gives us a bendlet in the arms of Sir Edward Peyning Knight, and one of the most honourable Order of the Garter, in the reign of King Henry VII. banner of six, or and vert, surmounted of a bendlet gules.

Sandford, in his Genealogical History, gives us the arms of Henry of Lancaster, Lord Monmouth, second son of Edmond Earl of Lancaster, second son of Henry III. of England, thus: gules, three leopards or, surmounted of a bendlet azure, as upon his seals, tombs, and other pieces given us by this author; who tells us, when he became Earl of Lancaster, by succeeding to his elder brother Thomas, in the reiga
OF THE BEND.

Edward II. he disused the bendlet, and carried, as his father and brother, over the leopard's, a label of three points azure, each charged with three flower-de-luces or; and this is one of the most ancient instances of carrying a bendlet as a mark of cadency in England.

I shall add another instance of a bendlet, from Olivarius Uresus de Sigilliis Comitum Flandriae, in the arms of Guido, second son of William Lord Dampetra, and his lady, Margaret Countess of Flanders, who carried the arms of Dampetry, two leopards, bruised with a bendlet for difference, in the year 1251, which he also laid aside when he succeeded his elder brother William. So much then for a bendlet, by some English heralds called a garter or garter; which is a bearing, says Mr Holmes, of much esteem with us in England, from that renowned order of Knighthood: Notwithstanding of which, in all his numerous Collections of Blazons, he gives us not one where either the bendlet or garter is mentioned.

The other sub-division of the bend is called a cost, which containeth in breadth the half of the bendlet. When it is borne alone, it is always called a cost, say the English, but if by couples, then they are called cottises. The diminutive of the cost is called a ribbon, and doth contain the eighth part of the breadth of the bend; the name agrees well with the form and quantity of the same, in that it is long and narrow, which is the right shape of a ribbon. Such an one is carried in the arms of Abernethy, or, a lion rampant gules, surmounted by a ribbon sable, quartered in the bearings of several of our nobility,—of which before.

The French have diminutives of the bend, but bend en devise, i.e. the bendlet, baston, and cottise, which two last contain in breadth the third of the bend, as in the arms of the Duke of Orleans of old, azure, semy of flower-de-luces or, a cottise argent, fig. 13. Favin calls it a fillet. The baston (or batton) differs from a cottise thus; when in arms, it is always a brasure, that is a mark of cadency; if not, then a cottise; as Menestrier: Cottise est une bande diminuée, des deux tiers, quand elle est pour brasure, ou le nomme baston, autrement elle est cottise, to distinguish better the batton from the cottise: All nations make the batton coupé, that is, when its extremities do not touch the dexter chief and sinister base points of the shield. The batton is made now very short by the French, who call it baton peri, and is always a brasure, frequently made use of by the younger sons of France, of which I have treated in my marks of cadency, and shall do so again in this treatise.

Cottise comes from cost, and it from the Latin word costa, a rib; but cottises are seldom or never carried, unless when a bend is betwixt two or more of them; and when placed at the sides of the bend, they either immediately touch it, or are placed at a distance from it, with the field appearing between them, as fig. 14. Plate V. or, a bend vaire betwixt two cottises azure. When they touch the sides of the bend, then it is said to be cottised; and when the field and bend are both of colour or metal together, then the cottises are contrary of metal or colour; and so placed close to the bend, that colour touch not colour, nor metal metal; as fig. 15. the arms of Ruffoli in Florence, given us by Sylvester Petra Sancta, azure, a bend gules, cottised or. Here the cottises are of metal, to interpose betwixt the bend gules, and the field azure; to preserve the general rule in heraldry, that metal touch not, nor lie upon metal; nor colour upon colour; and for proof of this nice preservation, I shall add our author's words, who Latin cottises, laciniole, or fambrice: "Et si tamen raro baltei ex uno colore astringunt alterius coloris parmales "symbolicas, uti puniceus balteus in sapharini coloris alveolo, quando id continguat, "tamen ne color sit supra colorum, lacinioles, tunc, ex metallo, idem baltei colorati "munimentur." In this case the bend is necessarily cottised and smirnated as the cross; of which afterwards.

I have seen the arms of Doctor John Tillotson, Archbishop of Canterbury, on the frontispiece of his works, impaled with those of his episcopal see, his paternal coat, being azure, a bend of the same, cottised argent between two garbs of the last. If the cottises had not been too small, the blazon might have been azure, a bend argent, voided of the field.

I have not found a bend so necessarily cottised with us, as that of Rufolli above. As for that of Whiteford's, given us by Sir George Mackenzie, of a bend cottised, where there is no necessity for it (because the bend is of colour upon metal, viz. argent, a bend cottised sable, betwixt two garbs gules) it would have been more heraldicq, if the bend had been betwixt two cottises, the field appearing betwixt them and the bend, than to join the cottises close to the bend; and the same blazon is given to the arms of Colonel Walter Whiteford, in the Lyon Register. But it may be imputed to a mistake in the engraver, or in the blazon, in not distinguishing a bend betwixt cottises, from a bend cottised.

As for the antiquity of the surname of Whiteford, we find one Walter Whiteford, for his good services at the battle of Largs, against the Norwegians, in the year 1263, to have got some lands in Rentrew, from Walter Lord High Steward of Scotland, which he called after his own name; from him rose the family of Whiteford of that Ilk, and from it Whiteford of Milton, and Whiteford of Balquhan, who has but one garb accompanying the bend.

When the cottises touch not the sides of the bend, the field appearing between them and the bend, as the endorses stand with the pale, of which before, then the bend is blazoned, between two cottises; for examples, I shall mention these.

Humphry de Bohun Earl of Hereford, who married Elizabeth, daughter to Edward I. of England, carried, as Sandford gives us, azure, a bend argent, between two cottises, and six lions rampant or. This family ended in two heirs-female, the eldest, Eleanor, was married to Thomas of Woodstock, Duke of Gloucester; and, the other, Mary de Bohun, was wife to Henry of Bolingbroke Earl of Derby; and in her right, was created Duke of Hereford, and afterwards became King of England, by the name of Henry IV.

These cottises we are speaking of are subject to accidental forms, as well as the bend, of which I shall give one instance, as fig. 16. the arms of the surname of Houman, with us, argent, three bendlets, each of them between two cottises ingrailed, on the outer side gules.

When the field contains more than one bend, then they are not called bends, but bendlets; though all partitions of fields that way, are termed bendy, if there be never so many pieces of them.

Fig. 17. Plate V. Argent, three bendlets sable, by the name of Sanderson, as in Pont's Manuscript, though others make them gules.

In England the name of Tracy, or, two bendlets gules; and there also the name Brantwarte, or, two bendlets ingrailed sable; the bendlets are subject to all the aforesaid accidental forms, as well as the bend.

As for example, the bearing of Byron Lord Byron of Rochdale, by letters patent, the 4th of October 1643, given us by the English heralds, and blazoned thus; argent, three bendlets enhanced gules; the term enhanced, I never met with before in any blazon, neither do I apprehend the import of it. The three bendlets are on the sinister side of the shield, which may be more distinctly blazoned—parted per bend dexter: First, bendy of six pieces, gules and argent; second, of the last, as Jacob Imhoff, in his Blazonia Regum Paritumque Magnae Britanniae, "Insignia "Byronorum scuto constant oblique dextrosorum secto, cujus superior regio fascis "transversis rubes argenteisque distincta est, inferior tota candet;" Here this author, for bend, or bendlets, has fascis transversis.

When the field is filled with such pieces, and of an even number, alternately of metal and colour, heralds say then bendy of so many pieces, as in the Blazon of the arms of Burgundy Ancient, fig. 18. Plate V. bendy of six, or and azure: The French, "bande d'or et d'azur," and the Latin, as Chiffletius, blazon these arms thus, sectum sexies, auro & cyan oblique dextrosus status centum; so that we say bendy, as before we said paly, barry of eight, ten, or twelve pieces. If they be of the number twelve or more, they say then twelve pieces, bend-ways; and the French would say, instead of bandé, cottisé; as in the Blazon of the Arms of Anois in France, cottisé d'argent, & d'azur de dix pieces, i.e. bendy of ten pieces, argent and azure.

As I said before of the pales and fesses, when opposite to one another in metal and colour, the same is said of bendy and cottisé, according to their number, as fig. 19. Plate V. The arms of Gontin in France, given us by Monsieur Baron, contre-bande de sable & d'argent, de quatreze pieces, i.e. fourteen pieces bendways, counter-changed per bend sinister, sable and argent. Sylvester Petra Sancta, speaking of such another bearing, says, "Si exilores baltei reciprocant jubat "coloris ac metalli, ut baltei sex semi-argentei ac semi-punicei in uno atque
OF THE BEND.

"codem contextu areae symboiciæ, que est tessera gentilicia DAMUGILAE FAMILIAE cum Venetius," which with us would be blazoned, bendy of six, argent and azure, counter-changed per bend sinister, and by the French, contre-bande d'argent et d'azur de douze pièces.

When bendlets are placed two and two together, they are with us called bendlets gemels, as before of the bars gemels, and by the French, jumelles, the Latins, gemini.

Having treated of the bend in all its common variations, and as we blazon a bend, on a bend, or bend charged, bend between, or accompagné, or cotéé of figures, bend cotted, bendlets and cotisses, it follows now to treat of figures, natural and artificial, which are situate after the position of the bend, for which we say in bend, and bend-ways, as of the former ordinaries. The first respects the situation of small figures, the one above the other in bend; and the second respects the position of an oblong figure, after that of the bend; for an example of the first, fig. 20. Plate V. argent, three martlets in bend between two cotisses sable, carried by the name of Norville, as in Pont's MS. Some of this name carry sable, on a bend between two cotisses or, three martlets of the first, by Norville of Boghall, and for crest, a martlet rising, proper: motto, Spem renovant alae. N. R.

Sable, three lions passant in bend, between two double cotisses argent, borne by Brown Viscount Montague; which family was dignified with the title of Viscount, by Philip and Mary of England, in the year 1554.

As for example of an oblong figure, placed bend-ways, I shall add the arms of the surname of Smyington, with us.

Fig. 21. Plate V. Gules, a two handed sword bend-ways between two mullets or, as in Mr Pont's MS. and in Esplin the same, but with one star in chief.

I proceed now to give blazons of families with us, and in England, with all the variations of the bend that I have treated of: And first of examples of a bend.

Bizzet, or Bisset of that Ik, of old, azure, a bend argent: As in Sir James Balfour's MS.

This surname is said to be old with us, being in the reign of Malcolm III. as Hector Boccan, in his History. In a charter of King Alexander III. to the abbacy of Paisley, Walter Bisset is a witness; and he again with William Bisset are witnesses in another charter of that king's to the abbacy of Dunfermline. In the reign of King Alexander III. Sir John Bisset of Lovat, mortifies an annuity out of his lands to the Bishop of Murray; he died without heirs-male, and left his estate to his three daughters, the eldest was married to David de Graham, afterwards designed of Lovat, as in an agreement betwixt him and the Bishop of Murray, relating to the fishing in the water of Torm; the second daughter was married to Sir William Fenton of Beaufort; and the third to Sir Andrew de Bosco, (Had. Coll.) in anno 1292. Amongst the barons convened at Berwick, upon the desire of King Edward of England, he was chosen arbitrator between the competitors for the crown of Scotland; there is one William de Bisset (says Sir George Mackenzie in his Manuscript) upon whose seal the bend is surmounted with a label of five points.

In our old books of blazons, Bisset of Beaufort carried azure, a bend 'argent, as in W. MS. and in B. MS. azure, a bend sinister argent. Bisset of Fairnyflet, and Bisset of Lassendrum, carried of old, azure on a bend argent, three mullets gules, for difference: But now Bisset of Lessendrum, as chief, carries the plain coat, viz. azure, a bend argent, as matriculated in the Lyon-Office. And there William Bisset, Merchant in Aberdeen, azure, on a bend argent, three mullets gules.

These of the name of Bisset in England, as I have observed, carry for arms, azure, semé of besants or.

The surname of Vass, or Vaus with us, argent, a bend gules: This surname, says Sir James Dalrymple in his Collections, is the same with the name De Vallibus, in the charters of Malcolm IV. James and Alexander de Vallibus were lairds of Dirleton, in the reigns of Alexander II. and III. of them were descended Vass Lord Dirleton, who carried the foresaid arms, which were quartered afterwards, upon account of a maternal descent, by Halyburton Lord Dirleton, and after that by Hepburn Earl of Bothwell.
OF THE BEND.

VANS of Barnbaroch, argent, on a bend gules, a star or. This family lived in the shire of Wigtown. P. MS.

Fenton of that ilk, gules, a bend inlaid argent. In the reign of Alexander III. lived Sir William Fenton Lord Beaufort, who was one of the auditors, at Berwick, of the claims of the Bruce and Balliol; and on his seal of arms, used on that occasion, there was a shield charged with a bend inlaid, and a mullet in chief. It was he, or his son Sir William, that married Cecilia Biset, one of the co-heiresses of Sir William Biset of Lovat, whose successors were known by the title of Lord Fenton; in the registers, there is a contract between two mighty lords, William Fenton, Lord of Fenton, and Huthecon Fraser, Lord Lovat, and his wife Janet Fenton, daughter to the said Lord William, the 16th September 1432. This family ended in an heiress, who was married to White Law of that ilk.

Fenton of Baiky, argent, three crescents gules. William Fenton Lord Baiky is so designed in a perambulation with Alexander Ogilvie, sheriff of Angus 1410: And in a contract between Thomas Dunbar Earl of Murray, and Henry Fraser Lord Lovat, the Earl gives to the Lord Lovat the barony of Abertauch, with the ward and relief of William Fenton Lord Baiky. Haddington's Collections from the Registers.

Fenton of Ogil, Fenton of Carden, and Fenton of Kelly, were cadets of Fenton of Baiky, as by their arms in our old registers, being argent, three crescents gules.

Sandilands Lord Torphichen, quarterly, 1 and 4, parted per fesse, azure and or; on the first, an imperial crown, proper; and on the second, a thistle vert, as a coat of augmentation; 2 and 3, grand quarter, quarterly 1 and 4, argent, a bend azure, the paternal bearing of the name of Sandilands; 2 and 3, the arms of Douglas as arms of patronage, as some will, viz. argent, a man's heart ensign with an imperial crown, proper; and, on a chief azure, three stars of the first. Which shield of arms is supported by two savages, wretched about the head and middle with laurel, holding in their hands battons, all proper; and for crest, an eagle displayed or; with the motto, Spero meliora; as in the Plate of Achievements of the Nobility.

The name of Sandilands is very ancient with us, being barons of Sandilands and of Wiston in the Upper Ward of Clydesdale. Sir James Sandilands, Baron of Sandilands and Wiston, in the reign of King David Bruce, married Eleanor Bruce, the only daughter of Alexander Bruce Earl of Carrick, son to Edward Bruce King of Ireland, brother-german to Robert Bruce King of Scotland; and uterine sister to William Earl of Douglas, who, upon account of that marriage, gave to the said Sir James Sandilands the barony of West-Caldar, called Calder Comitis. Sir James Sandilands of Calder married Jean, second daughter to King Robert II. and his first wife Elizabeth Mure, releif of Sir John Lyon of Glamis and Kinghorn, Chancellor of Scotland, for which there is a charter (in Rotulis Roberti II.) of the lands of Slammanan, and others, " Jacobo Sandilandsi militi & heredibus inter ipsum & Joanam filiam nostram pro reerandis quam Deo duxit cuin in uxorem." Sir Alexander Sandilands of Calder, gave a charter of the lands of Meikle-Harwood, and Little-Harwood, in the barony of Calder, to his eldest son and apparent heir Sir James Sandilands, and to his wife Margaret in lifetime, in the year 1466; to which Sir Alexander's seal of arms was appended, having a shield coucebe, with two coats quarterly first and fourth, a bend for Sandilands second and third, a man's heart, and on chief three stars for Douglas: Which shield is timbered with a helmet, and thereupon for eres, the head and neck of a horse, and having only one supporter on the left, viz. a lady holding the helmet and eres, which I did see in the custody of Mr Crawford, Author of the Peerage, where there is a more particular account of this noble family, whose successors have been barons of very great respect in the kingdom, and many good families of that name have been descended of them, as Sir James Sandilands Lord of St John, Great Prior of the Knights of Rhodes in the Kingdom of Scotland, and others. I have seen a charter amongst our archives in the Parliament House, granted by James Lord St John, Preceptor of Torphichen, Knight of the Order of Jerusalem, to Gavin Dundas of Bremstmill, of all and every the lands of Bremstmill, and the hall thirleage of the barony of Auldliston, in the sheriffdom of Linlithgow, dated at Edinburgh, the last of February 1538. The seal thereto appended had the impression of a man in complete armour, holding in his left hand a cross, standing on a pedestal, whereon was a shield of arms, quarterly first and fourth, a bend for Sandilands, second and third Douglas. This Sir James Lord St John, in the year 1559, was sent ambassador by the Parliament of Scotland to the King of France, and to Francis and Mary of Scotland, Dauphins of Vienne: This Sir James became protestant, was created Lord Torphichen by Queen Mary 1563, and allowed to have all the dignities and privileges belonging to the Lord St John; and, after that, he quartered another coat, which some call the arms of the Lord St John, which, as I have shown, was not on the seal of arms of James Lord St John, so that I take it for a coat of concession, by way of augmentation, being the imperial crown and thistle, quartered in the first and fourth places, as above. Sir James Lord Torphichen, for want of heirs-male of his body, his fortune and honours came to his chief the Baron of Calder, his cousin, whose successors enjoy the same with the above achievement, sometimes supported with lions.

Sir James Sandilands of St Monans, descended of the family of Torphichen, was created by King Charles I. in consideration of his good services, Lord Abergourby, by letters patent, bearing date the 12th of December 1647. He had a son by his lady, Anne Carnegie, daughter of David Earl of Southeaks; which son, James, dying without succession, that dignity became extinct. They carried two coats quarterly, first and fourth argent, a bend azure for Sandilands, second and third, the arms of Douglas, as before.

William Sandilands of Comiston, as second son of the Lord Torphichen, carried as the Lord Torphichen (except the supporters) with a crescent for a brotherly difference, as in the Lyon Register. And there also are these three following blazons:

Mr James Sandilands of Craibston, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a bend counter-embattled azure, the paternal coat of Sandilands, differented from the chief bearing; second and third argent, a man's heart gules, and, on a chief azure, three mullets of the field for Douglas; crescent, a star issuing out of a crescent argent; with the motto, Justi ut sidera fulgent.

Walter Sandilands of Hilderston, a second son of Torphichen, quarterly, first argent, on a chief azure, an imperial crown or, crowning a thistle in base vert, flowered gules; second, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a bend azure, second and third argent, a heart gules, crowned or, and, on a chief azure, three mullets of the field; third quarter, argent, a shackle fork sable, for Cunningham, and the fourth quarter as the first; crescent, an eagle volant, proper: motto, Victoria non praeda.

James Sandilands, Merchant in Rotterdam, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a bend azure for Sandilands; second and third argent, a man's heart crowned, proper, on a chief azure, three mullets of the field for Douglas, all within a bordure wavy gules, for his difference; crescent, a palm tree, proper.

Alexander Sandilands, one of the Magistrates of Edinburgh; in the year 1662, whose father and grandfather were eminent merchants in that city, descended of the Sandilands in Clydesdale, carried the arms of Sandilands and Douglas quarterly, with a suitable difference; for crest, an eagle displayed. He married Agnes, daughter to Robert Sandilands, dean of guild of Edinburgh, who bore to him several children; William, who died unmarried; Mr Robert Sandilands present minister of the gospel in Edinburgh, who has issue by his wife, a daughter of Care of Cockpen; and Alexander Sandilands, who left issue. Their grandfather, by the mother's side, the above Robert, dean of guild, was a younger son of Gavin Sandilands of Lumsford in West-Lothian, and his lady, Mary, daughter of Robert Wauchope of Niddry, descended of Sandilands of Middleldige, descended of Sandilands of that ilk, and of Wiston in Upper-Clydesdale, as by a Genealogical Account of the Family which I have seen.

The surname of Damilston, argent, a bend sable, as in Sir James Balfour's Blazons: Robert Damilston obtains a charter from King David II. of the lands of Crapwood in Lennoxshire, which had fallen into the king's hands by the forfeiture of one of the name of Horsley.

The name of Walllop with us, argent, a bend waved sable, and the same carried by Walllop of Forleigh-Walllop, Esq. in Hampshire in England.

Gammel of Clerkshiels, gules, a bend in grained argent, as in Pont's Manuscript. And there also is McGachen of Tulliquhat, or, a bend gules.

The bend is carried, says Lasius, by the best families in Europe, as a mark of dignity and honourable employment, as in the armourial ensigns of the Landgraves of Alsativa, gules, a bend ingrained between six crowns or; to show that the Lords of that family had been Majors of the French King's palace. And the house of Henen, famous in Picardy and Hainault for being descended from the Landgraves of Alsativa, carry gules, a bend argent.

The house of Chalon, gules, a bend or, quartered with the arms of the principality of Orange, or, a hunting-horn azure, voluted and stringed gules.

Radcliffe Earl of Derwentwater, descended of Sir Thomas Radcliffe, eminent in the reign of Henry V. whose second son, John, married the heir-general of the ancient family of Derwentwater in Cumberland, of whom was descended Sir Edward Radcliffe of Derwentwater, who was created a Baronet the 17th of James I. 1619. His son and heir, Sir Francis Radcliffe, was created Earl of Derwentwater, Viscount Radcliffe and Langley in Cumberland, and Baron Radcliffe of Tindale, by letters patent dated the 7th of March 1688. He died anno 1697, and was succeeded by his son Francis Earl of Derwentwater, who married, in his father's lifetime, Mary Tudor, natural daughter to King Charles II. by whom he had James Earl of Derwentwater; the paternal bearing of his family is, argent, a bend ingrained sable.

Widdrington Lord Widdrington, an ancient family in the county of Northumberland, of whom was descended Sir William Widdrington, who was created baronet by King Charles I. and having distinguished himself by singular services to that king, in the time of the grand rebellion, for his good service was created a peer of that realm 1643, by the title of Baron Widdrington, and carried for arms, quarterly, argent and gules, a bend sable.

The name of Kendal in England, argent, a bend vert.

The name of Clarke there, or, a bend in grained azure.

The name of Marshall there, gules, a bend indrawn or.

To follow my former method, I shall add here examples of bearing of a bend charged with figures.

Leslie Earl of Ross, a branch of the House of Leslie, carried the arms of Leslie as before, argent, on a bend azure, three buckles or. Afterwards Sir Walter Leslie, anno 1366, married Eupham Ross, eldest daughter and co-heiress of William Earl of Ross, and, in her right, was Earl of Ross, and carried quarterly, first and fourth gules, three lions rampant argent, for the earldom of Ross; second and third, Leslie, as in Sir James Balfour's Books of Blazons.

I have seen two different seals of arms of this Earl's; the first was appended to a charter of his, to Alexander Fraser of Philorth, of the date 1375, upon which was an eagle displayed, holding before him, on his breast and wings, three shields fessways; that in the middle was charged with three lions rampant, for Ross; that on the right hand had a bend charged with three buckles, for Leslie; and the other, on the left hand, had three garbs, for Cumin: And, within three years after, he had another seal, quartered Ross with Leslie, as above blazoned. His lady bore to him a son and a daughter; the daughter, Eupham Leslie, who was married to Donald of the Isles; The son, Alexander, was Earl of Ross, and married Isabel Stewart, daughter to Robert Duke of Albany, and with her had only one daughter who was unfit for marriage. After the death of Alexander Earl of Ross, her father, she, by persuasion of her grandfather, Robert Duke of Albany, resigned her right of the Earldom of Ross in favour of her uncle John Earl of Buchan, younger son of the Duke of Albany: But Donald, who married Eupham Leslie, Earl Alexander's sister, in her right, claimed and took possession of the Earldom of Ross, which occasioned the battle of Hairlaw.

Leslie of that ilk, an ancient family in Garioch, argent, on a bend azure, three buckles or, within a double treasure flowered and counter-flowered gules; crest, a griffin's head; supporters, two griffins, all proper; with motto, Grip fast. As in Mr. Pont's Manuscript.
ALEXANDER LESLIE of Balquhain, argent, on a fesse azure, three buckles or; crest, a griffin's head erased, proper: motto, Grip.fast. L. R.

The first of this family was George, second son to Andrew de Leslie, one of the progenitors of the Earl of Rothes, and his spouse Elisabeth, daughter to James Lord Douglas, in the reign of Robert the Bruce. He got from his father the lands of Balquhain, and married a daughter of Keith of Inverugy. Sir William Leslie of Balquhain, lineally descended of him, was made a knight at the coronation of King Charles I. and married Elisabeth Fraser, daughter to Lovat; she bore Alexander, of whom the lairds of Balquhain, and William Leslie, the first of the House of Kincraigie, who carried argent, on a fesse between two cross creslets fitched azure, three buckles or; crest, a griffin's head couped, proper, charged with a cross creslet fitched argent; motto, Firma spe.

ALEXANDER LESLIE of Wardis, a younger son of William Leslie of Kincraigie, by his wife Agnes Irving, daughter to the laird of Drum, argent, on a bend azure, betwixt two holly leaves vert, (his maternal figures) three buckles or; So matriculated in the Lyon Office.

BALQUHAIN carries a fesse and not a bend, notwithstanding of which all the cadets of the family do not so. For, to change a fesse to a bend, and a bend to a fesse, has been an old practice of differing younger sons with us, not only by this family, but by Stewarts Earls of Monteith, of whom before, as also Scott of Bevelaw.

DAVID LESLIE, first laird of Pitcaple, was the eldest son of a second marriage of William Leslie, first laird of Kincraigie, and his wife Eupham Lindsay, daughter to William Lindsay of Cairny, and carried argent, on a bend azure, betwixt two mullets gules, three buckles or; as in Pont's Manuscript.

GEORGE LESLIE, sometime Bailie in Aberdeen, descended of a younger son of Wardis, argent, on a bend embattled azure, three buckles or: motto, Deus providet. So matriculated in the Lyon Register; as also the following blazons of the name of Leslie:

JOHN LESLIE of Colpaysheils, descended of the family of Balquhain, argent, on a bend azure, three buckles or, within a bordure inwedged of the second, and charged with eight crescents of the first; crest, a buckle issuing out of a crescent argent: motto, Conanime augeor. And JOHN LESLIE of Kininvie, another cadet of Balquhain, carries the same, but has his bordure indented, and not charged: motto, Quae juncta firma.

WALTER LESLIE of Talloch turns his bend to a fesse, with buckles as the rest, as descended of Balquhain; and accompanies it with three flower-de-luces azure; crest, an eagle's neck, with two heads erased sable: motto, Hold fast.

ROBERT LESLIE of Torry, a second son of the family of Findmòsie, descended of Rothes, carries the quartered coat of Rothes, within a bordure indented, and parted per pale, azure and argent; crest, a buckle or: motto, Hold fast. N. R.

LESLEY LORD LINDORES, quarterly, first and fourth Leslie, second and third Abernethy, and, by way of surnout, an escutcheon gules, charged with a castle triple towered argent, and massoned sable, for the title of Lindores; supporters, two griffins argent, armed gules; crest, a demi-angel with wings or, holding in the right hand two greyhounds' heads erased, proper; with the motto, Stat promissa fides. The first of this family was Sir Patrick Leslie, second son to Andrew fifth Earl of Rothes, and his lady Isabel Hamilton, daughter to Andrew Lord Edvandale: Sir Patrick Leslie was created a lord of Parliament, by the title of Lord Lindores, by King James VI. the 25th of December 1600, of whom is lineally descended the present Lord Lindores.

DAVID LESLIE Lord NEWARK was a younger son of Patrick first Lord Lindores, who served in the wars abroad under Gustavus Adolphus, and afterwards at home under King Charles II. in the quality of lieutenant-general; and, upon that king's restoration, was created Lord Newark, and carried for arms as the Lord Lindores, with a crescent for difference. Upon the death of his son and successor without heirs-male, Dame JEAN LESLIE, his grandchild, present Baroness of Newark, did succeed to the dignity and honours; of which family more afterwards, when I come to towers and castles. She is married to Sir Alexander Anstruther, a son. of Sir Philip Anstruther of that Ilk. See the arms of Lord Newark quartered with those of Anstruther, in the Plate of Achievements.

Leslie Earl of Leven, quarterly, first and fourth azure, a thistle, proper, ensigned with an imperial crown or, as a coat of concession; second and third argent, on a bend azure, three buckles or, for Leslie; crest, a man in armour holding a sword, all proper, and other two for supporters after the same fashion, sometimes represented with colours over their shoulders; with the motto, Pro rege et patria.

The first raiser of this family was one David Leslie, who served under Gustavus Adolphus, and became rich by the industry of his wife Anne Renton, said to be of the family of Renton of Billy, in the shire of Berwick. On his return to Scotland, he was by King Charles I. the 11th of October 1644, created Lord Balgonie and Earl of Leven: He had, by his wife a son, Alexander Leslie Lord Balgonie, who married Margaret Leslie, daughter to John sixth Earl of Rothes, and with her had a son, Alexander, who outlived his father and grandfather, and was Earl of Leven; and a daughter, Katharine, married to the Lord Melville, afterwards Earl of Melville. Alexander Alexander of Leven, married a daughter of Howard Earl of Carlisle, and died without issue. David Melville, son of the Earl of Melville, and his lady Katharine Leslie, sister to Alexander the last Earl of Leven, in right of his mother, and taking upon him the name and arms of Leslie, is Earl of Leven, and carries the above achievement: He married Lady Jean Wemyss, sister to the present Earl of Wemyss, and has issue.

George Leslie of Findrassie, quarterly, as the Earl of Rothes, within a bordure chequy gules and or; a buckle argent: motto, Firma durant. L. R.

Thomas Leslie of Oustons, son of David Leslie, who was eldest son to William Leslie of Ladywall, argent, on a bend azure, between three oaken branches slipped vert, acorned, proper, as many buckles or; crest, a hand holding a writing pen, proper: motto, Soli Deo Gloria. Lyon Register.

Norman Leslie, sometime Dean of Guild of Aberdeen, argent, a pair of wings conjoined, proper, surmounted of a fesse azure, charged with three buckles or; motto, God guide all. Lyon Register.

William Leslie of Burdensation, whose grandfather was a son of the family of Rothes, carries the quartered coat of the Earl of Rothes, within a bordure parted per pale chequy and counter-compone, gules and or; crest, a buckle or: motto, Keep fast. Lyon Register.

Mr James Leslie, Advocate, second son to George Leslie, sometime provost of Aberdeen, and descended of the family of Balquhan, argent, on a fesse azure, three buckles or, within a bordure of the second, charged with as many stars of the first; crest, a griffin, proper, winged or, and holding in the dexter talon a buckle of the last: motto, Pruditos & famitas. Lyon Register.

Sir William Scott of Thirlestane, Baronet, or, a bend azure, charged with a mullet pierced, betwixt two crescents of the first, within a double pressure flowered and counter-flowered of the second; which arms are timbered with helmet and mantlings befitting his quality, and upon a wreath of his tinctures; for crest, a mural crown, and issuing thereout, six horsemen's lances or spears, with pennons thereat, three and three, disposed in saltier; supporters, two men in coats of mail, with steel caps, holding in their hand, each of them, a spear with pennons, all proper; and for motto, Ready, ay ready: As in the Plate of Achievements.

This family was anciently designed of Eskdale, alias Houpayslay, as by the genealogical account of the family. Arthur Scott of Eskdale, father of Robert Scott of Eskdale, alias Houpayslay, who was warden of the West Border, and great grandfather of Robert Scott of Houpayslay, the first of the family that took the designation of Thirlestane. Which last mentioned Robert of Thirlestane married a daughter of Johnston of that Ilk; which family is now honoured with the title of Marquis of Annandale.

John Scott of Thirlestane, their son, a gentleman of entire loyalty, for his ready services to his sovereign James V. was honoured by that king, as a special concession of his favour, with a part of the royal ensign and other suitable figures, to adorn his armorial bearing, under his majesty's hand, and the subscription of Sir Thomas Erskine of Brechin, secretary, as follows:
OF THE BEND.

"JAMES REX,

W E James by the Grace of God King of Scots, considerand the faith and good servis of right trust friend, JOHN SCOTT of Thirlestane, quha com-mmand to our host at Sautra Edge, with three score and ten launciers on horseback, of his friends and followers. And beand willing to gang with us into England, when all our nobles and others refused, he was ready to stake all at our bidding; for the which cause, it is our will: And we do strictly command and charge our Lion Herauld and his deputis for the time beand, to give and to grant to the said John Scott, an border of flower-de-lisses, about his coat of arms, sick as in our royal banner, and aleseswe an bundle of launcies above his helmet, with thir words, Ready, ay ready; that he and all his aftercummers may bruck the same, as a pledge and taiken of our good-will and kindness for his trew worthiness. And thir our letters seen, ye naeways faizie to do. Given at Falamuir, under our hand and privy casket, the 27th day of July, 1542 years.

By the King's special ordinance,

THOMAS ARESKINE."

ROBERT SCOTT of Thirlestane, eldest son of the above John Scott of Thirlestane, was warden-depute of the West Border, and married Margaret Scott, sister to the first Lord Buccleugh, and with her had two sons. The eldest son, Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane; the second son, Walter Scott, father of Patrick Scott of Thirlestane, who married Isabel, daughter to Sir John Murray of Blackbarony; and by her had several children.

Their eldest son and successor, Sir FRANCIS SCOTT of Thirlestane, Knight and Baronet, being first made a Knight, and after honoured with the dignity of baronet in the year 1666, he married Lady Henrietta Ker, daughter to William Earl of Lothian.

Their son and successor Sir WILLIAM SCOTT of Thirlestane, Baronet, married first Elizabeth Napier, daughter to the Lady Napier, mother, by him, of the present Francis Lord Napier: Secondly, Sir William married Dame Jean Nisbet, only daughter of Sir John Nisbet of Dirleton, and widow of Sir William Scott of Harden; she died without issue.

Sir WILLIAM SCOTT of Harden, as descended of Buccleugh, carried or, on a bend azure, a star of six points, betwixt two crescents of the field, and, in the sinister chief point, a rose gules, stalked and barbed vert, for a difference; but of late, as descended of Scott of Sinton, he carries or, two mullets in chief, and a crescent in base azure; supporters, two mermaids, proper, holding mirrors in their hands; and for crest, a lady richly attired, holding in her right hand the sun, and in the left, a half-moon; with the motto, Reparabit cornua Plaebә, as in the Plate of Achievements.

Scott of Highchester, eldest son of the Earl of Taras, as descended of a second son of Harden, carries the first arms of Harden, and surmounts the rose, with a crescent; crest, a stag tripping armed with ten tynes, all proper: motto, Pacem amo. So matriculated in the Lyon Register, with the following blazons.

Scott of Thirleton carries the same coat of Harden, and charges the rose with a marlet; with the crest, and motto, as Highchester.

Scott of Whiteslide, as descended of Sinton, or on a bend azure, a star betwixt two crescents of the first, and in chief, a broken lance, gules; crest, a hand issuing out of the torce, holding a broken spear as the former: motto, Amore patriae.

HUGH Scott of Galashiels, as descended of Harden, Harden's first arms, within a bordure sable, charged with six escallops argent; crest, a lady from the waist richly attired, holding in her dexter hand, a rose proper: motto, Prudenter amo, as in the Plate of Achievements.

WALTER Scott of Raeburn, a third son of Harden, carries as Harden, with a suitable difference.

Scott of Wool, the same with Harden, but surmounts the rose, with an annulet.

Scott of Scotstarvet carries as Buccleugh, within a bordure ingnaired gules; crest, a right hand holding an annulet, and therein a carbuncle proper; with the motto, _In tenetris lux_. Scott of Letham, a younger son of that family, carries the same, with a mullet for difference; and Mr _George Scott_, sometime Stewart of Orkney, another cadet of Scottstarvet, carries the arms of that family, quartered with _azure_, three boars heads couped, within a bordure indented _or_, for Gordon of Cluny; crest, a bear's head couped _or_, holding in his mouth four arrows _gules_, feathered and headed _argent_: motto, _Do well and let them say._

_Walter Scott_ of Harwood, _or_, an oak tree _vert_, surmounted of a bend _azure_, charged with a star between two crescents of the field; crest, a stag's head erased proper: motto, _Adlenter armo._ Here the tree is assumed as relative to the designation of the family of Harwood, of which there were several brothers, as Francis Scott of Greenhill, whose eldest son Robert is a Lieutenant in the Gray Regiment of Dragoons; and Gideon Scott of Falmash, another brother of Harwood, who carries as Harwood, with their suitable differences. See Harwood's arms in the Plate of Achievements.

_John Scott_ of Malleny, son and representative of Sir William Scott of Clerkington, sometime one of the Senators of the College of Justice, the arms of Buccleugh; and for difference, in base, an arrow bend-ways proper, feathered and barred _argent_; crest, a stag lodged proper: motto, _Amo probos._

_William Scott_ of Balmouth _or_, a bend _azure_ between three crescents of the last, within a bordure ingrailed, and quartered _gules_ and _argent_; crest, a star _or_; motto, _Lucet._

_Adam Scott_ of Hassenden, _or_, on a bend _azure_, a star of six points between two crescents _argent_; and in base, a bow and arrow of the second; crest, a hand erect, holding a pole-axe proper: motto, _Trusty and true._

_Francis Scott_ of Gorgrenberry, the same with Buccleugh, within a bordure gonzated; _gules_ and _argent_; crest, an anchor in pale, inwreapt with a cable proper: motto, _Sperandum._

_Mr Laurence Scott_ of Beavelaw, _or_, on a fess _azure_, instead of a bend, a star of six points between two crescents of the field; crest, a dexter hand holding a scroll of paper.

_James Scott_ of Vogrie, son of Mr Robert Scott, one of the clerks of the chancery, a younger son of Scottstarvet, _or_, on a bend _azure_, a star between two crescents of the field, all within a bordure parted per pale, _gules_ and _azure_, the dexter side ingrailed, and the sinister indented; crest, a dexter hand holding a ring proper: motto, _Necit amor fines._

_Thomas Scott_ of Todrick, a second brother of Whiteside _or_, on a bend _azure_, a star between two crescents of the field, and in chief, a broken lance _gules_, with a crescent for difference; crest, the head of a lance proper: motto, _Pro aris & foecis._

_Mr George Scott_ of Bunnaw, representative of the family of Sinton, _or_, two mullets in chief, and a crescent in base _azure_; crest, a nymph, in her dexter hand the sun, and in her sinister the moon, all proper: motto, _Reparabit cornua Phoebae._

_William Scott_, a second son to the deceast Mr Laurence Scott of Beavelaw, _or_, on a fesse _azure_, a star of six rays between two crescents of the field, all within a bordure componed of the second and first; crest, a star of six points proper: motto, _Potior origine virtus._

_George Scott_ of Pitlochie, _or_, on a bend _azure_, a star between two crescents of the field, within a bordure ingrailed _gules_, and a mullet for difference; crest, a dexter hand erect, holding an annulet, and therein a carbuncle, proper: motto, _In tenetris lux._ He was a second son of Scott of Tarvet.

_Mr James Scott_, Sheriff-Clerk of the shire of Edinburgh, descended of the family of Scott of Knightspottie, _or_, on a bend _azure_, a star between two crescents of the first, all within a bordure ingrailed _gules_, charged with eight besants; crest, an arm and hand holding a book half opened, proper: motto, _Fidelitas._

Having given the blazons of such families of the name of Scott, descended of Buccleugh, as are recorded in the Lyon Register, I shall here add another recorded there, of a family of that name in Holland, also descended of Buccleugh, viz.

_Mr James Scott_, eldest son to Apollonius Scott, Judge, and afterwards President of the High Court of Justice at the Hague, lawful son of James Scott, who having fled from Scotland on the account of some variance happening between him and some neighbouring family, and for certain violences committed by the one upon the other, was entered into the service of William Prince of Orange, and under his conduct served as colonel and brigadier at the taking of Middleburg in Zealand, anno 1574, and thereafter was deputed for Zeeland, to be one of the States-General, bears parted per fesse or and gules, in chief a bend azure, charged with a star of six rays, betwixt two crescents of the first, and in base an eagle's leg couped at the thigh in pale or: That in the upper part, being the coat of Buc cleugh, and that in base being assumed by his predecessor upon his fleeing to Holland, where acquiring new honours, he caused marshal them so; and—for crest, an eagle rising or, and looking up to the sun, appearing from under a cloud proper, supported by two ladies richly arrayed, each holding in their hands a thistle slipped proper: motto, Anno inspicio.

Scott of Ely, or, on a bend azure, a star betwixt two crescents of the first, within a bordure gules, charged with eight besants.

Scott of Spencerfield, or, on a bend azure, between two spur-rows gules, three crescents of the first.

Scott of Whitehaugh, or on a bend azure, a mullet argent betwixt two crescents of the first: These three last blazons are to be found in Pont's manuscript. And as for the other families of the name of Scott, who carry lion's heads, their blazons will be found at the title of the Lion's head.

The surname of Elliot in the south is said to have come from a village called Elliot in the north, and with that name came to the south border, in the reign of King James I. of Scotland.

Elliot of Redheugh, now called Lawrison in Liddisdale, gules, on a bend or, a pipe (or flute) of the first.

In an old book of blazons illuminated in the reign of Queen Mary, are the arms of the name of Elliot, gules, on a bend betwixt two cottes or, as many pheons in chief and base of the second, a flute or pipe of the first.

Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobbs, baronet, gules, on a bend ingrailed or, a batton azure; crest, a dexter arm holding a cutlass proper, with the motto, Pernadventures. As matriculated in the Lyon Register.

Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, baronet, of late one of the senators of the College of Justice, descended of Stobbs, gules, on a bend ingrailed or, a batton azure, all within a bordure vair; crest, a dexter hand issuing from a cloud, and throwing a dart, all proper: motto, Non eigit aven. N. R.

Mr Adam Elliot, third son to the decess Mr Henry Elliot, minister of Bedrule, who was lawful son to William Elliot, sometime provost of Peebles, who was third brother to Gilbert Elliot of Stobbs, gules, on a bend ingrailed or, a flute azure, all within a bordure ingrailed of the second, and charged with eight mullets of the third; crest, a dexter hand holding a flute, proper; with the motto, Inest jucunditas; which shows the figure on the bend, to be a pipe or flute. N. R.

Walter Elliot of Erkelton, a second son of Elliot of Unthank, who was descended of the family of Lawrison, gules, on a bend indented or, a flute of the first; crest, a demi-man in armour, proper; with the motto, Pro rege & limite.

Simon Elliot of Binknose of Swinside, descended of the family of Lawrison, gules, on a bend or, a batton azure, all within a bordure of the second, charged with six garbs, as the third; crest, a gentleman holding a pike in his hand, in a watching posture. N. R.

The surname of Towers, the principal family of which name was Towers of Inverleith, argent, on a bend azure, three mullets of the first; the first of this family was Walter Towers, by descent a Frenchman, merchant in Edinburgh, who, for his assisting to recover the castle of Edinburgh out of the hands of the English by a stratagem, got from King David II. the lands of Inverleith, Water of Leith, Dalry, and others. William Towers de Inverleith, Dominus de Dalray, so designed in a tack of a mill on the Water of Leith, to Thomas Fulton, in the year 1478. Sir James Towers of Inverleith was one of the Privy Council in the minority of King James V. and this family ended in a heiress, in the reign of King Charles II., who was married to Sir John Sinclair of Lochend and Longfor-macus, and their son, the present Sir Robert Sinclair of Longformacus, quarters the arms of his mother with his own, as in the Plate of Achievements.

TOURNE or TUREN of Foveran, an old family in the shire of Aberdeen, originally from France, now extinct *, or, on a bend gules, three boars' heads of the first. As in James Esplin, Marchmont Herald, his book illuminated in the year 1650.

KINNEAR of that Ilk, in the shire of Fife, sable, on a bend or, three canary birds proper; Mr Pont, in his blazons, sable, on a bend or, three papings vert; but the first blazon given by Sir George Mackenzie seems to be the most proper, being relative to the name, which is ancient with us; for in the register of the abbacy of Balmerino, there is a donation of William Kinnear of that Ilk of certain lands to the Monks of that abbacy, to pray for the soul of his father, and of Emergalda, Queen to King William. This family, says Sir James Dalrymple in his Collections, has a charter of the lands of Kinnear from King Alexander II.

The surname of DISHINGTON, gules, on a bend argent, three mullets sable. Sir William Dishington, for his faithful services to King Robert I, got a charter from that King of the lands of Ball-Class in the Thanedom of Aberdeen.

DISHINGTON of Ardross, or, on a bend sable, three escalops of the first, as in Mr Pont's blazons, with the motto, Unica spea mea Christus; and so illuminated in Esplin's book of arms. John Dishington of Ardross is one of the assessors in the perambulation between the marches of Easter and Wester Kinghorn 1457. As in the chartulary of the Abbacy of Dunfermline.

NEWLAND of Cargow, argent, on a bend azure, three martlets of the field. As in Esplin's illuminated book of blazons.

BINNING of that ilk, argent, on a bend engrailed sable, a mullet of the first.

BINNING of Easter-Binning, descended from the former, carries the same arms, but placed on the bend a waggon argent, because one of the heads of that family, with his seven sons, went in a waggon covered with hay, surprised and took the castle of Linlithgow, then in possession of the English, in the reign of David II.

Sir William Binning of Wallsford, sometime provost of Edinburgh, descended of Easter-Binning, argent, on a bend engrailed sable, a waggon or, within a bordure of the second; crest, a demi-horse, furnished for a waggon, proper: motto, Christo ducis feliciter. In the Lyon Register.

JAMES Binning of Carlowriehall, carries the same with Easter-Binning; and for crest, a horse's head furnished for a waggon, proper: motto, Virtute dologue.

The surname of HALYBURTON, or, on a bend azure, three mascles of the first. The principal old family of this name was Halyburton of that Ilk, in the shire of Berwick; the chapel of Halyburton was a pendece of the church of Greenlaw, as appears from the charter of David the son of Truck, giving and dispensing to the abbacy of Selkirk, his chapel of Halyburton, in the reign of Malcolm IV. Which charter is confirmed by his promes Philipp de Halyburton, in the year 1261; and in that charter Philip calls David, son of Truck, his prcevus. The name of the lands and chapel, is said to be from a religious man named Burton, who had his residence in these lands which were called after him, Halyburton, i.e. Holyburton, or St Burton's lands.

In the reign of King Robert I. Adam de Halyburton, and Margaret Pourboure, his wife, got a charter from Patrick Dunbar Earl of March, of the lands of Trapran, cum monte Dumperder, and the tenement of Southall, which belonged to Hugh de Gourly forfeited; and which charter is confirmed by King David II. Philippus de Halyburton, filius & heres Domini Williamii de Halyburton millitis, makes a donation of an annuity out of the lands of Mellerstain to the abbacy of Kelso, in the chartulary of Melrose; Adam Halyburton Dominus de Halyburton, with the consent of his superior, Patrick Earl of March, grants the like, 1357, which is confirmed afterwards by James Bishop of St Andrews. Dominus Johannis de Halyburton is witness to a charter of Richard Edgar, granted to Robert Edgar of Wadderly, of the date 1378. And, in another charter, confirming the former, in the year 1384, Dominus Johannis de Halyburton, is designd Dominus de Dirleton: which two charters I see in the custody of Edgar of Wadderly, the last of which ends thus, "In cujuus rei testimonium usus sum sigillo Domini Johannis Halyburton Domini de Dirleton." Richard the dispenser and granter of the charter.

used then the seal of Sir John Halyburton Lord Dirleton, which I see appending to the said charter entire, whereon were the same quartered arms which our books of blazons now give to Halyburton Lord Dirleton, thus, quarterly, first or, on a bend azuré, three muscles of the first for Halyburton. Second, or, three bars gules. Third, argent, a bend gules, for Vaux Lord Dirleton; and the fourth as the first. I have likewise seen a tack of the lands of Laneden given by John Lord Halyburton to Thomas and Alexander Heatles tenants, of the date 1447, which tack begins thus: "We John Lord Halyburton, &c. (pres: Edgar of Wadderley) to which his seal of arms is appended, and the transsumt of it afterwards judicantly taken, to which Richard Lamb was notar; who, being ignorant of armoury, confusedly describes the seal in the transsumt, which yet may be known to be the same with the above blazon, which I here add. "Literam as- "sedationis stipatam sigillo nobilis Domini Johannis de Halyburton, in quo sigil- "lo sculptum huit unum scutum, in dicto scuto bend lossyne (a bend charged "with lozenges or mascles) & trias faces (in the second quarter three bars) & in "inferiore parte dicti sigilli unum simplex bend; (in the third quarter a bend) "& unum bend lossyne;" (that is the fourth quarter as the first.) Anciently our notars were obliged, in transsumts of rights, to describe or blazon the seal, because it was the seal only that verified the deeds, or evidents, which then were not subscribed by the granters. I have met with several such descriptions of blazons by our notaries in transsumts, some of them awkwardly and some handsomely done.

The family of Halyburton Lord Dirleton ended in three daughters co-heiresses, in the reign of King James V. The eldest, Janet, was married to William Lord Ruthven. The second, Marion, was married to George Lord Home; she bore to him Alexander Lord Home, who quartered the paternal coat of Halyburton, viz. or, on a bend azuré, three muscles of the first, as on the seals of that family, of which afterwards: As also did the issue of William Lord Ruthven, grandfather of the first Earl of Gowry, who married Janet Halyburton, the other co-heiress of the Lord Dirleton; of which before: And the third daughter, Margaret, was married to George Ker of Faudenside, in the shire of Roxburgh, who did the same. The exterior ornaments of the arms of Halyburton Lord Dirle- ton, as in our illuminated books of arms, are these: for crest, a Moor's head band- ed argent; supporters, two naked Moors banded about the head and middle argent; and for motto, Watch well.

The heir-male of Halyburton Lord Dirleton, is Halyburton of Pitcur, now rep- resentative of the principal family, who carries or, on a bend azuré, between three boars' heads erased sable, as many muscles of the first; I know some make them lozenges, which I do not think so right. The boars' heads were assumed by this family, for marrying Chisholm heiress of Pitcur; crest, a negro's head and neck couped at the shoulders, armed with a helmet, proper; supporters, two cats: motto, Watch well. N. R.

Halyburton of Egliscairnie, or, on a bend waved azuré, three lozenges of the first, by some old books of blazon. But in the Lyon Register the bend is not waved, but plain, as descended also of the Lord Dirleton; crest, a boar's head couped and erect, proper: motto, Watch well.

William Halyburton, son of a second brother of Egliscairnie, descended of the Lord Halyburton, or, on a bend, the upper side waved, and the under side ingrain- ed azuré, three lozenges of the first; crest, a boar's head erected and couped, pro- per: motto, Majores sequor. N. R.

John Halyburton of Newmains, descended, and representative of Morton, or, on a bend azuré, three muscles, and in the sinister canton a buckle of the first; crest, a stag at gaze, proper: motto, Watch well. N. R.

Daneleston or Denniston of that ilk, argent, a bend sable.

Denniston Lord Denniston's arms as illuminated in our old books of blazon, are argent, a bend sable, between an unicorn's head erased gules, horned or, and a cross croisé fitché of the third, supported on the dexter by a lion gules, and on the sinister by an antelope argent, unguled and horned or; and for crest, a right hand holding aloft an antique shield sable, charged with a star or. So illuminated in Workman's Book of Blazons.
The lands of Denniston, in the sheriffdom of Renfrew, were named from the first possessor, Danziel, as appears by a charter of the barony of Houston, in the reign of Malcolm IV. which is bounded with the lands of Danziel, (see Crawford's History of Renfrew) whose successors both assumed their name and designation from them. King David the Bruce gives a charter to Robert Danzelston, son and heir of Sir John Danzelston, Knight, of the barony of Glencairn; And Sir Robert Danzelston of that Ilk, upon his own resignation, obtains a charter from King Robert II.

This family at last ended in two heiresses; Margaret, the eldest, was married to Sir Robert Cunningham of Kilmarnock, ancestor to the Earl of Glencairn, who got with her the baronies of Danzelston, Finlayston, Kilmaur, and Dumbartonshire, and the barony of Glencairn, in the shire of Dumfries; and the second daughter, Elizabeth Denniston, was married to Sir Robert Maxwell of Calderwood, and with her he got the lands of Maudslay, Kilkaydow, Stanley, &c. Upon which account, the family of Calderwood quarter still the arms of Denniston with their own, having argent, a bend azure, for Denniston: Of which afterwards.

There were other families of this name, as Denniston of Cowgrane in the shire of Dumbarton, who is reputed the heir-male and representative of the principal family of Denniston of that Ilk, and carries argent, a bend sable, an unicorn's head erased in chief of the last, and in base a cross croiset fitche azuré; crest, a dexter hand pointing at a star, proper: motto, Adversa virtute repello: As in the Lyon Register; and in Pont's Manuscripts of Blazons, are the arms of these two following families of the name of Denniston.

Denniston of Dunstraith, argent, on a bend azure, between two unicorns' heads erased table, armed or, three rings, with carbuncles of the last.

Denniston of Mountjohn, argent, on a bend azure, between two unicorns' heads erased table, armed or, three cross croislets fitche of the last.

The surname of Herring, or Heron, with us, gules, on a bend argent, a rose, between two lions rampant of the field: There was an old family of this name in Clydesdale, and another in Mid-Lothian, who possessed the lands of Edmunstone and Gilmerton. A daughter of this family, Giles Herring, was married to Sir William Somerville of Linton and Carwnath, in the year 1375, who with her got half the lands of Gilmerton, and the lands of Drum, of whom is descended the present laird of Drum, as by the charters and evidents of these lands, which I have seen in the custody of Somerville of Drum.

There was also another family of this name, designed of Lethendy and Glasscune, in Perthshire; John Drummond of Blair, married Agnes Herring, daughter of Sir David Herring of Lethendy, whose arms, in Pont's Manuscripts, are quarterly, first and fourth gules, on a bend argent, a rose between two lions rampant of the field; second and third azure, a chevron argent, and the same arms for Herring of Lethendy, stand illuminated with those of other barons, Members of Parliament in the year 1604, in the House of Balahall, but there are two roses, one before each lion upon the bend. In the stewartry of Kirkcudbright there is a family of this name, who write themselves Heron of that Ilk, and carries the paternal coat of Herring or Herin, as above; and our heralds have been in use to place these arms on their funeral escutcheons; having for crest, a demi-lion argent; with the motto, By valour.

Lockhart of Barr, an ancient family of that name, argent, on a bend sable, three fetterlocks or. As in Mackenzie's Heraldray.

Alexander Brand of Baberton, argent, on a bend sable, three masques of the first, and on a chief of the second, as many spur-rowels or; and for crest, two pro-boscides of elephants in pale, coupled, flexed, and reflected argent; that on the dexter charged with three masques; and the other on the sinister, with as many spur-rowels sable; with the motto, As forward. As recorded in the Lyon Register, with these two following blazons.

John Cook, sometime Bailie of Pittenweem, gules, on a bend or, two cinquefoils azure, and, in the sinister chief point, a crescent surrounded of a cross croislet of the second; crest, a sea cat, appearing out of the wreath; with the motto, Tutum nostre iter.
Mr Walter Comrie, Doctor of Divinity, or, on a bend azure; an annulet of the first, betwixt two pheons issuing out of the same; crest, an archer shooting an arrow out of a bow, proper: motto, Ad metam.

The surname of Wigram or Wigmur, argent, a bend sable, charged with another waved of the field. As in Workman's Manuscript.

The surname of Legget, azure, on a bend argent, three men's hearts gules, and on a chief of the second, as many martlets sable. Pont's Manuscript. And there also,

The surname of Leitch, gules, on a bend ingrailed or, betwixt six fusils of the second; three escutcheons azure.

I shall add here some blazons with: a bend between, accompanied or cotyosed with figures.

The surname of Cheyne, says Sir James Balfour, in the year 1295, carried as now, azure, a bend argent, between six cross pates fitch'd of the last; I have seen a charter of Reynold Cheyne, son of Reynold, who was son of another Reynold Cheyne, of the lands of Durie in Fife, to Gilbert, son to Robert of Stratherne; which charter was confirmed by Adam de Kilconbaugh Earl of Carrick, in the reign of Alexander III. King Robert the Bruce gives a charter to Sir Reginald Cheyne, of the barony of Dunuanaine, which formerly belonged to Roger Mowbray. And so much for the antiquity of the name.

Cheyne of Strathloch, azure, a bend argent, betwixt six cross pates fitch'd or. As in Pont's Manuscript. And there also, Cheyne of Esselmont, quarterly, first and last azure, a bend argent, between six cross pates fitch'd or, for the name of Cheyne; second and third argent, an episcopal pale sable, between three laurel leaves vert, for the name of Marshall of Esselmont, (but in the blazon of the Lyon Register, the episcopal pale is left out;) crest, a cross pate fitch'd argent; and for motto, Patiuntia vict.

The surname of Colless, azure, on a bend or, betwixt three cross croislets fitch'd of the last, as many masques gules; Andrew Colless, merchant in Aberdeen, gets a charter of the barony of Kelly, from Robert Lord Marr, 1494.

Colless of Balnamoon, argent, a cross moline, between two masques in chief gules, and a boar's head erased in base sable; Pont's Manuscript: and there also, Collison, argent, on a fesse azure, between threes roses gules, a sword of the first, hilted and pommelled or.

Robert Collison, Gentleman in His Majesty's guards of horse, descended of the family of Collison of Auchenloues, argent, on a fesse azure, betwixt three roses in chief gules, and as many pessioads in base vert; a sword bar-ways of the first, hilted and pommelled or; crest, a falcon's head erased, proper: motto, Hoc virtutis opus. L. R.

The surname of Gramond, argent, a bend gules; (alter) argent, three hearts gules. Pont's Manuscript.

Gramond of Auldbar, azure, a bend or, between three pelicans feeding their young argent; some place the pelicans on the bend. I find one Hugh de Gramond mentioned by King Robert the Bruce, in his charter to the monks of Jedworth, Pont's Manuscript.

The surname of Mason, argent, a bend waved azure, betwixt two mullets in chief, and a flower-de-luce in base gules. Pont's Manuscript.

The surname of Cant, argent, a bend ingrailed betwixt two crescents sable. Pont's Manuscript.

Ludovic Cant of Dryburnford in East-Lothian, argent, a bend ingrailed betwixt a crescent and a star of eight points, or rays, in chief, and a mullet in base sable; crest, a dove, proper: motto, Alis reposita. In the Lyon Register; and there also,

The surname of Wyllie, azure, a bend accompanied with a fox current in chief, and two mullets in base argent, by Thomas Wyllie merchant in Edinburgh. L. R.

Maxton of Cultequehay, or, a bend gules, (some books have it a chevron) between three cross formees fitch'd azure. I have seen the seal of arms of Robert Maxton of Cultequehay, appended to his discharge to Sir Alexander Murray of
The surname of ARCHIBALD, argent, on a bend azure, between two mullets of the second, a crescent of the first; as Mr Pont. But in Sir James Balfour’s Blazons, argent, on a bend between three stars azure, as many crescents of the first; which was carried by ALEXANDER ARCHIBALD of Blackhall in Fife: Which family ended in an heiress, who was married to Alexander Seaton, a younger son of Carriston, whose issue now enjoys that fortune.

Mr WILLIAM ARCHIBALD, Governor to Mr William Talmash, son to the Dutchess of Lauderdale, descended of Archibald of Blackhall, has the last blazon of Blackhall within a bordure in grained sable; crest, a branch of palm tree slipped, proper; motto, Ditat servuta fides. Lyon Register. And there also,

ALEXANDER GARIOCH of Kinstair, azuré, a bend betwixt a stag’s head couped in chief argent, attired or, and three cross creslets fitchè, in base, of the second; crest, a pelican’s head couped, proper; with the motto, Giving and forgiving. Lyon Register.

WILLIAM BIGGAR, Merchant in Edinburgh, argent, a bend counter-embattled azure, between two mullets gules; crest and motto as the former. There was a family of old of this name designed of that Ilk. Robert Bigris is a witness in the charter of King David I. to the abbacy of Dunfermline; and there are several of the name of Biggar, witnesses in the chartulary of Kelso. Sir James Dalrymple, in his Collections, says, he has seen a charter, Roberti filii Walderi de Biggar, granted to Ricardus Baird de magna & parva Ky, in the reign of Alexander III.

LIVINGTON or LETHINGTON of Saltcoats, an ancient family in East-Lothian, argent, a bend between two otters’ heads couped gules; Pont’s Manuscript; some call them boars’ heads: I have seen the armorial seal of this family, which had a bend with an otter’s (or boar’s) head couped in chief, and the circumscription round it was, Sig. Patricii Livington de Saltcoat, 1593.

The honourable families of Howard in England, give, for their paternal arms, gules, a bend between six cross creslets fitche argent.

THOMAS HOWARD Duke of NORFOLK, Hereditary Earl Marshal of England, premier duke and chief of the illustrious family of the Howards, descended from William Howard, a learned judge and counsellor to King Edward I. got an addition to these arms from Henry VIII. in memory of the victory he obtained over King James IV. and his army in Flodden-field, the 9th of September 1513, being an escutcheon or, charged with a demi-lion rampant, (pierced through the mouth with an arrow) within a double trezure counter-flowered gules; which escutcheon is placed by those of that family on the bend. The first duke of this name was Thomas, created by King Richard III. being descended by Lady Margaret Duchess of Norfolk, daughter of Thomas de Brotherton, descended of a younger son of Edward I. for which the family quarters the arms of England, with a label of three points; and in the third place, the arms of Clifford, chequè, or and azure; and in the fourth, gules, a lion rampant or, for Mowbray Duke of Norfolk.

The many noble branches of this family in England carry the paternal coat of Howard, with the minute differences, such as crescents, mullets, flower-de-luces, &c. as in the English books of blazon.

STOURTON Lord STOURTON, suble, a bend or, betwixt six fountains, proper. This ancient family was dignified with the title of Lord Baron Stourton in the 28th year of the reign of Henry VI.

PETRE Lord PETRE, gules, a bend or, between two escalops argent; as in Mr Dale’s Catalogue of the Nobility of England. This family was dignified by the title of Lord Petre of Writtle in Com. Essex, by King James I. the 21st of July 1603.

ALLINGTON Lord ALLINGTON of Wymondly in England, and Baron Killaird in Ireland, sable, a bend betwixt six billets argent.

I have spoke to a bend surmounted with figures; as also when it surmounts other figures; and having given some few examples, I shall here add only two.

STEWART of Fothergale, or, a lion rampant gules, surmounted of a bend sable; as in Mr Thomas Crawford's Manuscript of Heraldry.

Mr John Aikman of Cairnie, Advocate, argent, a sinister hand in base fessways, holding an oaken batton in pale, with a branch at the top, proper, surmounted of a bend ingrained gules; crest, an oak tree, proper, as relative to the name; with the motto, Sub robore virtus. Lyon Register.

I have spoke before in this chapter of the diminutives of the bend, and of the situation and disposition of natural and artificial figures in bend or bend-aways, and given some few examples; so that having treated sufficiently of the bend, I shall put an end to this long chapter, and proceed to the bend-sinister.

C H A P. XIV.

OF THE BEND-SINISTER; THE BAR WITH THE FRENCH.

This ordinary possesses a third middle part of the field diagonally from the upper left to the lower right angle. With the English it possesses the third part of the field, when charged, and when not, only the fifth part of the field.

The French call this ordinary the bar, but do not take the diminutive of the fesse for the bar, as the English, and describe it, La barre occupe l'autre milieu de gauche à droite.

It is said to represent a military belt, whereat hang the quiver, now the carbine belt.

The bend-sinister, or bar with the French, is not frequent in the arms of the Britons, French, Spaniards, and Italians, because it has some resemblance with the common note of illegitimation: It is frequent with the Germans, and is as honourable, in the opinion of heralds, as the bend-dexter. What Sylvester Petra Sancta says of it, I shall here add:

"Balteus hic sinister, intra gloriam est ingenuorum natalium; neque enim cum speria clavula, seu cum nothia illa lineola confundi debet, quæ vitiosæ prosperæ index habetur. Rarus est quidem hic balteus sinister in tesseris gentiliiæ nobilium Italicæ, Galliæ, Hispaniæ, atque Britannicæ: Sed suum decus retinet ta-men in tesseris non aede paucis nobilium Germanicæ. Fuerit vero militare eingulam fortasse pharetris ferendis aptum. Quemadmodum hocdieque simili eingulo utuntur milites, gestandis ab humero pendulis aheneis fistulis longioribus quas vulgo appellant charabias."

Of old the bend-sinister was more frequent in arms with us, than of late, when almost all of them are turned to the right; faneying that it carries some mark of illegitimation with it. Sir James Balfour, in his Blazons, says, of old, Bisset of that Ilk carried argent, a bend-sinister gules; and these of the name of Sowles, in anno 1292, carried barry of six, or and gules, a bend-sinister sable. The name of Barber, or, a bend sinister azure, charged with a mullet of the first, plate V. fig. 22. But now some of that name, as Robert Barber of Mulderg, argent, a St Andrew's Cross between a garb in chief, two escalops in the flanches, and another in base azure: motto, Nihil miser cruce, L. R. In the borough rolls of Exchequer, in the year 1328, I find one John Barber, who, by order of King Robert the Bruce, got a sum of money from Sir Alexander Seaton of that Ilk, as governor and feuer of the town of Berwick upon Tweed, one of the progenitors of the Lords of Seaton, and Earls of Winton. It was this Sir Alexander Seaton's two sons, whom Edward III. caused most perfidiously to be hanged, because their father would not surrender the town of Berwick.
Liddel of Halkerton, of old, (says Sir James Balfour), carried _gules_ on a bend-sinister _argent_, a mullet _sable_; but now it is a bend-dexter, charged with three mullets _sable_. Sir James Liddel of Halkerton is witness in a charter of Alexander Duke of Albany, to Alexander Bonneston of that Illk, of the lands of Upsitone in the Merse, (_pene Comitem de Home_). Robert Liddel, merchant in Edinburgh, descended of the family of Halkerton, _gules_, on a bend, between a cross crosetted fitchet in chief, and a flower-de-duc in base _argent_, three spur-rowels of the first; crest, a rose slipped proper: motto, _Hinc ador & sanitas_. L. R.

The name of Kay or Gay, in Sir George Mackenzie’s Heraldry, _argent_, a bend-sinister _sable_, between an annulet in chief _gules_, and a griffin’s head erased in base of the second, in its beak, a key _azure_; fig. 23, plate V. He gives us also there the arms of the name of Weston, _gules_, on a bend sinister _argent_, three crescents _sable_. Pont’s Manuscript. In the borough rolls of Exchequer, Thomas Weston got sixty-six pounds eight pencey from Sir Alexander Seaton, governor and steward of Berwick, as by his accounts given in the 21st of January 1327.

The bend-sinister is subject to all the accidental forms that the bend-dexter is, and the other ordinaries: As, to have its diminutives, and to be multiplied also, which I shall only here name, since their practice in armories is very rarely to be met with in Britain.

The first diminutive of the bend-sinister, with the English, is called a _scarp_, which contains in breadth the half of the bend-sinister, and comes from the French word _echarpie_, a _scarf_; an ornament made use of by commanders and field-officers, over their left shoulder, thwart the body, and so under the arm, on the right side, as Guillem says, who tells us, that in blazons, it should be named _scarf_, without mentioning the word _sinister_, and that it is an honourable armorial figure; yet neither he nor others in England give us any instance by whom it is carried; the French call it a _barre_, and if there be six of them in the field, they say _barret_; and if more, _cottié_.

The half of the scarpe, with the English, is called a _batton-sinister_; by the French, _baton-sinistre_; it is never carried in arms, but as a mark of illegitimation, commonly called the _bastard bar_.

Guillem, in his Display of Heraldry, says, that the batton-sinister represents a cudgel, being latined by some, _bacillus_, to show that bastards are not free men, but as servants liable to be cudgelled; but this is both unmannerly and unreasonably said, for the batton-dexter and sinister, are both latined _bacilli_; the first used by the most polite nations, to difference the lawful younger sons of sovereigns and nobility, as the batton-dexter in the arms of the younger sons of France, and which was used by the family of Bourbon, over the arms of France, before its accession to the throne. The batton-sinister differs only from the former, by position, to distinguish the illegitimate from the legitimate, carried by natural children, not only of the nobility, but sovereigns; and does not expose them as _villains_, as Guillem will have it, but shows that they are cut off from the succession to their father’s honour and inheritance, by the lawful children, from which it is sometimes called a _fissure_, as Upton. “Fissura pro eo quod findit arma paterna in duas partes, _te, quia ipse bastardus finitutur a patrimonio patris sui_.”

I shall take occasion here, for my reader’s satisfaction, to speak a little to its ancient and modern form, the antiquity of its use, its continuance in a coat of arms, and give some examples by whom it is carried as a mark of illegitimation.

As to its form and length, (having shown its breadth before) it passed anciently from the left chief corner of the shield, to the right flank over the arms, of which I have seen several instances with us; and shall here only mention, that of John Home of Hilton in the Merse, natural son of Alexander Lord Home, Great Chamberlain of Scotland, in the reign of King James IV. who had on his seal of arms, appended to a right of reversion of the lands of the Fleurs in Roxburghshire, granted by him to Elizabeth Home, Lady Hamilton; fig. 25. plate V. Quarterly, first and fourth _vert_, a lion rampant _argent_, for Home; and second and third _argent_, three papagoes _vert_, for Peddie of Dallas, (the arms of his father), and over all a batton-sinister _sable_, as a mark of illegitimation, passing from the left chief corner to the right flank.
Such another instance of a batton-sinister, passing from corner to corner, over the paternal quarter, and not over the other quarters, is that of Robert Stewart, a natural son of King James V. begot upon Eupham, daughter of Alexander Lord Elphinston; who being prior of Holyroodhouse, he exchanged that abbacy with Adam Bothwell, bishop of Orkney, for his right of that bishoprick, in the year 1572, and was created Earl of Orkney, by King James VI. by patent the 21st of October: He carried the arms of Scotland, bruised with a batton-sinister sable, quartered, in the first and fourth places, with the feudal arms of Orkney; in the second and third places, being azure, a ship with her sails furled up or. His son Patrick, whom he had by his wife Jean, daughter to Gilbert Earl of Cassillis, succeeded him in his honours: but the batton-sinister (it seems by favour allowed) was turned to the right, as a ribbon sable, bruising the lion, so illuminated in the Manuscript of James Workman, herald-painter, with these exterior ornaments; for crest, a king inthronized, holding in his right hand a sword, and in his left, a falcon; with the motto, Sic fuit est & erit; supported on the dexter by an unicorn; and on the sinister, by a griffin. This Earl Patrick was forfeited for treason, for which he lost his head in the year 1614.

By our modern practice, the batton does not touch the extremities of the shield, nor the extremities of the quarter where the paternal arms are placed, for the batton is couped, that is, cut short, as in all British paintings and engravings; the French make it much shorter than we, and call it batton-sinister per sen.

As to the ancient use of the batton-sinister, it has not been in practice of arms, as a mark of illegitimation above three hundred years; for of old, the natural sons, whether of subjects or sovereigns, did not carry the arms of their fathers, as now, with differences; but carried other arms, which they got from their sovereign, or those of their mothers or wives being noble.

The natural children of the Kings of Scotland, and our nobility, had no names or arms of old from their fathers, and those they had were either from the places of their birth, or from their mothers or wives, as also their names or designations. Robert, natural son of King William, having married the heiress of Lundy of that ilk, he and his issue took upon them the name of Lundy or Lendin, and the arms of that family, viz. paly of six, argent and gules, over all on a bend azure, three cushions of the first, which the family continued till of late, carrying now, by warrant from the crown, as before, the arms of Scotland within a bordure gobonated, argent and azure, as the natural sons of our kings have been in use to do only since the reign of King James I. of Scotland; For the bordure gobonated was not then a mark of illegitimation as now.

The same practice was in England; WILLIAM LONG-EISPE, natural son of Henry II. begot on the fair Rosamond, had for arms a long sword, relative to his name; but after he had married Ella, daughter and heir of William D'Eureux, Earl of Salisbury, and being confirmed earl thereof by Richard I. he then took the arms of his wife, viz. azure, six lions rampant, argent, 3, 2, and 3. and no part of his father King Henry's arms: as Edward Walker, and Sir John Ferne have observed. And Sandford, in his Genealogical History, also tells us, that the unlawful children of JOHN OF GAUNT, DUKE OF LANCASTER, begot on Katharine, daughter of Sir Payen Rout, Guinene King of Arms, did not carry the arms of their father the king, though nobilitate with a batton-sinister, as now med.; but their arms were parted per pale argent and azure, over all a bend gules, charged with three lions passant gardant or: but after the legitimation of these three natural sons, by act of Parliament, they then assumed the sovereign ensign of England, being France and England quarterly, within a bordure gobonated argent and azure. Of which afterwards.

Sir JOHN CLARENCE, natural son of Thomas, Duke of Clarence; second son of Henry IV. who was killed at the battle of Bauge in France, by the Scots 1421, did not presume, as Sandford observes, to carry his father's arms, which were France and England, quarterly, with a label of three points ermine, each charged with a canton gules, for Clare; but carried only parted per chevron gules and azure, two lions rampant affronté or.

So that till about the fourteenth century, I have not found natural children carrying the arms of their fathers with a batton-sinister, as a mark of illegitimation; for before and about that time, if natural children carried any figures belonging to their father, they were placed in fields of various partitions, different positions and situations.

Antigone, natural daughter of Humphrey Duke of Gloucester, the fourth son of Henry IV, whose arms were France and England, quarterly, within a bordure gobonated argent and sable, carried her father’s arms, over which she placed a baton-sinister azur: and this is the first instance which Sandford gives of that figure. The next was that of Arthur Platagenet, natural son of Edward IV, who carried his father’s royal arms bruised, with a baton-sinister azur.

It cannot then be precisely determined when the natural children began to use the arms of their supposed fathers, with the now known marks of illegitimation: For in some countries the practice was sooner than in others; and some tell us it is but rare yet in Germany.

The practice of natural children carrying the arms of their fathers with brises had its rise and progression from a custom, says Sir John Ferne, which began from the presumption of natural children, and the acts of legitimations of sovereigns. How soon this practice was in France, I cannot be positive; but that the lawful younger sons of sovereigns there, were not in use to carry their father’s arms, till about the thirteenth century, is certain; much less could the natural children, even for a long time after. Menestrier tells us, that it is the custom of France, for bastards not to take their surnames from their supposed fathers, but from their seigniories and titles; and when they began to carry their arms with a sinister traverse, or baton per; he does not tell us, but says, that a bastard cannot cancel nor alter the baton, without the consent of the chief of the family, unless the bastard carry them in a faux escu, i.e. a cartouch, or false shield; and the son of a bastard, procreate in lawful marriage with a gentlewoman, may use the arms of his father and mother, quarterly, having always the baton-sinister on his paternal quarter.

As for the continuance of this mark of illegitimation in arms, some are of opinion, that it should always continue with the bastards descendants by lawful marriages, until the sovereign or chief of the family dispense with it.

Gerard Leigh says, The legitimate of a bastard, may, with consent of the prince, change the baton-sinister to the right side, keeping still the just quantity of the baton; and that it should be broken, of which he gives us an example in his accidents of armories, and blazons it thus, azur, a bend double danceté argent. But I find none has followed him as to the form of this traverse.

It is usual for princes to dispense with this known mark of illegitimation even to bastards themselves, either by carrying it dexter, or cancelling it. Charles VII. of France allowed John the bastard of Orleans, for his valour against the English, to turn his sinister traverse to the dexter, with which he and his issue afterwards bruised the arms of Orleans as Dukes of Longueville.

I have observed in a book of arms illuminated in the reign of Mary Queen of Scotland, the arms of James Earl of Murray, natural son to King James V, having the sinister traverse turned to the dexter, bruising the lion and tressure of Scotland; and quartered with the feudal arms of the Earlom of Murray, which I suppose were dispensè with by the Queen: and the arms of Scotland, carried by this family since, are surrounded with a bordure gobonated, argent and azur.

The general opinion, and most commonly received, is, that the bastard bar, after three lawful generations, may be borne to the right, or omitted without the sovereign’s consent; and, in place thereof, some remote mark of cadency added; but what these remote remarks are, I cannot determine here, not being to my present purpose, and therefore shall only name the bordure gobonated, which is frequently carried in place of the baton-sinister with us and the English, not only by the lawful issue of bastards, but by bastards themselves; as in the late practice of the natural children of King Charles II.

James Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch carried the arms of Great Britain, with a baton-sinister or.

Henry Fitzroy Duke of Grafton, natural son of King Charles Il, begot on Lady Barbara Villiers, Duchess of Cleveland, carried over the arms of Brituin a batton-sinister, composed azure and argent; which was also used by his lawful son and heir, Charles Duke of Grafton.

Charles Fitzroy, another natural son of that king with the duchess of Cleveland, had his batton-sinister ermine.

George Fitzroy, Duke of Northumberland, another natural son of that king, with the same duchess, to differ himself from his two elder brothers, gave his batton-sinister composed azure and ermine, (as Jacob Imhoff says) Similem bacillum ex bermionicis & ceruleis segmentis compositum.

Charles Beauclerk Duke of St Albans, another natural son of King Charles II, carried, over the arms of Great Britain, a batton-sinister gules. Let these examples suffice for carrying batton-sinisters as marks of illegitimation.

Chapter XV.

Of the Cross, and its Accidental and Proper Forms.

The cross is so generally known, that I need not give a long description of it, as some do by lines perpendicular and horizontal, but only shew, as in fig. 26, Plate V. it is as it were composed of the pale and the fesse: which two do not lie upon, or bruise one another, but are corporally united in the centre.

This is called a plain cross, and possesses a third part of the field, whether charged or not; but the English say, when not charged, it should only possess the fifth part. And some of their Heralds, as Gerard Leigh and Sylvanus Morgan, begin with the cross, as the first and most honourable of all the ordinaries; because it has been of great esteem, since our Saviour suffered upon it. And though this be true, yet I think it more methodical to rank it after these ordinaries which seem to compose it.

The cross has been anciently and frequently used by Christians on their ensigns, flags, and armories. Constantine the Great is said to be the first who assumed it, and carried a red cross in a white field, which is the ensign and flag of England; assumed by the Britons, says Edward Bolton, in his Elements of Armories, p. 73, because that Emperor was born in Britain. Other English say again, they took this cross from Joseph, the son of Joseph of Arimathea, who first preached Christianity in Britain, and, when dying, drew a red cross with his own blood on a white banner, telling them, that if they continued in the faith, they should always be victorious under such a banner. Some again ascribe it to their patron St George, and now is become the badge of the Noble Order of the Garter.

The republic of Genoa carries the like ensign, argent, a cross gules; upon the account that one St George is the patron of that republic. But whether he be the same with St George the patron of England, I know not.

The ensign of Denmark is gules, a cross argent. Some Danish writers say, that such a banner dropped from Heaven, when their King, Waldimer II. was fighting against the infidels in Livonia; at the sight of which the Danes took courage, and obtained a complete victory over the infidels: and, to perpetuate that favour from heaven, they have always made use of it as their ensign. But others tell us, with more probability, that Waldimer, observing his own men giving ground to the enemy, who had beat down his ensign, upon which was an eagle, he reared up a new one with the cross, which he had sent him from the Pope, rallied his forces, and recovered the victory; and the people were made to believe that it was sent from heaven, founding upon an ordinary custom of the Popes, in those days, to send consecrated banners to princes, to encourage them to war against infidels and heretics.

I shall not insist here upon the public ensigns of kingdoms or countries, and of the occasion of their rise and assumption; which I think would be out of my road. For there are few old ensigns or banners which are not supported with legendary stories.

The Duke of Savoy's ensign, gules, a cross argent, is placed by way of surtout over his shield of arms, being the cross of the Knights of St John of Jerusalem, with which they complimented Amadeus, the great Duke of Savoy, who came to their assistance against the Turks, in defence of Rhodes, in the year 1315. And, for his great success and valour, they added these four letters by way of device, F, E, R, T. which import, Foritudo ejus Rhodem tenuit, i. e. his courage preserved Rhodes. But, to forbear to give instances of crosses as signs of sovereignties and fraternities, I shall speak of them as merely armorial, in the bearings of families, where we will find them of many different forms, occasioned by the frequent expeditions to war, against the infidels in the Holy Land, for the recovery of Jerusalem.

They who engaged in that war received from the hands of bishops and prelates, consecrated crosses, made of cloth or taffeta, which were sewed on the left side of their upper coats, and thereupon they were said to undertake the cross: and those expeditions were called crusades. So that of necessity there behoved to be various forms of crosses, to distinguish the numerous companies of men, out of many different nations, who engaged in these expeditions. Besides, afterwards, the civil wars in Europe between the Emperors and Popes, likewise contributed to the frequent use of crosses, and their various forms in armories, so that they cannot be but numerous.

Francis Fosse, who wrote a Treatise of Arms in the reign of Richard II. of England, and undertook in person a crusade to Jerusalem, gives us an account only of twelve sorts of crosses. But Nichol Upton, who wrote sometime afterwards, says, that there were so many sorts of crosses, that he durst not undertake to give a description of them all. Neither can I promise to perform that task, which would be both tedious and useless. I shall therefore here mention so many various forms of crosses as are frequently to be met with in the armorial bearings of Britain and France; and if my reader be not satisfied with these, I recommend him to Randle Holmes, his Academy of Armory, where he will find 132 various forms of crosses.

For the better understanding of these forms, I divide them into accidental and proper forms. By the first, I understand these which are communicable to the other honourable ordinaries; as ingraillé, nebule, indenté, &c. of which before: by proper ones, those which are peculiar only to the cross.

When the cross is under neither of these forms, it is by some said, in blazon, to be plain; Crux simplex & plana, by the Latins; as that of England, argent, a plain cross gules, fig. 26.

CROSSIE of that ilk, an ancient family sometime with us, gave arms equivocally relative to the name, or, a plain cross gules, as in Mackenzie's Heraldry. And there also.

Guthrie of that ilk, another ancient family, argent, a cross salté: some books make it azure, quartered with the arms of Cumin, azure, three garbs or. Esplin's Book of Arms.

DAVID GUTHRIE of that ilk was Comptroller to King James III. and Captain of his Guards, and so designed as a witness in that King's charters, granted by him to Thomas Boyd Earl of Arran, and to his wife Mary Stewart the King's sister, Davide Guthrey de codem, nostrorum computorum rotulatore, and as a witness in another charter of that King's to James Lord Hamilton, giving him licence and power to recover lands out of the sea at Kinneil, and to build a castle there, amongst the witnesses David de Guthrey de codem Capitano nofræ Guardie, which are to be seen in the Earl of Haddington's Collections in the Lawyers' Library.

Guthrie of Lunan, in place of the cross, carries a lion, as in Workman's Manuscript, viz. quarterly, first and fourth or, a lion rampant gules, second and third azure, three garbs or.

Sir HENRY GUTHRIE of Kindedwards, baronet, quarterly first and fourth or, a lion rampant regardant gules, holding in the dexter paw a cross creslet fitched azure, for Guthrie; second and third azure, three garbs or, for Cumin; crest, a lion's paw issuing out of the torce, grasping a twig of a palm tree, all proper; supporters, two naked men wreathed about the loins with bay leaves, proper: motto: Sto pro veritate. L. R.

THOMAS GUTHRIE, sometime provost of Forfar, descended of Guthrie of Halkerton, quarterly, first and fourth or, a lion rampant regardant gules, second and third Cumin, all within a bordure indented argent; cross, a cross crosslet fitchet azure: motto, Ex unitate incrementum. Lyon Register.

James Guthrie of Carsbank, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a cross sable, second and third, as before, Cumin, all within a bordure ingrailed gules: motto, Pietas & frugalitas. Lyon Register.

The name of Osborne in England, quarterly, ermine and azure, a cross or.

Sir Thomas Osborne, son of Sir Edward Osborne, in right of his mother, one of the coheirs of John Nevil Lord Latimer, for adhering to the royal interest in order to the restoration of King Charles II. was erected Viscount of Dumbline in Scotland, and Baron of Kiveton, and Viscount of Latimer in England, 1673; and in the year following, by the same King, Earl of Danby, and installed Knight of the Garter. Afterwards, in the year 1689, he came to be Marquis of Carman then, and in the year 1694, Duke of Leeds. He carries, quarterly, ermine and azure, a cross or, for his paternal bearing.

The ancient and honourable name of Sinclair, argent, a cross ingrailed sable; of which more afterwards. Fig. 27. Plate V.

There is another accidental form, to which the other ordinaries are subject, but especially the cross, which the English term raguled or trunked. As in the bearing of the Lord Sands in England; argent, a cross raguled sable, fig. 28. Plate V. Guillem, in his Blazons, uses the word trunked; which term cannot relate here to the body of the cross, or the trees which are supposed to compose it; for trunked or truncatum is said of a tree cut in two, and of the head of any animal couped, i. e. cut clean off. But it seems he makes it relate to the stumps or knobs that remain of the branches cut off, and so the nodi sunt truncati. The word raguled seems to be more proper, for which Camden, in his Blazons, makes use of the word nodosa; and Mr Gibbon blazons such a cross, Cruce nodis truncatis aspersam, making the word trunked relate to the stumps of the branches. The French say ecoté, for any ordinary raguled. "Ecoté" says Menestrier, "se dit des troncs & branches de bois dont les menues branches sont occupées." Sylvester Petra Sancta, gives us such another coat of arms, borne by the family of Berkæ in Germany, which he describes thus, Crucem nodis truncatis aspersam, making the word trunked relate to the stumps of the branches. The French say ecoté, for any ordinary raguled.

The cross is subject to be counter-changed, as fig. 29. quarterly, argent and sable, a cross counter-changed of the same. Which blazon is given us by Gerard Leigh, and latined by Mr Gibbon thus, Scutum argento & nigro quadrupartitum, cruce plana & dilis coloribus commutatis insigniun. The author of the Synopsis of Heraldry gives us this figure cantoned with four escalops, borne by the name of Hoos in England, quarterly, argent and sable, a cross cantoned with four escuslop, all counter-changed.

Sir George Mackenzie, in his Science of Heraldry, gives us such another blazon of the arms of Glendinning of that Ilk, as fig. 36. quarterly, argent and sable, a cross parted per cross indented, counter-changed of the second and first. Mr Pont, in his Manuscript of Blazons, says, quarterly, argent and sable, a cross indented of the one and the other; as the French say for counter-changed de l'un en l'autre. Of this family there have been several brave men, as our historians tell us, and particularly one Sir Simeon Glendinning, who died fighting valiantly against the English with the Earl of Douglas at the battle of Otterburn, in the year 1388.

The Cross is also subject to be voided, that is, when its middle part is cut out, and the field appears through the middle in all its parts; for which the Latins say, Cruz evacuata, as fig. 31. Plate V. azure, a cross or, waved and voided of the field.

If the voiding be of another colour or metal than the field, the cross is then said to be charged with another cross; for which our English heralds have some needless terms, as sarceded, and resarceded; which I industriously omit, being of no use but to confuse the blazon, and amuse the reader.

When a cross is accompanied with figures, the English, in their blazons, use the word betwixt or between, as frequently we do; and sometimes we follow the
OF THE CROSS, &c.

French, in saying, a cross cantoned with such figures. Cantoned is said of the cross and saltier, when they are placed between figures, which appear between the branches of the cross and saltier, in the cantons.

Bannatyne of Corhouse, argent, a cross between four stars azure, as fig. 32. Plate V. The French, d'argent à la croix cantonné de quatre etoiles d'azur. The Latin, In scuto argentoco crucem planam, ad quatuor scuti angulos singulis stellulis itidem coraeles pecincfam ; crest, a demi-griffin, holding in his right paw a sword upright, proper: motto, Nec cito nec tarde. L. R.

Bannatyne of Newhall, as descended of Corhouse, argent, on a cross azure, between four mullets gules, a crescent or; crest, a demi-griffin holding in its dexter paw a sword, with the motto, Dum spiro spero. So matriculated in the Lyon Register. Other ancient families of the surname of Bannatyne carry a chevron in place of the cross; of whom afterwards.

When a cross is charged with any figure, we say of it, as of the other ordinaries, on a cross: as Sir George Mackenzie in the blazon of the arms of the name of Spalding, or, on a cross azure, five cross croislets of the first. The first of the name of Spalding with us was an Englishman, who assisted Sir Thomas Randolph, Earl of Murray, in recovering the town of Berwick from the English, in the year 1318; for which good services he got several lands in Scotland. I have seen a charter of confirmation of Prince David's, eldest son of King Robert III. to Richard Spalding, of the lands of Lumlethen and Craigaw, in the shire of Fife.

Crosses are sometimes pierced in the middle, so that the field is seen through the same. When the piercing is round, it suffices to say, pierced or perforated, as fig. 33. sable, a cross couped or, pierced of the field. If pierced after the form of a lozenge, then they say, pierced Lozengé-ways; when pierced after the form of a square, it is mentioned in the blazon.

If the piercings be in any other part of the crosses but in the middle, then they are not to be taken for piercings, but for charges.

Couped or aleeé is said of a cross or saltier, when their extremities do not touch the sides of the shield, but when there are more than one cross in the field, they cannot but be couped, and then that term is not added in the blazon, more than to other common charges, when they accompany the ordinaries.

Crosses, for the most part, are couped, because they have their proper forms in their extremities: of which proper forms of crosses I shall now proceed to show some examples.

Fig. 34. argent, a cross potent azure; here the traverse is placed on the top of the stem or paler part. Guillim says it may be called a cross cruchys, for the resemblance it has to a crouch, which in old English was called potent. The French call it potent, which signifies a crouch or a gibbet; for which the Latin says, croix patibulata.

The name of Butter of old with us carried argent, a cross potent azure, between four men's hearts gules. Mr Pont, in his blazons of these arms, calls it a cross batune, following Gerard Leigh; the reason for its being so called, is from its composition of two buttons. But Butter of Gormach has it a plain cross, as in his blazon in the Lyon Register, viz. argent, a cross sable, between four men's hearts proper; crest, two hands issuing out of a cloud, drawing an arrow in a bow: motto, Diriget Deus.

Menestrier gives an example of cross potents in the arms of Chabeel Originaires de Dauphiné, which he blazons "d'azur, a la Bande d'argent, chargé de trois rocs de sable, a Porle potences tournées d'azur brisé d'un mullet d'argent a l'angle senestre de l'ecu," i.e. azure on a bend argent, bevixt two orles of cross potents tournées, three chess rooks sable, and, for a mark of cadency, a mullet in the sinister chief point of the last. These cross potents here are like T's, contrary to one another, as the pieces of the fur, called potent counter-potent, the one opposite to the other: of which before in the chapter of Furs.

Fig. 35. Plate V. Potent counter-potent, is said of a cross, when its extremities are terminate with short traverses; as Monsieur Baron says, Potence contre potence si ces extremités en dehors en face de l contre T; as that cross in the arms of Godfrey of Boulogne King of Jerusalem, argent; a cross potent counter-potent, cantoned with four cross croislets or. Chifletius blazons these arms thus, Crux pedata.

oram senti minime pertingens, ad quatuor senti angulos singulis crucibus itidem aureis praecincta in solo argento.

Sylvester Petra Saneta says, this cross of Hierusalem is made by the two initial letters H I, of Hierusalem interlaced, and several antiquaries are of his opinion; but Menestrier is in the contrary opinion, and tells us, that the Syrian characters H I could never form such a figure us the cross potent: And Favin, in his Theatre of Honour, will likewise have it to be a cross, and gives us an ancient account of it, that it was such an one as that on the gounfulion or ensign of Jerusalem, that George, abbot of Mount-Olivet in Jerusalem, and Felix, abbot in Bethlehem, brought to Charlemagne in the year 792; which ensign was of white silk, and upon it a red cross counter-potent, cantonned with four little crosses; which five crosses, says he, did represent our Saviour's five wounds. And afterwards when Godfrey of Boulogne was made King of Jerusalem, he assumed these crosses for his royal ensign, and turned them from the red colour, to the metal gold, in a silver field, contrary to the practice in armories, to place metal upon metal, but was done with the consent of the princes of Europe, that his arms might move the beholders to enquire after them; for which they have the special name through all Europe of Armæ inquirenda.

The King of Spain, and the Duke of Savoy as King of Cyprus, the Duke of Loraine, and the Duke of Montserrat, as pretenders to the Kingdom of Jerusalem, do all of them quarter the foresaid arms with their own.

Such a cross, says Randle Holmes, in his Academy of Armories, was carried by those that were inrolled for the voyage to the Holy Land, about the year 1187, and was sewed on the left side of their garments, right against the heart; the French wore it red, the English white, the Italians yellow, the Flemings green, and the Germans black: Such a cross as this is carried for arms, for the Episcopal See of Coventry and Litchfield in England, as fig. I. Plate VI. parted per pale, gules and argent, a cross potent counter-potent, quadrate in the centre, between four crosses patee, all counter-changed of the same.

When the cross potent, or any other cross, of whatsoever form, is made sharp in the under part, it is then termed fiché ou aigüë; the Latins say, cruces in imo spiculate or cupulate. The reason of having them so was from an old custom which Christians then had, who carried, in their pilgrimages, little crosses, of whatsoever form they affected, sharp at the point, which they fixed in the ground before them, in their devotions; so that we find many crosses in arms fiched, of which there are two sorts, fiché from the middle or centre of the cross, as the Latins say, quadrum pars inferior ab ipso umbilico spiculata est; the other fiché is when the under part of the cross keeps its specific form, but has a point added to it, then it is said to be the fiché at the foot; the French, fiché en pied.

An example of the first is the bearing of ETHELRED, King of the West-Saxons, who lived in the year 946. as English writers tell us, fig. 2. azure, a cross counter-potent fiched or: Mr Gibbon blazons it thus, portat in scuto cyanoco crucem patulatam cyjus pars ima ab ipso scilicet crucis centro in spiculum prodit. Gules, a chevron argent, between ten crosses patee argent, as fig. 3. Plate VI. This is another specific form of a cross, which has its extremities ending broad, for which we say patee; the Latins say patula, or crux ad scapos patula; Menestrier says, patée des croix du les extremités se logissent en forme d'extenude. Gules, a cross patee or, borne by the name of Islip in England; Gerard Leigh calls this a cross formé; such crosses are very frequent in armories, and adorn sovereigns crowns, as those of Scotland and England, of which afterwards. Camden tells us, in his Remains of his History, page 180. at the title of armories, that one of the Lords BERKELEY or BARCLAY (whose progenitor came to England with William the Conqueror, and took the surname from the castle of Berkeley in Gloucestershire, and carried for arms, gules, a chevron argent) he took upon him the cross to the Holy War, inserted ten crosses patee argent, in his arms; six of which accompanied the chevron in chief, and four in base, as fig. 3. Which family had a numerous issue; some of which came to Scotland, but the right male-line, it seems, of this family failed in the reign of Henry II. and was represented by a daughter, Alice Berkeley the heiress, who was married to Robert Fitzhardinge, a powerful man in those times, whose descendants were called Berkeley-Hardings; of whom is descended F f the present James Earl of Berkeley, who carries gules, a chevron between ten crosses patee (six above and four below) argent; this family was honoured with the title of Baron Berkeley, the 23d of June 1295, by Edward I. and with the title of viscount and earl by King Charles II. the 11th of September 1679.

There is another branch of this family in England, which was dignified by King Charles II. the 29th of May, with the title of Baron Berkeley of Stratton.

As for the branch of the old stem of Barclays that came to Scotland, in the reign of King William, we have it mentioned by several English historians, as by Edmond Howes, in his History of England page 153, where he says, that amongst the younger sons of the noblemen of England, that came to Scotland with King William, after he had given security for his ransom, was one Barclay. We find in King William's charters to the abbacy of Dunfermline, amongst the witnesses are Walter de Barclay, and Robert de Barclay; and in the reign of Alexander II. Malcolm Earl of Angus, married the daughter of Sir Humphry Barclay, as in the Register of Arbroath, in a charter granted by Malcolm Earl of Fife, (who lived in the reign of Alexander III.) to Andrew de Swinton, Roger de Barclay is a witness; Hugh Barclay obtains a charter from King Robert the Bruce, the 15th year of his reign, of the lands of Upper and Nether-Westerton, to himself and his wife Helen, as in the Registers of Melrose, page 48. And, in the same Register, page 62. Walter Barclay Miles, sheriff of Aberdeen, is so designed in a charter of King Robert the Bruce to that town: I have seen his seal of arms affixed to evidences, too long here to insert, which was the same with the Lord Berkeley's arms in England, having a chevron accompanied with ten cross pates. And Sir James Balfour, in his Manuscript of Blazons, says, the surname of Barclay with us, in the year 1247, carried gules, a chevron between ten crosses patee argent, six in chief, and four in base.

I am not to give a deduction of the descents of the families of the name of Barclay with us, which I leave to our genealogists, and shall only mention some of the families of this name, with their blazons at the end of this chapter, as I find them in our old and modern books of blazons; but to proceed to the crosses.

The cross patee is sometimes carried fitched at the foot, and sometimes fitched from the middle; for an example of the first, I give here that as given us by the English, fig. 6. Plate VI. The arms of Edmond Ironside, King of England, or, a cross patee fitched at the foot azure; thus latined by Mr Gibbon, in purpurea aurea crucem caruleam ad quatuor ejus extremitates pateam, & ejusdem ima pars est ad pedem cuspidata; the same arms are given by the English to Cadwallader, last King of the Britons; but Mr Holmes, in his Academy of Armories, gives the following blazon to him, as fig. 4. Plate VI. azure, a cross patee fitched argent.

This cross, as others, may be used sometimes of two tinctures; the Canons regular of the holy cross, the chief of whom is at Huy in the country of Liége, carries, in a round shield, a cross patee, whereof the stem (or paler part) is gules, and the traverse argent; they use it on a black escutcheon.

The Trinitarians of the Redemption of Captives, carry argent, a cross patee, whereof the stem is gules, and the traverse argent; the reformed of that Order in France carries the same, but surround it with a bordure of France, and those of Spain with a bordure of Castile, as Menestrier observes.

Fig. 5. Plate VI. Or, a cross patee azure, fimbriated (or bordured) gules, borne by the name of Fombrial, says Holmes. This cannot be said to be voided, because the field does not appear in voiding, nor to be a cross charged with another, because of colour upon colour; therefore it is called by the English, a cross fimbriated, that is, edged with another colour. Bara and Sir John Ferne call it a cross resurrectée, which signifies to edge or hem; if a voidure of the field appear between the cross and the edging, it may be then called a cross cotised; the Knights of St Mary the Glorious, in Italy, carried for their badge, a cross patee purpure, fimbriated or.

Fig. 7. The cross Tau, or cross of St Anthony, because that saint is always represented in paintings with this cross on his shoulder; and the Emperor Maximilian permitted those of the Order of St Anthony, to place on the breast of the Imperial eagle, which he granted to them as their arms, being an escutcheon or, charged with a cross Tau azure. This cross is always represented patulius, and is almost the same with the cross potent, or potence, and so blazoned by Favin.

Fig. 8. Plate VI. This is called a cross of eight points; and now commonly the cross of Malta. It was worn by the Knights of the Order of Hospitallers of St John Baptist in Jerusalem; which Order was institute by King Baldwin 1124; they carried a white cross of eight points upon their red cassocks; and after these Knights were expelled Jerusalem and Rhodes, they betook themselves to the Island of Malta, in the year 1520, where they reside; from which place this Order and cross have now the name of the Order and cross of Malta. The cross, which hangs at the collar of the Order of the Holy Ghost in France, is after that form.

Monseigneur Baron says, a cross may have its extremities ending in eight, twelve, or sixteen points, and gives us for example, the arms of Meline in France, d'azur à la croix à seize points de argent, i. e. azure, a cross of sixteen points argent.

Fig. 9. Cross anchorie is when its extremities turn back, like the velocks of an anchor; "ancre" says Monseigneur Baron, "convient aux croix & aux sautoirs, lors- que leurs extremities sont termines en double points recubées en façon d'ancre;" and gives for example the arms of Aubusson de la Feuillade, d'or, une croix ancrée de guules, i. e. or, a cross anchor gules: In Latin, refert in scuto aureo anchoratam crucem coccinam. The Knights of the Order of St Saviour in Arragon, institute by Alphonso King of Spain, in the year 1118, have, for their badge, a red cross anchorie in a white field; the English ordinarily call this cross, a cross moline; whereas the cross moline is always pierced in the middle, as by the following figure.

The cross moline is much after the form of the cross anchorie, but always pierced, square or circular in the middle, fig. 10. It represents the mill-rind, or the ink of the mill; the Latins say, croix molendinaris, or ferrum molendinarium; and the French call it amillée, ou fer de moulin. Boswell, in his Book of Heraldry, intitled the Armories of Honour, says, the cross moline is after the form of an iron instrument, fixed in the nether-stone of a mill, which bears and guideith the upper-millstone equally in its course, and is a fit bearing for judges and magistrates, who should carry themselves equally to every man in giving justice; and Menestrier says, in arms, it is a mark of superiority and jurisdiction of a baron, that has tenants and vassals thriled and bound to their mills: For of old none but barons had right to erect mills, and by some it is carried as relative to their names, as Milne and Miller.

The shape of this cross moline varies a little, according to the fashion of the countries; sometimes given thus, as fig. 10. by Menestrier, in his La Science de la Noblesse, borne by the family of Montfort in the Low-Country of Gueldres, argent, à trois amillettes de guules.

The surname of Colvil, with us, argent, a cross moline sable, fig. 10. By our painters and engravers it is often represented not perforate, which it should be, and is so expressed in old books of blazons, as in those of Sir James Balfour, Colvil of Ochiltree, argent, a cross moline sable, square pierced of the field.

As for the antiquity of this name, I find Philippus de Colvil a witness in a charter of King William the Lion, Randulpho Rupho Kinaird, pene Dominum de Kinaird. And in another charter (in the custody of Lauder of Fountainhall) granted by Robert Lauder, Miles Dominus de Quareywood, of some lands in Lauder, to Thomas Borthwick, in the reign of Alexander III. Williamus de Colvil is a witness. And another William de Colvil gets a charter from King Robert I. of half the lands of Whitsen, in the shire of Berwick, in rotula Robert I. And King David II. gave a charter to Robert Colvil of the barony of Ochiltree. Richard Colvil of Ochiltree was slain by the Earl of Douglas for killing John Atleek of that Ilk, in the year 1440.

Sir William of Ochiltree, in the beginning of the reign of King James IV. died without issue-male, leaving two daughters. Robert Colvil of Hilton, whether as heir-male, or otherwise, I know not, acquired the barony of Ochiltree. He was Director of the Chancery in the reign of King James IV. with whom he lost his life at Flodden. He was succeeded by his son Sir James Colvil of Ochiltree, who was also Director of the Chancery in King James V.'s time. He excambed the lands of Ochiltree with Sir James Hamilton, natural son to the Earl of Arran, for the lands of Easter-Wemyss in Fife, in the year 1530; and was afterwards designed, in writs, Sir James Colvil of Easter-Wemyss, Comptroller and Director of the Chaucery. His grandchild, Sir James Colvil, a famous soldier in the wars of Henry, King of Navarre, against the Leaguers in France, upon his return home, was advanced to the dignity of a Lord of Parliament by King James VI, the 25th April 1604, and was styled Lord Colvil of Culross: The honour ended in his grand-son Robert.

ROBERT COLVIL, son of Sir James Colvil of Easter-Wemyss, got from his father the lands of Cleish, in Kinross-shire, whence he and his descendants were designed of Cleish, till they were raised to the honour of peerage in the person of Robert Colvil of Cleish, by King Charles II, with the title of Lord Colvil of Ochiltree, as by letters patent, 4th of January 1651; but he dying without issue, his estate and honours devolved on Robert Colvil his nephew, father of the present Lord Colvil, who carries, quarterly, 1 and 4 argent, a cross moline sable, for Colvil; 2 and 3 gules, a fesse chequè, argent and azure, for Lindsay, supported on the Dexter by a rhinoceros, proper, and on the sinister by a Hercules, clothed with a lion's skin, with a club in his hand; crest, a hind's head couped argent: motto, Oublier ne puis.

Sir ALEXANDER COLVIL of Blair, son to Mr Alexander Colvil of Blair, sometime Justice-Depute, son to Alexander Colvil, Commissary of Culross, second son to Sir James Colvil of Hilton and Tullicoltry, uncle to the Lord Colvil of Culross, the great soldier, as in the Lyon Register, carries the above quartered arms within a bordure, quarterly, gules and argent; and for crest, a hind's head couped, proper; with the motto, Non obligiscar: And there also are the arms of one Matthew Colvil, writer in Edinburgh, third son to William Colvil of Leffnissick, lineally descended of Colvil of Ochiltree, argent, a cross moline sable, with a mullet for difference; crest, a Hercules from the middle, clothed with a lion's skin, holding in his hand a batton: motto, Oublier ne puis.

As for other families carrying cross molines, I shall speak to them and their arms in the end of this chapter.

The English not only give us a cross moline perforated in the centre, which then they call cross fer de moline, but also a cross moline, altogether voided, Plate VI. fig. 12. which some of them call a cross cerellee, and Morgan a cross resartellee; and Guillim, a cross moline voided throughout, as in the arms of Knolles Earl of Banbury, azure, eme of cross crosetts, a cross moline or, voided throughout of the field; and Verny Lord Willoughby de Brooke, gules, three crossess resartellee voided or, a chief sain, ermine and ermines.

Fig. 13. Plate VI. This is commonly called the cross of passion, by some the long cross; it has a long stem or paler part, and a short traverse near the top, such an one was that which our Saviour suffered on, and for which it is called the cross of passion.

The surname of Manson, with us, carries such a cross between two stars; the same was on a piece of household-work, belonging to Joseph Manson, carpenter to Queen Mary and King James VI.

Fig. 14. The cross of Calvary is the same with the cross of passion, set on three steps or degrees, which are said to represent, Faith, Hope, and Charity. The family of Boffines, in Dauphiné, carries this cross, because one of the progenitors of that family built the Calvary at Rome, after the form of that at Jerusalem; as Menestrier says.

Fig. 15. Plate VI. The cross patriarchal has its paler part crossed with two traverses, the uppermost not so long as that which is below it; which two traverses denote the work of redemption to the Jews and Gentiles. The Patriarch of Jerusalem had for his ensign, argent, a cross patriarchal, cantonned with four stars gules; and the Patriarch of Constantinople had such another of gold, in a blue field, betwixt two stars in chief, and a crescent in base argent; as Favin in his Theatre of Honour. This cross is also called by some, the cross of Loraine, as Monsieur Baron in his Blazon of the Arms of Mentes in France, d'argent, à la croix de Loraine de sable.

The Pope's cross staff differs from that of the patriarch's, in having three traverses.
Fig 16. Cross croiset has its extremities ending in little crosses, called by the French croix recroiseté. Sylvester Petru Sancta says, "Si autem ad scapos ejus fuerint repetitae cruces fit crux recruciatæ," which figure is frequently borne in Britain, but more especially when fitted, of which immediately.

The name of Tulloch, or, on a fesse between three cross croislets gules, as many crescents argent.

Rich Earl of Warwick and Holland, gules, a chevron betwixt three cross croislets or.

Fig. 17. Cross croiset fitted is when the undermost part of the cross is sharp; by the French, fitted. The Latins say, crux brachata in into scapulata, frequently carried with us and the English. The ancient and honourable family of Mark Earls of Mark, had for their armorial ensign, azure, a bend betwixt six cross croislets fitted or; of which family afterwards with others.

Plate VI. fig. 18. The cross fuchée, crux furcata, has its extremities forked; but since they are blunt or obtuse, says Mr Gibbon, it may be better latined, crux obius terminis furtam. Sir George Mackenzie gives us the form of this cross, and says, he has not found it used in Scots bearings; neither have I met with its practice with us, if that figure in the Cunningham's arms be not a part of it, as some will; of which afterwards.

Plate VI. fig. 19. The cross bottone, that is, says Gerard Leigh, a cross budded; because its extremities end in buds of flowers: The French call it croix treffée, because its extremities end in trefoils. In the little book called The Art of Heraldry, the arms of Sir Ralph Winwood, Principal Secretary of State to King James VII. argent, a cross bottone sable: And Baron gives us the arms of Caudon in France, de gueules, à la croix treffée d'or.

Fig. 20. Plate VI. Cross pomezzée or pomée, which comes from the French word pome, an apple; some call it a croix ponielle, because its extremities end in a round knob, or globe, like an apple, or the pommel of a sword: Peacham, in his Piece of Heraldry, calls this a croix bourdonnée, as if it were made of pilgrims' staffs, which use to have a round ball at the top. The name of Powmale, in England, argent, a cross pomelee sable. As Holmes in his Academy of Armories.

Fig. 21. plate VI. Cross cleecée, its parts are like the handle or bowl of a key, voided and terminated with globes. "Cleeché," says Menestrier, "se dit des " arrondissemens de la croix de Toulouse dont les quatre extremités sont fuites, comme " les anneaux des clefs." It is said, that Torsin, who was put into possession of the country of Toulouse by Charles the Great of France, had such a cross, which became afterwards the ensign of the Counts of Toulouse, viz. gules, a cross cleecée voided and pomezzée or. René, the last Count of that country, who married Jean, only daughter to Alphonso, brother to St Lewis, King of France, died without issue; and that country was annexed to the kingdom of France, in the year 1261. Menestrier gives us another cross of the same, born by the family of Venasques, d'azur, à la croix blindée et pomezzée d'or.

Fig. 22. Cross fleur-de-lisée, by some called fleurettée, has its extremities ending in a flower of three leaves, or flower-de-luces, with a purlieus or line between them and the ends of the cross. Mr Gibbon describes it thus, "Crucem ad sin- " gulos ejus terminos (filo linea inistra mediate) trin hilia folia apponuntur." Ger- " ard Leigh says, such a cross, which he calls flurtic, was carried by Edwin, the first Christian King of Northumberland. The family of Villikier in France, azure, a cross flower-de-lucey, cantonned with twelve billets or. Holmes calls this a cross paunce flurt, and says, the name of Holmshaw carries such a cross sable, in a field argent.

Fig. 23. This is called a cross-flowery or fleury; it is like the former cross, without the purlieus or line betwixt the ends of the cross and the flower. Mr Gibbon describes it. "Crucem in lihorum folia (nulla linea seu filo interposito) desinen- " tium:" others call it crucem floridam. Gerard Leigh calls it cross formée fleury, and says, that Egbert King of England carried such a cross of gold in a blue field.

Fletcher of Salton, sable, a cross flowery between four escallops argent, which blazon is matriculated in the New Register: and for crest, a demi-blood-hound azures, langued gules, collared with a ducal crown or; supporters, two griffins proper; with the motto, Dieu pour nous.

Sir Andrew Fletcher of Innerpeffar, an eminent Lawyer, and one of the Senators of the College of Justice, purchased the lands of Salton in East Lothian, from Alexander Lord Abernethy 1638, of whom the present Henry Fletcher of Salton is descended.

Sir Andrew Fletcher of Aberlady, a brother of Salton, carries the foresaid arms within a bordure ingrailed argent, for his difference; and for crest, a demi-lion azure, holding, in his dexter paw, a cross croiset fitchè or; with the motto, Fortis in arduis. In the Lyon Register.

Fletcher of Maugan, in the county of Cornwall in England, carries ermine, a cross moline sable, as in Morgan's Heraldry.

When the cross-flory is like to a cross patee, turning broad at the extremities, which are cut out like a flower, it is termed by the English cross patece: purpure, a cross patece argent; said by Mr Holmes to be the coat of Boniface, the forty-sixth archbishop of Canterbury.

Fig. 24, plate VI. This is called a cross guivré or guivréé; which is said of crosses, saltiers, and other figures whose extremities end with heads of serpents; guivris signifying a viper or serpent. The arms of Ken in France gules, a cross ermine, guivréé (or grongoleé) or. Such crosses with the English are called crosses enscerated by Mr Holmes, who tells us, that when a cross ends with lions; talbots, eagles, and several sorts of other heads, it may be blazoned a cross patee, adorned with lions or eagles heads; and that some blazon them leonced when with lions, aquilated when with eagles' heads, and pavonated when with peacocks' heads; and so forth of any other figures that end the cross; as crosses annulated, crescented, &c, which end with annulets and crescents.

Fig. 25. Cross avellana, croix avellane, is made up of four filbert, or hazle-nuts: Crosses after this form top the monde of kings and emperors, and are ensigns of sovereignty and majesty when so placed.

When any natural figures are situate after the position of the cross, they are said to compose a cross or in cross; as argent, a cross of four quevès ermine, or monchetures ermine, being the tips of the tails of the beasts ermine, situate after the form of a cross, borne by the name of Hurleston of Picket, in Cheshire.

Favín, in his Theatre of Honour, gives arms to the knights and brethren of the Inquisition and militia, instituted by S. Dominick, in the 1260, to fight against the Albigenses, which he thus blazonz, as fig. 29. Girone de buit pièces, d'argent et de sable; et sur celui, une croix de lizée, parti de l'un et l'autre meme, a la bordure componé de buit pièces de mene de sable et d'argent, a la bordure de l'un et l'autre, et biet bensants torteaux parèiellement parti d'argent et de sable; which is, parti, coupte, tranché, taillé, (or girony of eight pieces) argent and sable, four flower-de-lyces placed in cross within a bordure of the same partitions charged with eight stars, and as many bensants torteaux, all counter-charged of the foresaid tinctures.

When figures are situate after the form of a cross, the cross takes its name from them, and a cross, made up of lozenges so situate, is called a cross lozengée, or we may say also in cross; as before figures after the situation of other ordinaries, as in pale, in fesse, bend, and bar; and so much for crosses. Now I proceed to add the blazons of several families in Britain who carry such crosses as I have described.

And there also,

The surname of Tayrie, gules, a cross vert. John Tayrie, burgess in Perth, mortifies several lands in that town to the church of Perth, the 20th of August 1517, and amongst the witnesses to that mortification, there is one Robert Tayrie burgess and bailie of Perth.

Mohun Lord Mohun, or, a cross ingrailed sable; this family was dignified with the title of Lord, the 15th of April 1628, by King Charles I.

Raysford of Dallington, argent, a cross sable.

The name of Hussey in England, or, a cross vert; and there the name of Archer, ermine, a cross sable.

The honourable name of Sinclair, originally from the name of St Clair, in France, has been very eminent in Scotland, and carry for their paternal arms, William Sinclair miles, is so designed in a charter, that he got from King Alexander, of the lands of Roslin, pennes Dominum de Rosline. His son Sir William Sinclair of Roslin or Rosland, in the reign of Alexander III., was Sheriff of Edinburgh, and afterwards one of the arbitrators betwixt the Bruce and the Baliol. He and his son Henry Sinclair swore allegiance to Edward the I. of England, as in Pryme's Collect, page 301. And there one Gregory Sinclair, with the gentry of the shire of Berwick, is said to have sworn also allegiance; he is thought to be the brother of the last Henry, and the first of the family of Sinclair of Longformacus, in the shire of Berwick, upon the account he is recorded with the gentry of that shire, where his land lay, by Pryme: and also on account of his relation, mentioned in Henry Sinclair Earl of Orkney's charter; of which afterwards.

Sir William Sinclair, son of Henry Baron of Roslin, is one of the subscribers of the famous Letter by the nobility of Scotland to the Pope, in the reign of Robert the Bruce. His son Henry, Baron of Roslin, says Torpheus in his Hist. page 174, was made Earl of Orkney, by Haco King of the Norwegians; and he is designed in evidents, Henricus de Sancto Claro Comes de Orcadie, & Dominus de Roselgiva; and also in that obligation granted by him to Sir James Sinclair of Longformacus, his cousin, whereby the earl is obliged to give him a twenty merk land, dated at Roslin the 22d of June 1384. His son Henry Earl of Orkney, Lord Sinclair and Nithsdale, married Giles Douglas, daughter and sole heiress of William, Earl of Nithsdale, and Giles, daughter of King Robert II. He was governor to James, Prince of Scotland, when Robert the III. his father sent him to France; and they were both taken at sea by the English: his armorial bearing, as in Sir James Ballfour's blazons, quarterly, first and fourth: azure, a ship within a double pressure, counter-flowered or; second and third: argent, a cross ingrailed table. His son William Sinclair Earl of Orkney, built the chapel of Roslin, and was chancellor of Scotland in the reign of King James II. and by that King was made Earl of Caithness, after the death of John Crichton Earl of Caithness, who had no issue; and got a charter of that Earldom, in compensation of the Earldom of Nithsdale, which he had in right of his mother; which right he renounces in favour of the king as the charter bears, dated at Perth, the last day of April 1456. This Earl had a great estate, and took upon him a great many lofty titles; he was twice married, first to Margaret Douglas; daughter of Archibald Earl of Douglas, Duke of Touraine in France; and secondly, to Marjory Sutherland, daughter to Alexander, Master of Sutherland, and had issue of both. He was forfeited by taking part with Alexander Duke of Albany, (who married his daughter), and with the Earl of Douglas, (whose daughter he married), in their treasonable designs, and for fortifying his castle of Crichton against King James III. Yet the King was so good as to restore to his children (if not all) at least the better part of his estate. By his first lady, Margaret Douglas, he had a son William Sinclair of Newburgh, Dysart and Ravensheugh, of whom is descended the present Lord Sinclair: and by his second lady, Marjory Sutherland, daughter to Alexander Master of Sutherland, who died before his father, John Earl of Sutherland, he had several sons and daughters; the eldest, Oliver, Laird of Roslin; the second, William, was created Earl of Caithness. To clear the seniority of these sons, I have seen a contract of the date, the 9th of February 1481, betwixt William Sinclair, son and heir of the deceased William, Earl of Orkney, Lord Sinclair and Zetland, and Henry Sinclair, son and apparent heir of the said William Sinclair on the one part, and Sir Oliver Sinclair of Roslin on the other part; whereby, the said Sir Oliver freely resigns and gives over to the said William and his son, and apparent heir Henry, the lands of Causland, Dysart, and Ravensheugh, with the castles; and obliges himself to deliver all rights and evidences of these lands, that may be profitable to his elder brother William, not being prejudicial to himself and other lands, nor to his younger brother William; and on the other part, William and his son Henry renounces all the right to the barony of Roslin, Fentland-muir, &c. in favours of Oliver and his heirs: and the same Oliver obliges himself, that he shall, in time coming, do worship and honour to the said William, as accords him to do to his elder brother; and if it happen any plea or debate to be betwixt the said William and his younger brother for the earldom of Caithness, the said Sir Oliver shall stand evenly and neuter betwixt them, as he should do.
OF THE CROSS, &c.

betwixt his brothers, and take no partial part with either of them. The seals appended to this contract were those of the archbishop of St. Andrews, Andrew Stewart Lord Ewandel, Chancellor of Scotland, and of Colin Earl of Argyle, whose seal was, girony of eight, but not quartered with the coat of Lorn. The seal of William Sinclair was, quarterly, first and fourth, a ship with sails furled up, within a double trouble counter-flowered; second and third, a ship under sail: over all by way of surnaut, an escutcheon with a cross ingrailed. And the seal of Sir Oliver had only a cross ingrailed; and of late the same arms are matriculated in the Lyon Register, with this crest and motto, a dove proper, with the word Crede.

This William Sinclair of Ravensheugh had, with his lady, Isabel Leslie, daughter to George Earl of Rothes, the forementioned son, Henry Sinclair, who succeeded his father; he married Jean Hepburn, daughter to Lord Hales, and was created a Lord of Parliament by King James IV. and in that king's first parliament, the 14th of January 1489, is declared chief of that name, as grandchild to William Earl of Orkney, and, in all time coming, to be called Lord Sinclair; he ratifies the contract abovementioned of his father's, with Sir Oliver Sinclair, the 6th of June 1493, where he is designed a noble Lord, Henry Lord Sinclair. From him was lineally descended John Lord Sinclair, who married a daughter of the Earl of Wemyss, and with her had only one daughter, Katharine his heir; she married John Sinclair of Hermiston, and had to him a son, Henry, the present Lord Sinclair, and heir of Hermiston, in right of his father.

The Lords Sinclairs' family have been constantly in use to carry the arms of the Earldom of Orkney, upon the account of pretension, or to show their descent from the old Earls of Orkney, quarterly, first and fourth azure; a ship at anchor, her oars erected in saltier, within a double trouble counter-flowered or; second and third azure, a ship under sail or, over all an escutcheon argent, charged with a cross ingrailed table, for Sinclair; which arms, as in our books of blazons, are adorned with exterior ornaments, crown, helmet, and mantlings, befitting their quality, and, on a wreath, or and azure; and for crest, a swan with wings expanded, proper, gorged with a collar and chain thereto affixed, reflexing over its back or, as in Mr. Pont's book; (but Esplin, in his Illuminated Book, gives for crest, a griffin's head) supported by two griffins proper, armed or; with the motto, Fight.

William Sinclair, younger son of William Earl of Orkney, Lord Sinclair and Zetland, by his second wife, Marjory Sutherland, beforementioned, was created Earl of Caithness, by King James III. I have seen a charter of this Earl William's, dated at Edinburgh the 3d of December 1498, who, with the consent of his brothers and sisters, dispenses the lands of Svinburgh, in the lordship of Zetland, to which all their seals were appended entire, with their proper differences: of which I shall speak in the chapter of Marks of Cadency, and only here describe the seal of William, Earl of Caithness, as it was appended; upon which was a shield couche, and quartered, first and fourth, a ship under sail; second and third, a lion rampant, and over all, dividing the quarters, a cross ingrailed; the shield was timbred with a helmet, ensignified with a flower-de-luce for crest; supported on the dexter by a griffin, and on the sinister by a lion, and the legend round the seal, Sig. Willielmi, Comitis Caithanie. In other Books, the arms of the Earl of Caithness are otherwise blazoned and illuminated; in Mr. Pont's they are, quarterly, first azure, a ship at anchor within a double trouble counter-flowered or, for the title of Orkney; second or, a lion rampant gules, which he takes for the name of Spar; the third and second, and the fourth azure, a ship under sail or, for Caithness, and over all a cross ingrailed and interchanged, argent and sable for the name of Sinclair; which arms was timbred with a coronet and helmet, with a wreath argent and sable, ensignied with a cock, proper; with the motto, Commis thy work to God: supporters, two griffins proper, armed and beaked or. But James Esplin, Marchmont Herald, gives these arms otherwise illuminated in his book, viz. quarterly, first and fourth azure, a ship at anchor or; second and third argent, a lion rampant gules, over all, dividing the quarters, a cross ingrailed sable, supported on the dexter by a griffin, proper, and, the sinister by a mermaid combing her head, proper; and for crest a demi-bear issuing out of a coronet; with the foresaid motto. Sir George Mackenzie, in his Science of Heraldry, gives them thus; quarterly, first azure, a ship at anchor, her oars erected in salter within a double treasure, counter-flowered or, by the name of Spar; second and third or, a lion rampant gules, by the name of fourth azure, a ship under sail or, (by some argent) by the title of Caithness; over all, dividing the coats, a cross ingrailed sable, by the name of St. Clair.

Sinclair of Herdmanston in East Lothian, another ancient family, has a charter of these lands from Richard de Mareville Constabularius. Regis Sectorum, granted to Henrico de Sacuto Claras, in the year 1162, (Sir James Dalrymple's Collections, page 432;) and William de Sacuto Claro de Herdmanston, miles, obtains a charter from King Robert I. of the barony of Cesswuth, factiendo servitium quatuor architectenium in exercitio regis. John Sinclair of Herdmanston, upon his resignation of these lands in the King James IV. obtains a new charter of the lands of Herdmanston and Carfrae, in the shire of Berwick; as also of the lands of Pencaitland which were fallen in the King's hands, by the non-entry of John Lord Maxwell, the 3d of March 1524. The Sinclairs of Herdmanston carried argent, a cross ingrailed azure. Whether the family of Roslin, or that of Herdmanston be the eldest family, I shall not take upon me to determine; but these of the first very far surpassed the last, and most other families within the kingdom, in grandeur and wealth; but now both these ancient families are centred in the person of Henry, now Lord Sinclair, grandson and heir to Henry the last Lord Sinclair; who, by his mother, the heiress, and by his father, John Sinclair, is undoubtedly representative of the Sinclairs of Roslin and Herdmanston.

Sir Robert Sinclair of Longformacus, Baronet, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a cross ingrailed gules, for Sinclair; second and third argent, on a bend azure, three stars of the first, for Towers of Innerleith; crest, a cock with open bill, and wings expanded, proper, having a chain about his neck, and brock or; with the motto, Vincula tenere. L. R. See the Plate of Achievements.

This family appears, by their evidents, which I have seen, to be the oldest branch of the Sinclairs of Roslin: And it is thought, as I observed before in the account of the family of Roslin, that one Gregory Sinclair, who swore allegiance to Edward I. of England, was brother of Henry Baron of Roslin, and first of the family of Longformacus, in the shire of Berwick. However, it is certain, that the Sinclairs possessed the lands of Longformacus, as soon, if not before the Sinclairs of Roslin were dignified with the title of Earl of Orkney, and Baron of Roslin; for I have presently in my hands, an evident, whereby Henry, the first Earl of Orkney, obliges himself to infeft his beloved cousin Sir James Sinclair, Baron of Longformacus, in a twenty merkland. The words of the obligation are, "Universis patenti, &c. Nos Henricum de Sancto Claro, Comitem Orcadie, & Domini num de Roslyn, teneri firmiter, & fideliter obligari carissimo consanguineo nostro, Jacobo de Sancto Claro, Domino de Longfurtdnakuse," &c. Which evident is dated at Roslin, the 22d of June 1334. The witnesses are, Thomas Erskine of Dun, George Abernethy of Soulston, Walter Halyburton of that Ilk, and John Halyburton of Dirleton. Afterwards, James Sinclair of Longformacus, son of James Sinclair of Longformacus, obtains a charter from Henry Earl of Orkney, Lord Sinclair and Nithsdale, of twenty merks yearly, to be uplifted out of the lands of Leny, dated at Roslin 20th February 1418. When and how they came to the lands of Longformacus, I cannot be positive; but, for certain, they had these lands in the reign of Robert II. from the Earl of March. I see a charter of King Robert III. in the fourth year of his reign, confirming a charter of George Dunbar Earl of March, granted to James Sinclair of Longformacus, of the same lands, lying within the Earldom of March, and sheriffdom of Berwick. From this same James Sinclair was lineally descended James Sinclair, eldest son and apparent heir to David Sinclair of Longformacus; who, upon his father's resignation, obtains a new charter of the barony of Longformacus, from Alexander Duke of Albany, Earl of March, Lord Annandale, and the Isle of Man, dated at the castle of Dunbar, 12th of October 1472, (which evidents are in the custody of the present Longformacus.) From the above James, last mentioned, was descended Sir Robert Sinclair of Longformacus, baronet, an eminent lawyer, who married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Douglas of Blackerston, in the Merse; by whom he had a son and successor, Sir John. And, secondly, he married Margaret Alexander, Hn daughter to William Lord Alexander, eldest son of the Earl of Stirling; she bare to him two daughters; the eldest was married to John, Master of Bargeny, and the other to Sir John Swinton of that ilk.

Sir John Sinclair of Longformacus married Jean Towers, only daughter and heiress of Sir John Towers of Innerleith, who bare to him the present Sir Robert Sinclair of Longformacus, baronet; who quartered his mother's arms with his own, as above blazoned.

Sir Robert Sinclair of Stevenston, descended of a second son of Longformacus, argent, on a cross ingrailed gules, five bezants or.

Sinclair of Blanse, quarterly, first and fourth, the same with Herdmanson; second and third or, three martlets gules, as in Pont's MSS.

James Sinclair of Freswick, eldest son of a second marriage of Sinclair of Rattar, whose grandfather was a third brother of the Earl of Caithness, quarterly, first azure, a ship at anchor, with oars in saltier, within a double trellure counterflowered or; second, or, a lion rampant gules; third as the second, and the fourth azure, a ship under sail or; and, over all, dividing the quarters, a cross ingrailed sable, all within a bordure chequed, or and gules; crest, a cross patee within a circle of stars argent: motto, Via crucis, via lucis. N. R.

William Sinclair of Dumbaithe, descended of the Earl of Caithness, quarterly, first azure, a ship at anchor, her oars in saltier, within a double trellure counterflowered or; second and third or, a lion rampant gules; fourth azure, a ship under sail or; and, over all, dividing the quarters, a cross ingrailed sable, all within a bordure chequed, or and gules; crest, a cross patee within a circle of stars argent: motto, Via crucis, via lucis. Ibid.

William Sinclair of Dumbaithe, descended of the Earl of Caithness, quarterly, first azure, a ship at anchor, her oars in saltier, within a double trellure counterflowered or; second and third or, a lion rampant gules; fourth azure, a ship under sail or; and, over all, dividing the quarters, a cross ingrailed sable, all within a bordure chequed, or and gules; crest, a cross patee within a circle of stars argent: motto, Via crucis, via lucis. Ibid.

Patrick Sinclair of Ulbster, carries the same three quartered coats, as above, with a cross ingrailed sable dividing them, all within a bordure gobonated, sable and argent; crest, a star issuing out of a cloud, proper: motto, Aspera virtus.

Thomas Sinclair, lawful son to William Sinclair, merchant in Thurso, descended of the family of Caithness, argent, a cross ingrailed sable, between two mullers azure: motto, Fear God and live. L. R.

John Sinclair of Brimmies, a son of a second marriage of Mr John Sinclair of Ulbster, descended of the family of Sinclair of Mey, come of the House of Caithness, argent, a cross ingrailed on the outer side, and invested on the inner, sable, all within a bordure gobonated of the second and first; crest, an arrow; and the branch of a palm crossing other in saltier, proper: motto, Detur forti palma. Ibid.

William Sinclair of Dun, argent, a cross ingrailed sable, within a bordure of the second, charged with eight plates argent; crest, a man on horseback, proper: motto, Promptus ad certamen. Ibid.

Thomas Sinclair, descended of the family of Dun in Caithness, argent, a cross ingrailed sable, within a bordure waved of the second, charged with six stars of the first; crest, a demi-man holding in one hand a sea-cat, and in the other, a pair of pencils, all proper: motto, Sic rectius progrederit. Ibid.

Alexander Sinclair of Stamstare, third brother to William Sinclair of Dumbaithe, descended of the family of Caithness, the same with Dumbaithe; but, for difference, has a bordure invected gules; crest and motto as Dumbaithe. Ibid.

Francis Sinclair of Stircock, the quartered coat of Caithness, with the cross ingrailed, dividing the quarters, all within a bordure gobonated, gules and or; crest, a naked arm issuing out of a cloud, grasping a small sword, with another lying by; all proper: motto, Me vincit. ego mereo. Ibid.

John Sinclair, Writer in Edinburgh, descended of the family of Caithness, argent, a cross ingrailed between two mascales in chief sable: motto, Crux dat salutem. Ibid.
OF THE CROSS, &c.

Sir James Sinclair of Oldboth, Baronet, argent, a cross parted per cross, sable and gules in grailed; in the dexter canton, the badge of knight-baronet; crest, an otter issuing out of the wreath: motto, Quocumque ferar. Ibid.

The surname of Rait or Rhit, or, a cross in grailed sable: The first of this name is said to be a German, from the country of Rhetta, from whence the name; and, it is said, to have come to Scotland in the reign of Malcolm IV. and from that king got some lands in the shire of Nairn, which he called after his own name. In the reign of John Balliol, mention is made by our historians of Sir Gervis Rait of that Ilk. In the reign of Robert III. Sir Alexander Rait of that Ilk, having killed the Thane of Calder, fled to the Merns, and lived under the protection of the Earl Marischal; his son, Mark Rait, married Dunnnet, heiress of Halgreen, and got with her these lands. David Rait of Halgreen and Drumnagar gets a charter from King James III. of these lands, of whom were descended the Raits, lairds of Halgreen; who carried as above, for crest, an anchor, proper; motto, Spero meliora. Lyon Register.

Mr William Rait of Pitforthie, descended of a second son of Halgreen, or, on a cross in grailed sable, a hunting-horn of the first, stringed gules; crest, an anchor, proper, ensign on the top, with a crescent argent: motto, Meliora spero sequorique. Lyon Register.

William Rait, Merchant in Dundee, whose father was a second son of Halgreen, or, a cross in grailed within a bordure in grailed sable; crest, a lily: motto, Sperandum. Lyon Register.

The surname of Widderspoon, or, a cross in grailed betwixt four crescents gules, as in Mr Pont's Manuscript.

Ayton of that Ilk, argent, a cross in grailed, cantoned with four roses gules. This was of old an eminent family in the shire of Berwick, in the reigns of Robert the Bruce, and Robert II.; which family continued in a male succession till the reign of King James III.: It ended in an heiress, who was married to George Home, second son to Alexander Lord Home, and has continued in the name of Home of Ayton, who have been in use to place over the quartered coat of Home in the centre, one of the red roses of Aiton.

Ayton of Dunmure in Fife, being the next heir-male of Ayton of that Ilk, in the shire of Berwick. I have seen a seal of —— Ayton of Dunmure, who was Captain of the Castle of Stirling, in the reign of King James V. upon which was a shield quartered, first, a chevron between two stars in chief, and a crescent in base; second, the coat of Ayton as before; third, an anchor; and the fourth as first. This family, since, has procured a signature and warrant from the King, for calling the lands of Dunmure, Ayton; and the family is now designed Ayton of that Ilk, and carries only the arms of Ayton, argent, a cross in grailed, cantoned with four roses gules; and for crest, a hand pulling a rose proper: with the motto, Deceperae dabunt odorum. So matriculated in the Lyon Register, at the desire of Sir John Ayton of that Ilk, Baronet.

Sir John Ayton of Kippo, a cadet of the immediate family, being sworn Gentleman-Usher of the Black-Rod in England, in presence of the Sovereign and Knights Companions of the most noble Order of the Garter, the 20th of February, Anno 15. Caroli II. carried the foresaid arms, and added, by permission, the badge of his office, being a black baton, ensign on the top with one of the Lions of England; crest, a rose-tree vert, flowered gules: with the motto, Et deceperae dabunt odorum.

John Ayton of Kinaldy, descended of the family of Ayton of that Ilk, carries the arms of Ayton as above, within a bordure of the second; crest, a rose-tree vert, flowered gules: motto, Deceperae dabunt odorum.

John Ayton of Inchdarnie, another cadet, gives the arms of Ayton as above, differenced with the addition of a crescent argent; and, for crest, a rose gules: with the motto, Virtute orta occident varius. Which blazons are in the Lyon Register.

Ainstoun of that Ilk, an ancient family in East-Lothian, which ended in an heiress, who was married to —— Hepburn, descended of Hepburn of Waughton, carried argent, a cross in grailed sable, cantoned with four cross ecos-lets fitched gules. As in Mr Pont's Manuscript. Other books make the cross crosetts sable.

Balderston of that llk, in the shire of Linlithgow, argent, a cross sable, with two cross crosetts fitched of the last, in the two upper cantons. Balderston and Bauderton are to be found in the Rugman Roll: Pryne's Collections.

George Balderston, Apothecary and Chirurgeon in Edinburgh, as descended of the same family, carries the foresaid arms, and, for difference, charges the cross in the centre with a masce or. As in the new Register.

Keir of the Case, argent, a cross ingrailed sable, between four roses gules. Pont's manuscript.

The name of Rind, ermine, on a cross gules, a cross croset fitched or, and in the sinister quarter argent, two mullets azure: as in Sir George Mackenzie's Science of Heraldry.

Duddingston of that llk, argent on a cross ingrailed sable, between two cross crosetts fitched gules, in chief of the last, a star or. Workman's MS.

Duddingston of Sandford, gules, a chevron argent, between three cross crosetts fitched or; crest, a grey-hound's head couped, proper: motto, Recreat & Allit. Lyon Register.

The Episcopal See of Durham has for its ensign, azure, a cross or, cantoned with four lions rampant, argent.

The name of Butter of old with us carried argent, a cross potent (or bottony, as some call it) azure, betwixt four men's hearts gules; but Butter of Gormach carries now argent, a plain cross sable, between four men's hearts gules; crest, two hands issuing out of a cloud, drawing an arrow in a bow; with the motto, Diligit Deum. In the Lyon Register.

Having spoke before of the surname of Barclay, which carries cross patees, I shall here add some more blazons of families of that name, from our old and modern books, in which they have reduced the number of the ten crosses patee, to three, as more agreeable to arms in accompanying a chevron, according to the opinion of some heralds, and, for their difference, have altered the tinctures of the field.

Barclay of Cullermy or Colairnie, an ancient family in the shire of Fife; David Barclay of Colairnie is one of the assessors in a perambulation between Easter and Wester-Knghorn, 1457, azure, a chevron or, between three crosses patee argent: as in Workman and Pont's Manuscripts.

Barclay of Garthie in the year 1421, says Sir James Balfour, carried gules, on a chevron between three crosses patee argent, as many hearts of the first.

Barclay of Towie, in the shire of Aberdeen, azure, a chevron or, between two cross patees in chief, and a lozenge voided in base argent. Balfour's Manuscript. And there also,

Barclay of Mathers or Madders, azure, a chevron, and in chief three cross patees argent.

Barclay of Kippo, azure, a chevron argent, betwixt two cross patees in chief, and a mullet in base or. Pont's Manuscript.

Barclay of Touch, descended of the family of Colairnie, azure, a chevron or, between three cross patees argent, within a bordure chequè of the last and first; crest, a cross patee: motto, Cruce salutem confert. Lyon Register. And there, Sir Robert Barclay of Pearston, Baronet, azure, a chevron betwixt three cross patees or; crest, a sword pale-ways, proper; hilted and pommelled or; motto, Cruce Christi nostra corona.

Barclay of Johnston, descended of Barclay of Madders, azure, a chevron between three cross patees, argent, within a bordure indented of the last; crest, the sun issuing out of a cloud. proper: motto, Servabit me semper Iobowa.

William Barclay of Balnakeuan, second lawful son to David Barclay of Johnston, azure, a chevron ingrailed between three cross patees argent, all within a bordure indented of the last; crest, a cross patee: motto, Solà cruce salus. Both matriculated in the Lyon Register.

Dawson, gules, three cross patees argent. Mackenzie's Heraldry.

Duguid of Aucheneuf, azure, three cross patees argent; crest, a dove holding a laurel-branch in her hair, proper: motto, Patientia & spe. Lyon Register.

Bennet, gules, a cross patee or, between three mullets argent. Mackenzie's Heraldry.

Sir George Bennet, Baronet, living in Poland, gules, on a cheveron betwixt three stars argent, as many cross pates of the first; crest, a demi-lion issuing out of the wreath, and holding, in his dexter paw, a cross patee gules. Lyon Register.

Sir William Bennet of Grubbet, Baronet, gules, on a cheveron, between three stars argent, a cross patee gules; crest, a hand issuing out of a cloud, holding forth a cross patee fitched: motto, Beneficium qui tollit crucem. Lyon Register.

Sibbald of Balgonie, in the shire of Fife, argent, a cross moline, square pierced gules; some books give the cross azure. As for the antiquity of the name, I have met with it in several charters in the reigns of King William and Alexander II. as in that charter of Rogerus Quincie Comes de Winton, to Serus de Seaton, Duncanus Sibbaldus is a witness. And in anno 1246, Donatus Sibbaldus is a witness to a charter by the same Rogerus Quincie Earl of Winton, or Winchester in England, to Adam de Seiton, de Maritagio bercidis Atem ae Fasiue. For more documents of the antiquity of the name, see Sir Robert Sibbald's History of the Shire of Fife and Kinross, p. 142. Robert Duke of Albany and Earl of Fife grants a charter of the lands of Kossie, and others, to Sir John Sibbald of Balgonie, which appears to have been the principal family of the name. George Douglas Earl of Angus married Elizabeth, daughter to Sir Andrew Sibbald of Balgonie; and of this marriage was born Archibald Earl of Angus, father of the learned Gavin Douglas Bishop of Dunkeld. Sir Thomas Sibbald of Balgonie was principal Treasurer to King James II. And, in the reign of King James IV. Sir Andrew Sibbald of Balgonie was Sheriff of Fife, having no issue but a daughter, Helena Sibbald, his heiress, was married to Robert de Lunden, a younger son of the Lord of Lunden of that Ilk, who got with her the estate, and kept the surname of Lunden, of whom came the Lundens of Balgonie, who quartered the arms of Sibbald with their own. Sibbald of Rankeilor, the next family to Balgonie, carried the fore-said arms within a bordure azure. Andrew Sibbald of Rankeilor-Over, had, by his lady Margaret, daughter to George Learmonth of Balcome, three sons: The first, James, the father of Sir David Sibbald of Rankeilor, in whom this family ended; the second son, George, Doctor of Medicine, and Professor of Philosophy abroad, he carried for arms, argent, a cross moline gules, within a bordure compose sable and or, the last charged with mascles of the second, which were the figures of his mother Learmonth's bearing; the third son, Mr David Sibbald, was Keeper of the Great Seal under Chancellor Hay, father to Sir Robert Sibbald of Kips, Doctor of Medicine, a learned antiquary, who carried for arms, argent, a cross moline, within a bordure azure, and a star of the last for his difference; crest, a mort-head proper: motto, Me certum non certa fictet. L. R.

Mr Patrick Sibbald, Parson of St Nicholas Church at Aberdeen, and Rector of the Marischal College there, descended of a lawful brother of Sibbald of Kair, who was a cadet of the ancient family of Balgonie, argent, a cross moline azure, pierced in the centre within a bordure chequy of the second and first; crest, a hand erected, proper: motto, Ora & labora. Lyon Register.

The cross moline, as I said before, must be pierced round or square, to distinguish it from the cross anechor; and it is carried by some representing the Ink of the Mill, as relative to the name. As by the name of Mill and Miller.

Robert Mylne of Balfargie, (his arms and descent are thus in the Lyon Register), his Majesty's Master Mason, nephew and representative of the deceast John Mylne, late Master Mason to his Majesty; which John was lawful son to the deceast John Mylne, also his Majesty's Master Mason; and which John was lawful son to the deceast John Mylne, likewise his Majesty's Master Mason; and which John was lawful son to the deceast Thomas Mylne, likewise his Majesty's Master Mason; and which Thomas was son to the deceast Alexander Mylne, also his Majesty's Master Mason; and which Alexander was son of the deceast John Mylne, also his Majesty's Master Mason; by virtue of a gift granted to him thereof by King James III. carries for arms, or, a cross moline azure, square pierced of the field, etc.
between three mullets of the second; crest, Pallas's head couped at the shoulders proper, vested about the neck vert, on the head a helmet azuré, a beaver turned up, and on the top a plume of feathers gules: motto, Tam in arte quam Marte. Lyon Register.

Thomas Mylyne of Muriton, or, a cross moline azuré, pierced lozenge-ways of the field betwixt three mullets of the second, within a bordure inverted sable; crest, a dexter hand holding a folding book, proper: motto, Efficient clarum studia. Lyon Register.

James Mill of Balweyllo, or, a cross moline ingrafted azuré between three mullets of the last; crest, a cross moline situate in the sea, proper, surrounded with two stalks of wheat, disposed orle-ways: motto, Clarum reddit industria. Lyon Register.

James Milne of Blairton, Merchant in Aberdeen, or, a cross moline azuré, pierced oval-ways of the field, betwixt three mullets sable, all within a bordure waved of the second; crest, a galley with oars erect in saltier, proper: motto, Dat cura commodum. Lyon Register.

The name of Miller, argent, a cross moline between four hearts gules. Pont's Manuscript.

Matthew Miller of Glenlee, Apothecary in Kilmarnock, argent, a cross moline azuré, the base wavy vert, in chief a lozenge between two mullets of the second; crest, a hand with two fingers pointing upwards proper: motto, Manent optima caele. Lyon Register.

George Miller of Gourliebank, eldest lawful son to James Miller, who married Marion Thomson, heiress of Gourliebank, quarterly first and fourth argent, a cross moline azuré, placed in a loch, proper, and in chief two mullets of the second for the name of Miller; second and third, a stag's head cabossed and attired with ten tynes gules; on a chief azuré, a cross croset fitchèd or, betwixt two spur-rowels of the first, for the name of Thomson; crest, two arms, their hands joined proper: motto, Unione Augetur. Lyon Register.

The name of Deans of Longhermiston, argent, a cross moline azuré, surmounted of a sword in pale, proper; and for crest, another sword ensign'd on the top with a cross patee: with the motto, Arte vel Marte. Lyon Register.

The surname of Hudson, argent, a cross moline between two lozenges in chief, and a boat's head couped in base sable, armed or. Pont's Manuscript.

The surname of Molineux in England, azuré, a cross moline or.

Sir William Beversham of Millbeck, in England, gules, a fer de mouline argent, between two martlets or.

William Bentinck, who came over with William Prince of Orange to England, afterwards King, was, by letters patent, bearing date the 9th of April 1689, created Baron of Cirencester, Viscount of Woodstock, and Earl of Portland; and, anno 1692, installed Knight of the most noble Order of the Garter, carried azuré, a cross moline argent.

Examples of a Cross Croslet Are These Following:

The surname of Linton of Drumerick, gules, a cross croslet argent, cantoned with four crescents or. As in Ballour's Manuscript. But Pont gives to the name of Linton, gules, an eagle with wings displayed argent, and on a chief of the last three roses of the first.

The name of Spalding, or, on a cross azuré, five cross croslets of the first; some, in place of these cross croslets, have crescents. Sir George Mackenzie gives to Spalding of Ashmittle, or, a two-handed sword in pale azuré.

John Spalding, Esq. in France, or, on a cross azuré, five cross croslets of the first; crest, a cross croslet fitchèd or: motto, Hinc mibi salus. Lyon Register.
OF THE CROSS, &c.

D'Arcy Earl of Holderness, Baron Darcy, created by King Charles I. Baron Darcy, and Earl by Charles II. 1682, azure, semé of cross croslets, three cinquefoils argent.

The ancient and honourable family of Marr, Earls of Marr, carried azure, a bend betwixt six cross croslets fitch’d or. How soon this family was honoured with the title of Earl I cannot ascertain, some say in the reign of Malcolm III. though before, and in his time, there were Comites (Earls); yet it was not customary to name the earls by their countries, till the reign of Alexander I. and Malcolm IV. about which time we find Gartnaech Comes de Marr, Morgund Comes de Marr, and Willielmus Comes de Marr. This last, in the reigns of Alexander II. and III. was a benefactor to the prior and canons of St Andrews, as in their Register: He confirmed donations, which his grandfather Morgund Comes ausus suus, and grandmother Agnes Comitissa avo(a) sua feuerant dietiis monachis, anno 1260.

His son, Duncan Earl of Marr, in 1284, was one of the nobility who obliged themselves to own and acknowledge Margaret the maiden of Norway, as lawful Queen of Scotland, in case King Alexander, her grandfather, should die without heirs male of his body. Upon the death of that princess, when the grand competition arose for the crown, he declared for the right of Robert Bruce. This Earl dying about the year 1294, he left a son Gratney, who succeeded him, and a daughter Isabel, married to King Robert the Bruce, by whom she had only one daughter, the Princess Marjory, wife to Walter, Lord High Steward of Scotland, mother by him to King Robert II. first of the Stewartian line.

Gratney Earl of Marr married a daughter of Robert Bruce Earl of Carrick, and sister to King Robert II. by whom he had Donald, who succeeded, and a daughter Helen, wife to Sir John Monteith; she bore to him a daughter Christian, married to Sir Edward Kerth, whose only daughter and heiress, Janet, was married to Thomas Lord Erskine, mother by him to Robert Lord Erskine, who laid claim to the earldom of Marr, in the reign of King James I.

Donald Earl of Marr succeeded his father Earl Gratney: he had the misfortune to be taken prisoner by the English at the battle of Methven, and detained prisoner by them till after the battle of Bannockburn, but was exchanged for another person of quality, in anno 1331. After the death of Thomas Randolph Earl of Murray, Governor of Scotland, in the personage of King David II. he was chosen guardian of that part of Scotland be North Forth, but shortly after he lost his life at the battle of Duplin, 3d August 1332, leaving issue by Isabel, his wife, daughter of Sir Alexander Stewart of Bunkill, sister to John Earl of Angus, Thomas his son and heir: and a daughter Margaret, married to William first Earl of Douglas, after his decease, married Sir John Swinton.

Thomas Earl of Marr, in the year 1538, was Lord High Chamberlain of Scotland: he married first the heiress of the family of Monteith, and after her death, Margaret, eldest daughter and co-heir of Thomas Stewart Earl of Angus, who dying without issue 1379, his estate and honour devolved to his sister Margaret, Countess of Douglas, married to William the first Earl of Douglas, who, in right of his wife, as in old evidences, is designed Earl of Douglas and Marr, and on his seals appended to them, the arms of Marr as above blazoned, are quartered with these of Douglas; he had by the Lady Margaret, heiress of Marr, a son and a daughter: James the son succeeded his father, was Earl of Douglas and Marr, and had the arms of Marr quartered with these of Douglas: he died without lawful issue, being slain at the battle of Otterburn, on the 31st of July 1388, and was succeeded in the earldom of Douglas by his half brother, Archibald Lord of Galloway; and in the earldom of Marr by his full sister, Isabel Countess of Marr, in right of her mother Margaret. She married, first, Duncan Drummond of Cargill, who died without issue; and secondly, she took for her husband, Alexander Stewart, natural son of Alexander Stewart of Badenoch, Earl of Buchan, fourth son of King Robert II. He was, in right of his wife, Earl of Marr, and quartered her arms, before blazoned, with these of his own, or, a fesse chequed azure and argent (the arms of Stewart) between three open crowns gules; which last were the armorial figures of the lordship of Garioch. He was a man of great parts, an ornament to his country, for his honour and profit; he died in the year 1436, without issue, lamented by all: and so the lineal issue of the earldom of Marr ended in his Lady Isabel Countess of Marr.
Sir Robert Erskine claimed right to the earldom of Marr, as descended of a daughter of Grantney Earl of Marr and as nearest of kin to Isabel Countess of Marr: so that, in the year 1438, he was served heir to the Lady Isabel Douglas, tanguum legitumne & propriiuid barres dictae Domione Isabello, and was designed Earl of Marr, Lord Erskine and Garioch, and quartered the arms of Marr and Garioch with his own: but King James II. reduced the Lord Erskine's right to the earldom of Marr, and annexed it to the crown, and afterwards gave it, with the lordship of Garioch, to his third son John Stewart Earl of Marr, Lord Garioch in the 1462, who carried, quarterly, first and fourth, Scotland; second and third, the arms of Marr as before, azure, a bend betwixt six cross creslets fitchèd or, and, over all, an escutcheon or, a fesse chequèd azure and argent, accompanied with three ducal crowns gules, for the Lordship of Garioch; he died unmarrried in the year 1479, and that noble feu returned again to the crown, and was bestowed by King James III. on a mean man, Robert Cochran, a favourite of that king's; but he did not enjoy it long; and then he gave that title to John, a younger son of his, who died young. Queen Mary bestowed that dignity on her natural brother James Stewart; but upon better advertisement of John Lord Erskine, his right and pretensions to that earldom, James Stewart resigned it, and, in lieu of it, was made Earl of Murray, and the earldom of Marr was given to John Lord Erskine, and confirmed in Parliament 1567. From him is lineally descended the Earls of Marr, who quartered the arms of Marr with these of Erskine as before: For an exact and full account of this noble family, see Mr Crawford's Peerage, at the title of Marr.

Somerville of Drum, representor of the Lord Somerville, carries azure, three stars or, accompanied with seven cross creslets fitchèd argent, three in chief, one in the centre, two in the flanks, and the last in base; which figures so disposed I have seen on an ancient stone in the house of Drum, and which are so illuminated in our old books of blazon, supported by two hounds proper, collared gules; and for crest, a dragon proper, spouting out fire behind and before, standing on a wheel or, (the story of which crest I shall give afterwards); with the motto, Fear God in Life. These were the armorial ensigns of the old Lords of Somerville; the present James Somerville of Drum is the twenty-fifth in a lineal male descent from Sir Gaultier de Somerville, who came to England with William the Conqueror, and he is the heir and representor of the family of Somerville of Whichmout, in England, now extinct, and in Scotland, of Somervilles of Linton, Lord Somervilles of Carmwath and Drum, and undoubted chief of the name, as by a Manuscript of the family, handsomely instructed by old evidents, since King William the Lion, which I have seen.

The name of Rattray of Rathrie, azure, a fesse argent, between six cross creslets fitchèd or. In the reign of Malcolm III. amongst the old surnames, Hector Bocce mentions this, the principal of which was Rattray of that Ilk, in the shire of Perth. In the Register of the abbacy of Arbroath, there is a perambulation, of the date 1252, between that convent and Thomas de Rattray, about the lands of Kingelt drum: and, in the reign of King Robert the Bruce, Eustachius de Rattray was falsely accused in the Parliament of Perth for treason against that king, but was fairly acquitted. This family continued in a lineal male descent to the reign of King James V. which then ended in an heirress, Jean Rattray, who was married to John Stewart, Earl of Athol.

The next heir male is Rattray of Craighall, who carries the foresaid armorial bearing, as in Pont's Manuscript.

Lieutenant Colonel GEORGE RATTRAY, son to Sir JOHN RATTRAY, Lieutenant Colonel to the Scots Regiment in France, who was son to Mr James Rattray, son to Rattray of Craighall, heir male of Rattray of that Ilk, azure, a fesse argent betwixt six cross creslets fitchèd 3 and 3 or; crest, a dexter hand proper, holding a cross creslet or; motto, Ex hoc victoria signa. L. R.

The name of Cheyne is ancient with us, and in our old books of blazon, CHEYNE Lord CHEYNE carried gules, a bend betwixt six cross creslets fitchèd argent. For the antiquity of the name I shall here mention a charter (which I saw in the hands of the curious Mr William Wilson, one of the Clerks of the Session) without a date, granted by Reynald Cheyne, son to Reynald, who was son to Reynald of the lands of Durie, which he dispensed to Gilbert, son to Robert of Strathern; and which charter was afterwards confirmed by Adam of Killcolmahq, Earl of Carrick; and after that, King Robert the Bruce gives the lands of Dunknany, which formerly belonged to Roger Mountray, to Sir Reginald Cheyne, as that king's charter bears in the Earl of Haddington's Collections.

Cheyne of Esselmont, another old family of this surname, carried, quarterly, first and fourth azure, a bend between six croslets fitcheè argent, for Cheyne; second and third argent, three laurel leaves slipped vert, for the surname of Marshall: which bearings, finely illuminated, are to be seen in an old genealogical tree of the family of Seaton, since Earls of Winton, impaled on the left side, for Christian Cheyne, a daughter of Esselmont, Lady of Sir Alexander Seaton of that Ilk, her husband, Captain and Governor of Berwick: who both, for their singular courage and love to their country (as all our histories testify) stood and saw their two sons hanged before their eyes, by the cruel and perfidious Edward III. of England; because Sir Alexander would not deliver up the town of Berwick to him before the time agreed upon; for which one of his sons was a hostage, and the other a captive.

George Cheyne of Esselmont matriculates his arms in our New Register thus; quarterly, first and fourth azure, a bend between six crosses patee fitcheè argent for Cheyne; second and third argent, three leaves slipped vert, for the name of Marshall of Esselmont; and for crest, a patee fitcheè argent, with the motto, Patiencie vincit.

Cheyne of Duffus, another family which carried the like arms, but long since ended in an heiress, was married to Nicol Sutherland, a younger son of Kenneth, Earl of Sutherland, who with her got the barony of Duffus. Of them is descended the Lords of Duffus, who have been in use to compose with their own figures the three stars, and accompanied them with as many cross croslets fitcheè (of which, in another place) to perpetuate the memory of Cheyne of Duffus.

The name of Adamson, argent, a star gules, betwixt three cross croslets fitcheè azure. Workman's Manuscript.

Adamson of Graycook, argent, a crescent gules, betwixt three cross croslets fitcheè azure, as in Pont's Manuscript. I take the surname of Adam to be the same with Adamson, for they carry the like figures, and the surname of Ede to be the contraction of Adam.

David Ede of Moneaght, so recorded in the Lyon Register, argent, three cross croslets fitcheè gules; and for crest, a cross croslet, and a slain saltier-ways; with the motto, Crux mibi grata gules.

In the Chatalry of Dunfermline, and in the Earl of Haddington's Collections, Fol. 577, there is a writ of King Robert the Bruce, the 14th year of his reign, declaring Adam the son of Adam, and his four sons, to be freemen, titled Libertas Adami filii Adami coram justitiario nostro; which bears these words, "Compertum & declaratum est quod Adamus, filius Adamii, non es hominoster, ligius sen natus, quin pro voluntate sua, &c. propter quod prefatum Adamum & liberam sui Robertum, Johanne, Reginaldum, & Duncanum liberos nostros fore declamus, & iesos ad omni jegu & enere servitutis quietos reddimus, per presentes in perpetuum. In cuius rei testimonium &c. has litteras nostras perpetuo duraturas, sibi fieri fecimus patentes, apud Aberdeen, 10th September, regni nostri 14th." These letters patent of King Robert the Bruce are the oldest documents I have met with for the surname of Adam or Adamson: and I take them to be the first of that surname with us.

The surname of Tulloch, or, on a fesse between three cross croslets fitcheè gules, as many stars argent. Balfour's Manuscript.

I have seen a transsumt of an old charter (penes Comiten de Kinaird) taken before William Tulloch, Bishop of Murray, to which his seal of office was appended, having the image of a church-man in his proper habit, holding, with both his hands before his breast, a crucifix, and below his feet was the shield of arms of Bishop Tulloch, a fesse charged with two stars, between three cross croslets fitcheè. The date of this transsumt was in the year 1431; the witnesses were Sir Thomas Moodie, and Sir Martin Tulloch.

Achny of Sorbie, argent, a cross croslet fitcheè, issuing out of a crescent sable.
OF THE SALTIER OR SAUTOIR.

Pout's Manuscript. And there others of that name carry argent, three roebucks' heads couped azuré, collared or, and a bell pendent thereat gules.

Before I end with the cross croislets fitcheé, so frequent in arms, I shall add some examples of foreign bearings.

The country of GALLICIA in Spain, azuré, semé of cross croislets fitcheé at the foot, and a cup covered or. The French blazon them thus, d'azur semé de croix recouvertes, au pied fitcheé, au calice couvert d'or. They tell us, as especially in that little book Œuvres d'Armoiries, that this country was erected into a kingdom by Ferdinand the Great, 1060, in favour of his younger son: which country was afterwards annexed to the kingdom of Castile. The reason given for carrying semé of crosses, is upon account of the frequent devotions of Pilgrims to St James of Compostella in that country: and because the crosses there have not been so defaced and beat down as in other countries, by the incursions of the Moors. The Chalice or Cup is speaking and relative to the name of that country, Calice or Gallicia; as many armorial figures do in the arms of several countries in Spain: thus the kingdom of Leon carries a lion, and Castile a castle, &c. Many honourable families in England carry cross croislets, as the honourable families of the name of Howard, gules, a bend betwixt six cross croislets fitcheé argent, with suitable differences of their descent from the principle house.

CAPEL Earl of Essex, gules, a lion rampant between three cross croislets fitcheé or.

Arthur Lord CapeI, by the special favour of King Charles II. in respect of his father's loyalty, was advanced to the title and dignity of Viscount Malden and Earl of Essex, in the 15th of his reign, anno 1661.

CRAVEN Lord Craven, argent, a fesse betwixt six cross croislets fitcheé gules. This family was dignified with the title of Baron by King Charles I.

CLINTON Earl of Lincoln, argent, six cross croislets fitcheé sable, 3, 2, and 1, on a chief azuré, two mullets pierced gules.

Windsor Earl of Plymoufh, gules, a saltier argent between twelve cross croislets or, which properly is the bearing of Windsor. Thomas Lord Windsor was created Earl of Plymoufh by King Charles II. 1682.

WINDSOR Lord Mountjoy, the same as the Earl of Plymoufh, with a crescent for difference, being a younger son of Thomas Lord Windsor, and Earl of Plymoufh. RICHARD Earl of Warnerick and Holland, by King James I. of Great Britain, gules, a chevron between three crosses bottony or.

CARLYLE or Carlyle, argent, a cross floré gules. Sir William Carlyle in Annandale married Margaret Bruce, a sister of King Robert I. as by a charter of that King to them of the lands of Crumston, (Haddington's Collections.) Afterwards the family was designed of Torthorald, and King James III. raised the family to the dignity of a Peer, by the title of Lord Carlyle of Torthorald, in the person of Sir James Carlyle, in the year 1472. Which dignity continued in the family till it ended in an heiress, Elizabeth Carlyle, in the year 1582, who married Sir James Douglas of Parkhead, of whom came the Douglas Lord Carlyle, of whom before: The achievement of the Lords Carlyle of Torthorald, quarterly, first and fourth, argent, a cross floré gules, for Carlyle; second and third, or, a cross gules, for the name of Crosbie, and by way of surtoute argent, a saltier azuré; crest, two dragons' necks and heads adosé vert; supporters, two peacocks, proper: motto, Humilitate. So illuminated in old books.

CHAP. XVI.

OF THE SALTIER OR SAUTOIR.

It is formed by the bend-dexter and sinister, not lying the one upon the other, but as if they were incorporate in the centre. In our old books of blazons, I find the arms of Newton, being sable, a saltier argent, thus described; sable, two bends in saltier argent: The French say, sautoir est disposé comme la bande et la barre; the saltier is as it were composed of the bend and bar. The bend-sinister, by the French, is called a bar, as I have told before.
OF THE SALTIER OR SAUTOIR.

For the saltier, the Latins use the words, crux transversalis, or decusis; because it represents the letter X. This honourable ordinary with the English, possesses the fifth part of the field, the same being not charged; but if it be charged, then it should take up the third part of the field.

The Spaniards call this figure sometimes aspas, from the name of an instrument after the form of an X; as Menestrier observes. Having given a description of its name and form, I shall now speak to its nature and signification, which are various, according to different authors.

It is taken for a specific form of a cross, with us, the English, and other nations; and carried upon account of devotion to saints, who suffered upon such a cross, as that of St Andrew, on our ensigns.

Menestrier will have it, in some armorial bearings, to represent an old piece of furniture, used by horsemen, which hung at their saddles in place of stirrups; and that the word sautoir, comes from saltier to leap, he instances an old Manuscript of Laws of Tournaments, whereby knights were forbid to come with breeches of mail, and with sautoirs a selle, i. e. with saltiers at their saddles, which he says were made of iron, or cords like a decusis, covered with cloth or taffety; as he found in the accounts of Estienne de la Fauntou, cashier to the King of France, in the year 1352, in one of the Articles of Horse-furniture.

Upton and Spelman, two famous heralds, say, that the saltier represents trees or long pieces of timber laid cross-ways, one over the other, for shutting the entries of parks and forests, called by the French saults; and by the Latins saltus; from which sautoir and saltier, and the Latin word commonly used for them, saltuarium.

Gerard Leigh and his followers are of opinion, that it was an instrument used of old by soldiers, in place of ladders, to scale the walls of towns. Sylvanus Morgan, favouring this opinion, says, though it may be taken as an instrument of manhood in scaling of walls, it may be likewise called scala colli, for many have ascended to Heaven by this cross.

This figure, as well as others, may have various significations, and has been assumed upon different accounts in armories; but the saltier here is generally taken for a cross, and that which contributes most to its frequent bearing in arms, was devotion to the Christian religion, and to patron saints, who suffered on crosses, after the form of the saltiers, as that of the Apostle St Andrew. Herald tells us, some carry it plain, to show their willingness to suffer for the faith; others raguled, to show the difficulty thereof, as these crosses of St James and St Laurence; some bear them in their arms, fiché, to show the sharpness of the cross, and others flower, to testify their victory over it.

Fig. 27. Plate VI. Aure, a saltier (or St Andrew's cross), argent; so called, because he suffered upon one after this form. It has been anciently used by the Scots for their ensign, upon as well grounded a tradition for its appearing in the air, as other nations have for their crosses coming down from Heaven. Our historians are not wanting to tell us, that Achais, King of the Scots, and Hungus, King of the Picts, having joined forces to oppose Athelstan, King of the Saxons, superior to them in force, they addressed themselves to God, and their patron St Andrew; and, as a token that they were heard, the white saltier cross, upon which St Andrew suffered martyrdom, appeared in the blue firmament: Which so animated the Scots and Picts, that they defeat the Saxons, and killed, King Athelstan in East-Lothan; which place to this day is known by the name of Athelstanford, corruptly pronounced Elsinford. After the victory, the two confederate kings, out of a sense of singular mercy, went in procession to the church of St Andrew's, (where his arm was said to be kept as a relic) to thank God and his apostle for the victory; purposing, that they and their successors should, in all time coming, use on their ensigns the cross of St Andrew. How well the Picts performed I know not, being overcome and expelled afterwards by the Scots; but it has been the constant practice of our kings to carry a white saltier cross on a blue banner.

The Spaniards carry the cross of St James on their ensigns, since the famous battle in the plains of Toulouse; where Alphonsum, King of Castile, with his confederates, Peter King of Aragon, and Sanchez of Navarre, gave a notable defeat to the Moors. In the beginning of the fight there appeared a great many miracles and prodigies, which, whether true or false, gave occasion to these confederate kings, and their eminent subjects, to use such figures, as then appeared, afterwards on their ensigns and coats of arms. From St James appearing with his cross and a bloody sword, the Castilians took the red saltier cross; and the bloody sword became the badge of the Order of St James: And the King of Navarre placed on his ensigns the form of the chains which fortified the Moors camp, which he cut and broke by his own valour. This battle gave rise to many figures used by families in these countries, of which in another place.

With us many families carry St Andrew’s cross, upon the account that it is the badge of the kingdom.

Haig of Bemerside, an ancient family in the shire of Berwick, carries for arms, Plate VI. fig. 28. and in the Plate of Achievements, azure, a saltier cantoned with two stars in chief and base, with as many crescents adossé in the flanks argent. Some say this family is of a British extract, upon what account I know not, but the family is of an old standing; for, in the reign of Malcolm IV. Richard Norvel, Constable of Scotland, gives a mortification of the chapel of St Leonards in Lauderdale, to the abbacy and Monks of Dryburgh, to which Petrus de Haga of Bemerside is a witness: And in a charter of William de Norvel, to Henry de Sincleare, of the lands of Carñae, amongst the witnesses is Petrus Odell de Haga; which was in the reign of King William, as in the Chartulary of Dryburgh.

In the Chartulary of Kelso, at Edinburgh in the Lawyers’ Library, there are three charters, where Petrus de Haga is amongst the witnesses. The first is an amicable composition between the abbot and convent of Kelchow, and William de Veteri Ponte: The witnesses (not naming the church-men) are Willielmo filio Willielmi, Alano filio Rollandi de Galwaya, Alano de Thurleton, Ricardus NANO, Alano de Chapban, Vicecomite de Lawder, Willielmo filio Rogeri, Petro de Haga. This charter is dated 1203, feria quarta ante Pentecosten. The second charter is granted by Alanus, filius Rollandi de Galouway, Constabularius Regis Scotiae; the witnesses there, beside church-men, are Thoma de Colewill and Petru de Haga: And in the third charter by the above Alanus, Petrus de Haga is a witness. These two last charters have no date; it is thought they have been granted in the reign of Alexander II. or in the beginning of the reign of Alexander III. There is another charter granted by Petrus de Haga, Dominus de Bemerside, with the consent of his son John, to the abbot and convent of Melrose, to pay yearly ten salmons, and half a stone of wax; witnesses, beside the church-men, Willielmo de Burduniolite, Hugone de Persibi, Vicecomite de Rokisburg, Willielmo de Hately, Thoma Rymor de Erelidoun. This charter wants also a date, and I think it has been granted after the death of Alexander III., which was foretold by Thomas Rymer, being so designed in this charter, and afterwards, upon the account of his prophecies in rhyme, for in other old charters he is designed Thomae Learmount de Erelidown, which is in the neighbourhood with Bemerside; and what he, as neighbour to Bemerside, in his prophecies, mentions of this family, I have told before in my marks of cadency. In the Ragman-Roll, Haig of Bemerside is one of the barons that submitted to Edward I. of England; which family has continued, in a male descent, to the present Haig of Bemerside.

Those, who undertook the expeditions to the Holy Land, for the most part were crossed with that form of crosses used by their own country; so that many families with us carry saltiers. Sir James Balfour, in his Manuscript of the Nobility of Scotland, tells us, that Malcolm de Lennox, one of the progenitors of the Earls of Lennox, went to the Holy Land, and was crossed: for which he and his posterity carried for arms, argent, a saltier ingrailed gules, cantoned with four roses of the last; Plate VI. fig. 29. This family was dignified with the title of Earl of Lennox by King William the Lion, and continued in a noble and splendid condition till Duncan Earl of Lennox was attainted of high treason, with his son-in-law, Murdoch Duke of Albany, in the reign of King James I. He was executed at Stirling, upon the 23d of May 1426, and his estate came to the crown by forfeiture. He left behind him three daughters, Isabel, married to Murdoch, Duke of Albany; Elizabeth to Sir John Stewart of Darnly, ancestor of the Stewarts, Dukes and Earls of Lennox; Margaret to Robert Montieith of Rusky, by whom he had Robert Montieith of Rusky his son, who left two daughters co-heirs to him; Agnes married to Sir John Haldane of Glenalma, and Margaret to Sir John Napier of Merchiston. All these families, upon the account of their alliance with the family of Lennox, carried the arms of that family, as above blazoned, either marshalled with their own, or in place of their own; of whom in their proper places.

Macfarlane of Arrochar, commonly designed of that ilk, in the shire of Dumbarton, the principal family of the name, Plate VI. fig. 30, carries argent, a saltier waved and cantoned with four roses gules; crest, a naked man holding a sheaf of arrows, proper, with an Imperial Crown standing by him: and for motto, This I'll defend. L. R. The first of this family is said to be one Pharline Lennox, a son of the old Earls of Lennox, who, for slaughter, fled to the North; and his posterity, after the Scot's way of patronimicks, were called Macfarlane, i. e. Pharline's son; for this, they have a charter of Duncan, Earl of Lennox, to Duncan Macfarlane, in the year 1328; to which Umfredus of Colquhoun Dominus de Luss, is a witness: and they carry the arms of Lennox, with this difference, having the saltier waved instead of ingrailed.

Plate VI. Colquhoun, argent a saltier ingrailed, sable. Some will have the first of this name to be of the old house of Lennox, upon the account of the armorial figure; but others say the first of this family came from Ireland, and was a son of the King of Conach there, in the reign of King Gregory; and the lands which he got in Scotland, he called them Conach, now by corruption, Colquhoun; and when surnames came in fashion, they took the name of Colquhoun from the lands. The family continued in a male descent to the reign of Robert II. that Colquhoun of Luss, a branch of the family, married the heiress of Colquhoun of that ilk, since which time that family has been designed, promiscuously, sometimes of that ilk, and sometimes of Luss. In the beginning of the reign of King James II. say our historians, John Colquhoun of Luss, a noble person, was slain by the rebel Highlanders.

Sir John Colquhoun of that ilk was Treasurer to King James III. and is so designed in a charter of the bailiffy of Coldingham, with the consent of the prior, to Alexander Lord Home, 1465. From him is lineally descended the present Sir John Colquhoun of Luss, whose family was honoured with the title of Knight Baronet, the 30th of July 1628; and, being chief of the name, carries the foresaid blazon, supported by two ratch-hounds argent, collared sable; crest, a hart's head couped gules, attired argent: with the motto, Si je puis, as in the Plate of Achievements.

Having given examples of a saltier under accidental forms, and cantoned with figures, I shall here give an example of a saltier charged with figures, and carried with a chief.

Powrie of Woodocksholm, in the Shire of Linlithgow, argent, a saltier ingrailed gules, charged with another or, and cantoned with four bugles sable; crest, a hunting-horn azure, garnished gules: motto, Vestpere & mane. Lyon Register Plate VI. fig. 32.

The ancient Lords of Annandale gave for arms, argent, a saltier and chief gules. Plate VI. fig. 33. The field is or in several blazons.

Annan of Auchterallan, argent, a chief and saltier gules, cantoned with two muscles, in the collar and base points azure, and in the flanks a spot of ermine, or moucheture sable. As in our old books of blazons.

Not only those of the surname of Annan carried a saltier and chief for their paternal figures; but even other great families carried these arms for their own, when they came to get possessions in that country; and their vassals carried the like, as arms of patronage. Robert Bruis, or Bruce, son of Adilind, of a Norman extract, having married Agnes de Amandina, heiress of that country, laid aside his paternal arms, viz. argent, a lion rampant azure, and carried those of Annan Lords of Annandale, argent, a saltier and chief gules: as the custom was of old upon marrying of heiresses, before the use of marshalling many coats in one shield; of which afterwards. All the descendents of this Robert carried the arms of Annan, making the field sometimes or, sometimes argent. Robert the Bruce, when he came to be King, carried the Imperial Ensign of Scotland; but his brothers and others, descended of him, carried those of Annan, whose blazons I shall add with others, after I have given some various blazons of the saltier.

L. I.
OF THE SALTIER OR SAUTOIR.

The Episcopal See of Bath and Wells in England, azuré, a saltier, quarterly quartered, or and argent.

The family of Ross, in France, by Monsieur Baron, d'argent au sautoir alaisé de guêules, i.e. a saltier couped guêles. And again, guêles, a saltier ingrailed and couped argent. Sometimes three of these saltiers are borne in a coat, and then the word couped may be omitted, being understood to be so when they are removed from the centre of the escutcheon; but when one, and in the centre of the escutcheon, couped must be added: argent, a sword guêles, hilted and pommelled or, point upwards, ensignied with a mallet of the second, and surmounted of a saltier couped sable. Plate VI. fig. 34.

Gules, a saltier engoulée of five leopards' mouths or. Engoulée is said, when the extremities of the bend, cross, saltier, and other such pieces enter the mouths of lions, leopards, dragons, &c. as the arms of Guichenon, Plate VI. fig. 35. And the arms of Tour in Spain; d'azur à la bande d'or engoulée de deux têtes de lion de meme.

Argent, a saltier crossed, having little crosses at the ends. Some say it may be called a saltier saltieré, as we say a cross croset, when its extremities are crossed.

Gerard Leigh calls this St Julian's Cross.

When the extremities of the saltier end like the extremities of the crosses above-treated of, these denominations given to such a cross, may likewise be given to the saltier; as to be anvborée, treffée, flower-de-luce, paëe, &c.

When other figures are situate after the position of the saltier, if they be small ones, as besants, torteaux, &c. they are said then to be in saltier; as azuré, five besants in saltier; that is, two, one and two, for which the French say, rangée en sautoir. If oblong things, we say saltier-ways, the French, posee en sautoir; the Latins, in decussim trajecta.

Eccles of Kildonan, an ancient family of that name, now possessed and represented by Mr William Eccles, Doctor of Medicine, as in Plate of Achievements, argent, two halberts crossing other saltier-ways azuré; crest, a broken halbert: with the motto, Se defendendo; so matriculated in the Lyon Register. And there Eccles of Shanock, decended of Kildonan, the same, within a bordure guêles, for his difference.

The Episcopal See of Peterborough, guêles, two keys saltier-ways, adaissée, and cantoned with four cross crosettes bottony, and fitchét or.

Having treated sufficiently of the saltier, and its various forms, I now proceed to give the arms of such families as carry saltiers according to the method proposed.

James Colquhoun of Dunyeld, descended of the family of Lums, argent, a saltier ingrailed sable, and in base a rose guêles, for his difference; crest, a branch of laurel slipped, proper; motto, Dum spiro spero. L.R.

John Colquhoun of Kilbradon, argent, a saltier ingrailed sable, with a flower-de-luce for difference; crest, a stag's head erased, proper: with the motto, Festina lente. His second son Walter Colquhoun, Merchant in Glasgow, has, for his difference, added to his father's arms, a crescent in base guêles: with the motto, Vivat sub cruce.

Alexander Colquhoun of Garscadden, a cadet of Lums, has a buckle or on the saltier, for his difference; crest, a man's hand proper, holding a buckle, with the motto, Ommia firmat. Which blazons are recorded in the Lyon Register.

The surname of Maxwell, argent, a saltier sable. According to our historians, it is amongst the first surnames, with us, in the reign of Malcolm III. taken from the lands they then possessed in Dumfriesshire, called Macclus Macuscul, now Maxwell. They had also other lands of that name, both in Tiviotdale and East-Lothian. Sir James Dalrymple, in his Collections, page 426, says, he has often met with the name Macclus, which is likely a Saxon name, as witness in the charter of foundation of the abbacy of Selkirk by King David I. and no doubt, says he, Herbert de Macuscul, the donor of the church of Macuscul, in the reign of King Malcolm IV. and King William, has been possessor of these lands, which gave to this Herbert, and his successors, the surname of Macuscul, now Maxwell. John de Macuscul was Great Chamberlain and Sheriff of Roxburgh, in the beginning of the reign of Alexander II.; and the next I meet with is Homerus or

Eumerus de Macuswell, who, in the same king's reign, was Justiciar of Galloway. According to some genealogical manuscripts, he married Mary Macgenchen, heiress of Merns in Renfrewshire; and with her got these lands, which continued with the family till the time of King Charles I. He had two sons, Sir Herbert, his successor, and Sir John, who was the first of the MAXWELLS of Nether-Pollock.

Sir Herbert Maxwell, designed of Carlaverock, obtains a charter of the lands of Macuswell and Wester-Pencaitland in East-Lothian, from John de Pencaitland, in the year 1274. The principal charter I saw in the hands of Maxwell of Middleby. The fourth head of the family in a lineal descent from this Sir Herbert (as in Mr Crawford's Peerage) was John, who designed himself Jounnus de Macuswell de Pencaitland. And the third in descent from John, was Sir Herbert Maxwell of Carlaverock, who was one of the hostages for the ransom of King James I. anno 1423. I have seen (in the custody of Maxwell of Middleby) a principal indenture, passed betwixt a worshipful and honourable man, (the words of the indenture) Sir Herbert Maxwell, knight, Lord of Carlaverock, on the one part, and John Sinclair Lord of Herdmanston, on the other part; in which they obliged themselves to stand, and submit to the arbitration and determination of the gentlemen mentioned in the indenture, as judges betwixt them, about the holding of the lands of Macuswell and Bykerston in the barony of Pencaitland; whether they ought to be helden of the Lords of Maxwell as Barons of Pencaitland, or of the Lord of Herdmanston. The indenture is dated at Edinburgh the 19th of January 1427; and, on the 22d of June 1428, sentence was pronounced by Robert Graham in favour of Herbert Lord Carlaverock. Herbert, designed Dominus de Carlaverock, in anno 1438, one of the conservators of a peace concluded betwixt Scotland and England (as in Crawford's Peerage), married first a daughter of Herbert, heiress of Tereagles, with whom he had Robert his successor, and Sir Edward, of whom the Maxwells of Finnald and Monreith; and, after her death, he married Katharine, daughter to the Lord Seaton, widow of Sir Allan Stewart of Darnly, of whom descend the Maxwells of Garnsalloch, and the Maxwells of South-Bar in Renfrewshire.

Robert, the first of the family, who is dignified with the title of Lord Maxwell, in the reign of King James II. was succeeded by his grandson John Lord Maxwell, who was slain at Flodden with King James IV. He was again succeeded by his son Robert Lord Maxwell, who had, by Janet his lady, Robert his heir; and Sir John Maxwell of Tereagles, thereafter Lord Herries. Robert Lord Maxwell, married Beatrix, daughter of James Earl of Morton, who bare to him one son, John Lord Maxwell; who being made Warden of the West-Marches by King James VI. was also created Earl of Morton, 1581, upon the death and forfeiture of James Earl of Morton the regent. About this time this earl's arms were illuminated, in a book of arms, now in my custody, thus; quarterly, first argent, on a chief gules, two stars of the first, for Douglas of Morton; second or, an eagle displayed sable, as Lord Maxwell; third argent, three hurcheons sable, for Herries; fourth gules, a cross or, for Crosbie; and over all, by way of surtoue, argent, a saltier sable, for Maxwell. The title of Earl of Morton did not continue long with him; for Archibald Earl of Angus, nephew to the regent, was restored to the Earldom of Morton, 1585: And Robert Lord Maxwell, brother of John Lord Maxwell, who was forfeited and beheaded at the Cross of Edinburgh, 21st of May 1623, for murdering the laird of Johnston, in anno 1620. His brother was restored to the lordship of Maxwell, by the favour of King James VI. and created Earl of Nithsdale, with the precedency from the time of his father's being Earl of Morton 1581. By virtue of which, he was ranked in the precedency of the Peerage, immediately before the Earl of Winton, and took his place accordingly in the Parliament 1621. Robert his son and heir died unmarried 1667; so that his estate and honour devolved to his cousin and heir-male John Lord Herries. This earl, so succeeding, married Elizabeth, daughter to Sir Robert Gordon of Lochinvar, ancestor to the Viscount of Kenmure, by whom he had Robert Earl of Nithsdale, who married Lucy, daughter of William Marquis of Douglas, by whom he had Mary, married to the Earl of Traquair, and William his son and successor Earl of Nithsdale, who married Winifred, daughter of William Marquis of Powis of the Kingdom of England, and has issue with her.
OF THE SALTIER OR SAUTOIR.

The achievement of the Earl of Nithsdale, argent, an eagle displayed sable, beaked and membred gules, surmounted of an escutcheon of the first, charged with a saltier of the second, and surcharged in the centre with a hurcheon or; crest, a stag, proper, attired argent, couchant before an holly bush, proper; supporters, two stags, proper, attired argent; for motto, Reviresce. Of the branches of this ancient and noble family, the eldest and principal one is Maxwell of Nether-Pollock, in the shire of Renfrew; the first of which was Sir John, brother to Sir Herbert Maxwell of Carlaverock, in the reign of Alexander III.: Of whom is descended Sir John Maxwell of Pollock, possessor and representative of that family, who was honoured with the dignity of knight-baronet by King Charles II. the 12th of April 1682; and in the year 1699, came to be one of the Senators of the College of Justice, and Lord Justice Clerk. He carries for arms, argent, on a saltier sable, an annulet or, a maternal difference from the House of Eglington; crest, a stag's head; with the motto, I am ready; supporters, two monkeys or apes, proper; as in the Plate of Achievements. Which supporters I have seen on a seal of one of his progenitors, heirs of Pollock, in the reign of Robert III. appended to a charter, in the custody of the present Lord Pollock; which is an early instance of barons having supporters.

Maxwell of Calderwood is a branch of Nether-Pollock; the first of which House was Robert, second son of Sir John Maxwell of Pollock, from whom he got the lands of Calderwood, in the year 1401. He married Elizabeth, daughter and one of the co-heirs of Sir Robert Denniston of that ilk, and got with her several lands; upon which account the family for a long time has been in use to quarter the arms of Denniston with their own, thus, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a saltier sable, and a chief paly of six pieces of the last and first, as in our old books of blazon, so illuminated, in the House of Falkhall, with other barons, members of Parliament, in the year 1654: But, in the Lyon Register, Alexander Maxwell of Calderwood's arms are thus recorded; quarterly, first and fourth argent, a saltier sable, within a bordure counter-componed of the second and first; second and third quartees, argent, a bend azure, for Denniston; crest, a man's head looking upright, proper; motto, Thinck on.

Colonel William Maxwell of Cardiness, only son of Mr William Maxwell, whose grandfather was William Maxwell of Newland, a second son of Sir Gavin Maxwell of Calderwood, carries the quartered arms of that family as last blazoned, all within a bordure embattled gules, for his difference; crest, a man's head looking forright, within two laurel branches, disposed oblique-ways vert: motto, Thinck on. Lyon Register. See the Plate of Achievements.

Eustache Maxwell of Teyling in Angus, second son of Sir Herbert Maxwell of Carlaverock, got the lands of Teyling, by marrying Agnes, one of the daughters and co-heirs of Sir John Gilford of Yester, whose seal and arms had only a saltier, in the year 1421, as I told before in my Essay of the Ancient and Modern Use of Arms, page 98. He was the first of the family of Teyling, who afterwards had a suitable difference in the Lyon Register since the year 1601.

Patrick Maxwell of Teyling, argent, on a saltier sable, a man's heart or; crest, a falcon looking to the sun, proper; motto, I'll hide Breadalbaine.

John Maxwell of Lackiebank, descended of the house of Teyling, argent, on a saltier sable, between two stars in chief and base azure, a man's heart or; crest, a falcon looking to a star: motto, Tendit ad astra. Lyon Register.

Sir Alexander Maxwell of Monreith, Baronet, descended of Sir Edward Maxwell, second son of Sir Herbert Maxwell of Carlaverock, and his Lady daughter of Herbert Herries of Tercaigles, progenitors of the Earls of Nithsdale, carries argent, a double eagle displayed sable, beaked and membred gules, on its breast an escutcheon of the first, charged with a saltier of the second, surcharged in the centre with a hurcheon, or; all within a bordure gules, with the badge of Knight Baronet by way of canton, in the dexter chief point; crest, an eagle rising sable, beaked and membred gules: motto, Reviresce. Lyon Register.

John Maxwell of Barudeleagh, descended of a second brother of Kirktonel, who was descended of Thomas, a second son of Robert, first Lord Maxwell, argent, a saltier sable, within a bordure of the last, charged with eight lozenges of the first; crest, an eagle's talon holding a writing quill, proper: motto, Non sine usu. Lyon Register.

William Maxwell of Loch, descended of the family of Nithsdale, argent, a saltier within a bordure sable, the last charged with eight roses of the first; crest, a hart courant, his attirings wreathed about with holy leaves, all proper: motto, Semper vividi. Lyon Register.

Robert Maxwell of Garnsalloch, descended of George, eldest son of Sir Herbert Maxwell of Carlawrock, and his second Lady, Catharine, daughter to the Lord Seaton, argent, a saltier sable, with a bordure of the last, charged with eight crescents or, the figures of Seaton; crest, a stag rising from an holy bush, proper: motto, Virtue & surge. Lyon Register.

Colonel Thomas Maxwell, Quarter-master General to his Majesty's forces in England, son to James Maxwell of Littlebar, who was a second son of Maxwell of Kirkonell, a second son of Robert, first Lord Maxwell, argent, a saltier sable, within a bordure embattled gules; crest, a stag lodged under a bush of holy, proper: motto, Non dormio. Lyon Register.

Many of the surname of Napier carry a saltier; and some of that name carry a bend. The Napiers were numerous of old with us about the year 1296. In Prymne's History, page 655, there are Mattheus de Napier le Agbelerk in Forfarshire, John le Napier in Dumbartonshire, and several others of that name who swore allegiance to King Edward the first of England. William Napier got from King David II. the lands of Kilmauchegh in Dumbartonshire, which formerly belonged to the co-heiresses of Sir William Montefix, as by that king's charter of the date 1346, in Pub. Arch. The armorial bearing of John Napier of Kilmauchegh, as recorded in the Lyon Register, is, gules on a bend argent, three crescents azure, and, in the sinister chief point, a spur-rowel of the second; crest, a man's head adorned with laurel, proper: motto, Virtute gloria parta.

Napier of Wrighthouses carried or, on a bend azure, a crescent between two spur-rowels of the first, as in Mr Pont's Book of Blazons.

What Napier of Merchiston, the most eminent family of the name, carried of old, I know not; but since John Napier of Merchiston married Margaret Monteth, daughter and co-heir of Murdoch Monteth of Ruskie, and one of the heirs of line to Duncan Earl of Lennox, in the reign of King James II. they have been in use to carry only the arms of Lennox, viz. argent, a saltier in a martlet, cantoned with four roses gules; their sons were, Archibald who succeeded, and John Napier of Balerno. Archibald's son, Sir Alexander Napier of Merchiston, lost his life at Flodden Field, 9th September 1513, as did his son Alexander, at the battle of Pinkie, 10th September 1547, whose son and successor, Sir Archibald, was knighted by King James VI. and made Master of the Mint 1587. He went generally by the title of Edinbelly, and married first Janet, daughter of Mr Francis Bothwell, one of the Senators of the College of Justice in the reign of King James V. ancestor to the Lord Holyroodhouse; by whom he had John, his son and heir. After her death he married a daughter of Moubray of Barnbougle, by whom he had Sir Alexander Napier of Lauriston, one of the Senators of the College of Justice in the reign of King Charles I.

John Napier of Merchiston succeeded his father, and was very famous for his learning, especially in the mathematices; his logarithms, and his other works that have been published, remain as monuments of his sublime parts and penetration. He married, first, Margaret, daughter to Sir James Stirling of Keir, by whom he had Sir Archibald; and after her death he married Agnes, daughter of Sir James Chisholm of Cromlicks, by whom he had (as in Mr Crawford's Peerage) John Napier of Ester Torry, Mr Robert Napier, of whom the branch of the Napiers of Kileroich, Mr Alexander Napier of Gellets, William Napier of Ardmore, of whom also is Napier of Craiganet, Adam, of whom the Napiers of Blackstone are descended. The great Merchiston died 3d of April 1617, aged 67, and was succeeded by his eldest son, who was Lord Treasurer Depute 1624, as also Justice Clerk, and afterwards by King Charles I. made a lord of Parliament, by the title of Lord Napier, in the year 1627. He stood firm in his loyalty to his Majesty in the worst of times, and accompanied James Marquis of Montrose to the battle of Philiphaugh, whose sister, Margaret, he had for his lady. She bore to him Archibald Lord Napier, who married Elizabeth, daughter to John Earl of Marr, by whom he had Archibald, his son and successor, and John, who lost his life in the sea fight against the Dutch 1672; as also three daughters, Jean, married to Sir Thomas Nicolson of Carnock, Margaret to John Brisbane, Esq. Secretary to the Royal Navy, and resident from King Charles II. at the Court of France, and Mary who died young. Archibald Lord Napier made a resignation of his honour in the hands of King Charles II. who was pleased to confer the title again by a new patent, of the date the 7th of February 1677, on him and the heirs of his body; which failing, on the heirs of the bodies of his sisters successively. And he dying a bachelor 1683, the honour of Lord Napier devolved to Sir Thomas Nicolson of Carnock, his nephew, by his sister: but he dying young, the honour devolved on Margaret his aunt, who, by Mr Brisbane, her husband, had issue John Master of Napier, who died unmarried 1704; likewise a daughter Elizabeth, married 1699 to Mr William Scott, then son and heir apparent to Francis Scott of Thirlestane, Baronet, to whom she had a son, Francis, the present Lord Napier, and daughters who died young. She dying 1705, and her mother Margaret Lady Napier 1706, the honour of Lord Napier devolved to her grandson by her daughter, Sir William Scott's son, Francis, the present Lord Napier, who quarters the arms of his father with these of the Lord Napier, thus, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a saltier inrolled, cantoned with four roses gules, for Napier; second and third or, on a bend azure, a mullet betwixt two crescents of the first, within a double trefoil flowered and counterflowered of the second, for Scott of Thirlestane; which arms are tinctred with crown, helmet, and mantlings befitting his quality, and issuing out of a wreath of his tinctures; for crest, a right arm from the elbow grasping a crescent, proper; and above, on an escrol, for motto, Sans tache; supported on the dexter by an eagle, proper, and on the sinister by a chevalier in a coat of mail, holding a spear with a pennon, all proper; and below the shield, by way of compartment, on the embattlement of a tower, argent, massoned sable, six lances disposed saltier-ways; with this motto, Ready ay ready.

The arms of the branches of this family, as they stand recorded in the Lyon Register, are these,

Alexander Napier, descended of a sixth son of Napier of that Ilk, argent, on a saltier inrolled, between four roses gules, a flower-de-luce or, for his difference; crest, a dexter hand erected, holding a crescent argent: motto, Sans tache.

Archibald Napier of Balwhaple, descended of a third son of Napier, carries Napier with a mullet for difference; crest, an eagle's leg erased in bend, proper; armed gules: motto, Uique fideli.

William Napier of Ballikinranie, in the Lennox, one of the oldest cadets of Napier, carries Napier within a bordure gules; crest, a dexter hand holding an eagle's leg erased in bend, proper, armed gules: motto, Nil veretur veritas.

Mr Thomas Napier of Ballicharne, descended of a second son of Ballikinranie, carries as Ballikinranie; but, for his difference, charges the bordure with eight crescents argent; crest, an eagle's leg erased, proper, armed gules, disposed fesse-ways: motto Vincit veritas.

Mr Robert Napier of Falside carries Napier within a bordure indented gules, for his difference; crest, two hands conjoined, and both grasping a sword, proper: motto, Abique decore.

James Napier of Harrieston, a second brother of Mr Robert Napier of Falside, carries the same with him; but, for difference, charges the bordure with eight crescents argent.

William Napier of Tayock carries Napier, within a bordure indented gules, charged with eight martlets argent: motto, Patientia vincit.

William Napier of Culcreuch, descended of a third son of the House of Napier, carries Napier, thus; argent, on a saltier inrolled betwixt four roses gules, five mullets of the field; crest, a hand holding an eagle's leg erased, proper, the talons expanded gules: motto, Fides servata secundat. As in the Plate of Achievements.

GlenEagles of that Ilk in Perthshire, argent, a saltier inrolled sable; which family ending in an heirless, in the reign of Robert the Bruce, was married to Haldane of that Ilk, an ancient family in the south, descended from Haldeneus a
OF THE SALTIER OR SAUTOI.

Dane, who possessed these lands in the Borders, called after him Haldane, or Haldenrig, progenitor of Roger de Halden, who had a charter from King William, of lands in Perthshire, as Sir James Dalrymple, in his Collections, page 392. He carried for arms, as I observe in our old books, and in Mr Pont's Manuscript, gules, two leopards argent; but Haldane of that ilk, it seems, when he married the heiress of Gleneagles, laid aside his proper arms, and carried these of his wife; but retained the name of Haldane: Afterwards, this family, having matched with one of the name of Graham, quartered the arms of Graham, and that anciently: For Bernard Haldane of Gleneagles, who married a daughter of William Lord Seaton, has the arms of Graham, viz. argent, on a chief sable, three escalops or, quartered with Gleneagles, before blazoned, impaled with his lady's, as is to be seen on the genealogical tree of the House of Seaton. His son, John, married Agnes Monteith, one of the co-heiresses of Monteith of Ruskie, and of Duncan Earl of Lennox by her mother. He left out the arms of Graham, and placed the arms of Monteith and Lennox, as now in the bearing of the present John Haldane of Gleneagles; quarterly, first argent, a saltier in grained sable, for Gleneagles; second argent, a saltier in grained, cantoned with four roses gules, for Lennox; third or, a bend chequy, sable and argent, for Monteith of Ruskie; and the fourth as the first; crest, an eagle's head erased or; motto, Suffer. Lyon Register. Supports, two eagles, proper. For the aforesaid marriage with Monteith, I have seen a principal charter of John Haldane of Gleneagles, and his wife Agnes Monteith, to Matthew Forrester, of the lands of Ballen, 1463, wherein he is designed Johannis de Halden, filius heres apparem Bernardi de Halden de Gleneagles, & Agnes de Monteith sponsae sue. His seal was appended to the charter, but it had only a saltier in grained; and his wife used the seal of William Murray of Touchadam (of which afterwards), because she had not a seal of her own, as the charter bears, quia proprium sigillum non habuit.

Patrick Haldane of Lanrick, as a second son of the family of Gleneagles, carried the same with Gleneagles, with a crescent in the centre for his difference. Lyon Register.

Kinnaird of that ilk, in the shire of Perth, gules, a saltier in grained and cantoned with four crescents or. This was the original family of the name, in the shire of Perth. Radolphus Rufus got the barony of Kinnaird from King William the Lion: The principal charter I saw in the custody of Mr George Kinnaird, brother to the late Lord Kinnaird, with another charter from the same king confirming it: From these lands Radolphus Rufus took his surname Kinnaird, which descended to all his issue. The principal family was long since extinct; but the next branch thereof, was Kinnaird of Inchture, which began in Reginald Kinnaird, son of Sir Richard Kinnaird of that ilk. He married Marjory, daughter and heir of Sir John Kirkaldy, and with her got the lands of Inchture, of which I have seen a charter of confirmation to him and her, and to the children to be begotten betwixt them, granted by King Robert III. dated at Perth, the 28th of January 1399, the 10th year of his reign: Sir George Kinnaird of Inchture was created a Lord of Parliament, by the title of Lord Kinnaird of Inchture, in the year 1663, by King Charles II. whose achievement is, quarterly, first and fourth or, a fesse waved between three stars gules, upon what account I know not; second and third gules, a saltier cantoned with four crescents or, for Kinnaird; crest, a crescent arising from a cloud, having a star from between the horns thereof, all within two branches of a palm-tree, disposed orways, proper; supporters, two naked men wreathed about the head and middle, with oaken leaves, their hands, that support the shield, in chains, hanging down to their feet, and their other hands holding garlands of laurel, all proper; and for motto, above the crest on an escut, Errantia lumina fallunt, and below, on the compartment upon which the supporters stand, Certa cruces salut.

Sir George Kinnaird of Inchture, his arms recorded in the Lyon Register 1673, are, quarterly, first and fourth gules, a saltier between four crescents or, for Kinnaird; second and third gules, three stars argent, for Kirkaldy of Inchture; crest, a garland of laurel vert: motto, Qui patitur vincer.

The Illuminated Book of the herald Esplin gives for arms to Kinnaird of that ilk, quarterly, first and fourth argent, three mullets aure, for the name of Innes; second and third gules, three crescents argent, for Kinnaird. But Mr Font, in his Blazons, gives to Kinnaird of that Ilk, as before; and to KINNAIRD of the Cars, quarterly, first and fourth _gules_, three crescents _or_, for his paternal coat; second and third _argent_, three mullets _azure_, for Innes: So that I observe the family of Kinnaird has been very unfixed in their armorial bearing.

WINTON of Strathmartin, _ermine_, a saltier _sable_; Pont's Manuscript; and so says Esplin. But in our New Register, Patrick Winton of Strathmartin has _argent_, a chevron betwixt three turretedoves _azure_; and for crest, a dove _volant_, proper.

The name of CHAPMAN, _vert_, a saltier ingrailed betwixt four boars' heads erased _argent_; as in Sir James Balfour's and Mr Pont's Manuscripts.

Some of the name of SMITH, _or_, a saltier _azure_, betwixt four crescents _gules_. Pont's Manuscript.

Smith of Gibbston, _argent_, a saltier _azure_, between two crescents in chief and base _gules_, and as many garbs of the second in the flanks, banded _or_, in Sir George Mackenzie's Heraldry.

John Smith, Portioner of Dirleton, _argent_, on a saltier _azure_, between three crescents _gules_, one in chief, two in the flanks, and a chessrock in base _sable_, a garb of the field; crest, a dexter hand holding a writing quill, proper: _Motto, Ex usu commodum_. L. R.

The surname of ANDREWS, _gules_, a saltier _or_, charged with another _vert_. Pont's Manuscript. And there, Anderson, _argent_, a saltier ingrailed _sable_, betwixt four mullets _gules_.

James Anderson of Wester-Aiderbreck, _argent_, a saltier ingrailed, between two mullets in chief _gules_, and as many boars' heads erased in the flanks _azure_; crest, an oak tree; with the motto, _Stand sure_. Lyon Register. And there,

John Anderson of Dowhill, _argent_, a saltier ingrailed _sable_, betwixt a crescent in chief, and three mullets in the flanks, and base _gules_, all within a bordure _azure_.

John Anderson in Aberdeen, _argent_, a saltier waved, between two mullets in the flanks, and a crescent in base _gules_; crest, a cross-staff erected, marked with the degrees of latitude; with the motto, _Per mare_. In the Lyon Register; and there the following Andersons, viz.

William Anderson, Merchant in Edinburgh, _argent_, a saltier ingrailed, cantoned with a mullet in chief, two crescents in the flanks, and a cross croslet _fitché_, in base _gules_.

James Anderson of Stabcross, _argent_, a saltier ingrailed _sable_, betwixt a crescent in chief, and two mullets in fesse, and one in base _gules_.

John Anderson, Captain and Merchant in Glasgow, descended of the family of Tillieum, _argent_, a saltier ingrailed, cantoned with two mullets in chief and base, as many crescents in the flanks _gules_; crest, a cloud: _Motto, Recte quot boneste_.

Alexander Anderson, Merchant and Bailie in Edinburgh, _argent_, a saltier ingrailed _sable_, betwixt a crescent in chief, and three mullets pierced of the field, two in fesse, and one in base _gules_; crest, an eagle issuing out of the wreath; with the motto, _Qui boneste fortiter_.

The surname of ANDREW or ANDREWS, with us, does not carry the saltier as the Andersons, though their name be as much relative to St Andrew's cross as the former; as in our own Register.

Patrick Andrew of Clockmill, _argent_, on a fesse _sable_, three mascles _or_, in base a crescent _gules_, and on a chief _azure_, three mullets of the field; crest, a dexter hand holding a laurel branch, proper: _Motto, Virtue & fortuna_.

Robert ANDREW of Nether-Tarvet, parted per bend, _argent_ and _azure_, three mullets counter-changed, two and one; crest, a star _or_: _Motto, Give and forgive_. Lyon Register.

The Company of Scotland, trading to Africa and the Indies, established by the 8th Act of the 5th Session of King William's Parliament, the 26th of June 1695, and endowed with many privileges, as also with power, as the act bears, to have a common seal, and to alter and renew the same at their pleasure, with advice always of the Lyon King at Arms, carried _azure_, a saltier _or_ St Andrew's cross _argent_ cantoned, with a ship under sail, flagged of Scotland in chief, proper; and in base, a Peruvian sheep, in the dexter flank, a camel loaded, and, in the sinister, an elephant bearing a turret, all of the second; crest, a rising sun, proper, supported on the dexter by an Indian, and on the sinister by a negro, in their proper dress, each bearing on his shoulder a cornucopia, proper, standing on a table of compartment, whereon are these words, Vis unita fortiur, and above all, on an escrol, for motto, Qua panditur orbis. Lyon Register.

Which arms are to be seen on the one side of the medal that was struck by order of the Company for Colonel Alexander Campbell of Finnab, of whom afterwards. See Plate of Achievements.

PITTENDREICH of that Ilk, an ancient family, now extinct, argent, a saltier azure between four roses gules. Beatson of Contie, or, a saltier vair; Sir George Mackenzie's Heraldy; crest, a bridge of three arches, proper: motto, Pro patria. Lyon Register.

The surname of WEDDEL, azure, a saltier chequé, or and gules, between four buckles argent. Pont's Manuscript.

LITTLE of Meikledale, sable, a saltier ingrailed argent. The same is carried by LITTLE of Libberton, as in Sir George Mackenzie's Science of Heraldy, with a crescent for difference; crest, a leopard's head or: motto, Magnum in parvo. Lyon Register.

Powrie of Woodcocksholm, in the shire of Linlithgow, argent, a saltier ingrailed gules, surmounted of another or, cantoned with four bugles sable; crest, a hunting-horn azure, garnished gules: motto, Vespere & manes. Lyon Register.

Sir Mark CARSE of Fordelcarse, argent, on a saltier vert, betwixt four cross croislets fitched gules, five crescents of the field. But Pont gives to the name of Carse, azure, a fesse ingrailed between two mullets in chief, and a crescent in base within a bordure ingrailed or.

The surname of CURRIE, gules, a saltier with a rose in chief argent. The same was borne by CURRIE of Newby; and CURRIE of Kelwood carried the same with a chief sable, as in Pont's Manuscript.

CLARKSON, argent, a saltier vert, between two crescents gules in chief and base, and as many cross croislets fitched sable in the flanks. The surname of CHRISTIE, or, a saltier cantoned with four mullets sable. The same is carried by CHRISTIE of Craigton; but the saltier is invected; crest, a holly branch withered, with leaves sprouting out anew: motto, Sic viresco. Lyon Register.

PATRICK CHRISTIE, Merchant in Aberdeen, or, a saltier indented betwixt four mullets sable.

JAMES CHRISTIE of Balluchie, or, a saltier ingrailed between four mullets sable. Lyon Register.

The name of WALSH, argent, on a saltier sable, five annulets or. Pont's Manuscript. These of that name in England carry azure, six mullets, three, two, and one, or.

Rigo of Carberry, argent, on a saltier azure, between four mullets, a crescent or. Pont's Manuscript.

I have seen the armorial seal of Mr Hugh Rigg of Carberry appended to a writ of his, as tutor to Margaret, daughter to George Lord Home, in the year 1546; upon which was a saltier between three mullets, one in chief; two in the flanks, and a crescent in base.

Mr Thomas Rigo of Riggsland, descended of Carberry, vert, a St Andrew's Cross ingrailed argent, between a mullet in chief, two garbs in fesse, and three roses in base or, within a bordure of the third, charged with eight crescents of the field; crest, a cock sable, beaked and armed gules: motto, Virtute & labore. Lyon Register.

GARSHORE of that Ilk, argent, a saltier between four holly leaves vert; crest, an eagle displayed, proper: motto, I renew my age. Lyon Register.

Having given before, in this chapter, the armorial bearings of the principal families of Bruce, I shall now add the bearings of some of the families of that name.

Bruce of Clackmanan, in our latter times, has worn out all bruises and marks of cadency, and carries now the principal bearing, or, a saltier and chief gules. But
OF THE SALTIER OR SAUTOIR.

I have seen a seal of arms of John Bruce of Clackmanan, appended to a writ in the year 1481, which had on the chief a star or mullet.

The first of this family was Robert Bruce, who got a charter of the castle and barony of Clackmanan from King David the Bruce: in which charter he is designed, by that King, Dilectus consanguineus noster. From the lairds of Clackmanan all the families of the Bruces, since the reign of that King, seem to be descended.

Bruce of Airth, the first of which family was David, second son to Robert the first laird of Clackmanan, and his wife Elizabeth Stewart, daughter to Sir Robert Stewart of Rosyth. This family carried of late as Clackmanan did of old; viz. or, a saltier and chief gules, the last charged with a mullet of the field.

Bruce of Blairhall, another branch of the house of Clackmanan, carries the same arms with Clackmanan, with some small difference.

This family ended lately in an heiress married to Mr Dougald Stewart, Advocate, brother to James Earl of Bute.

Bruce Earl of Elgin in Scotland, and Aylesbury in England, being descended of Edward Bruce, a younger son of Bruce of Blairhall, a man of singular parts, was sent ambassador with the Earl of Marr, from King James, to Queen Elizabeth; and being evermore instrumental in the peaceful entrance of King James, after the death of that Queen, into the throne of England, by the intelligence which he privately held in her lifetime, with Sir Robert Cecil her Secretary of State. In recompense of this his faithful service, he had the great office of Master of the Rolls conferred on him for life, in the first year of the reign of King James I of Great Britain; and the next year, was advanced to the dignity of a Baron, by the title of Lord Bruce of Kinloss, and Earl of Elgin in Scotland. He died the 14th of January 1615, having issue by Magdalene his wife, daughter of Sir Alexander Clerk of Balbirnie, Edward and Thomas, and a daughter, Christian, married to William Earl of Devonshire. Edward succeeded his father in his honours, but had the hard fate to be killed in a duel by Sir Edward Sackville, afterwards Earl of Dorset; whereupon Thomas, his brother, became his next heir, and succeeded him in the honours, and had additional ones bestowed on him by King Charles I. the 17th year of his reign, being advanced to the dignity of a baron in England, by the title of Lord Bruce of Whorleton. His son and successor Robert was, by King Charles II. in the 16th year of his reign, created Lord Bruce of Skelton, Viscount Bruce of Ampthill, and Earl of Aylesbury in England. The arms of this noble family are, or, a saltier and chief gules, on a canton argent, a lion rampant asure; which last are the original arms of the Bruces of Skelton, thus blazoned by Jacob Inhoff; Seutum, quo Comes Alisburri utitur, aurem est, decusim continuus rubenum cophalique distinctum ejusdem coloris; cuius angulus dexter argenteus leonem caruleum defert. Which arms are supported by two savages, proper; and for crest, a lion rampant: with the motto, Fuitimus.

The other cadet of the family of Blairhall was Sir George Bruce of Carnock, third son to Edward Bruce of Blairhall, predecessor to the Earl of Kincardine; who carry quarterly, first and fourth argent, a lion rampant asure, armed and langued gules, the ancient arms of the Bruces of Skelton; second and third or, a saltier and chief gules, the arms of those descended of the Bruces of Annandale; supporters, two men in armour with targets: and for crest, a naked arm flexed, issuing out of a cloud, and holding a man's heart, proper; with the motto, Semper fitelis. This family was honoured with the title of Earl of Kincardine by King Charles I. 26th December 1647.

Bruce of Kennet, carries the old arms of Clackmanan, viz. or, a saltier and chief gules, the last charged with a mullet argent; crest, a hand holding a sceptre, proper: motto, Fuitimus. The first of this family was Thomas Bruce, a younger son of Robert Bruce, Dominus de Rate & Clackmanan, who got from his father the lands of West-Kennet, as by the charter of the date the 2d May 1389; which is confirmed by another charter of King Robert III. anno 1399; from whom is lineally descended the present Laird of Kennet, Brigadier-General James Bruce.

James Bruce of Wester-Kinloch, descended of the family of Airth, argent, a saltier and chief gules, with a mullet in the dexter chief point or; all within a bordure indented of the second; crest, a star or; with the motto, Ad: summa vir-

tus. Lyon Register.

ALEXANDR BRUCE of Garvet, a cadet of Airth, or, a saltier gules, on a chief emb-battled of the same a mullet argent; crest, a hand holding a sword, proper; with the motto, Venture forward.

Sir WILLIAM BRUCE of Balaskie, Baronet, descended of Clackmanan, or, a salttier and chief waved gules; crest, a sun going down: motto, Invocavit: supporters, two cranes proper. These three last blazons are in the Lyon Register.

BRUCE of Earlshall, sometime designed of Byrgham in the Merse. In the reign of King James IV. Sir Alexander Bruce excambed his lands called Escarto, in France, which his predecessors had acquired by their valor there; with the Lord Mounypenny, for the barony of Earlshall in Fife, which was anciently one of the seats of the old Earls of Fife. As in Sir Robert Sibbald, his History of Fife. The armorial bearing of this family is, or, a saltier and chief gules, in the collars point a flower-deluce azur.

BRUCE of Wester-Abten, descended of Earlshall, or, a saltier gules, on a chief of the last, three flower-de-luces of the first. Lyon Register.

BRUCE of Newton, argent, a saltier and chief embattled gules; crest, an eagle's head coupled, proper: motto, Spera mea superne. Lyon Register.

ANDREW BRUCE of Mowance, descended of the family of Cultmains, quarterly, first and fourth or, a saltier and chief gules, the last charged with a mullet of the field; second and third gules, a lion rampant within a bordure inlaid argent, for the name of Gray; crest, a dexter hand holding a heart, proper; with the motto, Omnia vincit amor.

WILLIAM BRUCE of Pitterthie, of the family of Standstill in Caithness, or, a salttier and chief gules, with two spur-rowels in the flanks of the last; crest, a horse-head coupled and furnished, proper, with the word True. Lyon Register.

Mr JOHN FRANK of Boughtridge, vert, on a saltier inlaid argent, five flower-de-luces of the first; crest, a lion salient, with a forked tail, proper; and with the motto, Non omnibus nati. Lyon Register.

The surname of WALKER, or, three pallets gules, surmounted of a saltier argent, and on a chief azure, a crescent of the third, between two spur-rowels of the first.
Pont's MS.

The surname of BAKER, argent, on a saltier inlaid sable, five escalops of the first, and, on a chief of the second, a lion passant of the field. Pont's Manuscript.

Many honourable and ancient families with us carry the saltier and chief; as those of the surname of JOHNSTONE gave for arms, of old, argent, a saltier and chief sable, on the last, three cushions of the field, as in our old books of blasons; but of late argent, a saltier sable, and, on a chief gules; three cushions or, as descended of the Tribus Alban, of which that noble patriot, Thomas Randolph, was chief; the cushion being the paternal figures of the Randolphs. The JOHNSTONs were very numerous, says Hector Bocce, in the reign of Robert II. Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk, upon that king's accession to the crown, defeat a great body of the English invading Scotland, on the West Border; and in the year 1443, according to Buchanan, the Maxwell and Johnstones obtained a noble victory over the English, in the battle at Sark, near Salwy. This family was dignified with the title of Lord Johnstone by King Charles I. the 20th of January 1633; and thereafter with the title of Earl of Hartfield, which, by King Charles II. was changed to that of Annandale, and of late dignified with the title of Marquis of Annandale. The Right Honourable William Marquis of Annandale, chief of this name, carries the foresaid arms of Johnstone, quartered with or, an anchor in pale gules, having mar-rried the heiress of FAIRHOLM of Craigiehall: which arms are supported with two horses argent, furnished gules; crest, a spur with wings or, and leather gules:
motto, Non quaem con paratus.

SIR GILBERT JOHNSTONE of Elphinston in East Lothian, was eldest son by a second marriage of Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk, one of the progenitors of the present Marquis of Annandale, and his wife ——— Dunbar, daughter to the Earl of March, and widow to John Lord Seaton. This Sir Gilbert married Agnes Elphinston, sole heiress of Elphinston of that Ilk; who, by the assistance of his uterine brother, George Lord Seaton, superior and Over-Lord of Elphinston, got possession of these lands in the reign of King James II. He was succeeded by his son Gilbert Johnstone, and the family continued in a lineal male succession till the reign of King Charles II. who carried for arms, quarterly, first or, three crescents within a double trellis flowered and counter-flowered _gules_, for Seaton, as superior and over-lord; second _argent_, a saltier, and, on a chief _sable_, three cushions of the field for Johnstone; third _azure_, three garbs or, for Buchan, as carried by the Lord Seaton; and the fourth as first which arms are curiously embossed and illuminated on a roof of a Hall in the house of Seaton. But in the Illuminated Book of Arms by James Esplin, Marchmont Herald 1630, they are, quarterly, first Seton; third and fourth Johnstone, and the fourth for the name of Elphingston _argent_, a chevron _sable_ between three boar's heads couped _gules_.

_Johnstone_ of Gratney, another cadet of Johnstone of that ilk; or an old stone on the front of the house of Gratney, of the date 1598, is the shield of arms of Johnstone of that ilk, with the addition of two mullets, the one in the collar, and the other in base points; crest, a man armed cap-a-pie on horseback, brandishing a sword: _motto_, _Nunquam non paratus_. But as matriculated in the Lyon Register, he lately carries _argent_, a saltier _sable_, and, on a chief _gules_, three cushions or; crest, as above; with the motto, _Cavo paratus_. As in the plate of Achievements.

_Johnstone_ of Westraw, or Westerhall, is descended of Herbert Johnstone, cousin to John Johnstone of that ilk, who got from him, for his concurring to oppose the rebellion of the Earl of Douglas against King James II. the lands of Westerhall and Pitenarn, in Lanarkshire, from whom Sir William Johnstone of Westraw, Baronet, is lineally descended: the family has been in use to carry the principal bearing of the name, as before blazoned, and for difference, a man's heart ensign-ed, with an imperial crown, proper, in base, being a part of the Douglasses bearing, to perpetuate the memory of the apprehending of Douglas Earl of Ormond, that in rebellion, by his predecessor; and for crest and motto, those of the Marquis of Annandale. As the plate of Achievements.

_Johnston_ of Hilton in the Merse, carries the principal arms of Johnstone, and for difference, only ingrailes the saltier; crest, a sword and dagger crossing other saltier-ways, with the point upward, all proper: _motto_, _Paratus ad arma_. L. R.

_Johnston_ of Benholm, _argent_, a saltier and chief _gules_, the last charged with three cushions or, within a bordure of the first.

_Johnston_ of Blackwood, _argent_, a saltier and chief _sable_, the last charged with three cushions or. As in Workman's MS.

There was an ancient family of the name of Johnston in the North, designed of Caskieben: Sir George Johnston of Caskieben carried, quarterly, first and fourth _argent_, a saltier _sable_, and on a chief _gules_, three cushions or, for Johnstone; second and third _azure_, on a bend between three hearts heads' erased _argent_, attired or, as many cross croslets fitched of the second, for Marr, and Garioch of Caskieben, composed together in one coat, supporters, two Indians, proper, wreathed about the head and middle with laurel _vert_; crest, a phœnix in flames, proper: _motto_, _Vive ut postea vivas_. L. R.

_John Johnston_ of Polton, _argent_, a saltier and chief waved _sable_, the last charged with three cushions of the field: crest, a spur, proper, winged _argent_: _motto_, _Sic paratur_. L. R.

_John Johnston_ of Clathrie, sometime one of the Magistrates of Glasgow, _argent_, saltier inverteb _sable_, between two pellets in fesse, and, on a chief _gules_, three cushions or; crest, a star issuing out of a cloud, proper: _motto_, _Appropinquat dies_. Lyon Register.

Mr John Johnston of Wordmilsns, _argent_, a saltier _sable_, between two escalops in fesse, and on a chief of the second, three cushions as the first; crest; a hand, proper, holding an escallops _gules_: _motto_, _Sine fraude fides_. Lyon Register.

Patrick Johnston of Gormack, _argent_, a saltier and chief _nebulé sable_, the last charged with three cushions of the field; crest, a spur-rowel within two branches of palm disposed in orle, proper: _motto_, _Secundior quo paratur_. Lyon Register.

The Jardines of Applegirth, an ancient family, carries the same arms almost with the Johnston, but in place of the cushions, have mullets, _viz._, _argent_, a saltier and chief _gules_, the last charged with three mullets of the field, so painted or:
the House of Falahall, and of late recorded in the Lyon Register, with the crest, a spur-rowel : motto, Cave adsum.

George Jardine, sometime Treasurer of Edinburgh, argent, on a saltier gules, five beants, and on a chief of the second, two mullets or; crest, a hand holding a beant, all proper: motto, Ex surrute bonus. Lyon Register.

Kirkpatrick of Kilosburn or Closeburn, in the shire of Nithsdale, argent, a saltier and chief azure, the last charged with three cushions or; crest, a hand holding a dagger in pale, distilling drops of blood; with the motto, I make sure; supporters, two lions gardant gules. This principal family has been in use to carry supporters since the year 1435, as by their evidents and seals, which I have seen by the favour of the lately deceased Sir Thomas Kirkpatrick of Closeburn; a few of which I shall here mention.

John Kirkpatrick of Kilosburn obtains a charter of confirmation of the lands of Kilosburn, which belonged formerly to his ancestors, from King Alexander II. Roger Kirkpatrick, successor of the foresaid John, whom Buchanan calls Rogerus a Cella Patriciei, was among the first of those worthy that stood up for the interest of King Robert the Bruce, as he was returning from smiting Red John Cumin in the church of Dumfries. This Roger Kirkpatrick went into the church, expressing these words, I'll make richer, or sure, and there gave Cumin several stabs with a dagger, for which the family has used the dagger for a crest, and for motto, I'll make sure. Sir Thomas Kirkpatrick succeeded his father Roger in the barony of Closeburn; who, for his father's, and his own special services to his king and country, got the lands of Redburn, in the sheriffdom of Dumfries, as the charter of King Robert the Bruce bears, dated at Lochmaben the 4th of January, and 14th year of his reign. Sir Thomas was succeeded by his son Winfredus de Kirkpatrick, who got the lands of Torthorald. His son, or grandson, Sir Thomas Kirkpatrick of Closeburn, makes a resignation of the baronies of Closeburn and Reildburgh, in the hands of Robert Duke of Albany, Earl of Fife, and Governor of Scotland, for a new charter of taillie to himself and his heirs-male, in which there are several substitutions in favour of his brethren and nephews, too long here to be mentioned. This charter is dated at Ayr the 14th of October 1429; he was succeeded by his brother Roger Kirkpatrick, who was one of the gentlemen of inquest, in serving William Lord Somervile, heir to his father Thomas Lord Somervile, before Sir Henry Preston of Craigmilar, sheriff-principal and provost of Edinburgh, the 10th of June 1435. To this writ of service (which I have seen in the custody of Somervile of Drum) Roger Kirkpatrick of Closeburn's seal is appended, upon which are the foresaid armorial figures, viz. a saltier and chief, the last charged with three cushions; for crest, a hand holding a dagger; and for supporters, two lions gardant. This Roger's son and heir was Thomas, and from him was descended the late Sir Thomas Kirkpatrick of Closeburn.

Tweedie of Drunelzir, an ancient family in Tweeddale, now extinct, argent, a saltier ingrained gules, and a chief azure. Pont's Manuscript; which are also illuminated in the House of Falahall 1604.

Grier or Grierson of Lag, in the shire of Nithsdale, sometimes used for arms, gules, a saltier and chief argent, the last charged with three cushions of the first, which I take for a coat of patronage: And at other times carried gules, on a fesse or, betwixt three quadrangular locks argent, a mullet azure. Pont's Manuscript; and in the New Register, Sir Robert Grierson of Lag, gules, on a fesse between three fetter-locks argent, a mullet azure; crest, a fetter-lock, as the former: motto, Hoc recurrit. The surname of Boyes, argent, a saltier and chief azure, as in old illuminated books of arms; and Mr Pont, in his Blazons, gives the same to Boyses of Pambride. Edmond Howes, in his History of England, says, when King William returned to Scotland, from his imprisonment in England 1174, he carried along with him several English gentlemen, amongst whom was one of the name of Boyes; and our historian, Hector Boccas, who should best know the origin of the family from which he was descended, tells us also, that the first of this name came from England, and possessed the castle of Urquhart, which was bravely defended by one of that name against the usurping English, till death: His heir was saved by being carried by his mother to Ireland, and upon King David II.'s return from France, he was rewarded with the lands of Pambred or Balbred.

Moffat of that ilk, sable, a saltier and chief argent; and others of that name, argent, a saltier azure, and chief gules, as in Pont's Manuscript. And there also,

The name of Cowan, argent, a saltier and chief gules.

The name of Blackwood, argent, a saltier and chief sable, the last charged with three leaves of trees or. Workman's Manuscript. Of this name were two famous brothers for learning, Henry and Adam Blackwood; the first a famous physician in France, and the other a Counsellor of the Presidial Court of Poictiers, whom Sir Robert Sibbald, in his Appendix to his History of Fife, brings from a family of that name in Fife.

Tennent or Tennand of Cairns, argent, a saltier and chief gules, as in Pont's Manuscript. James Tennent of Cairns married a daughter of Hugh Somerville of Drum, he was one of the pages to King James VI. In the Lyon Register, James Tennent of Cairns, argent, a boar's head couped between three crescents sable: motto, Pro utilitate.

In Sir James Balfour's Manuscript of Blazons I met with one Tennent of that ilk, who carried argent, a boar's head couped in chief, and two crescents in the flanks sable.

James Tennent of Lynhouse is witness in a charter of James Lord of St John, Preceptor of Torphichen, Knight of the Order of St John of Jerusalem, to Gavin Dundas of Brestmill, 1558; what this James Tennent of Lynhouse carried I know not: But Munro Tennent, burgess of Edinburgh, had his seal appended to a version of half of the lands of Leny, the 4th of October 1542, whereupon was a boar's head in chief, and two crescents in the flanks, and in base the letter M, the initial letter of his Christian name.

William Tennent of Lennes, argent, a boar's head couped in chief, and two crescents in base, all within a bordure sable; crest, a sail, proper: motto, Dabit Deus vela. L. R.

Francis Tennent, sometime Provost of Edinburgh, a loyalist for Queen Mary, was taken prisoner fighting valiantly against her enemies 1571; as in Mr David Crawford's Memoirs of that Queen.

The name of Drysdale, argent, a saltier azure, between four crosses moline gules, and a chief of the second. Pont's Manuscript.

The name of Berrett, or, a saltier gules, and, on a chief azure, a crescent argent, between two spur-rowels of the first. Pont's Manuscript. And there also,

Tait of Pitm, an ancient and principal family of the name, in the shire of Tweeddale, argent, a saltier inarguiled, and a chief gules. Which family ended of late in an heiress, married to Horsburgh of that ilk, who quarters these arms with his own, as in the Plate of Achievements.

Williamson, argent, a saltier betwixt a boar's head erased in chief, and three stars in the flanks, and base sable. Pont's Manuscript.

John Williamson sometime Bailie of Kirkcaldy, argent, a saltier waved between two boars' heads erased in chief and base, and as many mullets in the flanks sable; with the motto, Modicum modio erit magnum. Lyon Register.

James Williamson of Hutchinfield, argent, a saltier between three mullets in chief, and flanks sable, and a boar's head erased in base gules; crest, a garb lying on its side unbound, proper: motto, Modice augetur modicum. Lyon Register.

The name of Blaw, azure, a saltier argent, and, on a chief or, three cushions gules: It is said that the first of this name was Johnston, who killed a man with a blow, for which being obliged to abscons, and change his name, he took that of Blaw.

Having treated of the saltier, or St Andrew's cross, frequently so called with us, upon the account of its being the badge of the nation, under its variations of tinctures and accidental forms, and as it is joined with the ordinary the chief, where it is frequent in the bearings of those, who by descent, relation, or dependence, had any interest in the south-west parts of Scotland: We will find other figures as eminently predominating in other places of the kingdom, which is evident by the former and following blazons. In England the saltier is to be found—also often in the arms of the best families of that nation, and on the ensigns of their episcopal sees, of which I shall mention a few before I end this chapter.

The Episcopal See of Rochester, argent, on a saltier gules, an escalop or. The Episcopal See of Bath and Wells, as before.

The ancient and honourable surname of Neville in England, gules, a saltier argent: The earls of that name are Salisbury and Warwick, who carried the same, with the addition of a label of three points: The earls of Kent, the same, with a star saltier on the centre; and the Lord Latimer placed an annulet table on the centre of the saltier; and Neville Lord Abergavenny placed a red rose in the centre of his blazon for his difference.

Sir Francis Leake of Sutton, descended of an ancient family, of very good account in Derbyshire, was in anno 1611, advanced to the dignity of baronet, by King James I. of Great Britain; and in the 2nd year of that king's reign, was made a baron of England, by the title of Lord Deincourt of Sutton; and in the 21st of Charles I. was advanced to the dignity of earl, by the title of Earl of Scarisbale. He was eminently loyal; and his two sons were killed in the king's service: And having himself suffered much for his loyalty in these ruinous times, he became so much mortified (as the English observe) after the murder of his rightful sovereign Charles I. that he apparelled himself in sackcloth, and causing his grave to be dug some years before his death, laid himself down in it every Friday, exercising himself in divine meditations and prayers. Of him is descended the present Nicholas Leake Earl of Scarisbale, Lord Deincourt, whose arms are argent, on a saltier ingrailed table, nine annulets or.

Gerrard Earl of Macclesfield, argent, a saltier gules, charged with an imperial crown or; which charge is a late augmentation: For formerly the family used a crescent, in place of the crown, to difference themselves from the Gerards in Ireland, as Imhoff observes, in his Blasonia Regnum Parisiumque Magnae Britanniae: "Solent uti eadem tessa gentilitia, qua Gerardini in Hibernia utuntur, nempe decussis rubecus argentum in solo, addere tamen consueverunt discernicii loco lunam falcatam nigrum." This family was dignified with the title of Lord Gerard Brandon, in the county of Suffolk, and afterwards with the titles of Viscount Brandon, and Earl of Macclesfield, in the year 1679.

When figures are situate after the position of the saltier, they are said (as before of the other ordinaries) to be in saltier, especially if small figures, but if oblong ones, saltier-ways, for which the French say rangé, or posé en sautoir, and the Latins, in decussim trajecta.

Eccles of Kildonan, argent, two halberts saltier-ways azure; and for crest, a broken halbert; with the motto, Se defendendo; as in the Plate of Achievements. The representative of this family is Doctor William Eccles, an eminent physician.

Eccles of Shanock, descended of Kildonan, the same with Kildonan, within a bordure gules, for his difference: As in the Lyon Register.

The Papal ensign is two keys saltier-ways adossé, i.e. their wands outwards.

The Episcopal See of Peterborough, gules, two keys saltier-ways adossé, and cantoned with four cross croslets bottony, and filedé or.

The Episcopal See of London, gules, two swords saltier-ways argent, hilted and pommelled or.

The Episcopal See of Landaff, sable, two crosiers saltier-ways, the dexter or, surmounting the sinister argent, and, on a chief azure, three mitres, with labels of the second.

The Episcopal See of St Asaph, sable, two keys saltier-ways adossé argent.

Gloucester See, azure, two keys adossé, saltier-ways or.

Exeter See, a sword pale-ways argent, the hilt or, surmounted by two keys saltier-ways adossé of the third. As Dale pursuivant tells us.
OF THE CHEVERON.

G H A P. XVII.

OF THE CHEVERON.

THIS honourable Ordinary, the last of the nine, may be said to be made of the bend dexter-and sinister, issuing from the right and left base points of the escutcheon, meeting and ending pyramidically in the collar point. The French say, as Monsieur Baron, that it represents a pair of compasses half open; and as Menestrier, in his La Science de la Noblesse, "Cheveron est une pièce honorable, qui retoise deux chevrons de charpente assemblés, sans aucune division, il descend du chef vers les extrémités de l'écu en forme d'un compass à demi-ouvert."

The Cheveron, anciently, as appears by old seals and monuments, reached from the base to the top of the escutcheon, as fig. 1. Pl. VII. But in latter times the top of the cheveron reaches no further than the collar point, as by the following examples. When the first is met within arms, it is said to be a cheveron transposed, by the English, and bausté by the French.

What the cheveron represents, there are different opinions. Gerard Leigh will have it to represent the head-attire, which in old times the women-priests used to wear; for which it is called by some, signum capitale. But how it came into armories I cannot fancy, since no other herald is of his opinion. The author of Trevor Heraldique will have a cheveron to represent a horseman's spur; a better fancy than Leigh's.

Some derive the word cheveron from chevre, a goat, because it stands like the horns of a goat reversed. The Italians call the cheveron, capriolo; and some, that write in Latin, say capriolus for a cheveron.

Argot de Molina, a Spanish Herald, and others, will have it to represent a carpenter's rule, for which it is latined norma, as representing a mechanical instrument. The Spaniards seldom use it in their arms. Mr Peacham, an Englishman, in his book, is much of this opinion, and observes, that a cheveron is never to be seen in the armorial ensigns of Kings and Princes, nor as a braise in the arms of their descendants.

Sir James Balfour, sometime Lyon King at Arms, in a Manuscript of his, says, no King nor Prince should carry a cheveron, because it touches geometry, and represents the couple of a house; neither, says he, should they bear a Bar, because it is the baulk of a couple: whether he takes it here for a carpenter's rule, or the couple of a house, as the English do, I cannot be positive, but it is generally observed, that the cheveron is seldom or never carried by Kings or Princes.

Menestrier says of the cheveron as of the saltier, and other traverse pieces of armories, that it may be supposed to be brought from the pieces of timber, which made up the barriers of tournaments, inclosures of parks, and entries, which are joined at the upper end, and severed below, like a cheveron. Sylvester Petra Sancta, in his chapter de Tesserario Camberio, says, "Ita fit quasi dux institutus uno nexu jungantur, insistant vero divaricatae cruribus in modum circini, fœciales capriolum seu cantierium vocant."

The English generally take the cheveron to represent a pair of barge-couplings, or rafters, such as carpenters set on the highest part of the house; which is never complete till these be set up; and say a cheveron should be given to those who have brought any great design to perfection. So that it is the figure of an established house, as Guillim; and is latined tignon, which comes from tego to cover; for upon couplings or top-rafters of a house is laid the covering of the building.

After this representation and meaning I find our heralds have taken the cheveron; for in some of our old books of blazons, I find the cheveron represented just like the couple of a house; as in the arms of Gordon Earl of Aboyne, a younger son of the family of Huntly, where a cheveron is added to the arms of Gordon, for a difference; with these words for motto, Stant castro tigno, to shew its signification, and his descent from an established house.

Sir George Mackenzie, in his Science of Heraldry, tells us, that the cheveron is given by heralds, to such as have supplied and relieved their Prince and country; and thus the Hepburns carry gules, on a cheveron argent, two lions pulling at a rose of the first, fig. 7. Pl. VII. because the Scots being in a battle with the English, and like to be worsted, two brothers of the name of Hepburn opportunely came in with fresh supplies, and recovered the battle; and therefore he will have the cheveron to signify the relief they gave, and the two lions to represent themselves as Scots, pulling at a rose, the badge of England. But of these arms afterwards.

Sir George observes also, that ROBERTSON of Struan got a cheveron added to his arms, for apprehending Graham, the murderer of King James I. and that the family has disused it of late, because of its being frequently used as a mark of cadency: and Struan being chief of the name of Robertson, it were improper to him upon that account.

The cheveron takes up the third part of the field by the French, but by the English only the fifth part, whether charged or not; sometimes our painters and engravers follow the one or the other, as they think it fit, to make the cheveron less or more proportionable to the figures which accompany or charge it.

I shall proceed to treat of the cheveron, in the same method I have done of the former ordinaries, by giving examples of them plain, under accidental forms, charged, accompanied, of their diminution, and multiplication, with the blazons of other figures situate after the position of the cheveron; and first of a plain cheveron.

The old Earls of Carrick had for arms, argent, a cheveron gules; as Sir James Balfour's Blazons, Plate VII. fig. 2.

King William the Lion had given Carrick to Duncan the son of Gilbert, the son of Fergus of Galloway, and erected it into an earldom 1185, which also became a surname to his descendants, who carried the same arms.

Earl DUNCAN was succeeded by his son Neil Earl of Carrick, who was very liberal to the monks of the abbacy of Crosragwell, which his father founded. He departed this life 23d of June 1250, leaving one daughter, Margaret, his sole heir, who married first Adam de Kilconaty, who thereupon was Earl of Carrick. He dying in the Holy Land, without issue, she married again Robert de Bruce Lord of Annandale, who in her right was Earl of Carrick; she bare to him Robert King of Scotland, and Edward Earl of Carrick, at last King of Ireland, who was slain at the battle of Dundalk, anno 1318.

He left a natural son, Robert Bruce of Liddisdale, on whom his uncle King Robert the Bruce bestowed the earldom of Carrick. He was killed at the battle of Duplin, 1332, and was succeeded in that dignity by Alexander his brother, who lost his life at the battle of Halidon-hill, 1333, leaving a daughter, Helen Countess of Carrick; she died without issue, whereupon the earldom returned to the crown, and was by King David Bruce, in the 39th year of his reign, given to John Stewart, Lord Kyle, his nephew John, eldest son of Robert Stewart of Strathern, who afterwards was created Earl of Carrick. He came to the crown 1392, by the name of Robert III.

The surname of TELZEFER, ermine, a cheveron gules; the principal family of which name is TELZEFER of Harecleugh. I have seen a charter granted by James de Lindsay Lord Crawford, the 12th of October 1392, of the lands of Harecleugh, to John Telzefer, which formerly belonged to his uncle William Telzefer; which charter is confirmed by King Robert III. in a charter of Robert Duke of Albany, to John Stewart Earl of Buchan, of the lands of Dunlop, 1418, Andrew Telzefer is a witness, and there designed Clerk of the Chancellory.

Some say the cheveron was accompanied with lions' heads, and others say with wolves' heads, but these have been long since disused by the family; and the double trussure, says Sir James Balfour, was carried by Fleming Earl of Wigtoun, in the year 1557. As for the signification and antiquity of the name, in the chartularies of Paisley and Kelso, it is written Flandrensis, Flaming, and Flammatics. Which surname they had, says Sir James Dalrymple, in his Collections, page 425, from one residing in Scotland, who came from Flanders; from whence the name Fleming, of which there are several to be found witnesses in evidences, in the reigns of Malcolm IV. William the Lion, and the Alexanders.
Sir Robert Fleming was amongst the first Scots patriots who stood up for the interest of King Robert the Bruce, and independency of Scotland; for which he got from his Majesty the barony of Cumbernauld, and several other donations. He had two sons, Sir Malcolm his successor, and Sir Patrick Fleming, Sheriff of Peebles, who got the barony of Biggar, by marrying one of the daughters and coheirs of Simon Fraser Lord of Oliver-Castle; upon which account this branch of the Flemings quarters the arms of Fraser, viz. azure, three cinquefoils argent. Of old they were five cinquefoils, disposed in saltier, 2, 1, and 2.

Sir Malcolm Fleming of Cumbernauld was in great favour with King Robert I. who, for his own and his father's merits, made him Sheriff of the county, and governor of Dumbarton castle. He was succeeded by his son Sir Malcolm, who singularly stood for King David II. and the Brucean line, and was also made governor of Dumbarton castle. He discharged that trust with the utmost fidelity, when the King's interest was very weak, after the loss of the battles of Duplin and Hallidon-hill; things growing worse and worse, and the King's person being in danger, Sir Malcolm was pitched upon to wait on the King to France, which he performed with safety and honour. After this he returned to his command of Dumbarton Castle, which he kept out against Edward Baliol and the English, and there happily preserved Robert Lord High Steward, afterwards King Robert II. whose blood was very much sought after. And when the King's affairs took another turn, Sir Malcolm went to France and attended the king home, 2d of July 1342; and on the 9th of November the same year, his majesty was pleased to create him Earl of Wigton, by his royal charter: for which see Mr Crawford's Peerage.

Thomas Earl of Wigton, grandson to Malcolm Earl of Wigton, having no issue, sold the barony with its dignity to Archibald Earl of Douglas, in the year 1371. I find him designed in charters Thomas quondam Comes de Wigton: He died without issue. In our illuminated books of blazons, I have met with the arms of Archibald Douglas Earl of Wigton, thus, quarterly, first azure, a lion rampant argent, crowned or, for Galloway; second and third gules, a chevron within a double trezure counter-flowered argent, the arms of the Earl of Wigton; fourth argent, a heart gules, on a chief azure, three stars of the first, for Douglas.

Malcolm Fleming of Biggar, son of Robert, and brother to Sir Malcolm Fleming of Cumbernauld beforementioned, continued the succession of the family, which was dignified with the title of Lord Fleming, and afterwards by King James VI. the 19th March 1606, with the title of Earl of Wigton, whose representative is John Earl of Wigton. He carries, quarterly, first and fourth gules, a chevron within a double trezure, flowered and counter-flowered argent; second and third azure, three cinquefoils argent, as descended of the Lord Fraser above-mentioned. These are otherwise illustrated in James Esplin, Marchmont herald, his Book, viz. first and fourth or, a chevron within a double treasure counter-flowered gules; second and third azure, six cinquefoils, 2, 2, and 2 argent; which in my opinion is a mistake, for in all other books they are as I have blazoned them: supported by two stags, proper, attired and unguled or, and collared azure, charged with three cinquefoils argent; crest, a goat's head erased argent, horned or; motto, Let the deed stand.

The Flemings of Boghall, in Renfrewshire, were descended of a younger son of Biggar now Earl of Wigton. I have seen a charter of John Fleming of Boghall, of the lands of Sinton, to John Veitch, son and apparent heir of William Veitch of Dawick, whereunto the seal of Fleming of Boghall is appended, having his arms, quarterly, first and fourth a chevron betwixt three wolves' heads; second and third, on a bend, other three figures which were defaced.

Sir William Fleming of Fern, Knight-Baronet, Commissary of Glasgow, descended of a second son of the Earl of Wigton, carries, quarterly, first and fourth gules, a chevron embattled within a double treasure counter-flowered argent, for Fleming; second and third azure, three cinquefoils argent, for Fraser; and for crest, a palm tree, proper; with the motto, Sub poudere cresco. New Register. And there also,

Lieutenant-Colonel John Fleming, descended of a third brother of the Earl of Wigton's family, carries, quarterly, first and fourth or, a chevron within a double

Of the treasure counter-flowered gules; second and third azure, three cinquefoils argent, with a martlet in the centre for difference; crest, a goat's head erased argent, armed and collared azure, the last charged with three cinquefoils argent: motto, Let the deed show.

There is another ancient family of the name of Fleming of Barroochin, in the shire of Renfrew, in the reign of Alexander III. mentioned in a charter of Malcolm Earl of Lennox to Walter Spruel. And in another charter of James High Steward of Scotland, grandfather to King Robert II. in the reign of King James IV. William Fleming of Barroochin is sheriff of Lanark, but was killed at the battle of Flodden with King James IV. anno 1513. He left issue by Marion, his lady, a daughter of the family of Houston, James his son and heir, who was father of William Fleming of Barroochin, from whom Patrick Fleming, now of Barroochin, is the fifth in a direct line; as in Mr Crawford's History of the shire of Renfrew. He gives the armorial bearings of this family without naming the tinctures, thus, a lissee chequé, surmounted of a bend, with a martlet in base. It is strange that this ancient family carries nothing of the Flemings, but only the figures of the Stewarts, over-lords and patrons of that country; and the martlet as a maternal mark from the House of Houston.

The surname of Flockhart, with us, argent, a cheveron sable. Pont's MS.

The family of Widwille Earls of Rivers in England carried argent, a cheveron gules, which Imhof blazon thus, Insignia Comitum Rivers et Widwillana stirpe progunt: Ubi sunt secto argentoe cui norma impressa est rubea. Here the word norma is used for a cheveron.

Fulford of Fulford in the county of Devonshire, gules, a cheveron argent.

Swillington in England, argent, a cheveron azure.

When a cheveron is alone in the field, it is then the principal figure of the name by whom it is so carried, but if accompanied with other figures, it is not always to be looked upon as a principal, but as an additional figure; but more of this afterwards. I proceed to give examples of a cheveron accompanied and charged with figures, by some principal families.

The surname of Elphinstone, argent, a cheveron sable, accompanied with three boars' heads erased gules; Plate VII. fig. 4. The first of this name is said to have been a German, called Helphingston, which became a surname to his descendants. One of them, an eminent man in the reign of King Robert the Bruce, married Margaret Seaton, daughter of Sir Christopher Seaton of that Ilk, and his lady, Christian, sister to King Robert the Bruce; and got with her lands in East-Lothian, which he called after his name, Elphinstone, which held of the family of Seaton. The family of Elphinstone of that Ilk continued, and, by marrying Marjory Airth, heiress of Airthland, or Airthbey, in Stirlingshire, got with her these lands, till Sir Alexander Elphinstone of that Ilk was killed in the battle of Flodden, in the year 1436. He left behind him a daughter, Agnes, his heir, married to Gilbert Johnston, who, in her right, was lord of Elphinstone; of whom before. The other lands, belonging to this family in Stirlingshire, came to Henry Elphinstone, as heir-male to his brother Sir Alexander Elphinstone, and these lands they called Elphinstone. He was succeeded by his son John Elphinstone of that Ilk, father of Alexander Elphinstone, who was created lord of Parliament, by the title of Lord Elphinstone, by King James IV. This is evident by a charter, (in the Earl of Haddington's Collections) where that king disposes to him, there described, Lord Elphinstone, and his spouse Elisabeth Barlow, an English lady, one of the maids of Queen Margaret, the lands of Quarrel, lying within the sheriffdom of Stirling, anno 1512, the 29th of August. This Lord Elphinstone was killed with the king at the battle of Flodden, and being not unlike the king in face and stature, his body was carried by the English to Berwick for that of the king's. His son and successor, Alexander Lord Elphinstone, was killed at the battle of Pinkie, 12th September 1547, and was father of Robert Lord Elphinstone, who married Elisabeth, a daughter of John Drummond of Innerpeffry, and by her had several children. Alexander, the eldest, was by King James VI. made one of the Privy Council, and preferred to be Lord High Treasurer 1590. He had four sons, and as many daughters, by his lady, a daughter of William Lord Livingston: Alexander, the eldest, succeeded him; James, the second, of Barns; third, John.
OF THE CHEVERON.

of Mortle in Aberdeenshire, and Michael Elphinstone of Quarrel. Lord Alexander married the sister of James first Earl of Perth, with whom he had only a daughter, Lilias, his heir, so that the title of lord descended to his nephew Alexander Elphinstone of Barns, son of his brother James, who married the above Lilias. Their son John Lord Elphinstone, married Isabel, daughter of Charles Earl of Lauderdale, by whom he has issue, and carries as before, argent, a cheveron sable, betwixt three 'boars' heads erased gules; supporters, two savages, proper, with laurel garlands about their heads and middle, holding in their hands darts, with their heads upwards; and for crest, a lady from the middle richly attired, holding a castle in her right hand, and in her left a branch of laurel; with the motto, Cause causèd it.

I will make mention of families of this surname afterwards, with many others, who carry cheverons accompanied with figures.

This ordinary, the cheveron, as others, is not only subject to accidental forms, but to be voided and charged with figures proper and natural; as by the following examples.

A cheveron voided is when the middle part of it is evacuated or cut out by even or straight lines, so that the field appears through it.

Plate VII. fig. 5. Main of Lochwood, argent; a cheveron gules, voided of the field, betwixt two pheons in chief, and an unicorn's head erased in base sable; as in Sir George Mackenzie's Heraldry, and in the Lyon Register; for crest, a hand throwing a dart, proper: motto, Project. This figure is so irregularly cut, that it may be blazoned two cheverons.

Chisely of Kerswall, gules, a cheveron voided between three cinquefoils or; crest, an eagle displayed, proper: motto, Credo & videbo. New Register. And there also, Chisely of Dalry, argent, three roses slipped gules, and stalked vert; and for crest, another rose of the same; with the motto, Fragrat post funera virtus.

The name of Doyley in England, azure, a cheveron ingrazed on the outer side or, and voided of the field.

Camden, in his Blazons, for a cheveron voided, says, cantherium evacuatum. The voidure must be made of even lines, and not ingrazed, waved, or any other form in the inner part; and when it is so, it is taken for a cheveron above a cheveron, because the accidental forms cannot be attributed to the voiding of the field, but to a figure: So that all voidings must be plain, and of the tincture of the field; if of another tincture, it is then taken for a super-charge. Plate VII. fig. 6.

When the cheveron, or any of the honourable ordinaries are only charged, and not accompanied with figures, it is then thought by some heralds to be a more honourable bearing, than when accompanied, and especially the cheveron. Gerard Leigh says, when an ordinary is only charged, it is an honorable charged; but I am loath to be positive in this, though I have observed, in our ancient bearings of principal families, the ordinaries have been oftener charged than accompanied.

Hepburn, gules, on a cheveron argent, two lions pulling at a rose of the first, Plate VII. fig. 7. I have seen these arms on the seal of Patrick Hepburn, as one of the members of Parliament, anno 1572, being the third year of the reign of King Robert II. appended to the Act of Recognition past in that Parliament, in favours of John Earl of Carrick, eldest son to the said king, to whom John succeeded, by the name of Robert III. so that the Hepburns carried these arms before the battle of Otterburn, which was in the year 1388, and had not them from that battle.

Besides what I have said before of these arms, with submission to the learned Sir George Mackenzie, I shall here add my conjecture about them; I think they have been assumed as arms of patronage, and, in imitation of these belonging to the Earls of Dunbar, (which were gules, a lion rampant within a bordure argent, charged with eight roses of the first) making use of the same tinctures and figures, placing the last upon a cheveron: and though there be two lions, and one rose upon it, they are but sittuate to the form of the cheveron for regularity and beauty; and so the same tinctures and figures of the arms of the Earls of Dunbar may be looked upon as arms of patronage, frequent in the days of their assumption. All writers tells us, that the first of this name was an Englishman, whom the Earl of Dunbar took prisoner, and brought to Scotland, and being a brave and valiant man, the Earl gave him several lands in East-Lothian; for which see Hector Bocce his History.

As for the manner and time of their rise in Scotland I cannot be positive; but I may assert there were of this name with us, in the reign of King Robert the Bruce, as by the Minute Book of old charters made by Mr George Lawson, Underclerk of the Exchequer; where Adam de Hepburn gets a charter of the lands of South and North Hales and Trapen, upon the forfeiture of Hugh Gourlay of Benton, to be holden of the Earl of Dunbar and March; as also a charter of the lands of Mersington, Rollingston, and some lands of Cockburnspath, all holden of Patrick Earl of Dunbar.

Dominus Patricius de Hepburn, son to the said Adam, is a witness in an original charter of Patricius de Dunbar, Comes Martia & Moravia, and (Black) Agnes his Countess, dated at the Castle of Dunbar, 24th May 1367, and he is ranked before George Dunbar, whom the Earl calls Consanguineus noster. The same Dominus Patricius de Hepburn is also a witness in a charter granted by Alexander de Lindsay Dominus de Ormiston, in favours of his daughter and heir, Janet, upon the agreement betwixt him and Alexander de Cockburn, in the marriage of John de Cockburn, his only son of the first marriage, and the said Janet; wherein he gives the lands of Ormiston, with the manor-house of Peaston, &c. to them. Which charter is confirmed by King David Bruce, the 39th year of his reign. This Sir Patrick is the same person whom I mentioned before, whose seal of arms is appended to the act of Parliament recognizing John, eldest son and heir of King Robert II. 1373. Our historians make honourable mention of him, and his son Patrick, in the famous battle of Otterburn, in the year 1388.

Patrick Hepburn, the younger of Hales, (his father being then 81 years old) returning from an expedition into England, was unfortunately overaken and killed at Nisbet, by George Dunbar, son to the Earl of that name, who came up with a party of horse to assist the English, in the year 1402.

Sir Adam Hepburn, of Hales, son of the said Patrick, was imprisoned in the Castle of St Andrews, with Hay of Yester, and other brothers, upon suspicion, by King James I. but was soon released and made governor of the Castle of Dunbar, in anno 1433. He was at the battle of Pepperden, in England, where the Scots gained a notable victory over the English, 1437. He left three sons, Patrick, William, and George of Whitsome.

Patrick succeeded his father, Sir Adam: and, in his charter to the Abbey of Coldingham, the witnesses are Archibald de Hepburn, his uncle, William and George; his brothers: he was made a Lord of Parliament by the title of Lord Hales, by King James II. 1456. His son Patrick Lord Hales was advanced to the dignity of Earl of Bothwell, by King James IV. the first year of his reign. And the year after, I find him designed Comes de Batowel & Dominus de Hales & Magister Hospitii nostri, as witness in that king's charter to George Home of Ayton. This earl's seal of arms I have seen appended to a Precept of Seisin of James Bailie, in the lands of Carphin, anno 1489; on which were the arms of Hepburn, as before, supported by two lions gardant; and for crest, a horse head and neck barded. I have seen another seal of this earl's appended to another precept in the year 1498, which had a shield, quarterly, first and fourth, a bend, which I take for the arms of Vauss Lord Dirleton; second and third, Hepburn, as before. He was succeeded by his son Adam Earl of Bothwell; and his successor, James Earl of Bothwell, was, with all solemnity, in the Castle of Edinburgh, created Marquis of Fife and Duke of Orkney, by Queen Mary 1567; and was High Admiral of Scotland. I have seen his arms illuminated thus, quarterly, first Hepburn; second azure, a ship or, with her sails furled up argent, within a double treasure flowered and counter-flowered of the second, as Duke of Orkney; third ermine, three chevronels guules, for the Lord Soules; fourth or, a bend azure, for Vass Lord Dirleton, embellished with the fore-mentioned exterior ornaments, and behind the shield was an anchor, the badge of the office of Admiralty. He was forfeit by the Parliament, for the murder of Prince Henry, father to King James VI. Many families of this name suffered with him, and were brought to ruin. Some of these who are yet standing, I shall give their blazons about the end of this chapter.

These of the surname of Ker give for their proper figures, a chevron charged with stars, which some blazon mullets; but of the distinction between stars and mullets afterwards. There were two principal families of this name in the county of Roxburgh, viz. Cessford and Ferniechirch, who are said to have their rise from two brothers, Ralph and Robert, sons of the family of Ker of Kerhall, in Lancashire; originally from the family of Ker in Normandy, who came over with William the Conqueror, to England. Which of these two brothers were eldest, is not determined, nor the precise time when they came to Scotland; but it is said, in the time of King David the II. and that Robert got from that king the lands of Auld-toynburn, lying upon the water of Beaumont, the original of the house of Cessford, Earls, and now Duke of Roxburgh. Their achievement is quarterly, first and fourth vert, on a chevron between three unicorns' heads erased argent, as many stars sable, as Ker of Cessford; they had formerly the field of their arms gules, as others of the name, till one of the Lairs of Cessford was killed fighting valiantly against the English in a green field, in the reign of King James IV. whereupon he ordered, for the future, that the field of arms of that family should be vert, in remembrance thereof. As Sir George Mackenzie in his Manuscript of Genealogies. I am much of the opinion that it was then that the family got, by way of concession, the unicorns' heads, being a part of the royal ensign; second and third gules, three mascles or, for the name of Vipont; which arms are supported by two savages, proper, wreathed about the middle with laurel, holding battons over their shoulders, standing upon a compartment, whereupon are frequently these words, Omne solum fortis patria est; and for crest, an unicorn's head erased argent, maned and horned or; with the motto, Pro Christo & Patria dulce periculum.

The family of Cessford was first dignified with the title of Lord Ker of Cessford, by King James VI. and afterwards, in the year 1616, with the title of Earl of Roxburgh, in the person of Robert Lord Ker. He married first a daughter of Sir William Maitland of Lethington, and by her had three daughters. 2dly, He married Jean, daughter of Patrick Lord Drummond, by whom he had a son, Henry Lord Ker, who died before the Earl, his father, and left a daughter Jean; who, by her grandfather's appointment, married Sir William Drummond, younger son to John Earl of Perth. He, in right of his wife, was second Earl of Roxburgh; of him is lineally descended John Ker, Earl and first Duke of Roxburgh.

But to proceed to treat of the chevron in its varieties, after which I shall add the blazons of the honourable family of the name of Ker and others.

When there are more chevrons than one in the field, some English heralds call them chevronets, but we, with the French, though there be three of them in one field, call them still chevrons, as we have formerly done of the like number of bends, though they keep not their just quantity when multiplied.

The old Earls of Strathern carried for arms, or, two chevrons gules; as Plate VII. fig. 8.

The Earldom of Strathern was certainly one of the most ancient dignities in the kingdom; for Malise Comes Stradurnie is mentioned in the charter of erection of the Priory of Scoon by Alexander I. anno 1115. His son and successor was Feretb Comes de Stradurn, witness in a grant by King Malcolm IV. to the Convent of Scoon. He left behind him three sons, Robert, his successor in honour; Gilbert, thereafter Earl of Strathern; and Malise, to whom King William gave the lands of Kincardine in Perth, to be holden of his brother, Earl Robert. Gilbert erected the convent of Inchaffry, and left issue, a son, Malise, and two daughters, Annabella, married to Sir David Graham of Dunaff, with whom he got the barony of Kincardine, from whom is descended the present Duke of Montrose; Ama-tilda was married to Malcolm Earl of Fife.

Malise succeeded his father, Earl Malise, in fortune and dignity; He married Mary, daughter of Sir John Cumming of Badenoch, and with her had issue, Malise, his son and heir, and a daughter Mary, married to Sir John Murray of Drumshargard, who got with her the lands of Ogilvie, Abercaurnie, and Glenthi-rop; from him is descended the present Laird of Abercaurnie. As in Mr Crawford's Peerage.

Malise, the next Earl of Strathern, had issue only one daughter, Johanna, countess of Strathern; who married the Earl of Warren, an English Lord, who engaged his Lady intoreasonable practices against King Robert the Bruce; for which she was forfeited, as were some of her associates, the Lord Breelin, and the Lord Souls, who also suffered death for the same.

That earldom returned to the crown, and King David gave it to Maurice de Moravia; but this new Earl was killed shortly thereafter, at the battle of Durliam, 1346. He left no issue behind him, and that earldom was again bestowed by King David on his nephew Robert, Lord High Steward of Scotland, who, when he succeeded to the crown, conferred that earldom on his eldest son, David Stewart, by his second wife Eupham Ross; but he dying without sons, his only daughter Eupham, who, in evident, was designed Comitissa Palatina de Strathern, married Patrick Graham, a younger son of Sir Patrick Graham of Kincardine, who, in her right, was Earl of Strathern for some time; and afterwards, in lieu of it, was made Earl of Monteach. Of whom before.

Maclellan of Bomby in Galloway, or, two cheverons sable; this family was dignified with the title of Lord Kirkcudbright; their arms were supported on the right side, by a man armed at all points, holding a baton in his hand, and on the sinister, by a horse furnished; and for crest, a naked arm supporting on the point of a sword a Moor's head: with the motto, Think on. And at other times for crest, a mortar piece; with the motto, Superba frango.

By all our historians, this family was anciently of great authority, being Sheriffs of Galloway. In the reign of King James II. the family fell under forfeiture, in resenting the murder of Sir Robert Maclellan of Bomby, the head of the family, by making unwarrantable depredations on the Douglasses lands in Galloway; and it is given out by Sir George Mackenzio, in his Manuscript of Genealogies, and by Mr Crawford's Peerage, that the barony of Bomby was again recovered by the Maclellans, after this manner: In the same reign, it happened, that a company of Saracens or gypsies from Ireland infested the country of Galloway, whereupon the king emitted a proclamation, bearing, that whoever should disperse them, and bring in the Captain dead or alive, should have the barony of Bomby for his reward. So it happened that a brave young gentleman, the laird of Bomby's son, killed their captain, and brought his head on the point of his sword to the king, and thereupon was immediately put in possession of the barony of Bomby; and to perpetuate the memory of that remarkable action, he took for his crest, a Moor's head on the point of his sword, and Think on for his motto. I am of opinion, that the other crest and motto, a mortar piece, with Superba frango, has been assumed since mortars and bombs came in use, as relative to their designation, Bomby.

Thomas Maclellan of Bomby, in the reign of King James IV. was very serviceable to the crown, as was his son William Maclellan of Bomby, who was knighted by King James IV. but was slain with the king at the battle of Flodden. Sir Robert Maclellan of Bomby was knighted by King James VI. and by King Charles I. 25th May 1633, was created Lord Kirkcudbright. For which see the Peerage of Scotland.

Samuel Maclellan of Barclay, argent, two cheverons within a bordure engrailed gules. Crest, a dexter arm issuing out of a wreath erect, holding on the point of a dagger a Moor's head proper: motto, Think on. As in the L. R. and in Plate of Achievements. He succeeded his elder brother, Robert Maclellan of Barclay, 1717, who was a second son of Robert Maclellan of Barmagachan, son of another Robert, son of Thomas Maclellan of Barmagachan, son of William, and he again the son of Gilbert Maclellan, the first laird of Barmagachan, and his spouse Janet, daughter to the Lord Herries, who was the second son of Sir Thomas Maclellan of Bomby, and his wife Agnes, daughter of Sir James Dunbar of M-Craim.

Sir Samuel Maclellan, late Provost of Edinburgh, argent, two cheverons sable, each charged with a beaunt of the field; erest, a moor's head and neck proper: motto, Sopit qui reputat. Lyon Register, and in Plate of Achievements.
OF THE CHEVERON.

WALTERSON, i.e. Filius Walteri, says Sir James Balfour, carried sable, a fesse between two chevrons or, in the year 1292.

Plate VII, fig. 9. SOULES Lord Liddisdale, in anno 1278, carried ermine, three chevrons gules, which were afterwards quartered by the Earls of Douglas, for the title of Liddisdale. As for the antiquity of the name and family, Sir James Dalrymple, in his Collections, tells us, that Ranulphus de Soules is a witness in King David I. his charters. He and his successors, in other Kings' charters, are often designed Pinicorna Regis, and in the cartulary of Newbattle, Guielms de Soules is designated Butellarius Regis, in the year 1320. This family was very powerful in the time of the controversy betwixt the Bruce and Baliol, but they adhered to the latter. Sir William Soules was governor of Berwick in the year 1320. He was suspected and convicted of treason, and forfeited by King Robert the Bruce, and Sir Alexander Seaton of that Ilk was made governor of Berwick in his place. His lands, Soulestoun or Salton, in East-Lothian, came to the Abernethys, who were lords of Salton; and afterwards, by marriage, to Fraser Lord Salton; but the barony belongs now to Fletcher of Salton, of whom before.

The surname of Horn in England, gules, three chevrons or.

I shall add here some ancient instances of carrying three chevrons, as in a Manuscript of Arms of the Captains of William the Conqueror, said to be written and illuminated by the Monks of Ely, in that king's reign; which Menestrier tells us, in his Rise of Arms, is to be seen in the college of the Benedictines at Douay: among these of William the Conqueror's captains, is Breanus de Clare, whose blazon is, 'D'or, a trois chevrons de gueules, which agrees with the seal of arms of Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester and Hertford, whereon were three chevrons, which Sandford in his Genealogical History gives us: as also, the arms of Sir Walter Manny, which were or, three chevrons sable.

When the field is filled with pieces of metal and colour of equal numbers, after the form of chevronets, we say chevroyes of so many pieces, as of these arms of the county of Ravousbergh in Germany; chevronet of six argent and gules, Plate VII, fig. 10. The French, Chevronné d'argent et de gueules de six pièces; and Uredus blazons them, Scutum senis ex argentio & minio canteriét exaratum. Mr Gibbon, in his Introduction Ad Latinam Blazoniam: Clypeum in senis aequales coecnes vicissim, & argenteas pro tignurum modo, delineatum.

Plate VII, fig. 11. The chevron, as other ordinaries, is sometimes carried couped.

The name of Jones in England, argent, a chevron couped purpure.

The diminutive of a chevron to the half of its breadth, is called by the English a chevronel, and the half of a chevronel as to its breadth, a couple close; but the last is not carried alone, say they, except when a chevron is between two of them, as the endorses with a pale, of which before. The French call the English, Couple close estoy ou estoit, "C'est un petit chevron dont on se sert pour etayer ou appuyer quelque chose." The Latins, statumen, fultura, or an under-prop.

Sir Nicolas RENTON, who was Lord Mayor of London, in the year 1632, carried sable, a chevron betwixt two couples closes, and accompanied with three cinquefoils or, Plate VII, fig. 12, thus latined by the foresaid Mr Gibbon: "In "scuto pullo canthriarii duas linc inde canthrioli aureis præcinctum, & inter "tria quinque folia ejusdem metalli interpositionem." The chevron, besides the accidental forms, common to other ordinaries, may be said to have specific ones, as to be rompu, bracched, couched, reversed, and contrepoinçés.

Rompu is said by the English of chevronets that are broken at the top, for which the French say, brisé. Guillim, in his Display of Heraldry, gives us an example of a chevron rompu, (or rompé) argent, in a field sable, but does not tell us, by whom, and for what reason it is so carried. Mr Holmes calls it a chevron disjointed, and says the name of SORTON carries sable, a chevron disjointed argent. Monsieur Baron gives us the arms of ANDREZET in France, thus: de sable, a trois chevrons brisés d'or, i.e. sable, three chevronets bruised, or rompu or, Plate VII, fig. 13. The like arms are given by Menestrier to the family of VIOLE in France, who, instead of the word brisé, uses ecené, which, (says he) "Se dit du chevron dont la pointe est coupée tout droit sans brisure," i.e. when the top of the chevron is quite off, without any brisure; so that brisé is only said of a chevron whose top is cut from the body, and remains in the field, as Plate VII. fig. 14. argent, a chevron brisé, gules.

Such a one, says Holmes, is borne by the name of Greenway, but he calls it a chevron double-doucet, or double-onset, and says it may be called coupé, and not rampant, as Guillim.

Ecenie is said when the top of the chevron is not only rompu or brisé, but carried out of the field, as fig. 13. Which Sylvester Petar Saneta calls Capriolus fractus, diminutus capite, mutilus & praeceps, and on the margin he has the French terms, brisé au éclaté, which Sir George Mackenzie has in his Science of Heraldry.

I have met with such a figure in the bearing of James Alexander of Kinglassie, parted per pale, argent and sable, a chevron brised at the top, and in base a crescent, all counter-changed, (there brisé is the same with ecenie) quartered with the arms of the name of Ayton; crest, a horse-head bridled, gules: motto, Ducitur non trahitur. Lyon Register.

Some heralds are of opinion, as Sir George Mackenzie intimates, that when a chevron is so broken in its top, it is a sign that the principal house was ruined, and sold; and therefore the cadets take their cognizance bruised in its top.

Braced is said when two or three chevrons are interlaced together, as fig. 15. argent, three chevrons braced in base, azure, and a soleil in chief, gules. And azure, three chevrons braced in base or, by the name of Fitz-hugh. There was a great baron of this name in Northumberland, to whom the Earl of Pembroke was heir, who, amongst his other titles, is designed Lord Fitz-hugh, for which he quarters these arms with his own: As also does Grey Earl of Tankerville; these chevrons so joined, may be blazoned, fretté or, interlaced, as well as braced.

Couched, is said when the top of the chevron is turned to the left or right side, the French say, when to the right, tourné, and when to the left, contourné; Sylvester Petar Saneta, says, Nunc vibrat dextrorsum, nunc vibrat sinisterum. Holmes gives us the arms of the name of Tounrey, or, a chevron couché gules, fig. 16.

If it be turned to the other side, says he, it is termed couché sinister; Sir John Erne, in his Glory of Generosity, p. 181, says the chevron couché shows the house not to be altogether ruined, but to stand in a mean condition, since the chevron is not reversed.

A Chevrons reversed is said when its point is towards the base, azure, a chevron reversed argent, by the name of Rumor, as Mr Holmes gives us another example, as fig. 17. argent, two chevrons couché vert, by the name of Coven-master, others say, counter-couchant; the French, contre-tourné.

Counter-pointed is said when two chevrons meet by their point in the centre of the escutcheon, the uppermost being reversed, as Pl. VII. fig. 18. The arms of Trauer in France, thus blazoned by Menestrier, d'argent, à deux chevrons contre-pointés d'azur.

These last forms and attributes of the chevron may be well said to be brisures, if not abatements of honour.

When any other natural or artificial figures are situate in a shield, after the position of the chevron, they are said to be in chevron, or chevron-sawed, as before of the other ordinarie. I shall add here one example, fig. 19. Plate VII.

Pearson of Balmadies; argent, two swords chevron-ways, piercing a heart in chief, proper, and in base a cinquefoil of the second; crest, a dove holding an olive branch in her beak, proper: motto, Dom spiro spero. New Register.

Having treated of the chevron in its varieties, conform to which I shall add, for examples, the armorial bearings of several families and surnames in Britain.

Liddendale of St Mary's Isle, azure, a chevron ermine.

The surname of Masterson, argent, a chevron gules, and chief azure; sometimes these arms are quartered with argent, an eagle displayed sable, armed and beaked gules, for the name of Ramsay. As in Pond's Manuscript. And in the New Register.

Adam Masterson of Grange, in Perthshire, argent, a chevron between two crescents in chief, and a mullet in base gules, on a chief azure, an eagle displayed or; crest, a dexter hand holding a scimitar, proper: motto, Pro Deo & Rege.

Mr Francis Maberton of Parkmilne; argent, a chevron gules, and a chief azure; crest, a stag courant, bearing on his attire an oak slip, fructuated, proper. Lyon Register.

Elphinstone Lord Balmerino carries the same arms with the Lord Elphinstone, of whom before; and for difference, charges the chevron with three buckles argent, for Monteach; and has for crest, a dove argent, with a snake, proper, linked about its legs: motto, Prudentia fraudis nescia; and for supporters, two griffins, proper, beaked and armed or. The first of this family was Sir James Elphinstone, third son to Robert Lord Elphinstone, and Elizabeth Drummond, daughter to Sir John Drummond of Innerpeffly. He was Secretary of State, President of the College of Justice, and created a Lord of Parliament, by the title of Lord Balmerino, the 25th of April 1634, by King James VI. He married first Sarah Monteach, daughter of Sir John Monteach of Carse, of which marriage is descended the present Lord Balmranoch, for which his family carries the buckles. He married, secondly, a daughter of Maxwell of Newark; she bore to him James Elphinstone, who was created a Lord of Parliament, by the title of Lord Coupar, and carried the same arms with the Lord Elphinstone, but charged his chevron with hearts argent, because, (says Sir George Mackenzie, in his Science of Heraldry, p. 74.) his mother was a daughter of Maxwell of Newark. This family is extinct.

The families of the name of Elphinstone, whose arms are matriculated in the New Register, are these:

Elphinstone of Calderhall, fifth son of Alexander Lord Elphinstone, and Katharine his lady, daughter of John Lord Erskine; argent, a chevron sable, betwixt three boars' heads erased, within a bordure gules; crest, two men's arms issuing out of a wreath, crossing one another saltier-ways, the one on the right side holding a sword, and the other on the left holding a branch of laurel, all proper: and for motto, In utrumque paratus.

Richard Elphinstone of Airth, eldest son and heir to Sir Thomas Elphinstone of Calderhall; quarterly, first and fourth, as Calderhall; second and third or, a saltier and chief gules, the last charged with a mullet of the field, for Bruce of Airth; crest, a griffin sejant, holding in his dexter paw a sword erect, and on the point a Saracen's head, all proper: motto, Do well and let them say.

James Elphinstone of Glack, argent, on a chevron sable, between three boars' heads erased gules, an episcopal mitre of the first.

Sir James Elphinstone, one of the Commissaries of Edinburgh, the same with Elphinstone of Glack, within a bordure gules, for difference; crest, a right hand holding a writing pen feathered, proper; with the word Sedulitate, to show his employment, being a Writer to the Signet.

Henry Elphinstone of Melyholm, second lawful son of Sir Henry Elphinstone of Calderhall, as his father, within a bordure ingrailed gules; crest, a griffin sejant sable, in its dexter paw a garland of laurel vert.

Elphinstone of Leys, argent, a chevron ingrailed sable, between three boars' heads erased gules.

The proper arms of the name of Kennedy, argent, a chevron gules, betwixt three cross crozets fitched sable.

The first of this name and family is said to be one Kenneth, an Irish or Highland Scotman, whose posterity was surnamed Kennedy from him. In the reign of King William, 1183, Henry Kennedy assisted Gilbert, eldest son of Fergus Lord of Galloway, in his wars; as in Buchanan's History. In the Ragman-Roll, there are several of the name of Kennedy, as Dominus Alexander Kennedy. Prymne's History, page 652.

In the reign of King David the Bruce, John Kennedy of Denure got several lands from that king, as by the Rotuli R. Daviiis secundii. He added to his patrimonial inheritance the barony of Cassilis, by Mary his wife. He had two sons, Sir John Gilbert, his successor, and Sir Hugh Kennedy of Ardstincher, who, for his valour in the wars of France against the English, was honoured with the arms of France, viz. azure, three flower-de-luces or; which he and his descendants quartered with their proper arms, as I observed in my Essay on the Ancient and Modern Use of Armories, page 136. But there I was mistaken, in saying that Kennedy of Bargeny was descended of Sir Hugh, who was only uncle to the first Bargeny, and likewise quartered the arms of France with Kennedy.

Sir Gilbert Kennedy, eldest son of Sir John of Denure, was one of the hostages sent to England for the ransom of King David Bruce, 1357. He was knighted by King Robert III. and was twice married; first, to a daughter of Sir James Sandilands of Calder. She bore two sons, Gilbert, who died in the French service, without issue. and Thomas Kennedy of Bargeny, whose representative is Sir Thomas Kennedy of Kirkhill; as in the Preface to Sir James Dalrymple's Collections, page 61. Secondly, Sir Gilbert married Marion, daughter of Sir William Maxwell of Calderwood, and with her he had a son, Sir James, on whom his father settled his estate, by reason he married Lady Mary Stewart, daughter of King Robert Bruce III. which (says Crawford) occasioned Gilbert, the eldest son of the first marriage, and Sir James, to fall into a fatal quarrel; in which the latter lost his life, leaving behind him, by Lady Mary, two sons, Gilbert Kennedy, who was the first Lord Kennedy, and James, Bishop of St Andrew's. They were both named to be governors to King James III. and ever since the family has carried the double tressure, having matched with the royal family. In an act of revocation of the crown lands alienated by King James II. in the Parliament holden at Edinburgh, the 11th of October 1464, Gilbert Lord Kennedy is there mentioned, whose son was John Lord Kennedy, father of David Lord Kennedy, who was created Earl of Cassillis by King James IV. 1559. I have seen a charter granted by that king to David Earl of Cassillis, and his wife Margaret Boyd, of the lands and castle of Cassillis, and of the lands of Kilkerran, which formerly belonged to John Baird of Kilkenny. This Earl David had the misfortune to be killed at the battle of Flodden, leaving behind him issue, of whom is lineally descended the present John Earl of Cassillis, whose achievement is, argent, a chevron gules, between three cross croslets fitted sable, all within a double tressure flowered, and counterflowered with flower-de-luces of the second; crest, a dolphin azure: motto, Avise la fin: supporters, two swans, proper.

Thomas Kennedy, the first of the family of Bargeny, was second son of Sir Gilbert Kennedy of Denure, by his first wife, a daughter of Sir James Sandilands of Calder; and carried, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a chevron gules, between three cross croslets fitted sable, within a double tressure flowered and counterflowered of the second, for Kennedy; and second and third azure, three flower-de-luces or, the arms of France, as in Mr Pont's Manuscript; but by Esplin, and other illuminated books with me, the double tressure is not in the bearing.

Sir Thomas Kennedy of Kirkhill is the lineal male representative of the family of Bargeny, and carries the quartered arms as above blazoned, so recorded in the Lyon Register; with the crest, a hand grasping a dagger, proper: motto, Fuimus. Whose son and representative is Sir Thomas Kennedy, now of Denure, sometime advocate to her late Majesty Queen Anne, and carries the aforesaid arms, as in the Plate of Achievements.

And in that Register are the arms of Andrew Kennedy of Clowburn, sometime Conservator of the Scots Privileges with the United Provinces, son to John Kennedy, sometime Provost of Ayr. He was descended of the family of Bargeny, married Mary Weir, heiress of Clowburn, and bears, quarterly, first and fourth argent, on a fesse azure, three mullets of the first, for Weir of Clowburn; second and third, quarterly, first Kennedy, with the double tressure; second and third France, as the arms of Kennedy of Bargeny; crest, a dexter hand holding a military girdle, with the words on it, Vires veritas; and below the shield, for motto, Non fallor. Lyon Register.

Kennedy of Blairquhan, quartered with the arms of Kennedy those of McDougal; azure, a lion rampant argent, crowned or. But by the paintings of Falahall, beforementioned, the lion is not crowned. Sir John Kennedy of Blairquhan bought the lands of Dalwyne from John Dalrymple of Lauchet and Dalwyne in Carrick, as appears by a charter of the date 1487, and confirmed by King James III. He was descended of Alexander, son of John, second Lord Kennedy, and his second wife Elisabeth Gordon, daughter of the Earl of Huntly, in the reign of King James III. From the same Alexander are likewise descended the Ken- nedys of Girvanmains, now represented by Sir Gilbert Kennedy of Girvanmains, Baronet, argent, on a chevron gules, betwixt three cross croislets fitched sable, a boar's head erased of the first, and in the middle chief point, a man's heart of the second; crest, a dolphin naiant, proper: motto, Avisi la fin. Lyon Register.

Kennedy of Kirkmichael carries the same with Cassis, with a boar's head erased sable, in place of the cross croislet in base; crest, a palm branch slipped vert: motto, Malin esse probus quam haberi. Lyon Register.

Kennedy of Kilmuches in Aberdeen, argent, two keys saltier-ways gules, (as Constable of Aberdeen), and in base a cross croislet fitched sable, for Kennedy.

Kennedy of Lochan, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a chevron indented gules, between three cross croislets fitched sable; second and third azure, a lion rampant argent, crowned or. These are matriculated for Mistress Mary Kennedy, descended of Lochan, impaled with those of her husband Alexander Beaton of Longhurstmiston.

Agnew, argent, a chevron between two cinquefoils in chief gules, and a saltier couped in base azure. These of this name are originally from France, being there written Agneau. The first of them came over with William the Conqueror, and from thence went to Ireland, where for many years he had a considerable estate in the county of Antrim, and were Lords Agnew, alias Lords of Lainn: as in Mackenzie's Manuscript. One of their sons came from Ireland to Scotland in the reign of King David II. where he got the keeping of the king's castle of Lochnaw, and was made heritable constable thereof, and of the shire of Wigton. Afterwards his successors, for their faithful services, got the gift of being heritable bailie of the bailiery of Lesswade, Munificance, and Drumaston, which are distinct jurisdictions within the shire of Wigton; but were sore oppressed by the Earls of Douglas, who demolished the castle of Lochnaw. Thereafter upon the fall of the Earls of Douglas, Andrew Agnew of Lochnaw, beside the former offices, got that of heritable sheriff of the shire of Wigton, from King James II. the 29th of July 1452, as the gift bears, "Pennes Dominum de Lochnaw, Jacobus Dei Gratia, &c. "Sciatis nos pro singulari favore zelo & dilectatione, quas gerimus erga dilectum "familiarem, nostrumque scutiferum Andream Agneu, &c." All which offices, with the charters of Lochnaw, were again ratified by King Charles II. in his Parliament at Edinburgh, the 12th of July 1661. This family sometimes carried argent, three right hands couped gules, as all these families that came from Ireland and settled in Scotland did carry, and do carry, of which afterwards. But now they make use of the above blazon, being early honoured with the dignity of knight-baronet, in the year 1629, 28th of July, and recorded in the Lyon Register thus:

Sir Andrew Agnew of Lochnaw, Knight Baronet and Sheriff of Wigton, bears argent, a chevron betwixt two cinquefoils, in chief gules, and a saltier couped, in base, azure; with the badge of Nova Scotia, as baronet; crest, an eagle issuant and regardant, proper: motto, Consilio non impecu, and so carried by the present Sir James Agnew of Lochnaw, as in the Plate of Achievements.

Andrew Agnew of Creech, now of Lochryan, Lieutenant-Colonel in the Royal Regiment of Dragoons in Scotland, eldest lawful son and heir of Captain Alexander Agnew of Creech, who was lineally descended and representative of a lawful brother of the family of Lochnaw, and which brother was anciently designed of Chalkech, bears argent, a chevron between two cinquefoils in chief gules, and a saltier couped in base azure, all within a bordure of the second; crest, an eagle issuant regardant, holding in his right foot a sword, proper: motto, Consilio & impetu. Lyon Register, as in the Plate of Achievements.

Abercromby, argent, a chevron gules, betwixt three boars' heads erased azure. The principal family of the name was Abercromby of that Ilk, in the shire of Banff. There was another family of the name, designed of Pitmedden, both to be found in the Ragman-Roll, by Fyrnne. Fergusquard Abercromby, Bishop of Caithness, is witness in a charter of Agnes Mordungton, daughter of Patrick Mordungton, of the date 1321: and in the year 1481, among the assizers who assized Robert Lord Lyle, was Robert Abercromby of that Ilk, which family continued, according to Sir George Mackenzie, in a good respect, from Malcolm III. to Charles I. and carried the foresaid blazon; and for crest, an oak tree acorned, on a mount, proper; with the motto, Tace. As in Pont’s Manuscript.

Abercromby of Birkenbog, since the extinction of the family of Abercromby of that Ilk, is looked upon as chief of the name, and honoured with the title of Knight Baronet. He carries the principal coat of the name, as above.

Francis Abercromby of Fetternie, son and heir of Alexander Abercromby of Fetternie, son and heir of Hector Abercromby of Fetternie, second son of Alexander Abercromby of Birkenbog, argent, a chevron ingrailed gules, betwixt three boars’ heads erased azure; crest, a cross croiset fiecht; motto, In erce salus. Lyon Register. He married the heiress of the Lord Sempie, and was by King James VII. 23d of July 1685, created a-Lord of Parliament by the title of Glassford for life: Whereupon he carried quarterly, first and fourth argent, a chevron chevaqued gules, and of the first, between three hunting-horns’ table, stringed of the second, for Sempie; second and third Abercromby, as before. The brothers of this Lord, by one mother, Jean Seton, daughter of John Seton of Newark, are, John Abercromby of Aforsque, and Patrick Abercromby, Doctor of Medicine, who has rendered himself an ornament to his country, as well as to the family he sprung from, by a most exact and curious History of Scotland, rectifying the mistakes and errors of our former authors.

Abercromby of Glasshaugh, argent, a chevron indented gules, accompanied with three boars’ heads erased azure; crest, a bee volant, proper; motto, Vive ut vivas.

The surname of Arnot, argent, a chevron betwixt three stars gules. As in Balloûr’s Manuscript. The principal family of this name was Arnot of that Ilk in the shire of Fife. Michael Arnot disposes the lands of Cluni to the Monks of Cluni, in the reign of Malcolm IV. as Sibb. Hist. of Fife, &c. In the Chronicle called Stemmateland Bruti, King Alexander II. sent Duncan Earl of Fife ambas- sador to Henry of England, accompanied with two Knights of Fife, viz. John de Monewill, and Malcolm de Arnet, in the year 1240. Michael Arnot of that Ilk, was honoured with the title of Knight Baronet by King Charles I. which family is now extinct, and carried, as in Pont’s Manuscript, argent, a chevron table, between two mullets in chief, and a crescent in base gules.

Arnot of Fern, a cadet of Arnot of that Ilk, azure, a chevron between three stars argent, and a crescent in chief of the last. Balloûr’s Manuscript.

Arnot of Balcormo, argent, a chevron sable, between three mullets gules, all within a borden indented of the second: motto, Speratum & compleatum. Lyon Register. And there, Arnot of Eastryn, descended of Balcormo, the same; but charges the borden with eight crescents of the first.

Whitefow of that Ilk, sable, a chevron or, between three boars’ heads erased argent, some make them couped, as Pont. Other books give for arms to some of this name, ermine, on a chief gules, a boars’ head couped, between two mullets or. As in Esplin’s Illuminated Book. Several of this name are mentioned in the Ragm- Toll. And in the reign of King James III. one Archibald Whitefow was an eminent prelate and Secretary of State to that King.

Wilson of Croglin, argent, a chevron between-three mullets gules; aliter, argent, a chevron between two mullets in chief gules, and a crescent in base azure. Pont’s Manuscript.

Wilson of Plewlands, argent, a chevron between three stars gules; crest, a demi-lion of the last; with the motto, Semper vigilans. Lyon Register. And there also are the blazons of the following Wilsons:

David Wilson, Merchant in Edinburgh, argent, on a chevron between three mullets gules, a talbot’s head erased of the first, with the above motto.

Archibald Wilson, Merchant in Queensferry, gules, a chevron counter-embattled, between three mullets argent; crest, a talbot’s head erased argent: Motto as before.

George Wilson of Fingach, sable, a wolf salient or, in chief three stars argent; crest, a wolf seiant or: motto, Exspecta cumeta superne.
OF THE CHEVERON.

George Wilson, Bailie of Fraserburgh, argent, a chevron between two mullets in chief, and a crescent in base gules: motto, Venture and gain.

Thomas Wilson, Merchant in Edinburgh, argent, a chevron betwixt three mullets gules, and a crescent for difference; crest, a talbot's head erased: motto, Spera vigilantes.

The name of Auchman, argent, a chevron betwixt two cinquefoils gules, and a saltier couped in base azure.

Barrowman, argent, on a chevron between three martlets gules, a crescent of the first. Workman's Manuscript.

Strange of Balcaskie, argent, a chevron between three lozenges sable. Pont's Manuscript.

The name of Abercorn, argent, a chevron sable, betwixt three mullets gules. Mackenzie's Heraldry.

McBeath, azure, a chevron between two mullets in chief, and a crescent argent in base. Pont's Manuscript.

The name of Bisket, argent, on a chevron ingrailed between two cinquefoils gules, and a mullet in base azure, a cross croiset fitched issuing out of a crescent of the field.

Hepburn of Waughton, carried quarterly, first and fourth gules, on a chevron argent, a rose betwixt two lions rampant of the first, for the name of Hepburn; second and third argent, three martlets gules; second and first, for the name of Gourlay; as in Sir James Balfour's Book of Blazons. And they stand so illuminat-ed in the house of Falsalhall, with the names of other barons that were members of Parliament in the year 1624. This family has been sometime in use to marshal also with those above the arms of Rutherford: for I have seen the seal armorial of Sir Patrick Hepburn of Waughton and Luffness appended to a charter, granted by him, in the year 1587, to his cousin Patrick Hepburn of Smeaton, of the lands of Easter-Crucks; upon which seal is a shield couched, having three coats quarterly, first Hepburn; second Gourlay, as above; third the arms of Rutherford, viz. argent, an orle gules, and in chief three mullets sable, and the fourth as the first.

Afterwards they laid aside the arms of Gourlay, and carried only Hepburn and Rutherford, quarterly.

As for the antiquity of the family, and whether it was the principal one of the name, I cannot be positive, not having seen their old evidents. But Mr Thomas Crawfurd, in his Notes and Observations on Buchanan's History, makes this family the principal one, where, at the title, De Familia Antiquitate, page 173, he says, "For the Earl of Bothwell was descended of an Englishman, and thereafter servant of the Earl of March, in the days of King David Bruce, and is not so ancient as Waughton."

The eldest evident that I have seen belonging to this family, is a charter of alienation of the barony of Luffness, granted by William Bickerton, son and heir of Robert Bickerton of Luffness, to Sir John Hepburn of Waughton, dated at Haddington, the 4th of February 1493; which charter is confirmed by King James III. The family all along married with the best families in the country, being both powerful and rich; of late it ended in an heiress, who was married to Sir Andrew Ramsay, son and heir to Sir Andrew Ramsay of Abbotshall, sometime one of the Senators of the College of Justice, and Provost of Edinburgh.

The next family of the name now standing, and male representative of Waughton, by the documents that I have seen, is Patrick Hepburn of Smeaton; whose progenitor was Adam Hepburn of Smeaton, second son of Patrick Hepburn of Waughton, Knight, and his Lady, Helen Hepburn, niece of Adam Earl of Bothwell, that was killed at Flodden. He got from his father half the lands of Smeaton, and the whole lands of Smeaton-Crucks, as by an instrument of seisin, of the date 1538, (pennes Hepburn of Smeaton) which has these words, "Patricius Hepburn de Waughton, miles; accessit ad principale Messwagium de Smiton, &c. in baroniam de Waughton & Constabularia de Haddington, & ibi propriis manibus dedit corporalem possessionem dimiditatis terrarum de Smiton, &c. terrarum de Smiton Crucks, probo adoloscenti Adae Hepburn filio suo."
In the year 1549, this Adam Hepburn of Smeaton made a resignation of the half of the lands of Craig, in the hands of Patrick Hepburn of Bolton, superior thereof; for a new charter in favour of himself in fee, and his mother Helen Hepburn, relicet of the deceased Sir Patrick Hepburn of Waughton, in liferent. In which instrument he is again designed Adamus Hepburn, filius legitimus quondam Patricii Hepburn de Waughtoun militia; the witnesses are, Patricio Hepburn de Waughton, fratrem germano dicti Ada, Henrico Hepburn ejus avunculo.

Adam Hepburn of Smeaton, married a daughter of Preston of Craigmillar, and with her had a son, Patrick, from whom is lineally descended the present Patrick Hepburn of Smeaton. This family has been in use formerly to carry gules, on a chevron, between three martlets argent, two lions pulling at a rose of the first, (as in Mr Thomas Crawford's Manuscript); and since, to carry as Waughtoun, viz. quarterly, first and fourth gules, on a chevron argent, a rose betwixt two lions affronté gules, for Hepburn; second and third argent, an orle gules, and in chief three martlets sable, for Rutherford; crest, a horse argent, furnished gules, tied to a tree; with the motto, Keep tryst. As in the Plate of Achievements.

The cadets of the family of Smeaton were Sir Robert Hepburn of Alderston, Captain of King James VI. his life-guard, predecessor of Hepburn of Bearford; Francis Hepburn of Beanston, another second son of Smeaton, predecessor of the present Robert Hepburn of Beanston.

Adam Hepburn of Humbie, quarterly, first and fourth Hepburn, as before; second and third argent, three laurel leaves vert, for the name of Foulis; crest, an oak tree, proper, and a horse passing by the same, saddled and bridled, gules: motto, Keep tryst. So recorded in the Lyon Register. See the Plate of Achievements.

The first of this family was John Hepburn of Kirklandhill, brother to Sir Patrick Hepburn of Waughton, the father of Adam Hepburn of Smeaton; of whom before. By an instrument of the date 13th of August 1539, (in my hands at the writing hereof) William Brown, in Little-Markhill, alienates and disposes the half of the lands of Stotincleugh, Johandi Hepburn in Kirklandhill, fratri paricii Hepburn de Waughtoun militia. His grandson, Adam Hepburn of Kirklandhill, acquired from James Lawson of Humbie the lands of Hartside, in the year 1586. He married Agnes, daughter to Henry Foulis of Collington, and his lady, a daughter of Haldane of Glenelges. His son and successor was Sir Adam Hepburn of Humbie, one of the Senators of the College of Justice, who married Agnes, daughter to George Foulis of Ravelston, and Master of the Mint 1629; and with her had three sons, Thomas, who died without issue-male: Adam, who succeeded him, quartered the arms of Foulis with Hepburn, upon the account of his mother and grandmother's being of that name, and had them so recorded in the Lyon Register. He died also without issue-male, and was succeeded by his brother David, father of John, the present laird of Humbie. See the arms in Plate of Achievements.

Hepburn of Riccarton, descended of Hepburn of Whitsome in the Merse, who was a brother of Patrick Hepburn Lord Hales, about the year 1450, carried gules, on a chevron argent, a rose between two lions combatant of the first, and a buckle in base or. Pont's Manuscript.

Patrick Hepburn of Blackcastle, descended of Riccarton, the same with Riccarton: But the buckle is said to be argent, and after the shape of a man's heart; crest, a horse-head coupled, proper, garnished gules: motto, Keep tryst. Lyon Register.

George Hepburn, Doctor of Medicine, the arms of Hepburn, with a star-stone in base, proper: crest, a mort-head overgrown with moss, proper: motto, Virtute & prudentia. Lyon Register.

Ker Marquis of Lothian carries, quarterly, first and fourth azure, the sun in his splendour, proper, as a coat of augmentation, when created Earl of Lothian; second and third, parted per fesse, gules and vert, on a chevron argent, between three mascles or, in chief, and an unicorn's head erased in base of the third, three mullets of the first. But of late this family carries in the second and third quarter only gules, on a chevron argent, three mullets of the first, as being heir of Ker of Fernhirst, and Lord Jedburnon. Which arms are supported on the dexter by an angel with wings displayed, proper; on the sinister, by an unicorn argent, unguled, maned, horned or, and collared gules; for crest, the son in its splendour: motto, Soro sed servit.

Mark Ker, younger son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, by Agnes his wife, daughter of Robert Lord Crichton of Sanquhar, was Abbot of Newbattle, anno 1546. In this function he continued till the Reformation, and then renounced Popery, by which he held his benefice in commendam, and married a daughter of George Earl of Rothes. Their eldest son, Mark, was a Lord of Session, and had the lands of the abbacy of Newbattle erected to him into a temporal lordship, by King James VI. 1591: And thereafter, on the 12th of July 1626, was by that king dignified with the honour of Earl of Lothian. His son and successor, Robert 2d Earl of Lothian married Annabella, daughter of Archibald Earl of Argyle; who having no male-issue of his body, with the king's approbation, his estate and honours came to his eldest daughter Anne, and the heirs of her body. She married William Ker, son to Sir Robert Ker of Ancrum, to whom she bore Robert, Earl of Lothian; who was honoured with the title of Marquis of Lothian, 13th June 1722. He had by Jean, his lady, daughter of Archibald Marquis of Argyle, William his successor; Lord Charles, Director of the Chancery; Lord John, and Lord Mark, brigadiers and colonels in the army; and a daughter, Mary, married to the Marquis of Douglas, mother of the present Duke of Douglas.

The eldest son, William, the present Marquis of Lothian, married Jean, daughter of Archibald Earl of Argyle, by whom he has William Lord Jedburgh, his apparent heir.

The other principal family of the name of Ker, which I mentioned before in the shire of Roxburgh, is Cessford, descended of Ralph Ker, who is said to have got from King David II. some lands on the water of Jed, upon which he or his successors built a house called Kersheugh. This was the seat of the family for seven generations, as by the Genealogical Account of the Family, till Sir Robert Ker of Kersheugh, removed it a mile off in the middle of a forest, called Fernihirst, i.e. Fairmiewood, from which he and his successors were designed. He had no issue-male of his body, but a daughter, Margaret, by his wife Katharine, daughter of Colvil of Ochiltree. Margaret married Thomas Ker of Smelholme, second son to the laird of Cessford, and he had with her Andrew, and Ralph of Wooden, of whom the family of Cavers. Andrew was laird of Fernihirst, and knight, and one of the Wardens of the Borders in the reign of King James V. He married Janet, daughter of Sir Patrick Hume of Polwarth, and by her had John and Robert, of whom the Earl of Ancrum. Sir John was father of Sir Thomas Ker of Fairniehirst, who stood firm in their loyalty to Queen Mary. Sir Thomas married Janet, daughter and heir to Sir William Kirkaldy of Grange, Governor of the Castle of Edinburgh, who bore to him Andrew; and after her death he married Jean, daughter to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleugh, who bore to him James Ker of Crailing, and Robert, who was Earl of Somerset in England.

The foresaid Andrew was, by letters patent, of the date 2d of February 1622, created Lord Jedburgh. His son was Andrew Lord Jedburgh, who died 1628 without issue, having spent the fortune; so that his brother Sir James Ker would not take upon him the title of honour; but his son, Robert, reassumed the title, and recovered a part of the fortune: And having no issue, made a resignation of his honour in favours of William Lord Newbattle, son of Robert Marquis of Lothian, his nearest heir-male; to be inherited by the eldest son of the family, as a distinct peerage for ever.

Ker Lord Jedburgh, gules, on a cheveron argent, three mules of the first; (Sir James Balfour, in his Blazons, adds a stag's head erased in base or, and so illuminated in the House of Talalahl); crest, a stag's head erased or, (Point says, a buck's head cabossed, proper, armed or), supporters, two savages, proper; (Point gives two angels, holding cornucopias in their hands): motto, Forward.

Sir Robert Ker Viscount of Rochester, and Earl of Somerset in England, carried for arms, as in Ashmole's Institution of the Garter, gules, on a cheveron argent, three stars or mules of the first; and in the dexter chief point, one of the Lions of England. He was of the family of Fernihirst, and a younger brother to the first Lord Jedburgh; he served King James VI. for a long time in the quality of a page, and at that king's coronation in England, was made a Knight of the Bath, and afterwards Baron of Brunspheth, in the bishoprick of Durham; in the year 1011, Viscount of Rochester, and the same year was installed one of the Knights of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, and afterwards created Earl of Somerset. He was also Lord Chamberlain of the King's Household, one of the Lords of the Privy-Council, and was a chief favourite at Court after the death of Home Earl of Dunbar, by whose favour he did rise; but fell afterwards into disgrace by his lady Frances Howard, daughter of Thomas Earl of Suffolk; she bore to him a daughter, Anne, his only heiress, who was married to William Russel, Earl of Bedford; to whom she had issue.

Ker of Ancrum: The first of this family was Robert Ker, second son to Sir Andrew Ker of Fernihirst, and his spouse Janet Hume, daughter of Hume of Polwarth; of whom was Sir Robert Ker, who was created Lord Nisbet in Teviotdale, and Earl of Ancrum by King Charles I. He married first, a daughter of Murray of Blackbarony, who bore to him a son, William, who became Earl of Lothian, by marrying the only heiress of Robert Ker Earl of Lothian. Secondly, he married a daughter of Stanly Earl of Derby; and provided the title of Earl of Ancrum by the King's approbation to the heir-male of that marriage, Charles, who was Earl of Ancrum, who carried quarterly, first and fourth ermine, on a chief parti, argent and gules, a lion passant counter-changed; second and third gules, on a chevron argent, three stars or mullets of the first; crest, a stag's head and neck couped argent, collared gules, and charged with three mullets argent, issuing out of an open crown or; supporters, two stag's proper, collared as the crest: with the motto, Tout droit.

Ker of Liddleton, descended of a second brother of Cessford, quarterly, first and fourth vert, on a chevron argent, three stars, gules, and in base, an unicorn's head erased of the second, for Ker; second and third azure, three crosses moline argent, for Ainslie of Dolphinton, as in the Plate of Achievements. But our old books give for arms to Ainslie of Dolphinton, or, a cross-floret, gules. Sir Andrew Ker of Liddleton got the barony of the Hirsel in the Merse, from King James V, because he was the first that brought the news to the king, that the Lord Home and his followers defeat the English at Haddonridge. This family was designed Ker of Hirsel, as above; and their arms are illuminated in the house of Falahall, being vert, on a chevron argent, three stars, gules, and in base an unicorn's head erased of the second. The Earls of Home acquired the barony of Hirsel from Ker of Liddleton, which is now the seat of the family of Home.

Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead, Bart. descended of Fernihirst, gules, on a chevron argent, three stars or mullets of the first, a buck's head erased in base, and for difference, in chief, a crescent of the second. Lyon Register. As in the Plate of Achievements.

Ker of Chatto, the same with Greenhead, a cadet of that family, within a bordure azure. Lyon Register.

Ker of Cavers, descended of Fernihirst; gules, on a chevron argent, three stars of the first, all within a bordure chequy of the second and first; crest, a stag's head erased proper, with ten tythes or: motto, Tout droit. Lyon Register.

Ker of Sutherland-Hall, (representative of Ker of Yair, who was a cadet of Fernihirst) gules, on a chevron argent, three stars of the first, in base, a stag's head erased, (some books, in place of it, give a hunting horn or, stringed argent,) all within a bordure inverted of the second; crest, a dexter hand holding a dagger proper: motto, Abest timor. Lyon Register.

Ker of Falkonside; quarterly, first vert, on a chevron argent, between three unicorn's heads erased of the last, as many stars gules; second or, on a bend azure, three mascles of the first; third as second, and fourth as the first, for Halyburton of Dirleton; one of whose heiresses this family married.

Ker of Fairnilee, a cadet of Cessford; vert, on a chevron argent, three stars gules, and in base a pelican vulnerate or. Pont's Manuscript. And there also,

Ker of Samuelston; argent, an unicorn saltant table, horned or, an old branch of the Ker, whether of Cessford or Fernihirst I know not, for the first of this family laid aside his paternal bearing, and took the arms of Samuelston of that ilk in East-Lothian. This family ended in George Ker of Samuelston, in the reign of King James III. who had only one daughter, Nicolas Ker, who was married to the Lord Home.

Lord Charles Ker, Director of his Majesty's Chancery in Scotland, carries the same as the present Marquis his brother, with a suitable difference, crest the same; motto, A Deo Lumen.

Ker of Abbot-rule, son to Charles Ker of Abbot-rule, third son to William Earl of Lothian, carries the same with the present Marquis of Lothian, but places, for difference, in the centre, an unicorn's head erased proper; crest, the sun rising out of a cloud, proper: motto, J'avance. As in the Plate of Achievements.

The surname of Balfour; argent, on a cheveron sable, an otter's head erased of the first. Sir James Balfour, in his Blazons, says, Balfour of that Ilk, of old, carried argent, a cheveron betwixt three otters' heads erased sable. The lands of Balfour or Ball-or, on the water of Or in Fife, gave name to the ancient herditors of these lands, and their descent is reckoned from the reign of King Duncan. See Sir Robert Sibbald's History of Fife. Ingilramus de Balfour is a witness in a charter of Alexander II. to the Monastery of Aberbrothick. In the parliament holden at Ayr, 1315, is Michael de Balfour, Sheriff of Fife, and David de Balfour, whose seals of arms are appended in tailzizing the crown, and there were then several herditors of that name in Fife. In the reign of Robert II. Sir John Balfour of that Ilk died without male issue, leaving a daughter and heiress, who was married to Robert Bethune, who got with her the barony of Balfour, their issue retained the name of Bethune, but were designed of Balfour; of whom afterwards.

The next family was Balfour of Balgarvie; King James II. gave to Sir John Balfour of Balgarvie the lands of Burleigh, from which he and his posterity were designed, who carried argent a cheveron sable, charged with an otter's head erased of the field, and in base a rose gules. Balfour's Manuscript. The family continued till the reign of King James VI. that Sir James Balfour of Mountquhanny, Clerk Register, married Margaret Balfour, heiress of Burleigh.

Mountquhanny carried argent, a cheveron sable, charged with an otter's head erased of the first, and in base a saltier couped of the second; Balfour's Manuscript. Their son, Sir Michael Balfour of Burleigh and Balgarvie, was created Lord Burleigh, at Whitehall, by King James VI. July 16. 1607. He was then ambassador for that king to the Dukes of Tuscany and Loraine, and married a daughter of Lundie of that Ilk, and had with her but one daughter, Margaret, his heir, Baroness of Burleigh. She married Robert Arnot of Fernie, who took upon him the name and arms of Balfour, and, in her right, was Lord Burleigh. Of him is descended the present Lord Burleigh, who carries argent on a cheveron sable, an otter's head erased of the first, supported on the dexter by an otter sable, proper; and on the sinister by a swan, proper; and for crest, a lady standing on a rock holding in her right hand an otter's head, and in her left, a swan's head: motto Omne solum fortis patria. Some illuminated books represent the woman as a Maid.

Balfour of Grange, descended of the family of Mountquhanny, argent, on a cheveron sable, an otter's head erased of the first; crest, a castle argent, on the embattlement, a woman attired gules, holding in her hand an otter's head: motto, Nil tenere. Lyon Register.

Mr David Balfour of Grange, (says Dr Sibbald) is representative of the ancient family of Mountquhanny, who has a charter from King William the Lion.

Balfour of Dennill, or, on a cheveron sable, accompanied with three cinquefoils vert, an otter's head erased of the field. Sir Robert Sibbald, in his fore-mentioned History of Fife, tell us, that King James II. in the fourth year of his reign, gave the lands of Dennill to his beloved and familiar servant, James Balfour, son to Sir John Balfour of Balgarvie. From this James Balfour was lineally descended Sir James Balfour of Dennill, Lyon King at Arms, in the reign of King Charles I. He was a curious antiquary, and knowing in heraldry, whose blazons I mention frequently in this treatise.

Sir David Balfour of Forret, a younger son of Sir Michael Balfour of Dennill, and one of the Senators of the College of Justice, or, on a cheveron sable, betwixt two trefoils in chief vert, and a lion rampant in base gules, an otter's head erased argent; crest, an eagle rising, proper: motto, Dieu aident. Lyon Register. And there also,

Michael Balfour of Randerston, third son of Sir Michael Balfour of Denmill, and same with Forret; but in place of the lion in base, a garb vert bended or; crest, a crescent.

Sir Andrew Balfour, an eminent and learned physician, a son of Denmill, carried the arms of that family with a filial difference.

Balfour of Balbrinie, argent, on a cheveron, inlaid between three mullets sable, a selch's head erased of the first; crest, a palm tree, proper; with the motto, Virtus ad aeternam tendit. Lyon Register.

Balfour of Kirkton, vert, on a cheveron argent, accompanied with three crescents or; an otter's head erased sable. B. M.

Balfour of Carriston, gules, on a cheveron or, betwixt two otters' heads in chief, and a flower-de-luce in base of the second, an otter's head erased of the first. This family ended in an heiress, married to a younger son of the Lord Seaton, now designed Seaton of Carriston, who quarter these arms with Seaton. Balfour's Manuscript.

Balfour of Ballow, sable, a cheveron or, charged with an otter's head erased of the first, and in chief a label of three points gules. Balfour's Manuscript.

Balfour of Lalethen, sable, on a cheveron argent, betwixt three roses of the second, an otter's head erased of the first. These last blazons, are in Sir James Balfour, Lyon King at Arms, his Manuscript of Blazons; where he says, I confirmed to Dr David Balfour of Lalethen his arms, in anno 1638.

Langlands of that Ilk, a family of a good standing in Teviotdale, argent, on a cheveron gules, three stars of the first, Mackenzie's Heraldry; crest, an anchor in pale placed in the sea, proper: motto, Spero. Lyon Register.

Balcaskie of that Ilk, vert, on a cheveron argent, three trefoils slipped of the first; Workman's and Pont's Manuscripts.

The surname of Boc, gules, on a cheveron argent, three stars sable. Workman's Manuscript. Aitie, argent, a cheveron between two cinquefoils in chief, and a boar's head erased and erected in base gules. Pont's Manuscript. And there also,

Boo of Burnhouse, argent, a cheveron gules between two cinquefoils in chief, and a boar's head in base sable.

Backie of Tankerness, argent, on a cheveron gules, accompanied with three flames of fire, a lion rampant betwixt two stars of the field; crest, a flame of fire: motto, Commodum non damnum. Lyon Register. And there also,

Duncan of Ardounie, gules, on a cheveron between two cinquefoils in chief, and a hunting horn in base, argent, virioled and stringed azure, three buckles of the last; crest, a grey-hound issuing from the wreath, proper, collared or: motto, Vivat veritas. Lyon Register.

Duncan of Seaford, now of Lundie, in Angus, gules, a cheveron or, between two cinquefoils in chief, and a hunting horn in base argent, garnished azure; crest, a ship under sail: motto, Diesect patri; as in the Plate of Achievements.

Duncan of Mott, gules, on a cheveron between two cinquefoils in chief, and a hunting horn in base, or, three buckles azure. Pont's Manuscript. And there also, Knows of that Ilk, argent, a cheveron between three roses gules.

The surname of Learmonth, Hector Bocc places this amongst the oldest surnames in the reign of Malcolm III. The armorial bearing of this name, or, on a cheveron sable, three masses of the first. The principal family of this name was Learmonth of Esselmont in the Merse, of which was Thomas Learmonth, commonly called the Rymer, who lived in the reign of Alexander III. A son of this family married Janet Dairsie, heiress of Dairsie in Fife, for which he added a rose, a part of his wife's bearing, for his difference, carried by the Learmonth's of Dairsie.

Learmonth of Balcomy, quarterly, first and fourth or, on a cheveron sable, three masses of the first, for Learmonth; second and third azure, on a bend argent, three roses gules, for Dairsie, some say Balcomy; crest, a rose slipped gules: motto, Spero, Lyon Register.
OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.

One of this family was Master of the Household to King James IV., and pretended that his progenitor was the eldest son of Dairsie, and took to himself the estate of Balcomie, because it held of the King, preferred it to Dairsie, which held of the Bishop of St Andrews; but both of these families are now extinct.

CARUTHERS or CARRUTHERS; gules, two chevronens ingrailed between three flower-de-luces or. The chief of this name is Carruthers of Holmains in Annandale, who carries the same; and for crest, a seraphim volant, proper; with the motto, Promptus & fidelis. They have all along continued faithful to the Royal Family and country, as our historians tell us; when Robert, the High Steward, (afterwards king) took the field against Edward Baliol; for his sovereign and uncle King David II. Among those that early joined him, was William Carruthers of Holmains, who, as they say, with his friends and followers, crept out of their holes, having always withstood the government of the English, and continued firm in their allegiance to their Kings. There is a charter of King James III. of the lands of Torry, with the patronage of St Mary’s Kirk of Torry, within the shire of Dumfries, granted to Thomas Carruthers of Holmains, for his special services in expelling the king’s rebels and English out of the country: The words of the charter are these, “Dedisse dilecto nostro familiari Thome Carruthers, pro suo fidelis servitio nobis prius ac novissime impenso in nostri regni defensione in bello & conflictu contra Alexandrum Stewart, & Jacobum Douglass & alios regni rebelles, & veteres Anglos hostes, qui regnum nostrum hostiliter armis invasurunt.” This charter is dated at Edinburgh the 25th of July 1434, and to be seen in the register in the lower Parliament House. This family was also eminently loyal to Queen Mary, as in Crawford’s Memoirs of that Queen; and the family continues still in a lineal descent.

The surname of PAXTON, argent, two chevronens sable, between three mullets placed in pale gules; (alter) azure, on a chevron argent, five garbs sable. Point’s Manuscript. And there also,

The name of GARDEN of that Ilk, argent, two chevronens ingrailed gules.

GARDEN of Barrowfield, argent, a boar's head erased sable, between three mullets gules.

GARDEN of Leys, argent, a boar’s head erased sable, betwixt three cross croislets fitchets gules.

PEARSON of Balmadies, argent, two swords chevron-ways azure, piercing a man's heart in chief, proper, and in base, a cinquefoil of the second; crest, a dove holding an olive branch in her beak, proper: motto, Dum spiro spero. Lyon Register.

PEARSON of Kippenross has the swords or daggers otherways, viz. argent, two swords or daggers issuing from the dexter and sinister chief points, their points downward, and conjoined in base, piercing a man's heart, proper, and a cinquefoil sable in the collar point; crest, a tower, proper: motto, Rather die than disloyal. L.R.

OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.

Figures in armories are either proper or natural; the first have their name from the Science of Heraldry, and in general are commonly called the ordinaries; which again are distinguished into honourable ordinaries and sub-ordinaries. I have fully treated of the first, being nine in number, and I proceed now to the sub-ordinaries, so called, not upon the account that they are not so honourable as the former, for all figures in armories are equally honourable, data partitae gestantium, as heralds speak; but because the sub-ordinaries give place, and cede the principal point of the shield to the honourable ordinaries, when in one field together; neither do they claim a proper and fixed place in the field, as the honourable ordinaries do: As also, because their names are more derived from nature, and other arts, than from this honourable science, though not altogether so free from armorial terms, as the natural figures, such as lions, bears, eagles, &c. So that the
OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.

Sub-ordinaries may be properly here treated of between the honourable ordinaries and natural figures, and are these; the bordure, escutcheon, orle, trezure, point, palle, pyle, giron, framquarter, canton, points, equiples or chequé, fuitis, lozenge, mascel, rustic, fret, billet, betant, tordaux, vire, annulet, pappelonné, guté, diepire; of all which I shall treat separately.

OF THE BORDURE.

The bordure goes round the extremities of the shield, and, takes up the fifth part of the field by the English: But by our practice, sometimes less, sometimes more, accordingly as it is charged or not charged, and suits with the figures, within a bordure gules. Plate VII. fig. 20.

With the French it is looked upon as an honourable ordinary, and, as other ordinaries, possesses the third of the field; as Menestrier describes it, "Bordure est une pièce honorable qui prend tous les bords de l'ecu en forme de ceinture selon le gens de l'ecu." Monsieur Baron says, it is as a shield surrounding a shield, diminished to a third part; the Latins call it, bordura, limbus, margo, & jambra.

With us and the English it is looked upon as an additional figure or difference, for the distinction of coats of arms of particular persons and families, descended from one and the same house and original stock; and not as a principal figure, or one of the honourable ordinaries. By principal figures I understand those fixed ones used by the stems and chiefs of families, which are transmitted to all the descendants; and by additional figures, those which cadets and descendants add (as marks of cadency) to the principal hereditary fixed figures of the stem, or chief of the family, that they may be differentiated from it, and from each other among themselves.

The bordure, indeed, is more frequently made use of as an additional figure or mark of cadency than any of the honourable ordinaries; yet it is, and has been frequently carried in arms, as a principal figure, by the stems or chiefs of several names, both with the French, English, and with us; a few instances of which I shall here mention.

In the Chronicle of Jonvil, and other French histories, we read that Charles the Great gave arms to several of his brave officers, and to Arnold Viscount of Cozerans, or, a bordure gules; where the bordure is not only the principal, but the only figure, and without it the shield or would not be arms. Many of such instances I could add, but I forbear, since it is not questioned by the French, but looked upon by them as a principal figure, and an honourable ordinary, and carried by some chief families with us. The old Earls of Dunbar and March, without question chief of the name and family, carried gules, a lion rampant, within a bordure argent, charged with eight roses of the first.

The Earl of Pynmore, of whom before, has his arms within a bordure; which is carried by all the descendants of these families as a principal figure. And further, it may be said, for the honour of the bordure, that it should the rather be looked upon as a principal figure, since it has diminutives in heraldry, as the other honourable ordinaries have, such as the orle, essonier, and treasure. With the last of which the French would never have recompensed the Scots, for the heroic assistance they gave them in their wars, had it been a figure that was never used but for a briure, as all marks of cadency are; neither would the Scots have retained it so carefully in their royal standards and ensigns if it had not been a principal and honourable figure. Nor would the Kings of Portugal have carried their arms within a bordure; nor would Richard Earl of Poictiers and Cornwall, in the year 1225, have placed the feudal arms of the Earldom of Cornwall, being table, bezantine or, by way of bordure round the feudal arms of Poictiers, being argent, a lion rampant gules, crowned or. So that they are mistaken, who affirm that a bordure is never to be found in a coat of arms, but as a briure and mark of cadency: I am therefore to treat here of it without further consideration, than as an armorial figure in its different forms and attributes, as I have done of the ordinaries before.

Sir Alexander Cumming of Coulter, azure, three garbs within a bordure or; crest, a garb of the last: motto, Courage. Lyon Register.

U
OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.

Murray of Deuchar, the arms of Philiphaugh, within a bordure gules; crest, an escallop of the last; motto, Fidei signum.

Sir James Dundas of Arniston, one of the Senators of the College of Justice, descended of a younger son of Dundas of that Ilk, bears Dundas, viz. argent, a lion rampant gules, within a bordure ermine, Plate VII. fig. 21. Those who have had the honour of late to be Senators of that Honourable Judicatory have chosen the furr ermine as senatorial, of which the additional figures are, as Sir Colin Campbell of Aberuchil, Sir Andrew Home of Kinemgham, and others, have their arms within a bordure ermine.

Sir Thomas Stewart of Balcsaskie, sometime one of the Senators of that learned and honourable Bench, charged the arms of Stewart of Grandtully, charged the arms of that family within a bordure counter-ermine. Fig. 22. Plate VII.

Douglas of Earnslaw, of whom before, has his arms within a bordure vair. Fig. 23. Plate VII.

Dunbar of Hemprigs, descended of the family of Kilbuysach, a cadet of Dunbar of Westfield, Westfield's arms within a bordure vair, or and gules. So much then for plain bordures. I proceed to others under accidental forms.

Gray Lord Grey of Wark, in England, gules, a lion rampant within a bordure ingrailed argent; thus blazoned by Imhoff, Scutum, quo Baro Gray de Werk utitur, rubet, sed margine dentato argenteo distinctum est, leonem qui continet, dicto tinctum mettallo; Plate VII. fig. 25. This family represents the ancient Greys of Chillingham in Northumberland, and was dignified by the title of Lord Grey of Wark, the 11th of February 1623, by King James I. of Great Britain; and of late, Viscount Glendale in Northumberland, and Earl of Tankerville in Normandy. One of the heads of this family was honoured with the last title, long since, by King Henry V. of England.

Gray Lord Gray in Scotland carries the same arms with my Lord Grey of Wark and Chillingham in England, supported by two lions gardant gules, armed or; crest, an anchor in pale or: motto, Anchor, fast anchor. The first of this family was a son of Grey of Chillingham, or Ford, in Northumberland, in the reign of Alexander II. who came to Scotland, and gave his allegiance to that king, and got the lands of Roufield *, in the shire of Roxburgh: His issue has continued still in Scotland. I have seen a charter (in the custody of Launder of Fountainhall) granted by Robert Lauder of Quarrelwood to Thomas Borthwick, in the reign of Alexander III. Amongst the witnesses is Andrew Gray; and he, or another Andrew Gray, gets a charter of confirmation of the lands of Roufield from King Robert the Bruce, as in the Earl of Haddington's Collections, in the Lawyers' Library; As also, in the 9th year of that king's reign, Andrew Gray got a charter of the lands and barony of Longforgan, with several other lands, which formerly belonged to Sir Edmund Hastings. Amongst the witnesses in the charters of King Robert II. is Johannes de Gray, Clericus Rustorum, & RegistrI Regii; and, in the reign of King Robert III. Sir Patrick Gray of Roufield is designed in a charter of Thomas Strachan of Glenkindy, nobilis & potens Dominus Petriciss Gray milIs, Dominus de Roufield; and from the same king he gets a charter of confirmation of the lands of Longforgan, where he is called consanguineus noster. His son Sir Andrew Gray married Janet Mortimer, heiress of Foulis, with whom he got the barony of Foulis. I have seen an instrument under the note and subscription of Patrick Niceo, actornatus nobilis, & potens Domino Andrea Gray de Foulis, in anno 1425: And it is thought he was the first lord of that family, which is now represented by the present John Lord Gray.

In the chapter of Partition Lines and their accidental forms, I showed that the two lines ingrailed and invecd would be best understood when they formed bordures. The ingrailed line carries always its points into the field, and the invecd into the figure or bordure if forms, with its gibbes or convex parts into the field; and for these two attributes the French say engrav'e et cancelle, and the Latin ordinarily, ingrediatus and invectus. The word ingrailed seems to be derived from ingredi, to enter or go in, as Upton saith, quia ejsus color gradatum inferatur in campo. The invecd bordure, called cancelle by the French, is contrary to the former; for its points encroach into the bordure, and is called invectus, from inveto, to carry in. Mr Gibbon, in his Introduction Ad Latinam Blazoniam, says ingredi-

atus and invectus are too strait laced to breathe out their meaning; wherefore he says, that these lines are made of little semi-circles, like half moons; and therefore, he adds to their blazon, Id est, ad oras in semi-lunulas delineatam, for inrailed, and for invected, i.e. ad oras, gibbis (seu gibbois) lineis exaratum. For an example of the first, he gives us the bearing of Thomas Lord Colepeper of Thoresway in Lincolnshire, son of John Lord Colepeper, which he blazon as: Gerit baltebum humerdem sinuineum utrinque ingrediatum, in parva argentea, i.e. argent, a bend indented, and for instance of a bordure invected, he gives us the arms of the Levant, or Turkey Company in England, qui erunt navium deauratum, (cu vela & vexilla alba, cuveta crucibus rubeis insignita) mare inter duas scopulos (hac coloris nativit) transeuntem; caput autem seuti est argenteum & invicum; hoc est (ad oras) gibbis, (seu gibbois lineis) operatum vel delineatum, i.e. on a sea between two rocks proper, a ship or, sails and pendants ensigned with crosses gules, a chief invected argent. This accidental form, viz. of the line invected or canelled, as the French say, is not so frequent in arms with us as the inrailed line.

Campbell of Moncaster carries the arms of the Earl of Breadalbane, before blazoned, within a bordure invected rable. Pl. VII. fig. 26.

A bordure indented is latinized limbus dentatus indentatus or denticulatus, because it is nicked and cut like teeth, after the fashion of contracts or indentures of old; and is very frequent with the English.

Sir Francis Ogilvie of Newgrange, descended from the Earl of Airly, Plate VII. fig. 27. argent, a lion passant gardant gules, crowned with a close crown, and gorged with an open one, within a bordure indented of the second; crest, a demi-lion azure, grasping in his dexter paw a garb, proper: motto, Marte & Industria. Lyon Register.

When the indentment or the teeth are large the figure is then said to be denetto; by the Latin, dentes decumani; so that the word indented is borrowed from dentes, teeth; whereunto the same hath a resemblance.

Sometimes we meet with plain bordures, which have two different tinctures conjoined by indenting, or otherwise, such as by inrailing or embattling lines in the middle of the bordure, and then it is called a double bordure indented of such tinctures, or a bordure counter-indented; by some blazoned, a bordure parted per bordure indented; and others say, as Holmes, a bordure azure, charged with another indented or. Plate VII. fig. 28.

Hamilton of Blantyre-Farm, a cadet of Hamilton of Boreland, a cadet of the family of Hamilton, gules, three cinquefoils ermine, within a double bordure indented argent, and of the first; crest, a trunk of an oak tree couped in pale, sprouting out two branches proper: motto, Non deficit alter. Lyon Register.

Here the bordure is plain as to the line that forms it; but indented, as to the joining of the two tinctures within, for which it is variously ‘blazoned, as before: counter-indented bordures are frequent abroad, especially in Italy; of which Sylvester Petra Sancta says, they are taken from the hems of robes and garments of princes, and are ornamental, and signs of patronage.

A bordure couered is formed on the inner side by a line, crooked like a wave of the sea, of which before.

Hamilton of Ladylands, descended of the family of Torrence, a cadet of Hamilton, now Duke of Hamilton, gules, a mullet between three cinquefoils, all within a bordure waved argent. Lyon Office.

Bordure Nebule, when the inner line of the bordure is formed like clouds.

Gordon of Rothness, a second son of the family of Lesmaur, azure, a fesse chequy argent, and of the first, between three boars' heads couped or, within a bordure nebule of the second. Lyon Register.

Bordure embattled or crannel is when the inner line is formed like the embatlements of a castle or fort, for which the Latins say, Limbus muralibus pinnis incinitus. Hamilton of Olive-Stob, in East-Lothian, gules, a martlet between three cinquefoils argent, within a bordure embattled or.

The bordure may be charged with all things animate or inanimate, and with proper and armorial figures; of which there are many blazons mentioned in this Treatise, which I forbear here to repeat. But I cannot but acquaint my reader, that I do not follow the English in their fanciful words in blazoning of bordures, when charged with different sorts of figures, but give my blazon of them, as we and other nations have been in use to do. I shall only briefly show their singularity in blazoning of such bordures: If charged with inanimate things, as annulets, besants, escallops, &c. they say a bordure en orle, from the French word, en orlé, i. e. About; which is superfluous, for all bordures go about the shield; as for example, Plate VII. fig. 29. The bearing of Mr James Scott, sometime Sheriff-Clerk of Edinburgh, descended of the Scotts of Knightspottie, or, on a bend azuré, a star between two crescents of the field, within a bordure gules, charged with eight besants of the first; the English heralds would say, especially the old ones, a bordure gules, en orlé of eight besants. When the bordure is charged with vegetables, they say verdoy of such flowers, fruits, or leaves, as in the bearing (Plate VII. fig. 32.) of Scott of Hedderwick, a younger son of Scott of Logie, argent, a fesse crenelée, between three lions' heads erased, gules; within a bordure of the last, verdoy of six flower-de-luces of the first.

When the bordure is charged with birds, it is called by them enaluron. Mr Skinner, in his Dictionary, says, that enaluron is the corruption of inorolatus, i. e. orle-ways; but Sir George Mackenzie more properly brings it from the French, who say, a bordure en alerions, when they blazon a bordure charged with alerions; so that the term enaluron by the English is certainly the corruption of alerion, a bird, very frequent in armories, of which afterwards.

Hamilton of West-Port, Plate VII. fig. 32. gules, three cinquefoils ermine within a bordure argent, charged with eight martlets of the first; the English would say, enaluron of eight martlets; which term the French and we omit as insignificant and superfluous.

When the bordure is charged with beasts, they term it a bordure en orlé; and so they would blazon the bordure in the bearing of Alexander Gordon, sometime Provost of Aberdeen, whose father was a second son of Gordon of Tullyangus, who was a son of Gordon of Craig, azuré, three boars' heads couped or, within a bordure waved of the last en orlé (we say only charged) of three unicorns' heads erased sable, and as many stags tripping, proper, alternately. L. R.

In the blazon of the arms of Stewart of Newark, or, a fesse chequy azuré and argent, within a bordure gules, (the English would say en orlé and en orlé, upon the account it is charged with living and inanimate things) charged with three lions rampant, and as many ships at anchor of the first. L. R.

When the bordure is of any of the furs, they call it a bordure purples ermine, or purples vair; but the French and other nations use not these terms, but say only ermine and vair as we do; and they who please to follow the English in these terms may so do, for I have shown them the way.

Bordures are very frequent with us and other nations, and of different forms, of which I shall add some examples; and first of bordures gobonated, or compone, counter-compone and chequy.

A bordure gobonated or compone, — the last term is used by the French, when the bordure or any other figure is filled with one rank of square pieces alternately of metal and colour; and is lateral by Upton, gobonatus; we and the English say ordinarily for compone, goboné or, gobonated; Mr Gibbon says, it is a word used in carving, as to gobon or nick a lamprey, or other fish, in seven or eight pieces; the English sometimes, but we especially, use also the word compone.

Philip Duke of Burgundy, surnamed the Hardy, the youngest lawful son of John King of France, encompassed the arms of France within a bordure gobonated or compone, argent and gules, Plate VII. fig 32. Which were the ensign of Burgundy Modern, and quartered it with Burgundy Ancient, bundé of six, or, and gules, within a bordure of the last. Chiffletius blazons the arms of Burgundy Modern thus, Aera carulea liliis aereis sparsa, limbo circumduco ex argento et cocineo un garibus, compitatus. Mr Gibbon takes this Latin blazon to task, and approves of the word compositus, for compone, but not of the word angularibus; for angularis expresses a corner, and corners are of several forms: And therefore he mends the blazon thus, Limbus ductus simplici vel singulari & talibus coloribus tesraltatus, or, quadrangulatus, to show it is composed of square pieces, and of one tract; this bordure has been of old of great esteem in differing lawful sons; for these arms of Burgundy, above blazoned, have been marshalled with those of Spain, and stood chief leader of all the other arms of dukedoms and provinces in Belgium, marshaled in the chapter of the Marks of Cadency.

James Duke of Berwick, natural son to King James VII. carries the arms of Britain, within a bordure compone, gules and azure; the first charged with lions passant gardant or, for England; the second with flower-de-luces of France, the bordure, thus tainted by Tusholl, Limbium e quadris rubris & coruleis compositum, itn ut rubene Leonibus Angliis, corulex Liliis Franciis distincte.

Counter-compone, (which some say counter-gobone) consists of two ranges or tracts of square pieces alternately of different tinctures: For the French say ordinarily, contre-compone, and sometimes eschequed, deux traits; and the Latins, limbus duplici tracticus testulorum compositus. Plate VII. fig. 33.

William Scott, a second son of Bevelaw, his father's arms, as before, within a bordure counter-compone, or and azure. Lyon Register. And there also, Burnet of Balleladies, descended of Burnet of Leys, the arms of Leys within a bordure counter-compone, argent and azure; and for crest, a branch of holly, slipped, proper: motto, Ne cuitus, nec flatu. New Register.

Bordure chequy consists of three ranges or tracts at least, or of square pieces alternately of different tinctures.

Barclay of Touch, descended of Cullerney, azure, a chevron or, betwixt three crosses pattée argent, within a bordure chequy of the second and first, of which before, Plate VII. fig. 34. Here the engraver is faulty in making the bordure two large.

Graham of Gartur surrounds the arms of Graham, within a bordure chequy; and so does Leslie of Findrassie with such a bordure. Many more examples are to be met with in this Treatise, which cannot be properly here repeated. The bordure is not only varied by accidental forms and charges, but likewise, as the shield may be parti, coupé, trancheé, taillé; so that the bordure is a figure like a second shield, capable of many variations, to difference many descendants of one stem.

Plate VII. fig. 35. John Gordon, herald representative of the family of Braco, descended of Gordon of Hallo, now Earl of Aberdeen, azure, three boars' heads couped or, armed and langued gules, within a bordure parti, argent and or. In the Lyon Register. And there, Gordon of Nethermuir, another cadet of the Earl of Aberdeen, the same within a bordure coupé argent and or; crest, a dexter hand holding an arrow bend-ways: motto, Majores sequor. As Plate VIII. fig. 1, and 2.: And in the Plate of Achievements.

Robert Arbuthnot, Merchant in Montrose, descended of the House of Potterson, descended of the family of Arbuthnot of that ilk, now Viscount of Arbuthnot, azure, a crescent between three stars argent, all within a bordure indented, and quartered of the second and first; crest, a dove within an adder, disposed in orle, proper: motto, Innocae ac provide. New Register.

Bordures quartered, (parti and coupé) are frequent with us; Colonel Henry Graham, whose father William Graham was brother-german to John Earl of Montrose, Vicecy of Scotland in the reign of King James VI. carried Montrose's quartered arms within a bordure, quartered, gules and sable.

Robert Hamilton of Prensennan, sometime one of the Senators of the College of Justice, (grandfather to the present Lord Belhaven) descended of Hamilton of Brunwood, a lawful brother of the family of Hamilton, now honoured with the title of duke of that name, gules, three cinquefoils ermine with a bordure quarterly vair, and counter-compone of argent, and the first. Lyon Register. The English would call this a bordure purflew, upon the account of the fur, as they blazon the arms of Henry Fitzroy Duke of Richmond, natural son to King Henry VIII. of England, who carried the imperial ensign of that kingdom within a bordure, quarterly, composed of purflew ermine, and counter-compone, or and azure.

Fig. 3. Bordure, quarterly, per saltare, (trancheé et taillé) such an one surrounds the arms of Porto-Carrera in Spain, which Sylvester Petra Sancta blazon in French, bordure escartelé en sautoir d'argent et de gueule, and such a bordure goes round the arms of Palma Counts of Palma, charged with a cross _gules_, on the upper part _argent_.

Plate VIII. fig. 4. The same author gives us the same example of another bordure, which we would call _girony of eight, argent_ and _gules_, round the arms of Castile and Leon, borne by the family of Valenzuela in Spain; which bordure be blazons on the margin of his book, _escartelé, contre-escartelé_, which is the same with _parti, coupé, tranché, taillé_, called by the English, _bordure quarterly quartered_, being divided per cross and per saltier. As Mr Holmes in his Academy of Armory.

Bordures are given us by these two last-mentioned writers, _bendy, paly_, and _barry_, to whom I refer the curious.

Mr Thomas Crawford, a learned antiquary, in his Manuscript of Heraldry, says, a bordure is the best distinction for younger sons erecting families. First, Because it is in a manner a new cost, and may be put under accidental forms, parted and charged. Secondly, Because it showeth the principal bearing whole, and also unmixed, or composed with other figures in the middle. And, Thirdly, It puts in mind the bearer, that he ought to use as a bordure or wall of defence to the principal family he is descended from.

I shall add here the blazons of a few families with bordures, conform to my former method.

Plain bordures have been very frequent in England, and anciently used by those of the royal family. Edmund Earl of Kent, surnamed Woodstock, from the place of his birth, second son of Edward I. of England, by his second wife Margaret of France, carried the arms of England within a bordure _argent_. Thomas Duke of Gloucester, a younger son of King Edward III. carried France (_semé_ quartered with England, within a bordure _argent_. Humphrey Duke of Gloucester, the fourth son of King Henry IV. carried France (reduced to three flower-de-luces), quartered with England, all within a bordure _argent_; though these three great men carried a bordure _argent_, yet their arms differed: The first, England alone; the second, Old France quartered with England; and the third, New France (that is when the flower-de-luces were reduced to three), quartered with England, and each of those three princes had a plain bordure _argent_ round their respective arms.

Sandford, in his Genealogical History of England, has this observe, That the younger sons of England have deserted a plain bordure, since these last three eminent men, who carried a bordure _argent_, suffered violent deaths; Edmund beheaded, Thomas smothered to death, and Humphry poisoned.

Montagu Duke of Montagu, _argent_, three lozenges in fesse, _gules_ within a bordure _sable_. Sir Edward Montagu was advanced to the dignity of Baron of England, by the title of Lord Montagu of Boughton, in the 19th of James I. of Great Britain: His grandson, Ralph Montagu, was, in the year 1689, created Viscount Monthermer and Earl of Montagu; and in the year 1705, Marquis of Monthermer and Duke of Montagu.

Tufton Earl of Thanet, _sable_, an eagle displayed _ermine_, within a bordure _argent_. This family was advanced to the dignity of a Baron of England, by the title of Lord Tufton of Tufton and Earl of Thanet by King Charles I.

Gray of Balligarno, _gules_, a lion rampant _argent_, holding between his paws an anchor _or_, within a bordure ingrailed of the second.

Gray of Hayston, afterwards designed of Endrifty, the arms of the Lord Gray, with a writing pen in the right paw of the lion, upon the account that his father was sheriff-clerk of Angus. Lyon Register.

Pringle of Greenknow, _azure_, three escalops _or_, within a bordure ingrailed of the last.

Wallace of Ellerslie, _gules_, a lion rampant _argent_, within a bordure _componé_ (or gobonated) _azure_, and of the second, as in Sir George Mackenzie’s Heraldry: The arms are, by Mr Pont, ascribed to Wallace of Craigie; and he gives to Wallace of Ellensy, quarterly, first and fourth _gules_, a lion rampant _argent_, by the name of Wallace; second and third _gules_, a fesse _chequéd_, _argent_ and _azure_, for Lindsay.

James Dundas of Breast-Mill, _argent_, a lion rampant _gules_, within a bordure gobonated of the first and second; crest, a lion from the shoulders issuing out of a bush of oak _vert_; with the motto, _Essayez_. Lyon Register.
OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.

Fraser of Phoppachy, azure, three cinquefoils argent, within a bordure composed of the second and first; crest, a phœnx, proper; with the motto, Non extinguar. Lyon Register.

Charles Duke of Richmond, natural son to King Charles II. had the arms of Great Britain within a bordure gobonated, argent and gules, the first charged with roses of the last.

There is another form of a bordure, which Sir George Mackenzie gives in the bearing of Kilgour, viz. argent, a dragon with wings displayed within a bordure inwardly circular table, charged with three crescents of the first.

OF THE ORLE.

The orle is an inner bordure, which does not touch the extremities of the shield, the field being seen within, and round it on both sides. Menestrier says, orle est une bordure, qui ne touche pas les bord es de l'ecu. Mr Gibbon Latins it, Limbus a latere seuti disjunctus: And Sylvestre Sancta, speaking of orles, says, Hi enim sunt instar some, aut cinguli, ita ordinati, ut non tangant fines postremos formule tesseraria: And to distinguish them from bordures, which he calls limbos vel margines continentem. He Latins orles, limbos vel margines intercios disjunctosque.

The breadth of the orle is not determined by heralds, being a diminutive of the bordure, proportional to the extension of the field, and the figures within and without which accompanied it. By some it is taken for an inescutcheon voided; and it is said by heralds to have been used in the arms of those who have given protection and defence to their king and country; for as the bordure defends the figures that are within, so also doth the orle; and may be thought, upon that account, to have been carried by some ancient families with us, who were very active in defending the Borders of our kingdom against the English; as the Dunbar's Earls of March, the Landels and the Rutherfords, of whom immediately; the double pressure, being of the nature of an orle, is said by some to be the badge of the mutual assistance and defence between France and Scotland against their enemies.

The Spaniards use the orle more frequently in their arms than other nations do; upon the account (says Sylvester Petra Sancta) of a noble maternal descent, as in his book Testerae Gentilites, cap. 69. pag. 603: the double pressure is carried with us, upon the account of royal descent, by several families. Sir James Balfour, in his Blazons, gives us the paternal arms of John Baliol, pretended King of Scotland, which he blazons or, an escutcheon gules, voided of the field, which is the same with the orle: It is true, it has the form of an escutcheon, but always voided of the field, or some other tincture; and still after the form of an escutcheon, though the field or shield which contains it be either oval, triangular, round, or square. Mr Gibbon, in his Introductio ad Latinam Blazoniam, gives us the arms of John Baliol, of other tinctures, being one of the magnates of Henry III. gules, an orle argent: which says, he yet stands in the body of Westminster Abbey Church, on the north side, and which are also the arms of Baliol's College, he being the founder thereof. This ancient surname and noble family came from Normandy, being writ Ballou, Baliol: And now, as some will, Baille; and were lords of great possessions in that country. Guy de Baliol came over to England with the Conqueror's son, William Rufus, and was possessed of the barony of Bywell, in Northumberland; for which lands his son did homage to King David I. of Scotland. He was succeeded by his son Eustace, and he again by Hugh de Baliol; whose eldest son John, married Dornagilla, daughter of Allan Lord of Galloway, and of Margaret, the eldest daughter of David Earl of Huntingdon; in whose right he had many possessions in Scotland; so that he was subject to three different sovereigns, the King of Scotland, the King of England, and the King of France, in whose dominions his lands lay. His son John Baliol, by the assistance of Edward I. was declared King of Scotland; but afterwards dethroned, and fled to Normandy 1287. His son Edward, by the assistance of Edward III. of England, got possession of the kingdom of Scotland, but was soon expelled, and in him the direct line of this family ended. There were several collateral branches of this surname of Baliol in Scotland, donors and witnesses in our Cloister Registers; and in the Raynag-roll there are four or five of them of good account. Some say that the Baillies are descended from the Baliols, which last name being odious to the nation they changed it to Baille; and it seems their arms too, for they are very different from the Ballys, of which afterwards.

Landels Lord Landels, of old, in the shire of Berwick, carried or, an orle azure, Plate VIII. fig. 6. This family long since ended in an heiress, who was married to Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk, one of the progenitors of the present Earl of Home, which family has ever since perpetuate the memory of the family of Landel, by carrying the foresaid arms, by way of an inescutcheon, on their quartered ones. William de Landelys or Landel, son to the Baron of Landelis in the Mers, (Sib. Hist. of Fife) being Provost of Kinkell, was consecrate Bishop of St Andrews 1441, and sat bishop 44 years; he died 1485.

Landels of Cowl, a cadet of the Lord Landel, gave the same arms, but, for difference, put it under an accidental form, viz. or, an orle indented on the inner side azure. I have seen the seal of one Sir John Landels who had an orle between three cinquefoils, all within a bordure, appended to a Procuratory of Resignation, of the date 1426, granted by John Murray of Ogilife, one of the progenitors of Murray of Abercraime, because he had not a seal of his own; as the words of the procuratory runs, "quain non habui sigillum proprium, ideo usus sum sigillo Domini Johannis Landel." Which is to be seen among the registers in the Parliament-house.

Rutherford, argent, an orle gules, and in chief three martlets sable, plate VIII. fig. 7. The principal family of this surname, was Rutherford of that Ilk, an ancient and potent family in Teviotdale, on the Borders with England: The orle is the principal armorial figure of the family, which may be thought to have been assumed by them, upon the account beforementioned, in defending the Borders of the kingdom against the English; and the three martlets, to show that some of the heads of the family had been in the warlike expeditions in the Holy Land, against the Saracens, as these birds intimate, of which afterwards.

I am not to insist on the original of the name through uncertain tradition; viz. that one who guided Ruther King of the Scots through the river Tweed, in an expedition against the Britons, at a certain place, thereafter, from that, called Rutherfords; which was given to the guide. And when surnames came in use, his posterity took their surname Rutherford from the lands; neither am I to give a complete genealogical deduction of the family and its branches, but those whom I meet with upon records with their armorial bearings.

I have met with Nicolaus de Rutherfurd in Roxburghshire, in Pryme's Collections, page 651, with other Scots Barons, submitting to Edward I. of England; and page 655, Apner de Rutherford is also a submitter. In Mr Barbour's History of King Robert the Bruce, there is Sir Robert Rutherford fighting valiantly for his king and country against the English: and the next I meet with of this family, is Sir Richard Rutherford, designed Dominus de Rutherford, a person of great interest and activity on the Borders, in the time of King Robert III. anno 1392, as by charters in Rotuli Roberti III.

James Rutherford, designed Dominus ejusdem in the records, in the reign of King James II. who, with other barons on the Borders, viz. the Homes, Cranston of Cranston, and Ker of Cessford, were conservators of the peace made with England, in the year 1457; for which, see Docto Abereromby's 2d vol. of his Martial Achievements, page 371. This James Rutherford got a charter from King James II. 1451, of the barony of Edgerston, and married Margaret Erskine, daughter to Erskine, by whom he had two sons, Richard and Thomas; the eldest, Richard, died before his father, and left a son, Richard, and two daughters, Helen and Katharine Rutherfords. In the year 1492, the above James Rutherford obtains a charter under the Great Seal, ratifying and confirming a charter granted by William Douglas of Cavers, as superior of the lands of Rutherford and Well, to himself, and his grandson, Richard, his apparent heir, and his heir-male; which failing, to his second son Thomas, and his son and apparent Robert, and his heir-male.
OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.

In the year 1499, May 5, Richard is served heir to his grandfather James; but he dying without issue, his uncle Thomas is served heir to him. Richard’s sister, Helen Rutherford, with her husband, John Forman of Devon, nephew to Andrew Forman, Bishop of Murray, afterwards of St Andrews, reduced Thomas’s service to his nephew Richard; Helen died without issue, having had several husbands. Her sister Katherine was married to James Stewart of Traquair, son to the Earl of Buchan, ancestor to the Earl of Traquair; upon which account the family has been in use to marshal the arms of Rutherford with their own. Katherine’s grandson, Sir William Stewart of Traquair, caused serve himself heir to his grandmother’s sister Helen, and got the lands of Rutherford and Well, but the barony of Edgerston went to the heirs-male, the son of the above Thomas; from whom was lineally descended John Rutherford of Edgerston, who caused his arms, as the principal bearing of the name of Rutherford, to be recorded in the Lyon Register 1608, viz. argent, an orle gules, and in chief, three martlets sable; crest, a martlet table; with the motto, Nec sorte nec fato. He left behind him two sons, Andrew Rutherford of Edgerston, who died without lawful issue, April 1718, and Thomas Rutherford of Well, who succeeded his brother, and is now designed Rutherford of that Ilk. He married Susanna, daughter and heiress of Walter Riddel of Minto, and his spouse Katherine Nisbet, sister to Sir John Nisbet of Dirleton.

Rutherford of Hunthill and Chatto, a younger son of Rutherford of that Ilk, as early as the reign of King James I. got the lands of Chatto from the Earl of Douglas in the year 1424; and carried for arms, as in the Lyon Register, or, three passion-wings, within an orle gules, and in chief, three martlets sable, till the family was advanced to the dignity of a lord, by the title of Lord Rutherford; the foundation of which honour was laid by a younger son of a cadet of this family, Lieutenant-General Andrew Rutherford.

He was the son of William Rutherford of Quarryhole, by Isabel his wife, daughter of James Stewart of Traquair. He entered young into a military employment in the French service, and, for his valour and conduct, having passed through many degrees of military honour, came at last to that of a Lieutenant-General in France: He came over to England with a singular reputation, upon the restoration of King Charles II. who honoured him with the title of Lord Rutherford, by letters patent of the date the 19th of January 1661; which honours were to descend, not only to the heirs of his body, but even to whomsoever he should be pleased to name. His majesty made him Governor of Dunkirk, and, after the sale of that important place, he was dignified with the title of Earl of Teviot, and the heirs of his body, the second of February 1662; and shortly thereafter got the command of Tangier, where his Lordship died the 3d of May 1664. He carried for arms, fig. 8. argent, an orle gules, and in chief three martlets sable, all within a bordure azuré, charged with thistles, roses, flower-de-luces, and harps, alternately or; and for crest, a mermaid holding a mirror in her right hand, and a comb in her left, all proper; with the motto, Per mare, per terras; and, in place of it, sometimes the word provide; supporters, two horses, proper.

The Lord Rutherford having no issue, by his own destination the honour fell to Sir Thomas Rutherford of Hunthill. He, dying without issue 1668, was succeeded in that title of honour by his brother Archibald Lord Rutherford; who likewise dying without issue 1685; the pecrage and arms fell to his younger brother Robert, now Lord Rutherford, who has made over his estate, title and arms, by disposition, with a procuratory of resignation, in favours of Thomas Rutherford of that Ilk, chief of the name; and he claims, in right thereof, and in that of his lady before-mentioned, to carry, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a chevron inpointed gules, betwixt three ears of rye slipped and bladed vert; for Riddel of Minto, second and third argent, on a chevron gules, betwixt three boars’ heads erased sable, as many cinquefoils of the field, and in the middle chief point, a thistle, proper, for Nisbet of Dirleton; and over all, by way of surtout, the principal coat of Rutherford; and, to have them adorned with the exterior ornaments crest, motto, and supporters of the Lord Rutherford. Which not being approved as yet by authority, I have only caused engrave the arms of his father in the Plate of Achievements, as they stand matriculated in the Lyon Register,

Rutherford of Hunedee, argent, an orle gules, voided or; and in chief, three martlets sable, as by Sir George Mackenzie; and which are so illuminated in the house of Falahill. The first of this family was Nicol Rutherford, who was a brother's son of James Rutherford of that Illk, and immediate elder brother to Robert Rutherford of Hunthill and Chatto, in the reign of King James I. of Scotland. The family of Hunedee continued in a male descent till of late that it ended in an heir female, that was married to Sir James Ker of Craighall.

Robert Rutherford of Fernilee, as descended of Hunedee, carries the same; and for crest, a horse-head and neck: motto, Sedatus & audax. Lyon Register, and in the Plate of Achievements.

George Rutherford of Fairnington, descended of Rutherford of that Illk, argent, an orle ingrailed gules, and in chief, three martlets sable; crest, a martlet sable: motto, Amico fidus ad aras. Lyon Register.

The surname of Knox carries an orle, as in our old Books of Blazons. Several of this name are to be found witnesses in the reigns of Alexander II. and III. in the charters to the Abbey of Paisley; the principal family of this name was Knox of that Illk, frequently designed of Ranfurly, and Craignords, (for which see Crawford's History of Renfrew); they carried gules, a falcon volant or, within an orle incepted on the outer side argent. Pont's Manuscript.

In our public records there is a charter of confirmation of King James III. of a resignation of the barony of Ranfurly and Grief-castle, by John Knox of Craigend, in favour of Uchtar Knox, about the year 1474. This family failed in the person of Uchter Knox of Ranfurly, who had but one daughter: He sold the estate of Ranfurly 1663, to William first Earl of Dundonald; of this family several eminent persons in the Church descended, as the famous Mr John Knox, an eminent instrument in our Reformation from Popery; and Mr Andrew Knox, a younger son of John Knox of Ranfurly, (and grand-uncle to Uchter Knox the last of the family) who was minister at Paisley, and, for his learning and piety, was promoted to the bishopric of the Isles, 1665; and in the year 1662, he was translated to the Episcopal See of Rapho, in the kingdom of Ireland; and his son, Mr Thomas Knox, a person of considerable learning and piety, was bishop of the Isles. As for the Achievement of Knox of Ranfurly, see it cut in the Plate of Achievements, at the desire and ex pense of John Knox, Apothecary in Strathaven.

Thomas Knox, Esq. in the kingdom of Ireland, lawful son to Thomas Knox, descended of the family of Ranfurly, in the kingdom of Scotland, so recorded in the Lyon Register, with his armorial bearing gules, a falcon volant, within an orle waved on the outer side, and ingrailed on the inner side, argent; crest, a falcon perching, proper: motto, Moveo & proficior.

The surname of Norie, parted per pale, argent and sable, an orle ingrailed on both sides, and charged with four quarter-foils within a bordure, all counter-changed of the same. Pont's Manuscript.

The orle, as I have said, being an inner bordure, is often surrounded with an outer bordure, as by the surname of Renton.

The Rentons of Billie in the Merse have charters of these lands, in the reign of Alexander III. from the Dunbars Earls of March, whose vassals and followers they were, and as such, have carried arms in imitation of their patrons, but of different tinctures, viz. azure, a lion rampant argent, within an orle ingrailed on the inner side, and a bordure of the last, Plate VIII. fig. 9. Sir James Balfour blazons them azure, a lion rampant, within a bordure ingrailed argent, and voided of the field, which is the same with the former; Workman, in his Blazons, says, argent, a lion rampant azure, charged on the shoulder with a buckle or, within a double bordure of the second.

When more than one orle are carried, they are called double orles, triple orles, or triple bordures; for which see Sylvester Petra Sancta, who gives us several Spanish bearings of this sort, and says, "Insuper ali8 qui habent istum tractum " (i.e. orle) tripartitum vel quadrupartitum, ut in armis episcopi coememensis, "qui portavit tractum triplicem de negro, in campo auro;" and the same example Upton gives, as Mr Gibbon observes, Englished thus by Guiliam; "a certain " Bishop of Mentz bore a triple orle sable, in a field or.

As the orle is the diminutive of the bordure, so I find it has again other diminutives, as the essonier and treasure.
The Essonier with the French is of a smaller tract than the orle, and after the same form; Menestrier, in his Origin of Arms, where he gives the significance of many armorial figures, says the essonier represents a girdle, or an inclosure of ground fenced, which imports the same, as is said before of the bordure and orle. In his La Science de la Noblesse, he describes the essonier thus: Essonier est une espèce d’orle où ceinture, et vient du Grec. ἐκμενία, qui signifie une enceinte, où ceinture.

The English call this figure a tressure, as Holmes, in his Academy of Armories; who brings it from the English word tract, it being only by a tract or line drawn about the sides of the field, and ever runneth answerable to the form of the shield: If triangular, it is triangular, if oval, it is oval; and of whatsoever form the shield be, the tressure is answerable thereunto; argent, a rose gules, within a tressure sable, the bearing of Sir Josias Tralemain in England. Upton says, some blazon such a coat, argent, a tract sable; which tract must be larger than the double tressure, of which immediately.

When figures are situate in a field, after the position of the orle, or circular-ways, they are said to be in orle, or orle-ways; by the French rangés en orle, and by the Latins, ad oram seuti posita. As for example, the arms of the Medici, great Dukes of Florence, thus blazoned by Monsieur Baron; d’or à cinq tordillages de guernes rangés en orle, en chef une tordillage d’azur, chargé de trois fleurs de lis, d’or, i. e. or, five tordillages in orle gules, and one in chief azure, charged with three flower-de-luces of the first.

Arbuthnot of Fiddes, Plate VIII. fig. 10. carries the arms of Arbuthnot of that Ilk, viz. azure, a crescent between three stars, within an orle of eight frases of the last, as being descended of a younger son of Arbuthnot of that Ilk, and his lady, Dame Margaret Fraser, daughter to the Lord Lovat. New Register.

Gladsstones of that Ilk, Plate VIII. fig. 11: argent, a savage’s head couped, distilling drops of blood, and thereupon a bonnet, composed of bay and holly leaves, all proper; within an orle of eight martlets sable; crest, a griffin issuing out of a wreath, holding a sword in its right talon, proper: motto, fidel et virtute. Lyon Register.

Gladsstones of Whitelaw carries the same, within a bordure inverted gules.

Keith Earl of Kintore, for his coat of augmentation, gules, a sceptre and sword saltier-ways, with an imperial crown in chief; all within an orle of eight thistles or.

OF THE TRESSURE.

The Tressure or Tresschur, as the French write, is the diminutive of the orle: Menestrier says, "Treschur est une tresse ou orle fleuri, conduite dans le sens de l’ecu;" so that it is a trace or tract flowered, surrounding the inner part of the escutcheon, as an orle. The Latins call it trica or tractus simplex, when a single tressure; which Sylvanus Morgan gives, in his Heraldry, in the bearing of the name of Hubblethor in Yorkshire, sable, a muscle within a tressure flory, argent. Sir George Mackenzie will have it to represent, in arms, the traces of silver or gold lace which adorned surcoats, or coats of arms of old.

When there are two of these tracts flowered and counter-flowered within and without, as these in the Royal Ensign of Scotland, it is called a double tressure; by the Latins, tractatus duplex, scolum circum circa interne percingens; and Camden, limbus duplex, which is well, if he had added, inter ete seuti disjunctus, to distinguish it from limbus, a bordure; Sylvester Petra Sflecta, speaking of it, says, Celebris est duplex limbus quem paralae linieae duce ac simul florentes descri- bunt in Tesseris Regum Scotorum.

The Imperial Arms of Scotland are, or, a lion rampant gules, armed and langued azure, within a double tressure, flowered and counter-flowered, with flower-de-luces of the second, Plate VIII. fig. 12. Menestrier thus, "Ecosse d’or, au leon de "gueules en close dans une double tresschur fleuri et contre-fleur de meme;" and the German Imhoif, "Tessera Scotici Regni representat leonem rubrum lin- gua & falculis caruleis, limbo geminato cocceiue utrique liliis stipato inclusum;"
This armorial figure has been of old used in the royal ensigns of the Kings of Scotland, to perpetuate the ancient and memorable league between them and the Kings of France.

It has been communicated by our Kings, (as I observe) first to their children, and afterwards to their eminent subjects: As for instance of the first, David Earl of Huntingdon, brother to King William, carried in his arms a double tressure; and the English herald, Mr Miles, tells us, that Maud, the sister of King William, who was married to Henry I. of England, had, for her arms, the Lion of Scotland within the double tressure.

By our ancient and modern practice, the double tressure is not allowed to be carried by any subject, without a special warrant from the sovereign, and that in these two cases: First, to those who were descended of daughters of the Royal Family; and so to them it is a tressera of a noble maternal descent, as the orle before mentioned is to the Spaniards. And secondly, to those who have merited well of their king and country, as a special additament of honour.

Sir Alexander Seaton of that ilk, son of Sir Christopher Seaton, and Christian Bruce, sister to King Robert the Bruce, was the first of the noble progenitors of the Earls of Winton who encompassed his paternal figures, the three crescents, with the double tressure flowered and counter-flowered gules, in a field or, upon the account of maternal descent and merit. And upon the same account, Thomas Randolph Earl of Murray, as another sister's son to King Robert I, carried the double tressure round his paternal figures, viz. three cushions gules, in a field argent, as by their seals of arms, appended to charters which I have seen.

The Murrays, especially those of Tullibardine and Athol, upon the account of their royal maternal descent, had the double tressure round their proper figures. I have seen the seal of William Murray of Touchamb, constable and governor of the castle of Stirling, progenitor of Murray of Polmaise, appended to a charter in the year 1463, upon which seal was a triangular shield charged with three stars within a double tressure flowered, and counter-flowered with flower-de-luces.

Lyon Earl of Strathmorer as descended of a daughter of King Robert II, Kennedy Earl of Cassillis, and Graham of Fintry, as descended of daughters of King Robert III, have the double tressure counter-flowered with flower-de-luces round their armorial figures. It is true, several other considerable families with us, though descended of the blood royal, by the mother-side, have never been in use to carry this celebrated tressure; as the families of Hamilton, Douglas, &c. Others again, merely upon the account of their special services to their king and country, have been honoured with this figure in their arms; as Erskine Earl of Kelly, Ramsay Earl of Holderness, Scott of Thistle-tane, and others, of whom in other places of this Treatise.

Some again have the double tressure in their arms, and adorned with other figures than flower-de-luces; as Gordon Earl of Aboyne, azure, a chevron between three boars' heads couped, all within a double tressure flowered with flower-de-luces within, and adorned with crescents without or. Gordon Earl of Aberdeen, azure, three boars' heads couped, within a double tressure, flowered and counter-flowered, with thistles, roses, and flower-de-luces alternately or.

Our kings have been in use, as a singular piece of honour, to grant the tressure to foreigners. When King James VI. knighted Jacob Van-Eiden, a Dutchman, he gave a concession to him, to use the double tressure in his arms, as an additament of honour; and to several other foreign commissioners he gave the same, as their patents bear in the Chapel-rolls, entitled, Diversi tractatus antiquitatum temporis Jacobi Regis; for which see Selden's Titles of Honours. Our kings, before their accession to the throne of England, were in use to do the same to foreigners; amongst Sir James Balfour, sometime Lyon King at Arns, his Collections of Old Charters and Grants, there is one, " Charta facta per Jacobum Quintum Regem Scotorum Nnit pl milin de Combet, in villa de Dieppe in Normania, Oriundo Gallo, constituto & creando eundum Nicolaum nobilem & generosum, & sic pro perpetuo in futurum reputandum & tenendum, dandoque sibi duplicem Regis armorum circulum, vulgo double tressure floury contre-floury, pradioskoribus nostris per bonae memoriae Carolum magnum concessum." These are the words of that charter of our king, which was dated at Stirling the 17th of September 1529.
OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.

OF THE ESCUTCHEON, OR INESCUTCHEON.

Though this figure does represent the military shield, and may be treated of amongst the common charges, yet heralds place it amongst the lesser ordinaries, as a proper armorial figure; and when there is but one of them in the field, it possesses the fifth middle part of it, and the rest of the field round it looks like a bordure; it is called escutcheon, or inescutcheon, being contained within the field, as other charges; the French call it escousse from ecu, and the Latin, scutulum or formula.

David Earl of Huntington in England, and Garacho in Scotland, brother to King William the Lion, both grandsons to King David I. carried argent, an escutcheon within a double trellure flowered and counter-flowered gules: These arms I have given in taille-douce on the first Plate in my Essay of the Ancient and Modern Use of Armories. Sir John Ferne, in his Lacie's Nobility, says, he took the field argent, in place of or, the field of Scotland, because it was the field of arms of his grandmother Maud, daughter of Waltheof Earl of Northumberlánd and Huntington, (who carried argent, a lion salient azure, and a chief gules) to show his descent that way, and retained the double trellure to show his descent from the royal blood of Scotland; and the escutcheon, says our author, did represent him, as the shield of his country in his brother the king's absence, and his valour when he was abroad with his countrymen in the Holy War; it was not the practice in his time, as I have shown elsewhere, for the younger sons of sovereigns to carry the entire imperial ensigns of their fathers, as they are now in use to do, with minute differences, but to take only a part of them, and to join them with other figures, that they may be more eminently distinguished from the sovereign ensigns, which were always looked upon to be sacred.

Earl David married Maud, eldest daughter and heir of Hugh Kivilloc Earl of Chester, and sister and heir to Randolph Earl of Chester, by whom he had John and three daughters: His son John, surnamed Scott, though he was of the royal family of Scotland, he did not carry the entire arms of that kingdom, but a part of them, viz. argent, three bars within a double trellure flowered and counter-flowered gules; he had the bars, the figures of Chester, in place of his father's escutcheon: He died without issue 1237, and his sister's issue became the heirs of the crown of Scotland.

I gave before the arms of Maule Earl of Panmure, with a bordure, as they are now in use to be blazoned; but, meeting with a remnant of an old Book of Blazons, I found them otherwise blazoned, which I could not pass by here without giving it, viz. parted per pale, gules and argent, an escutcheon within an orle of eight escalops, all counter-changed; which blazon is more agreeable and suitable to the family, being the chief and principal one of the family, than a bordure, charged and counter-changed; but more of this family at the title of Escalop.

Fig. 13, McNaught of Kilquharity, sable, an escutcheon chequé, argent and azure, between three lions' heads erased of the second, langued gules. Pont's Manuscript.

Geddies of Ruchan, descended of Geddies of that Ilk, now extinct, gules, an inescutcheon argent, between three pikes or piked-heads, couped or. Pont's Manuscript.

The surname of Hay, argent, three escutcheons gules, two and one. Sylvester Petra Sancta, in his 66th chap. De Scutulis Insititis, says, "Tria scutula punicia in laterculo argentii metalii sunt Abbessvillorum in Gallia, Haieron in Scotia & Rebeau praeorum iterum in Gallia." Those of the Hays are famous all Europe over, upon the account of their rise, which our historians generally have given of the name and arms; who tell us, that in the reign of King Kenneth III. about the year 982, when the Danes invaded Scotland, and prevailing in the battle of Lomaritl, a country Scotsman, with his two sons, of great strength and courage, having rural weapons, as the yokes of their plough, and such plough furniture, stopped the Scots in their flight in a certain defile, and, upbraiding them of cowardice, obliged them to rally, who with them renewed the battle, and gave a total overthrow to the victorious Danes: And it is said by some, after the victory was obtained, the old man lying on the ground, wounded and fatigued, cryed Hay, Hay; which word.
became a surname to his posterity: He and his sons being nobilitate, the king gave him the foresaid arms, to intimate that the father and the two sons had been luckily the three shields of Scotland; and gave them as much land in the Carse of Gowry as a falcon did fly over without lighting, which having flown a great way, she lighted on a stone, there called the falcon-stone to this day: The circumstances of which story is not only perpetuate by the three escutcheons, but by the exterior ornaments of the achievement of the family of Errol; having, for crest, on a wreath a falcon, proper; for supporters, two men in country-habits, holding the oxen yokes of a plough over their shoulders, (sometimes they are represented as savages wreathed about the head and middle with laurel, holding yokes of a plough in their hands); and for motto, Serva jugum. As for the antiquity of the name, it is as early to be found in our records as any other. There are several of that name mentioned in the charters of King Malcolm IV. to the abbacies of Scoon and Cupar, amongst whom is Willielmus de Hūia de Erro, who was succeeded by his son David de Haia, father of another Willielmus de Hūia, 1325. Gilbertus de Haia Dominus de Erro (Dalrymple's Collections, page 75.) was, for his good services to King Robert the Bruce, made Lord High Constable of Scotland, and his heirs for ever; as by that charter 12th November 1315. And, in a charter of confirmation of that king's (Haddington's Collections, page 66.) of the charter of Eva Kelor to Robert Harkars Miles, of the date the 18th year of King Robert's reign, among the witnesses, is Gilbertus de Haia, Constabularius Scociæ, of whom was descended Willielmus de Hūia-Lord Erro, Constable of Scotland, who was, by King James II. created Earl of Errol, the 17th of March 1432, and from him Charles the late Earl of Errol, High Constable. For a more full genealogical account of this noble family, see Mr Crawford's Peerage of Scotland.

The next eminent family of the name was Hay of Locharret, after designed of Yester, now of Tweeddale, who carries the same arms as Errol, marshalled with others.

The first of this family was John Hay, son of William Hay, and brother of William Hay of Errol, in the reign of King William the Lion; which Mr Crawford vouches in his Peerage. It seems he came from the north to the Lothians, and married the daughter and heir of Robert de Lyn, and got with her the barony of Locharret. Their son and successor was William Hay of Locharret; for, in the Register of Newbuth, is to be found a charter to that abbacy by Willielmus de Hūia, filius Iannae de Hūia, miles & dominus de Locbusweerd, giving the liberty of a moss called Ulnestrocher, to the monks of that abbacy, which Robert de Lyn, the son of David, quondam domini de Locberowna, & ipsius Pater, illi dedit. See Sir James Dalrymple's Collections, Preface, p. 76. William was succeeded by his son Sir William Hay of Locharret, father of Hugh Hay of Locharret, who married a sister of King Robert the Bruce, and widow of Laurence Lord Abernethy, and with her had a son, Gilbert, as by the genealogical account of the family.

Sir Gilbert Hay of Locharret married Mary, one of the daughters and coheirses of Sir Simon Fraser Lord of Oliver-Castle, with whom he got a good estate in Tweeddale; upon which account the family has been in use to marshal with their own the arms of Fraser of Oliver-Castle, of old; being azure, five cinquefoils argent, two, one and two, though now there are but three used, two and one. Their son, Sir Thomas, father of Sir William Hay of Locharret, was taken prisoner at the battle of Durham.

Another Sir William Hay of Locharret was employed in divers embassies, in the reign of Robert III. And, during the regency of the Duke of Albany, (Rymer's Fadlera Angliae) he married Jean, the eldest of the four daughters and coheirses of John Gifford Lord Yester, and got with her the lands of Yester, upon which account the family has also been in use to marshal the arms of Gifford; with her he had four sons, Sir William, Thomas, David, and Edmund, the first laird of Linplum and Morham; of whom were descended the Hays of Bara in the North.

Sir William died without issue, and was succeeded by his brother Thomas, who was one of the hostages for the ransom of King James I. and was designed Dominus de Tester, (Rymer's Fadlera Angliae ad annum 1423,) who died also without issue, and was succeeded by Sir David Lord Yester, his brother, anno 1434. I have seen an instrument under the hands of Alexander Clark, Notary, of the date 8th February 1445, mentioning that Nobiliti Dominus David Hey, niles, Dominus de Yester, reconocessed some lands in Duncanlaw, because Edmund Hay, tenant thereof, had sold the same without his consent. He was succeeded by his son, John, second Lord Yester, father of John, third Lord Yester, father of John, fourth Lord Yester, who married Elizabeth Douglas, daughter of George, Master of Angus, son of Archibald Earl of Angus, by whom he had John, his son and heir, and a daughter, Elizabeth, married first to George Lord Seaton, and again to William Lord Salton. He married a second wife, a daughter and co-heir of John Dickson of Smithfield, of whom were descended the Hays of Smithfield.

John, fifth Lord Yester, was taken prisoner at the battle of Pinkie, and carried prisoner to the Tower of London, where he continued till the pacification was concluded betwixt the two nations. He was succeeded by his son William Lord Yester, a zealous reformer, who married Margaret Ker daughter of Fernihirst, by whom he had William and James, successively Lords of Yester, and three daughters, Margaret married to William Lord Borthwick, Katharine to Sir John Swinton of that Ilk, to whom she bare but one daughter, Katharine Swinton, who was married to Sir Alexander Nisbet of that Ilk, grandfather and grandmother to the author of this System of Heraldry; the third daughter Jean was married to Mr James Hay of Bara.

William, seventh Lord Yester, departed this life 1591, having no issue-male, but daughters; whose estate and honours devolved on his brother James, eight Lord Yester, who married Margaret, daughter of Mark first Earl of Lothian; she bare to him John his successor, and Sir William Hay of Linplum.

John, ninth Lord Yester, was, by King Charles I. advanced to the degree and dignity of an Earl by the title of Tweeddale, 1st December 1646. He married, first, Jean, daughter of Alexander Seaton, Earl of Dunfermline, and by her had only one son, John, his successor, Secondly, Margaret, daughter of Alexander Earl of Eglington, by whom he had William Hay of Drumelzier.

John, second Earl of Tweeddale, was raised to the dignity of Marquis of Tweeddale, by letters patent 26th December 1694. He married Jean Scot, daughter of Walter Earl of Buccleugh, by whom he had John his successor, Lord David, and Lord Alexander Hays, Lady Margaret married to Robert Earl of Roxburgh, and Lady Jean married to William first Earl of March.

John succeeded his father, and was second Marquis of Tweeddale. He married Anne, only daughter to John Duke of Lauderdale, by whom he had Charles his successor, and John Hay Brigadier General, and two daughters, Anne married to William Lord Ross, and Jean to John Earl of Rothes.

Charles, third Marquis of Tweeddale; he died 15th December 1715, leaving issue by the Lady Susannah, daughter of William and Anne Duke and Dutchess of Hamilton, widow of John Earl of Dunonald, John the present Marquis of Tweeddale, Lord James, Lord Charles, Lord George, and three daughters.

The armorial achievement of this ancient and noble family, is, quarterly, first and fourth azure, three cinquefoils argent, for Fraser: second and third gules, three bars ermine, for Gifford of Yester; and over all, by way of surnout, the paternal coat of Hay, viz. argent, three inescutcheons gules, second and first; crest, a goat’s head erased argent, horned or; supporters, two bucks, proper, armed or, and collared azure, charged with three cinquefoils argent: and for motto, Spera naught.

James Hay Earl of Carlisle in England, son of Sir James Hay of Kingask, younger son of Hay of Megginch, carried the principal coat of Hay, viz. argent, three inescutcheons gules; by the German Imhoff blazoned, parnulis tres ruberis solo argenteo impressas: He was the first Scotsman, after the union of Scotland and England in the person of King James VI. that was dignified with English titles of honour; first with the title of Lord Hay of Sawley, in the county of York, anno 1615; anno 1618, with the title of Viscount of Doncaster, and anno 1622, Earl of Carlisle by the said King, whose ambassador he was once to the Emperor’s Court, and twice to France: He was also a Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, and a gentleman of the Bed Chamber to King Charles I. He died at
OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.

Whitehall the 24th of April 1636, and was interred in St Paul's Cathedral, leaving only behind him a son, who married Margaret, a third daughter of Francis Earl of Bedford, and died without issue 1662.

Hay Earl of Kinnoul, quarterly, first and fourth azure, an unicorn eroyé argent, horned, maned, and unguled or, within a bordure of the last, charged with eight half thistles vert, and as many half roses gules, conjoined pale-ways for a coat of augmentation; second and third the arms of Hay as before; crest, a hawk, proper, armed and belled or, perching upon the stock of a tree, with branches growing up before and behind: with the motto, Speravi in Domino. Supporters, two hawks, proper, armed and belled or. The first of this noble family was George, a son of Hay of Meggies of the family of Errol (who carried the arms of Hay with an acorn between three escutcheons.) He was, in the year 1616, Clerk Register, and then Chancellor of Scotland, after the death of Seaton Earl of Dunfermline 1622; and was advanced to the dignity of Viscount of Duplin, Lord Hay of Kinfauns, by King Charles I. the 4th May 1627, and afterwards honoured with the title of Earl of Kinnoul: He was succeeded by his son George Earl of Kinnoul, and he by his son William Earl of Kinnoul, father of Earl George, who died in Hungary 1687, and Earl William a bachelor, who died in France, 4th May 1729; so that the honours devolved on Thomas Viscount of Duplin, who carried the arms of Hay within a bordure ermine: He was the son and heir of Thomas Hay of Balhousie, by his wife, a daughter of Sir Thomas Nicolson of Carnock, son of Mr Francis Hay of Balhousie, by Margaret, daughter of James Oliphant of Banchilton, son of Thomas Hay, brother to George the first Earl of Kinnoul. So that Thomas Viscount of Duplin, as the next heir-male, was Earl of Kinnoul, and sat in Parliament in that dignity 1713, being elected one of the sixteen Peers from Scotland, and carried the achievement of the first Earl of Kinnoul, as above blazoned: He married Elizabeth Drummond, daughter to William Viscount of Strathallan, by whom he had two sons and two daughters; he died 1719, and is succeeded by his eldest son George Earl of Kinnoul in Scotland, being before made a Peer of Great Britain, by the title of Lord Hay of Berwarden, the 21st of December 1712: He married Elizabeth Harley, eldest daughter of Robert Earl of Oxford.

Hay of Park, sometime designed of Lochloy, an ancient family of the name, argent, three escutcheons within a bordure gules; crest, the yoke of a plough erect in pale or, with two bows gules: motto, Serva jugum sub jugo. As in the Lyon Register, with the following blasons.

Francis Hay of Stromzie, descended of Hay of Park; the same with Park, having the bordure charged with eight crescents of the field.

Hay of Woodcockdale, descended of the family of Park or Lochloy, argent, a fesse between three escutcheons, all within a bordure gules; crest, a demi-arm, proper, holding an oxen yoke with bows gules: motto, Hinc incrementum.

Hay of Carruber, a brother of Woodcockdale, the same; but waves the fesse for his difference.

Hay of Balhousie, descended of Meggies, the arms of Hay, within a bordure ermine; crest, a demi-man having a blue cap on his head, and holding over his shoulder the yoke of a plough gules: motto, Removete animos.

Hay of Pitfour, descended of the family of Errol, argent, three escutcheons gules, within a bordure chequéd of the second and first.

Hay of Dalgety, descended of Errol, argent, a cinquefoil between three inescutcheons gules; as in Workman's Illuminated Book, and in the house of Falaall; but some books give a fesse between the three escutcheons.

John Hay of Cardenie, sometime one of the Under Clerks of the Session, descended of Dalgety, makes the fesse waved; crest, an ox-yoke erect in pale, with bows gules: motto, Hinc honor & opes. L. R.

Sir James Hay of Linplum, Knight and Baronet, eldest son of Sir William Hay of Linplum, second son of James Lord Yester, and brother to John first Earl of Tweeddale, carries that Earl's quartered coat, all within a bordure argent; crest, a goat's head erased argent, horned or, and charged with a crescent azure; supported by two stags argent: motto, Maliun bono vincit. L. R.

Mr John Hay of Hayston, sometime one of the Principal Clerks of the Session, descended of Tweeddale, the quartered coat of that family within a bordure vert, charged with unicorns' heads couped, and stars, alternately, argent; crest, an ox-yoke in bend or, with bows gules: motto, Pro patria. Lyon Register.

Alexander Hay of Muntan, the arms of Hay within a bordure ingrailed azure, seme of cinquefoils of the first.

Mr Andrew Hay of Craigthenan, descended of the family of Tweeddale, carries, quarterly, first Fraser; second Gifford; third vert; three unicorns' heads erased argent, for Ker; fourth as the first; over all a shield of pretence, the arms of Hay.

Hay of Seafield, descended of Hay of Fudy, argent, a chevron betwixt three escutcheons gules.

Hay of Leys, a second son of Errol, ermine, three escutcheons gules.

Hay of Muchals, the first of this family was a second son of George Earl of Errol, and his spouse Margaret, daughter to Robertson of Struan, argent, a mullet between three escutcheons.

Hay of Auchencoy, argent, three escutcheons within a bordure ingrailed gules.

Hay of Earwhill, sometime Minister at Cranmond, the arms of Hay within a bordure ingrailed gules, with a star in chief. L. R.

Hay of Broxmouth, argent, three escutcheons vert. This estate went long since off with an heir who was married to a gentleman of the name of Home, of whom was descended Home Earle of Dunbar, and Home of Eccles, who quartered these arms with their own, of whom afterwards.

Henry Hay, Merchant in Leith, argent, three escutcheons gules, each charged with a garb or, banded of the second; crest, an ox-head couped, proper; motto, Nec abest jugum. Lyon Register.

Moncur of that ilk, argent, a rose gules, and, on a chief of the last, three escutcheons of the first. Workman's Manuscript.

In the charters of Robert I. and David the Bruce, I have met with this name of Moncur; and in the reign of Robert III. Andreas Moncur de eodem is a witness in a charter of Rait of Halggreen; other books give to Moncur of that ilk, argent, a fesse between three escalops gules.

Fig. 15. The surname of Shields, gules, on a bend ingrailed or, three escutcheons azure, being shields, they are relative to the name. W. Manuscript.

The surname of Crooks or Crucks, gules, on a bend or, three escutcheons sable, Ibid.

Cecil Earl of Exeter, and Baron of Burleigh, barry of ten pieces argent and azure, over all, six escutcheons sable, 3, 2, and 1, each charged with a lion rampant of the first. William Cecil, descended of the Cecils in Lincolnshire, was a great favourite of Queen Elizabeth's, who honoured him with the title of Lord Burleigh, and constituted him Lord Treasurer; his son Thomas was, by King James I. of Great Britain, by letters patent, created Earl of Exeter, which is observed to be the first precedent whereby any man was advanced to the title of Earl of the principal city, when another had the dignity of the country. Charles Blunt being then Earl of Devonshire, his younger brother, Robert Cecil was, by the same king, about the same time created Lord Cecil of Essenden, Viscount Cranburn, being the first of that degree that wore a coronet. He was soon after made Earl of Salisbury, Lord Treasurer, Knight of the Garter, and Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, and carried as his brother, Exeter, with a crescent for difference.

The name of Loudhame, in England, argent, three escutcheons sable.

To end with the escutcheon, in its various disposition in a coat of arms, I shall only give the ensign of the King of Portugal, which is argent, five escutcheons azure, placed cross-ways, each charged with as many besants of the first in saltier, and pointed sable (the arms of Portugal) all within a bordure gules, charged with seven towers or, 3 in chief, 2 in flank, and as many in base. Which Blazon is thus laimed by Julius Chiffletius, in scuto argenteo quina scutula cerulea, in crucis modum ellocata, quodlibet quinque nummis bysantis argenteis, puncto nigro impressis, & in decussim depositis inustum, limbus scuti coeceans sep-tem castellis aureis inscriptis. The historical account of these arms, is, that the first King of Portugal, Alphonso Henriquez, great-grandchild to Hugh Capet of France, overcame five Moorish kings at the battle of Ourique, anno 1134; who, in memory thereof, took, for armorial figures, five shields or escutcheons, which he placed in cross, and charged each of them with five besants in saltier, to represent the five victories. Some say, they represent the five wounds our Saviour received on the cross, and Alphonseus III. King of Portugal, did since add the bordure with castles, upon the account that his Queen was daughter of Alphonse, King of Castile, and with her got the kingdom of Algarve, in the year 1278.

OF THE QUARTER, OR FRANC QUARTIER.

I do not here mean such quarters as necessarily fall out by the partition lines parti and couped, in a quartered bearing, where several coats of arms are marshalled in one shield; but a square figure as a charge laid on the field, being formed (as Guillim in his Display) by two lines, the one drawn from the side of the shield in traverse to the centre, and the other perpendicularly from the chief, to meet it in the same place. He shows us the figure which he describes, but does not tell us by whom carried. Sylvester Petra Sancta gives us the arms of John Annis of Arces, Cardinal of the Empire, azure, a quarter or; which he thus blazons, "Aveur tetrans, in solo scuti coruleo; others latin it, quadra, or quadrans. Menestrier says, "Quartier is one of the four parties of the ecur ecartèlé, ou en banniere, "or en sautoir, il fait seul une des parties honorables, et on le nomme franc quartier;" he gives us, for instance, the bearing of Lamerignon in France, lozenge d'azur et d'argent, au franc quartier d'ermine, i.e. lozenge azur and argent, a free quarter ermine.

This quarter, says Gerard Leigh, is given to none under the degree of a Lord Baron; but his countryman Guillim says, it may be granted to those of a lesser nobility. I observe among all the figures we are treating of, it is never, or at least seldom used in Britain; upon what account I know not, except that, when a field is plain, and no figures on it but a franc quartier, charged with the paternal figures, according to some writers, it was anciently a sign of illegitimation before the bastard-bar came in use; as that learned anonymous author of the Observationes Eugeanologicae, cap. 19. lib. 2. "Erut & olim manifestum naturalitatis & ille gitimorum naturalium indicium, & quis in primo scuti quadrante paterna ges taret insignia, reliqua parte scuti vacua relicta, postea vero naturales barram "assumpsere."

In all the books of Blazon in Britain I have perused, I never met with a franc quartier but one, in Mr Thomas Crawfurd, his Manuscript of Heraldry, which he ascribes to Sir Patrick Hamilton, whom he calls brother to James, first of that name, Earl of Arran; who carried gules, three cinquefoils argent, a franc quartier or, charged with a sword fesse-ways azure. Plate VIII. fig. 17. This Sir Patrick is not only famous in our printed Histories, but in Manuscript, as in that of Lindsay of Pitscottie, for his strength and valour in Tournaments, where he did great feats in the reign of James IV. of whom afterwards. I have given the quarter, absconding the cinquefoil in the dexter chief points, as all such cantons do of super-charges.

OF THE CANTON.

This is a square figure, less than the quarter, and possesses only the third part of the chief, as Sylvester Petra Sancta: "Aliquando aream angulus minor tetrante, "& qui solum continet partem tertiam scutariae coronidis." Here he latinizes the canton angulus, but Uredius more distinctly calls it angulus quadrans, because it is placed on the upper corners of the shield, which distinguishes it from a delph, which is a rebateMENT to him that revokes his challenge, being a square figure always placed in the centre of the shield. Others use the words quadrans or quadrans for a canton. The French call it a franc canton, to distinguish it from these cantons or areas of the field, which necessarily fall out when the field is charged with a cross or saltier, as Menestrier: "Canton est une partie quadrée de l'ecu, un peu
OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.

"plus petite que le quartier, les espaces que laissant les croix & les sautoirs sont "aussi nommés canton."

The canton is a square figure, an additament of honour, worthy to be used by all degrees of nobility, as our English and others tell us.

Gerard Leigh, as I observed before, says, that the franc quartier should be given to the high nobility, and the canton to the lesser nobility, knights, esquires, and gentlemen, but upon what account he says so I know not; neither does his own countrymen follow his opinion. In the year 1287, John Duke of Bretagne, in France, carried chequè, or and azure, a bordure gules, (being the arms of the Counts of Dreuex, of which family he was descended) a canton ermine, (the arms of the Earls and Dukes of Bretagne) fig. 18. Which arms were upon his seal appended to a deed of his, in the reign of Henry III. of England, whose daughter he married, with whom he had several children. Their fourth son, John de Dreuex and his descendant were Earls of Richmond, and carried the same arms with the canton; but, for difference, carried the bordure gules, with the Lions of England to show their descent; for which see Sanderson's Genealogical History: And Sir John Ferne, who stands up for the honour and antiquity of the canton, gives us an older instance of its bearing in the arms of Lord Zouch, Baron of Ashby, in the reign of King John of England, gules, ten besants or; who, for his merit, got from that king, as an additament of honour, a canton ermine. Which figure, I observe to this day, has been given, especially in England, to well-deserving persons; and as an additament of honour. It abscends the figure in the dexter chief point, as fig.

NOEL Earl of Gainsborough, an ancient family in the county of Leicester, of the house of Noel of Dalby, was honoured with the dignity of a Baron, by King James I. with the title of Lord Noel of Ridlington; and his grandson Edward, who, by the favour of King Charles II. was created Earl of Gainsborough, carried or, fretty gules, a canton ermine.

SHIRLEY Earl of Ferrers, descended of a knightly family, of which was Sir Henry Shirley of Stanton, who married Dorothy, sister and co-heir to Robert Earl of Essex; from which marriage these of the family, descended of her, have, and do still quarter the royal arms of England, as being descended from Anne Plantagenet, eldest daughter to Thomas of Woodstock, Duke of Gloucester, sister, and one of the co-heirs to Humphry Plantagenet, Earl of Buckingham; Sir Robert Shirley, one of the descendants of this family, was honoured by King Charles II. with the title of Lord Ferrers of Chartley, anno 1677, and was advanced afterwards to the dignity of Earl of Ferrers, and Viscount Tamworth, in the year 1711. The paternal coat of which family is paly of six, or and azure, a canton ermine.

Sir Stephen Fox, a loyal gentleman, and follower of King Charles II. in his exile, carried ermine, a chevron azure, charged with three fox-heads erased or; and got for an additament of honour, a canton of the second, charged with a flower-de-luce of the last. And such another canton, by way of special concession, was granted by King James I. of Great Britain to Sir Thomas Ashton, viz. argent, a rose and thistle conjoined pale-ways, all proper; whose eldest daughter Marget, and co-heiress, was married to Sir Gilbert Houghton, great-grandfather to Sir Henry Houghton of Houghtontower in Lancashire, the present Baronet, now third of England; who carries sable, three bars argent, and the canton above-mentioned, and by way of surtout, the badge of an English baronet; crest, a white bull passant: motto, Maugre le tort, and supported with two white bulls, as in Plate of Achievements.

In Scotland, Murray Earl of Annandale, azure, carried three stars with a crescent in the centre; all within a double treisure flowered and counter-flowered or; and, for a further additament of honour, had a canton of the second charged with a thistle, ensign'd with an imperial crown, proper. Plate VIII. fig. 19.

Drummond of Maderty, as before, carried a canton or, charged with a lion's head erased gules.

Lieutenant-General Thomas Dalzell of Binnis, a loyal gentleman; whose paternal arms were sable, a naked man, proper, was suitably honoured by a canton argent, charged with a sword and pistol saltier-ways gules, to show his honourable employment. And Campbell of Cessnock, to show his maternal descent from
OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.

Campbell Earl of Loudon, carries the Earl's arms by way of canton, of which before.

The canton has been of old and of late frequently carried both by nobility and gentry; and not only used to contain armorial figures of honourable professions, employments, and descents, but also other signs of honour granted by sovereigns to their well deserving subjects, as by the examples above given; to which I shall add a few instances of the Blazons of the Badges of the Orders of Baronets in England and Scotland, which are carried on a canton, or on an inescutcheon.

The Order of Baronet in England was erected by King James I. of England, for advancing the plantation of Ulster in Ireland; who, besides the privileges and precedencies given to the Knights of the Order, granted to them a badge, as an additament of honour to be carried in their arms, as that of Ulster, viz. a left hand pané (i.e. expanded) and couped gules, in a field argent, either by way of canton or inescutcheon, as shall best suit with the arms or please the bearer.

The Order of Baronet in Scotland was erected for advancing the navigation to Nova Scotia in America, and for settling a colony there, to which the aid of the Knights was designed. The Order was only introduced by King James VI. before his death; for, in his first charter of Nova Scotia 1621, there is no mention made of the Order; as Sir George Mackenzie has observed in his Precedency, which see for more of this Order than what I am to speak of here. So that the Order was erected by King Charles I. anno 1625, who by and attour the privileges and precedencies given to the Baronets, his Majesty did declare and ordain, "That the Baronets, and their heirs-male, should, as an additament of honour to their armorial ensigns, bear, either on a canton or inescutcheon, in their option, the ensign of Nova Scotia, being argent, a cross of St Andrew's azure; (the badge of Scotland counter-changed) charged with an inescutcheon of the royal arms of Scotland, supported on the dexter by the royal unicorn, and on the sinister by a savage or wild man, proper; and for crest, a branch of laurel, and a thistle issuing from two hands conjoined, the one being armed, the other naked; with the motto, Munit bac & altera vinces."

The badge so trimmed with supporters, crest and motto, I have never met with on any paintings; neither can I conceive how it could be carried in a baronet's shield of arms, with these exterior ornaments, either by way of inescutcheon or canton. However, these exterior ornaments were soon taken away, for, in the year 1629, after Nova Scotia was sold to the French, his majesty was pleased to authorise and allow the Baronets, and their heirs-male, to wear and carry about their argent, a saltier azure, and theron an inescutcheon of Scotland, with an imperial crown above the escutcheon, and encircled with the motto, FAX MENTIS boneste gloria. The wearing of which badge about the neck was never much used, but carried by way of canton or escutcheon, in their armorial bearings, without the motto, of which I have given some examples in Plate VIII. fig. 20 &c., by way of canton, dexter, and sinister; as also by way of an inescutcheon. There is this difference to be observed, when the badge of Nova Scotia is placed in a canton, and when on an escutcheon; in the first, the inescutcheon of Scotland is ensigned with the imperial crown, whereas the canton cannot be ensigned by reason of its position; in the last, the escutcheon which contains, is ensigned with the imperial crown, and not the inescutcheon contained.

Sir Patrick Nisbet of Dean, Baronet, argent, a chevron gules, betwixt three boors' heads erased sable, with the canton of Nova Scotia. Plate VIII. fig. 20.

Archibald Fleming of Peel and Fern, descended of a second son of the Earl of Wigtown, was made a knight-baronet by King Charles I. but his letters patent did not pass the seals till the 25th of September 1661. He was Commissary of Glasgow, and married a daughter of Sir Alexander Gibson of Durie, one of the Senators of the College of Justice. He was succeeded into his honours and office by his son Sir William; and he again by his son Sir Archibald Fleming of Peel and Fern, Commissary of Glasgow, who married a daughter of Sir George Hamilton of Easter-Binning and Barnton, with whom he has issue, and carries as fig. 22, quarterly, first and fourth or, a chevron or, between a double trezure, counter-flowered gules, for Fleming; second and third azure, three cinquefoils argent, over all in the centre, by way of an escutcheon, the badge of a knight-baronet; crest, a palm-tree, proper: motto, Sub pondera cresco.

Sir William Hamilton of Barnston, late of Binning, gules, on a chevron, accompanied with three cinquefoils argent, a buckle azure, between two museletures sable, and surmounted (by way of an escutcheon) with a badge of a knight-baronet, all within a bordure of the second, charged with eight trefoils slipped vert; crest, the branch of a tree, growing out from an old stock; with the motto, Through God revived. Lyon Register. The canton, as all other supervenient charges, depresses and absconds, at least pro tanto, the pre-existent figure in the dexter chief corner, as in the bearing of Colonel Rue Innes of that Ilk, and Pringle of Stichell.

Sometimes the badge of a knight-baronet, by way of a canton, is placed in the sinister chief corner; as in the bearing of Ogilvie of Barra, giving place to the badge of Scotland, the thistle ensigned with an imperial crown in the dexter chief corner; by a concession of the sovereign, for preserving the regalia in the time of the Rebellion, as his charter bears, fig. 21. And Sir Archibald Stewart of Castlemilk has the badge of Nova Scotia by way of a canton in the sinister chief corner: Of whom before.

Sir John Ferne, in his Book before cited, gives us also the example of two cantons, dexter and sinister, borne by Guy Lord of Warwick in England; and Sylvester Petra Saneta gives an example of a canton placed in the middle of the chief point, carried by the Rudernart in Bavaria, viz. sable, a canton argent in the middle chief point; but in Britain it would not be taken for a canton, but a deltph.

OF CHEQUE OR POINTS EQUIPOLES.

When the field, or any armorial figure, is of many square pieces, alternately of metal and colour, like the panes of a chess-board, consisting of three ranges, to distinguish from compone and counter-compone, of which before), it is said to be cheque, or echequeté, which, as some say, is from the play of the chess. And they make these square pieces or panes represent battalions and squadrons of soldiers in line of battle. Others say, echequier was anciently a compting-board, used by accomptants in their calculation of accompts in public offices; from which the Court of Exchequer has its name; as those who write of the ancient state of England, say the English Court of Exchequer, called Seacarium Regis, is from a chequer-work carpet that covered the table, as the Court of the Green-Cloth, in the King's House, is so called from a green carpet. And Menestrier tells, magistrates and judges of old wore cheque garments, called vestes secatae, from which the Latins, for cheque-bearings, say arma scacatee, or seccata, and others ter-silata. Of figures so cheeked I have given several instances in bends and fesses, especially these of the name of Stewart. As for whole fields cheque, it seems they are rare with us, for I have met with few or none of them: But I shall add here a few instances of fields cheque in England.

Fig. 24. Clifford Lord Clifford of Chudleigh; in Devonshire, cheque, or and azure, a fesse gules, charged with a crescent of the first; which family was dignified with the title of Lord by King Charles II. the 22d of April 1672.

Ward Lord Ward of Birmingham, in Warwickshire, cheque, or and azure, a bend ermyn; this family was dignified by King Charles I. anno 1643.

The Counts of Vermandois in Pecardy, cheque, or and azure, a chief of the last, charged with three flower-de-luces of the first: The last race of these counts added the chief of France.

Cheque or cheque-bearing consists at least of three ranges or tracts of square pieces, which some blazoners mention to the number of 4, 5, or 6 tracts, which is superfluous: This the French heralds do not, yet they ordinarily mention the number of the square pieces or panes of cheque, to the number of fifteen. When cheque consists only of nine pieces, fig 25. they call them points equipes; as Bara, in his Blazon of the Arms of the Seignory of Geneva, cinque points d'or, equipesles, à quart d'azur. And Andrew Favin, in his Theatre of Honour, blazons these.
arms thus, _Un eeu composé de cinq pointes d'or, equipolles a quarte d'azur, i.e. echeué, or and azure, of nine panes._ Sometimes the last author is very curt in his blazons of this kind, and only mentions the square figures (or panes) that are least in number, as the arms of GENTIL, one of the twenty-eight noble families in Genoa, (there are several of this surname in Scotland, especially in Perthshire) _d'azur a quarte pieces d'echiquier d'or, i.e. azure, four pieces of echeué or._ In which blazon it must be understood, that the metal or colour first named, stands for the field, and that the panes of the first tincture are of more number than those of the second: So in all blazons of echeué arms it is to be observed, that we must begin at the metal or colour, whose pieces are of most number, for then it is as the field, and the less number as the charge; as was before observed in the diminutives of the ordinaries when multiplied in the field. When the pieces of echeué are of equal number, then we begin with the tincture of the first uppermost panes, on the right hand.

The above f'avin mentions the number of echeué, if there be fifteen of them, as in his blazon of the arms of ARMILDE in Spain, _echeué de huit pièces d'argent equipolles a sept de gueules, i.e. eight pieces argent equipolles to seven gules._ But in Britain, if they exceed nine, the heralds say only echeué, and to number them further it is but superfluous.

OF BILLETS AND BILLETTE.

Billets are square figures, more long than broad, frequent in arms, as Menestrier, " Billettes sont des billets quadrés longs, fort usés en armories;" and Sylvester Petra Sancta, speaking of them, says, " Quadranguli & longi majus quam lati scutarii lateres etiam ipsi extruunt familiarum nobilium gloriam, atque adiunctum est exornant symbolicas icones carum: So that billets are taken to represent in armories bricks, for which they are latined, _intercelli, or planibides,_ as Imhoff, in his Blazon of the Arms of ALLINGTON Lord Allington in England, _Scutum mürum, balteuum argentenum dentibus apersum & sex planibidibus stipatum, i.e. sable, a bend ingrailed betwixt six billets argent._

Sir George Mackenzie, in his Science of Heraldry, takes billets in this sense, where he tells us, that some families with us have them in their arms, to show their original was from England, where brick-tiles are much used; but I find few names with us that carry billets, except that of Callender, which is originally Scots: But, before I speak of this family, I shall first show what others will have billets to represent in armories.

The book _Le Tropheé d'Arms_ makes bricks to differ from billets, in that they show their thickness in perspective, which billets do not; upon which consideration he and others will have billets to represent paper folded up in form of a missive letter, or scrolls of paper; for _billet, in French, signifies a missive letter, or piece of paper._ Abbé Danet, in his Dictionary, says, _billet_ is a term of blazon which signifies a sheet of paper; and Guillim takes them for little bills of paper, made up more long than broad.

Monsieur Baron and Menestrier will have billets to represent long square pieces of wood, bringing billet from _billus, a club, which comes from an old word billot, which signified the trunk of a tree more long than broad; for which the old heralds said _billatté, as we now say billetté, when they are of an indefinite number in the field._ Mr Gibbon, Blue-Mantle Pursuivant, with Mr Morgan, supposes them to be billets of wood, as in the arms of _Cowdry, gules, ten billets or;_ which Gibbon latins thus, " _In scuto rubro decem calas aureas, in tricoto positas._" As for the word _cala, he is beholden to the old allusive Latin saying, viz. scinde calas ut calas._ Menestrier likewise tells us, that the square pieces of stuff of gold or silver, or of other tinctures, which were sewed or embroidered on garments or furniture of old, were called _billets._

The surname of CALLENDER carries _sable, a bend betwixt six billets or._ This surname is from the lands and castle of Callendar, anciently called Calloner, (as some tell us; especially the Dane Vanbassan in his Armories) from a Roman who founded that castle of Callendar, and called it after his own name Calloner, from colo, a faggot or log of wood, whose office it was to provide fuel for the Roman camp: And when arms came in use, these of that name took such figures. Others again say, with some more certainty, that these billets in the arms of Callender represent sheets or scrolls of paper, upon the account that several of the heads of the family of Callender of that Ilk, were comptrollers or clerks to our Kings of old; but unluckily they joined with Balfol and the English against the Bruce, for which they were forfeited. King David the Bruce, in the 17th year of his reign, made a grant of the barony of Callendar, in the county of Stirling, then in the crown by forfeiture of Patrick de Callendar, to Sir William Livingston; who, the better to fortify his title thereto, took to wife, Christian de Callendar, only daughter and heir to the said Patrick de Callendar, and had with her his son and successor Sir William Livingston, father of Sir John Livingston of Callendar, who was slain in the service of his country, at the battle of Hamilton. From whom were descended the Earls of Linlithgow and Callendar, who have been in use to quarter the arms of Callendar, as above blazoned, with their own.

John Callender of Mayners, sable, a bend betwixt six billets or, Pont's Manuscript. After the extinction of Callender of that Ilk, this became the principal family of the name.

John Callender in Kinocardine, descended of the family of Mayners, sable, a bend chequy, argent and gules, between six billets of the second; crest, a hand holding a billet, proper; motto, I mean well. Lyon Register.

Alexander Chaplin, wrote to the signet, gules, on a fesse nebulé argent, betwixt six billets or, a rose of the first, as in the Lyon Register.

Billets are more frequently to be seen in the English arms than in ours.

Dormer Earl of Carnarvon, Viscount Ascot, Baron Dormer of Wenge, azure, ten billets, four, three, two, and one, or, on a chief of the last, a lion naisant, sable. Sir Robert Dormer, in the reign of Henry VIII. obtained a grant of the manor of Wenge in Buckinghamshire. His grandson, Robert, was honoured with the title of Lord Dormer of Wenge, by King James I. of Great Britain; and his son Robert, Earl of Carnarvon, by King Charles I. who was killed fighting valiantly for his king at the battle of Newberry; a man of singular parts, as appears by the character the Lord Clarendon gives of him. He left no issue behind him; and the title of Lord Dormer went to a branch of that family, with the arms above blazoned, as not the title of Earl of Carnarvon.

With us and the English, if the number of billets in the field exceed ten, and be irregularly placed, then the number of them is not expressed in the blazon, and we only say billette, as in the arms of Nassau, Earl of Rochford; but the French mention their number till they exceed fifteen.

The proper posture of the billet is to be erect in pale; when in fesse or fesseways, they are said to be coucéb; and when they be diagonally placed, they are said to be bens-ways.

Semé of billets, or billeté, which is all one, is said when the field is charged with more than ten billets irregularly situate, as in the arms of ew, a territory in Normandy, azure; billeté or, (or semé of billets) a lion rampant of the last; thus by Uredus, "Seutum coruleum plinthidibus aureis, incerto numero sparsis, " & leone ejusdem metalia impressum." Plate VIII. fig. 27.

OF THE PAIRLE.

It is an honourable ordinary with some of the French heralds; and has a partition in heraldry, after its form and name, as Tierce in pairle, of which before; Plate II. fig. 24. It likewise gives a denomination to figures situate after its position; of which immediately.

The Pairle may be said to be composed of half a saltier and half a pale, issuing from the base point of the shield to the centre, and then dividing into two equal parts, tending to the dexter and sinister chief angles, as Plate VIII. fig. 28. azure, a pairle or.

The armorial bearing of the family of Pepin in France, given us by Monsieur Baron in his L'Art Heraldique, d'azur, au pairle d'or, and Menestrier, in his La Science de la Noblesse, describes it thus: "Pairel est une fourche, ou un pal, qui "meuvant du pied de l'ecu, quand il est arrive au milieu, se divise en deux autres "parties egales, qui vont aboutir aux deux angles du chef. Ce nom vient du "Latin pergula, qui est propre de ces fourches, qui soutiennent les treilles." So our author brings pairel from pergula, the prop of an house, or rather a forked stick, such as those used in churches of old, for hanging up of lamps and sacerdotal vestments.

It is also taken by some for an episcopal pall, as that carried in the arms of the Arch-Episcopal See of Canterbury. And again, by some for the letter Y, as in the arms of the town of Yssund in England, being the first letter of its name, as Guillim and others write.

Such a figure is carried with us by the name of Cunningham, upon what account and meaning is uncertain. Some allege (I think without ground) that it is a cross fourchée, which one of the progenitors of the name took for his cognizance when he went in crusade to the Holy Land. Sir James Dalrymple takes it for an arch-episcopal pall used by the Cunninghams, whose first progenitor in Scotland, was one of the four knights that murdered Thomas Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury, and fled to Scotland. Neither of these two opinions seems to give the true meaning and occasion of the bearing of that figure: It cannot be called a cross-fourchée, cruex furcata, as before, for it wants a traverse, which all crosses have, and this being but one branch of cross fourchée, cannot be properly called a cross: It may be more properly taken for an arch-episcopal pall, a badge of spiritual jurisdiction, but very improperly to be used by the murderer of an archbishop, which would be rather an abatement than a badge of honour. Besides, the matter of fact is false, for the Cunninghams were in Scotland, and so named in the reign of King David I. long before that murder, as is evident by the Chartulary of the Abbacy of Kelso. Frederick Vanbassan, a Norwegian, and a very confident genealogist, wrote a Manuscript (now in the Lawyer's Library) of the rise of some families with us, amongst whom is that of the Cunninghams, whose first progenitor he calls Malcolm, the son of Friskine, who assisted Prince Malcolm, (afterwards King, surnamed Canmore) to escape from Macbeth's tyranny; and being hotly pursued by the usurper's men, was forced at a place to hide his master by forking straw or hay above him; and after, upon that Prince's happy accession to the crown, he rewarded his preserver Malcolm with the thanedom of Cunningham, from which he and his posterity have their surname, and took this figure to represent the shake-fork with which he forked hay or straw above the Prince, to perpetuate the happy deliverance their progenitor had the good fortune to give to their Prince.

Sir George Mackenzie, in his Science of Heraldry, says, that this family took their name from the country of Cunningham, and being, by office, Masters of the King's Stables and Horses, took for their armorial figure, the instrument whereby hay is thrown up to horses, which in blazon is called a shake-fork, being after the same form with the pairel. In his Manuscript of Scots Families, he says, William Cunningham was Master of Horses to King William, or had such like office, and was married to a daughter of Richard Morville, Constable of Scotland; the seat of which family was at Kilmours, in the country of Cunningham. Mr Crawfurd, in his History of Renfrew, and Peerage of Scotland, says, the surname of Cunningham, which properly signifies the King's habitation, has no doubt been taken from the bailliary of Cunningham, in the shire of Ayr, the patrimony of the Morvilles, formerly Constables of Scotland, to whom the Cunninghams of Kilmours were vassals. The first of that family that he has met with upon record, is, Robertus, filius l'arnhealdis de Cunningham, proprietor of Kilmours; who, in the reign of King William the Lion, gave, in pure and perpetual alms to the monks of the abbey of Kelso, the patronage of the church of Kilmours, "cum "dimidia carrucata terre addicium ecclesiam pertinen. pro salute anime sua," which is ratified by Richard Morville before the year 1189. He was succeeded by his son Robert, and from him descended Sir William Cunningham of Kilmours, knight, father of William, who succeeded, and of Thomas, first of the house of Caprington, of whom came the Cunninghams of Leglan and Enterkine.
OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.

Which William, in the reign of King Robert III. added to his old patrimonial inheritance the barony of Finlaison in Renfrewshire, Kilmaurs in the county of Dumbarton, Redhall and Collington in Lothian, by the marriage of Margaret, daughter and one of the co-heirs of Robert Denniston Lord of Denniston. With her he had Robert his successor, and William, first of the branch of Cunninghamhead in the shire of Ayr.

Which Robert, by his lady Janet, daughter of Alexander Lord Montgomery, was father of Alexander first Lord of Kilmaurs, and after created Earl of Glencarn by King James III. 28th of May 1488; from whom is descended the present Earl of Glencarn; for which see the Peerage. The achievement of the family is argent, a shake-fork sable; supporters two conies proper; crest, an unicorn's head argent, maned and horned or; and for motto, Over fork over, to shew the signification of the armorial figure.

There are many goody families descended of the Earls of Glencarn, whose blazons I shall here subjoin as I have met with them in our old and new Registers.

Cunningham of Glengarnock, descended of a second son of Henry Cunningham of Kilmaurs, and his spouse Riddell, heiress of Glengarnock. In the reign of Alexander II. this family was in use (as in Sir James Balfour's Manuscript of Blazons) to carry argent, a shake-fork sable, charged with a cinquefoil of the first: Which family was a long time since extinct; and another branch of the family of Craigends, descended of the Earl of Glencarn, was designed of Glengarnock. Of whom immediately.

Cunningham of Polmaise, argent, a shake-fork sable; the first of this family was a son of Kilmaurs in the reign of Alexander III.

Cunningham of Auchenharvy, descended of Craigends' family, charged his paviot of shake-fork with a muscle or. Balfour's Manuscript.

Cunningham of Cunninghamhead, argent, a bishop's pall sable, (always so called by Mr Pont, in his blazons of the name) between two garbs, and a mullet gules in chief. The first of this family was a second son of Sir William of Kilmaurs, and his wife Margaret Denniston, eldest daughter and co-heir of Sir Robert Denniston of that Ilk, in the reign of Robert III.

Sir William Cunningham of Cunninghamhead, Baronet, has his arms matriculated in the Lyon Register, in the year 1698, thus: quarterly, first and fourth argent, a shake-fork and a mullet in chief sable, for Cunningham; second and third grand quarters, quarterly, first and fourth argent, on a fesse azure, three stars of the first; second and third azure, three garbs or, being the arms of Mure of Rowallan; crest, a dexter hand issuing out of the wreath, holding the upper part of an anchor by the ring; with the motto on an escutcheon, Enough in my hand; supported on the dexter by a coney, and on the sinister by a falcon, both proper; as in Plate of Achievements.

Cunningham of Barns, in the shire of Fife, another ancient cadet, who has a charter of these lands from King Robert II. (as in Sibbald's History of Fife) carries argent, a bishop's pall sable, and in chief, a stag's head erased gules, as in Pont's Manuscript; but in Balfour's Manuscript, there is a star in place of the stag's head.

Cunningham of Craigends, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a shake-fork sable, for Cunningham; second and third or, a fesse chequy, azure and argent, for Stewart; crest, an unicorn's head couped argent, horned and maned or, and gorged with a collar chequy, argent and azure: motto, So fork forward: As in our ancient and modern books of blazons. The first of this family was William Cunningham, a younger son of Alexander the first Earl of Glencarn, who obtained from his father the lands of Craigends, anno 1477. He married Elizabeth Stewart, daughter and co-heiress of Sir Walter Stewart of Arthurlie, who was one of the Stewarts of Darnly, and with her got the lands of Arthurlie; for which this family, and its descendants, have been in use to quarter the arms of Stewart with their own, with suitable differences.

Their son and successor was William Cunningham of Craigends, father of Gabriel; of whom is descended: Alexander, the present laird of Craigends, and several other branches of that family, as Richard Cunningham of Glengarnock, a younger son of the abovementioned Gabriel Cunningham, and his lady, Margaret, daughter to Livingston of Kilsyth. He married Elisabeth Herriot, daughter to Heriot of Trabrown, by whom he had several children. The eldest, Richard Cunningham, was designed of Bedland, after the lands of Glengarnock were sold to the family of Kilbimy, now dignified with the title of Viscount of Garnock; and carried, as Cunningham of Craigends, with a crescent for his difference; crest, an unicorn's head couped argent, maned and horned or: motto, Virtute & Labore.

Robert Cunningham, a younger brother of Richard, carries the same arms, within a bordure, for his difference; who has purchased a considerable fortune in America, called Cayenne, in the Island of St Christopher, by his valour, and by marrying Judith Elizabeth, daughter to Daniel de Bonefou of Martas in France, and his wife, Mary de Barat, sister to Charles de Barat, Sieur De la Bodie, Lieutenant-General to the King of France, and Governor of the Citadelle of Lisle in Flanders, and with her has numerous issue: For whose arms see Plate of Achievements.

Cunningham of Robertland, descended of David Cunningham of Bartonhold, son of the first William Cunningham of Craigends, and his second wife, Marion Aucheneckle, one of the daughters and co-heirs of Sir John Aucheneckle of that ilk.

Ms Jean Cunningham, lawful daughter to Sir Alexander Cunningham of Robertland, and spouse to Sir Alexander Forrester, Secretary to the Duke of Lauderdale, has her arms matriculated in the Lyon Register, thus; argent, a shake-fork sable, between a hunting-horn in chief, and two castles in the flank sable; I take the hunting-horn for her husband Forrester, but I know not upon what account the castles.

Cunningham of Cairnecur, and Cunningham of Auchenyards, are cadets of Cunningham of Craigends, and carry the arms of Craigends, with differences.

Cunningham of Caprington in Ayr, descended of a younger son of Sir William Cunningham of Kilmuir, in the reign of Robert III. got the lands of Caprington, by marrying one of the daughters and co-heirs of Wallace of Sundrum; upon which account, sometimes the family quartered the arms of Wallace, gules, a lion rampant argent: And at other times carried only their own paternal coat of Cunningham, with a star in chief sable. The direct lines of this family ended in the reign of King Charles II. and these lands were purchased by Sir John Cunningham, baronet, a learned lawyer, a branch of the same family, now designed of Caprington and Lamlurgston, who carries argent, a shake-fork sable, within a bordure ermine; crest, a dexter hand holding a plum-rule, proper: motto, Ad amissum. Lyon Register.

Sir John Cunningham of Enterkin, argent, a shake-fork sable, within a bordure azure, charged with eight billets of the first; crest, a demi-lion full-faced azure, holding in his dexter paw a scroll, and in his sinister a garb, proper: motto, Sedulo numen adestr. New Register. And there,

Sir Robert Cunningham of Auchenharvy, Baronet, Physician to King Charles II. the arms of Cunningham, with the addition of two lozenges in fesse sable; crest, a dexter hand holding a lozenge or: motto, Curia & constantia. Plate of Achievements.

Alexander Cunningham of Balquhan, representative of Auchenharvy, in place of the lozenges, has two mascles gules; crest, a boar's head couped azure: motto, Curia & constantia.

Sir Alexander Cunningham of Corshill, Baronet, descended of a younger son of William Earl of Glencain, who got from him, for his patrimony, the lands of Corshill, in the year 1532; which family of Corshill has been in use to carry the arms of Glencain, with a crescent for difference. N. R.

John Cunningham of Aikenbar, lineally descended of a second son of the family of Glencain, quarterly, first and fourth Glencain, within a bordure gules; second and third argent, an oak tree growing out of a mount, in base, proper, surmounted of a fesse azure, on account of marrying an heiress of the name of Watson; crest, an unicorn sejant, grasping an oak-tree, with his fore feet, proper: motto, Mibi robre robur. Lyon Register.

Mr James Cunningham, Writer to the Signet, descended of Cunningham of Drumquhassell, in the Lennox, the armorial figure of Cunningham, accompanied with three roses _gules_. Lyon Register; crest, a trunk of an oak tree, with a sprig _vert_: motto, _Tandum._ Lyon Register.

William Cunningham of Brownhill, sometime Provost of Ayr, the armorial figure of Cunninghamie, with a rose in chief _gules_, surmounted of an annulet of the field: motto, _Virtute comes invicta._ Lyon Register.

Adam Cunningham, sometime one of the Macers to the Senators of the College of Justice, descended of Cunningham of Drumquhassell, _argent_, a shake-fork _sable_, between three roses _gules_, and a crescent, for difference. Lyon Register.

Thomas Cunningham, Merchant and residerter in Stockholm, son to Alexander Cunningham, Bailie of Grait, descended of Barns, _argent_, a shakefork _sable_, within a bordure waved _azure_, charged with six besants _argent_; crest, a martlet _volant_; with the motto, _Prospera qui sedulo._ Lyon Register.

Cunningham of Belton, the armorial figure of the name, accompanied with three stars, one in chief, and two in the flanks _gules_.

This figure, as I observed before, is taken for an episcopal pall, and, by some of our heralds, blazoned a _stole_; but by our modern, a shake-fork: Whatever names it goes under with us, it is the same with that of the French _pairle_, an honourable ordinary with them; for it gives a denomination to a partition after its form, of which before: As also, to figures situate after its disposition, which are then said to be in _pairle_, as in the armorial bearing of _Sundil_ in France, thus blazoned by Menestrier, _de guernes_, _au trois billettes d'or mises en pairle_, i. e. _gules_, three billets in pairle _or_. Plate VIII. fig. 35.

Of the point.

The French give the _point_ as a proper figure in heraldry: being a triangular form, issuing from the base dexter and sinister points of the shield, with the point towards the centre or collar point, as fig. 31. the arms of _St Blaise_ in France, thus blazoned by Monsieur Baron, _d'azure à la pointe d'argent_.

We, with the English, would take it for a partition _per chevron_, and say _parted per chevron_, _azure_ and _argent_, which is the same when the point does not go higher than the centre or collar points. Which partition, as I observed before, the French have not; but, in its place, the _point_, and if it does go beyond the collar point, and touch the top of the shield, the French take it then for a partition of the field, which they call _tierce en mantle_, of which before. Plate II. fig. 9.

Of the giron and gironne.

The _giron_ is a French word, which signifies the _lap_: For suppose one sitting, the knees somewhat assunder, and a traverse line drawn from one knee to the other, the space within the two knees makes a giron, with the point _in gremio_: So all girons are of a triangular or conal form, broad at one end, and sharp at the other: The first is at the sides of the shield, and the other ends at the navel or centre point of the shield. They are said to represent triangular pieces of stuff, commonly called _gussets_, placed in garments and womens' smokes, to make them wide below, and narrow above, as Menestrier, in his _La Science de la Noblesse_: " _Giron est une piece d'etoile taillée en triangle_, a qui on a donné le nom de giron, _parceque les femmes en portoient ainsi sur le sein que l'on nomme giron de _gremium._"

This armorial figure is frequent in armorial bearings in Europe; and, as others beforementioned, has its rise in armories, from the robes, gowns, and coats of armour used by the ancients: Menestrier, in another treatise of his of the Ancient Use of Arms, chap. iii. of Symbolical Figures, gives examples of girons in the arms of the family of _Giron_, in Spain, of which family are descended the Dukes of _Ossuna_, who carry three girons in their arms; which, says he, represent three triangular pieces of stuff or gussets of the coat armour of Alphonsus VI. King of Spain, who, fighting in the battle against the Moors, had his horse killed, and, be-ING in danger, was rescued, and remounted by Don Roderico de Cissernes upon his horse, who, in the time, cut off three triangular pieces or gussets of the king's coat armour, which he kept as a testimony to show the king afterwards that he was the man who saved him: For which, the king advanced him to honour, and honoured his armorial bearing with three gironis, Plate VIII. fig. 32. and adorned it with a horse for a crest, to perpetuate to posterity the opportune relief he gave to his king, and from which figures the family took the name of Giron, and these figures are frequent in Spanish bearings; neither are they wanting in several families in France.

The gironis in length do not exceed the centre of the shield, from whatever side they issue, and their points terminate and meet in the centre. Their ordinary number in Britain is eight, as these in the bearing of the name of Campbell, which fall out necessarily by the four principal partition lines. I shall here proceed to describe them, as the English do, when of a lesser and greater number, and then show how the necessary gironis differ from others, which fall not out by those partition lines.

Guillim makes the giron an ordinary of two lines, drawn from the side of the shield, meeting in the centre or top. Again, if these two lines were extended to the other side of the shield, they would form two gironis, which Guillim blazons argent, two gironis gules, but does not tell how they stand, which is bend-ways, as fig. 33: if to this last example a diagonal sinister line be added, then the shield will be filled with six gironis, as fig 34. and if to this a paler line be added, then the field is equally filled with them, falling out by the four principal partition lines, as before, by the name of Campbell.

And I shall here add another instance of the achievement of Colonel Alexander Campbell of Finnab, in Perthshire (which he caused engrave in the Plate of Achievements) being a grandson to Archibald Campbell, who was son to Sir Duncan Campbell of Glenorchy, and his wife Lady Stewart, daughter to the Earl of Athol, carry the arms of Glenorchy, now Earl of Breadalbane, viz. quarterly, first the paternal coat of Campbell, parti, coupé, tranché, taillé, or and sable; and, as others say, gironne of eight, or and sable; second argent, a lymphad sable, and oars in action; third or, a fesse chequy, azure and argent, for Stewart of Lorn, and the fourth as the first, in surout, by way of distinction; the arms of the African and Indian Company of Scotland, viz. azure a St Andrew's cross, cantoned with a ship in full sail in chief, and a Peruvian sheep in base, in the dexter flanque, a camel with a burden of goods passant, and, in the sinister flanque, an elephant with a tower on its back, all argent; which are timbred with helmet and mantlings befitting its quality, and, on a wreath of his tinctures, for crest, a demi-man in a coat of mail, holding in his right hand a sword, and on his left arm a shield, charged with the head and neck of an unicorn; with the motto, on an escrol above, Quod non pro patria; supported on the dexter by an Indian in his native dress, with a bow in his hand, and quiver with arrows hanging over his shoulder; and, on the sinister, by a Spaniard in his proper habit, standing on a compartment; out of which a rising sun, with the epigraph, Quis pandituru orbis. The reason which made him assume those additional signs, is as follows: the account of which I doubt not but will give satisfaction to the reader:

The colonel having served as captain in that regiment, levied by his grace Archibald, late Duke of Argyle, in the year 1689, (all of his own name) during King William's first wars in Flanders, until, among several others that regiment was disbanded at the peace of Ryswick, in the year 1697, the African and Indian Company of Scotland, having the affairs of their new settlement at Darien in extreme disorder, by the desertion and mismanagement of the first colony, did, about the 1st of December 1699, by their letters and commission, and assurance of all manner of encouragement, court him, being then at London, to go straight to Darien, with the utmost expedition, in station of a counsellor; which he accepted of, and, through many difficulties, occasioned chiefly by that unnatural proclamation forbidding fire and water to any of that settlement through all the English plantations, which was then raging in full force, he got to Darien on the 2d of February 1700. The second colony being arrived about two months before him, and things at a very low pass, and unprecedented mortality among the men, and a spirit of uncommon division among the survivors. The second day after his arrival certain intelligence comes, that the Spaniards were upon their way to attack them, both by sea and land, and that considerable numbers from Panama, Sancta Maria, and Carma, and other plantations of theirs on the South Sea, were upon a full march to attack them by land; and that, in a few days, their fleet would be at the mouth of the harbour to block them up by sea. Things being in this desperate situation, and no long time left to deliberate on what was to be done, the other counsellors unanimously gave him the command; and, as the safest course, he judged it absolutely necessary, first, to attack their land forces, and not wait their attacking of him; accordingly, on the 5th of February 1700, with two hundred men and proper officers, being all he had in health in the colony, with forty Indians armed with bows and arrows, he sets out towards them, directing his march up these inaccessible mountains, over the Istmus of Darien, through such monstrous woods and untrodden paths, that for three days they seemed rather to creep and climb their way than march. Upon the third day, being the 8th of February, having then passed the summit of the mountains, and beginning to descend towards the South West Sea, he got notice from his Indian spies, that he was very near the Spanish camp, where they had been for three days (ever since they got account of his setting off from Darien) felling of trees, and fortifying themselves on a little plain on the side of a mountain, at a place, by the natives called Toubocanti, and at the source of that river called Sancta Maria, which discharges itself in the Southern Sea, at the Spanish plantation of that name: Their fortifications were thick piles driven in the ground about the height of a man, and smaller branches of trees woven very close upon them, made out in form of redoubts and bastions, with faces, flanks, and angles. In this situation, he could not possibly come at the knowledge of their numbers, else, it is probable, he had not attacked them; and, had they known the smallness of his force, it is as likely they had not been at pains to fortify themselves. In this uncertainty he gave orders to attack them, with a hurra, sword in hand, ordering, in the mean time, a competent number of hatchet-men to cut down the pallissades; they sustained a furious fire of the enemy a considerable time, but at length broke in upon them, and put all to the flight or sword: Such as survived of the Spaniards threw down their arms, and betook them to their heels. He pursued the victory till evening, and lodged that night in the Spanish camp. In this action, he himself was shot in the joint of the shoulder, which so enraged his men, that, with much ado, he got the lives of only thirty prisoners spared, from whom, and by the number of the arms they got, they made account that the Spaniards consisted of about sixteen hundred men, under the command of Don Balthasar, Knight of the Order of St. James. Among the rest of the plunder they got his equipage and coat, which, in embroidery, bore the device and embellishment of his order. The Spaniards had above 200 killed upon the spot; but the place being so surrounded with shrubs, thickets, and tall trees, it was not possible to know the full account of their slain, much less of their wounded; and the Scots had about 30 killed, and 40 wounded. Next morning they set out towards the colony, and arrived at it on the third day after, where they found things in the worst situation our enemies could wish; for fifteen Spanish ships, of which were five tall men of war, commanded by Don Pionento, a Lieutenant-General, had blocked up the mouth of the harbour; a council being called, it was agreed to by a vast majority that they should capitulate, from which the Colonel strenuously dissented, and protested against their proceedings; alleging, that it was much more honourable for them to defend the place to the last extremity, and then to make the best of their way through land, if provisions failed before a relief, and so leave things entire, rather than capitulate with so cruel and powerful an enemy, from whom no honourable terms could be expected. Upon this they separate; and the Colonel, in a little sloop, with a few that stood by him in the protest, came safe to Scotland in the July thereafter, 1700: But it is observable, that not one of those who signed the capitulation ever returned.

The Darien Company, in a grateful sense of his singular services, in full council, ordered a golden medal to the value of L.16 Sterling, to be struck for him, and silver ones to the value of 10s, one of which is in the Advocate's Library, among their Collections, and several in private hands. dal cut in the Plate of Achievements, being taken off the original gold one in the Colonel's own possession, and, at the writing hereof, in my hands. I hope the reader will excuse my being so particular in this narration, which I could not avoid, without being unjust to the value of the man, and to the gratitude of our countrymen; who have, in so signal a manner, taken care to perpetuate his memory and this singular action to after ages. I wish this testimony may excite others to acquire such honourable trophies for their country; and thereby transmit their fame to after ages, which indeed is the true and solid foundation of honour.

Having treated before of these gironal arms, which are made by the four principal partition lines, and borne by the name of Campbell and others, I shall here add a few instances of those whose arms are cut in the Plate of Achievements, before I speak of girons which are not made by the partition lines.

The arms of Campbell of Ardkinlas, and Campbell of Lochwell, are blazoned in the end of the 7th chapter, and cut in the Plates of Achievements, and there also the bearing of Campbell of Shawfield, parti, coupé, tracébé, tailé, or and sable, (as others say, gironné of eight) within a bordure of the first, charged with eight crescents of the second; crest, a griffin erected, holding the sun betwixt his fore paws; with the motto, Fidus amicus. And there, in the Plate of Achievements, are the arms of Mr Alexander Campbell, Advocate, as a son of Campbell of Craigish, who carries the arms of that family, viz. gironné of eight, or and sable, with a crescent in the centre for his difference, hung upon the mast of a galley; which they have assumed from the old seal of the family of Craigish, mentioned before, and cut in the Plate of Achievements; but they have caused the girons after the fashion of these used by the arms of Campbell, and not after those on the seal.

Some of the name of Spence, gironné of eight pieces, argent and azure, and on an inescutcheon of the first, an eagle's head erased sable, within a bordure gules, as in Sir James Balfour and Mr Pont's Manuscripts of Blazons; but I find Spence of Wovamiston, and others of that name, carried other figures, of which in another place.

The surname of Matthew, gironné of eight pieces, sable and gules, in Sir James Balfour's Manuscript of Blazons. And there, Matthiason, gironné of eight pieces, sable and gules, a lion rampant or, armed and langued azure, all within a bordure of the third; charged with eight cross croslets fitted of the second: Which arms, says Sir James, in his Manuscript, I gave under my hand and seal to Colonel George Matthison, the 1st of October 1639.

Besides these girons, which necessarily fall out by partition lines, blazoned as before the French, there are other gironal arms, which are not made by the principal partition lines, which are properly girons, as Plate VIII. fig. 34.

Gironné of eight pieces, or and gules, by the family of Beranger, in Dauphiné. Here two girons do not meet in the angle of the shield, as in the former; but the angles are filled with one giron. And further to explain it, it is as it were made up of a cross patée and a calice patée, their points meeting in the centre; and so two girons stand exactly in pale, two in fesse, two in bend, and two in bend sinister; which blazon Mr Gibbon brings from Segoeing, viz. gironné d'or et de gueules de huit pièces; and Latin thus, "Conos octo aureos decussis, versus extremita..." The same use is made of the French word, simulae crucem ejusdem formae referentes." Such another bearing is that of Campbell of Craigish, as on the old seal of the family, cut in the Plate of Achievements.

William D'Iprie Earl of Kent, gironné of ten pieces, or and azure, an escutcheon gules; over all a baton sinister argent, which Mr Gibson latex, "seu tum segments denis, ex auro vicissim & cyano cuneatum, quibus in umbilico impuntur secalum sanguineum, & dein super indicatur bacillus sinister argenteus, oram scutii majoris minime pertingens;" here he uses cuneatus, from the word cuneus, a wedge, after which form is a giron; in this last blazon there are ten girons, which do not fall out by the four partition lines. Fig. 35.

Gironal bearings were called by the English, of old, counter-coined coats, as the blazon of arms of Bassingburn in England, counter-coined of twelve pieces or and azure, so called upon the account that the tinctures of the arms do meet at the centre of the shield, which the old heralds called the con; and the Latin said, "Portat arma contra conata ex duodecim partibus ex auro & bladio," i.e. gironné of twelve pieces, or and gules: Upton, speaking of gironal arms, says, "Diversi sunt nobiles qui portant arma contra conata, quia omnes ipsorum colores invechuntur, ad unum conum, sive ad medium punctum conatum, quia omne "corpus triangulum magis longum quam latum est omnino conatum." The modern heralds disuse the word conatus, which properly signifies one that endeavours any thing, and use the words cuneus a wedge, and conus, which signifies a geometrical body, sharp at one end, and broad at the other, which answers to a giron.

We meet with arms of sixteen giron, as these given us by Favin, in his Theatre of Honour, book 3d. page 55. Gironné de gueules & d'ermine de seize pièces, i.e. gironné of sixteen pieces, gules and ermine, carried by John Cheswell, insti­tor of the Order of St Magdalene, in anno 1614. And Sylvestor Petra Sancta gives us such another bearing by the Becourt in France, which he thus describes, pinnule trigonie sexdecim, jubar argent atque ostri reciprocantes, i.e. gironné of sixteen pieces, argent and azure: Bombax, a herald, gives out, that such gironal arms represent winning-stars, and signify that the bearers have been raised and exulted by their own merits.

The girons are subject to accidental forms, as to be ingrained, nebule and wavy, of which I have given examples in the VII. chap. and I proceed next to piles, being figures much of the same form:

OF THE PILE.

It is an armorial figure more frequent in Britain than in other nations, and hard­ly known in France by that name.

It is of a conical form, more oblong than the giron; its point does not end in the centre, but proceeds farther into the field, and sometimes to the extremities of the shield. The English describe it an ordinary composed by a two-fold line, formed like a long wedge; and when but one in the field, the great end possesses the third part of the shield, whereout it issueth, ending taper-ways, near to the op­posite part of the shield, as Plate IX. fig. I. or, a pile ingrailed sable.

The English ascribe to it many significations in arms. As first, Guillim says, it represents that ancient weapon peculiar to the Romans, called pilum, from which the pile is latined pilea.

Morgan says it is a fit figure to be given to generals and commanders, who have ordered their army in battle after the form of a wedge, and have obtained victory by that form. Others again, as the author of the book, entitled, The Art of Heraldry, advances, that the pile represents in armory such pieces of wood which make all the foundations of buildings and fortifications sure and firm, in marshy and watery ground; and that it is a fit symbolical figure for those who have founded governments and societies; and upon such an account they tell us, that Edward III. of England gave the pile to Sir John Chandos for his armorial figure, upon the account of his valour against the French, and as one of the founders of the most noble Order of the Garter; This Sir John was well known to the French; for almost all their heralds take notice of his arms: And Favin, in his Theatre of Hon­our, blazon them thus, D'argent à un pieu aiguisé de gueules, i.e. argent, a pile fiecé gules, of which before of the Pale. Chap. IX. Plate III. fig. 2.

I take the English pile, and the Frenche pile aiguise to be all one, and represent the same thing, such as a stake of wood, sharp at the end, with which soldiers fortified their camps; and engineers, by driving them into the ground, to make solid foundations for buildings, commonly called piles of wood: For which the Latins, say, sublico defaxis sustentare: As Sylvestor Petra Sancta, for a pile in armories, says, sublicia gentilitia cuspidata in ima parte: The English pile differs nothing from the French pile aiguise, but that the one is fiecé, or sharp from the top, and the other turns sharp, but near the foot; and heralds latin the first, palos cuspidatos, and the last, palos in ima cuspidatos.
Sylvanus Morgan, amongst his other fancies, and especially of the pile, a peculiar figure with the English, will have it to be the symbol of fire and water; for the pile among the ancients, says he, was the hieroglyphic of the element fire, which terminates in a point, mounting upwards, and, after its form, monuments of kings and princes were so built; as the pile of fire purifies all things, so it is the emblem of a faithful man: He gives, for instance, the bearing of one of the name of Furneaux, who carried sable, a pile indented argent; which, says he, was no other but a rebus for his name, showing the trial of the furnace; with the motto, Probus mi. And again, as the pile represents water, it is the emblem of a patient man; whose motto is, Inmorta triumphans. And our author tells us, that Sir Hugh Middleton, who brought in the river water of Thames to serve the city of London, in memory thereof, altered his old arms, being argent on a bend vert, three wolves' heads erased of the first, and in place of a bend, took a pile. And those of the name of Waterhouse in England, descended of an ancient family, designed AQUEDOME, in the county of Lincoln, whose seal was upon water, carried or, a pile engrailed sable, as Plate IX. fig. 1.

Holmes, in his Academy of Armory, where he blazons the arms of Monsieur de la Sun or Sund, azur, a canton argent, with five piles issuing therefrom or, tells us, that the ensigns of English companies of soldiers, of old, were distinguished by piles; the colonel and lieutenant-colonel's company's ensigns had only cantons; but the major's company's ensign had a pile waved or plain, issuing from the canton; and the eldest or first captain's company had two piles issuing from the canton; and the second company's ensign, three piles, &c. So that I find the pile has been a distinguishing figure of old with the English.

SEYMOUR Duke of SOMERSET, Earl of HERTFORD, Viscount BEAUCHAMP, Baron SEYMOUR, &c. quartered, first and fourth or, on a pile gules, betwixt six flower-de-luces in pale azur, three Lions of England of the first; second and third gules, two wings conjointed in lure or, the paternal coat of Seymour, Plate IX. fig. 2. The first is a coat of augmentation, which King Henry VIII. conferred upon Edward Seymour of Trowbridge in Wiltshire, when he took his sister Lady Jean Seymour to be his queen, who was the mother of Edward VI. He had the titles above-mentioned conferred upon him by Henry VIII. Upon that king's death, he was made Earl Marshal of England for life, and from the young king and his council he received his patent of Protector and Governor of the King and the Kingdom; but, by an attainer in the year 1552, he lost his fortune, honours, and head, on Tower-Hill, January 24th; so that his son Edward did not enjoy them till the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and was honoured with the title of Lord Beauchamp and Earl of Hertford; and his son, William, again, by King Charles I. was made Marquis of Hertford; and after the restoration of King Charles II. was again advanced to the title of Duke of Somerset. I shall here add, to satisfy the curious, the blazons of this noble family, by the German Jacob Imhoff, "Insignia Sey-..."morum gentililia, alas binas deauratas, sibi connexas & expansas, sed deorsum versas in campo coccineo, representant; his Rex Henricus VIII. honorificum addidit auctarium cui priores partes locum tribuere solent, nempe, paramam a...ream sex coroelis liliis ornatam que inter palus in cuspidem attenuatus, & tribus Anglice leonis, decoratus descendit." Here he latinis the English pile as a pale fiteb, palus in cuspidem attenuatus. The same author, in his blazon of Hollis Earl of CLARE, latins piles, pie; thus, "Insignia Holesiae Comitis Clare scuto con...stant muris pontice maculis resperso, cui pile due nigrae oblique posita & cus...pide se prope tangentes inscriptae sunt; i. e. ermine, two piles issuing from the dexter and sinister chief angles, their points meeting in base sable, as Plate IX. fig. 3, which family was first dignified in the person of John Hollis of Houghton in Nottinghamshire, by the title of Lord Baron 1616, and Earl of Clare 1624, and afterwards with the title of Duke of Newcastle.

Sir George Mackenzie, in his Science of Heraldry, says, besides the former significations of the pile, when there are three of them in a field, they are then to represent the three passion-nails, as symbols, assumed by such as returned from the Holy Land, and generally in France and Spain, where these piles are gules, and meet in point, they are called passion-nails; especially with the French, who know nothing of the pile, as before; wherefore, Sir George blazons the arms of Wishart, argent, three passion-nails gules, meeting in point, Plate IX. fig. 4.

Jacob Vanbassan, a Dane, in his Manuscript, says, that one Robert, a natural son of David Earl of Huntingdon, being in the wars in the Holy Land, was named Guihard, from the slaughter he made on the Saracens; and from him was descended the families of the name of Wishart. Sir James Dalrymple, in his Collections, p. 217, says, that he has seen a charter granted by Gilbert Umfraville Earl of Angus, to Adam Wishart of Logie, anno 1272. Sir George Mackenzie, in his Manuscript, says, the chief of this name was Lord Brechin, whose succession failed in a daughter married with the old Earl of Angus; for which the Douglasses Earls of Angus still quarter those arms with their own; and the other families of the name were Wisharts of Logie and Pittarrow, who carried the above blazon, viz. argent, three piles in point gules, and Pittarrow; for motto, Mercy is my desires; as in Esplin and Pont's Books of Blazons. Both these families are extinct. Doctor George Wishart, sometime Bishop of Edinburgh, was descended of Logie. Mr George Wishart, who was martyred for the Protestant religion, was of Pittarrow. The barony of Logie was again purchased by Mr John Wishart, one of the Commissaries of Edinburgh, nephew to the bishop, and great-grandson to Sir John Wishart of Logie, who carries, as in the New Register of Arms, argent, three passion-nails joining in their points gules, and distilling drops of blood, proper; crest, an eagle displayed sable, armed and membred gules, wounded with an arrow shot through the body, proper: motto, Actus novit honores.

Anstruther of that ilk, argent, three piles sable; crest, two demi-arms holding a pole-ax with both hands, proper; with the motto, Perisseti non perisset, supported by two falcons, with wings expanded, proper, armed gules, chessed and belled or. This is an ancient family for its antiquity; Sir Robert Sibbald, in his History of Fife, says, That in the Charter of Balmerino, Dominus Guilielmus de Candela D. de Anstruther confirms a donation by his father William, to the Monks of Balmerino, granting them, quandam terram adjacentem ex parte orientali ville de Anstruther, on the sea-coast, by the way leading to Crail, in the reign of Alexander II. For more of this family and its descendants, see the foresaid author.

Sir James Anstruther of Airdrie, Clerk to the Bills, and second son to Sir Philip Anstruther of that ilk, carries as his father, within a bordure gules, for his difference; crest and motto as above, without supporters. Lyon Register.

Halket of Pittferran; sable, three piles conjoined in base argent: Esplin illuminates them, five piles argent, in his Book, (on a chief gules, a lion passant gardant or: Mackenzie's Heraldry.) In the Register of Dunfermline there is a contract betwixt the abbot of that abbacy and David Hacket of Lussfennen, de perambulatione terrarum de Pittferran, anno 1347; see Sir Robert Sibbald's History of Fife. The book entitled, The Art of Heraldry, gives us a family of the name of Hacket in England, originally from Scotland, carrying the same figures with a little variation, thus; Sir Andrew Hacket of Moxhill in Warwickshire, knight, sable, three piles argent, on a chief of the second, a lion passant gules.

The surname of Logan carries piles or passion-nails. For the antiquity of the name Dominus Robertus de Logan is mentioned in a charter in the 12th year of the reign of King Alexander II. and Thomas de Logan is witness in a charter of John de Strathern, in 1278. Haddington's Collections.

And, in Pynne's Collections, amongst the Scots barons who submitted and swore allegiance to Edward I. of England, in the year 1297, there is Walter Logan in Lanarkshire. In the reign of Robert Bruce, Sir Robert Logan was eminent: He accompanied good Sir James Douglas to Jerusalem, with King Robert's heart, as our historians, and Holinshed, in his History of Scotland, p. 329, say. Amongst the noblemen and gentlemen who accompanied Sir James in that expedition, the chief of them were Sir William Sinclair and Sir Robert Logan; upon which account, these of the name of Logan have been in use to add to their arms a man's heart, which our heralds blazon thus,—or, three passion-nails sable (instead of piles) conjoined in point, piercing a man's heart in base gules, as Plate IX. fig. 5. The principal family of the name was designed of Restalrig, near Edinburgh, who carried the same arms, as by their ancient seals; as that of Sir Robert Logan of Restalrig, which I have seen appended to his charter, whereby he granted several privileges to the town of Edinburgh, as to pass through his lands to Leith with carriages; and, for more verifying that deed, he appends the seal of his cousin, William Cunningham Lord Kilmaurs; and the charter ends thus, "In "cujus rei testimonium sigillum meum presenti scripto est appensum, & ad ma-
"jorem rei hujus evidentiam, sigillum nobilis & potentis viri & consanguinei mei
"clarissimi Domini Wilhelmi de Cunningham, militis, domini de Kilmaurs, simili-
"ter apponi procuravi, ultimo die Maii, 1399." This Sir Robert Logan was Admiral of Scotland in the year 1420; his son or grandson, John Logan of Restalrig, was made principal Sheriff of Edinburgh by King James II. in the year 1444.
The family matched with the Ramsays of Dalhousie; after which marriage, they quartered the arms of that family with their own. Sir James Logan of Restalrig married Margaret, daughter to George Lord Seaton, in the reign of King James V.
Robert Logan of Restalrig, to his charter of the date 1562, (whereby he gives to his eldest son, John Logan, the lands of Redhall, Flures, and Nether-Flemington) appends his seal of arms; upon which is a shield, quarterly, first and fourth, three piles conjoined in point, second and third, an eagle displayed, illuminated and blazoned in the herald books thus; first and fourth or, three piles issuing from the chief, and conjoined in base sable. (Some books, as Workman, conjoin them in a man's heart in base gules) for Logan; second and third argent, an eagle displayed with two heads sable, beaked and membred gules, for Ramsay.

Which John was father of Sir Robert Logan of Restalrig, father of Robert Logan of Restalrig, that was forfeited (for keeping correspondence with John Earl of Gowrie, in his treasonable practices) in the year 1629, eight years after his death, which was in the year 1601. He left two sons, George and John, who went abroad; the eldest died, John returned home and possessed a part of Restalrig, which he had from his father: His son was George, who married Isabel Fowler, daughter to Ludovick Fowler of Burncastle. Their son and successor, John Logan of Burn-castle, married Agnes Maxwell, daughter to John Maxwell of Hills, one of the family of Nithsdale; his son and successor is the present George Logan of Burn-castle: He married Isabel Douglas, daughter to the laird of Pinziere of the family of Queensberry; and, as representative of the Logans of Restalrig, carries the above arms of the family, as in the Plate of Achievements.

I meet with other two families of the name in our books of arms; as Logan of Cotfield, who carried or, three passion-nails sable, their points in a heart gules, as in Mr Pont's Manuscript; and, in the Lyon Register, there are recorded, in the year 1676, the arms of Mr George Logan of that Ilk, or, three piles in point, piercing a man's heart gules; crest, a passion-nail piercing a man's heart, proper:
motto, Hoc majorum virtus, for which see Plate of Achievements.

The surname of Laing, argent, three piles conjoined in point, sable. Pont's Manuscript.

John Laing, rector of Newland, was Treasurer to King James III. Mr Thomas Laing is a witness in a charter of Alexander Forrester to his son Archibald, the 12th of October 1454. Mr John Laing of Red-house in East-Lothian carried the foresaid arms, quartered with argent, a pale sable, which are to be seen painted on the dwelling-house of Redhouse.

James Laing, portioner of Morisland, parted per pale ingrailed, argent and sable, a chief indented, and counter-changed of the same. Lyon Register. Here the indentment is in place of the piles.

The surname of Lochore, argent, three piles issuing from the chief, their points conjoined in base sable.

Adam de Lochore was Sheriff of Fife in the reign of Alexander II. and Hugh Lochore, in the reign of Alexander III. was also Sheriff of Fife; see Sir Robert Sibbald's History of that Shire, who tells us, that though there were several gentlemen of that name who had lands, scarce one of them is now to be found.

Caldwell of that Ilk, in the shire of Renfrew, argent, three piles issuing from the chief sable, and in base, four bars waved gules and vert, to show water, equi-vocally relative to the name. This family, says Mr Crawford, in his History of Renfrew, continued for many hundred years in a good reputation, by inter-marriages with many honourable families; and ended of late in the person of John Glasgow, many crest, many Font's, the Font's with pale, dove crest, his star, dexter sword many crest, lion if in lance Ex-Font's motto, crescent, and, motto,

Sir John Young of Leny, argent on three piles sable, as many annulets or; crest, a dexter arm holding a lance in bend, proper: motto, Press through. Lyon Register.

Thomas Young of Rosebank, argent, three piles indented sable, on a chief of the last, as many annulets or; crest, an anchor placed in the sea, and surmounted of a dove with an olive branch in its beak, all proper: motto, Sperando spiro.

Young, sometime Bishop of Edinburgh, argent, three piles sable, on a chief gules, as many annulets or, and a mullet for difference on the middle pile.

Extracted out of the Lyon Register, 1673.

Andrew Young of Eastfield, writer to his Majesty's Signet, argent on three piles sable, as many annulets or, with a star of six points of the first; crest, a dexter hand holding a pen, proper: with the motto, Scripta manent; all in the Lyon Register.

Younger of Hopperston, argent, on three piles in point sable, as many annulets or; and, on a chief gules, a crescent between two mullets of the first. Pont's Manuscript.

The name of Younger, it seems, is of the same stock with the Youngs, by their arms, viz. argent, on three piles in point sable, as many annulets or, and, on a chief gules, a crescent between two mullets of the first. Pont's Manuscript.

When we say piles in point, then the points of the piles meet and join together in the base of the shield.

The surname of Lovell, argent, three piles sable, surmounted of a fesse waved gules. Pont's Manuscript. And the same was carried by Lovell of Balumbry.

The surname of Lauty, sable, three piles in point argent, surmounted of a fesse gules, charged with as many crescents or. Pont's Manuscript.

Lauty of Teichonell charges his fesse with one crescent, and Lauty of Myrehouse added two stars.

Polwarth of that Ilk, in the shire of Berwick, argent, three piles ingrailed gules, and conjoined in point. This family ended in an heiress, in the reign of King James III. who was married to John Sinclair, eldest son of Sinclair of Herdmanston; to whom King James IV. grants a charter of the lands of Polwarth. He died without heirs-male, leaving behind him two daughters, who were co-heiresses of Polwarth, but not of Herdmanston, to which his brother, as heir-male, succeeded. The eldest was married to George Home of Wedderburn, and the other to his younger brother Patrick, afterwards designed of Polwarth, progenitor of the present Earl of Marchmont; upon which account that family has been in use to quarter with their own the arms of Polwarth; and, by their modern paintings, make the field gules, and the piles indented argent.

When the piles issue from any of the sides or angles of the shield it is necessary to name the place from which they issue; if from the chief, it may be named or omitted in the blazon.

Henderson of Fordel, the principal family of the name, gules, three piles issing out of the sinister side argent, and, on a chief of the last, a crescent azure; betwixt two spots of ermine; Esplin's Illuminated Book of Arms; and they are so illuminated in Workman's Manuscript; but the crescent is there vert, and supported by two motrices ermine; crest, a hand holding a star, surmounted by a crescent; with the motto, Sola virtus nobilitat. Plate. IX. fig. 16.

Henry Henderson of St Laurence, Doctor of Medicine, parted per pale indented, sable and argent, two attires of an hart counter-changed, on a chief gules a crescent or, betwixt two tufts of ermine; crest, a wheel: motto, Sic cuncta caduca. Lyon Register. Here an indenting is in place of the piles, carried by Fordel.
When the field is not filled with an equal number of piles, the greatest number is taken for the field, and the lesser number for the charge, as before in the Multiplication of the Abstracts of the Honourable Ordinaryes; as in the bearing of Richard Husse of Betherden in Kent, argent, three piles, one issuing from the chief, between two other transposed from the base sable, Plate IX. fig. 7; but, if there were two from the chief, which would make an equal number, filling the field equally with metal and colour, the English would blazon them paly pilie of so many pieces, argent and sable, as they do these, issuing from both sides of the shield, barry pilie; which would be more proper to say, so many piles placed barways, wedged, as it were, one in the other, and reaching quite traverse the shield, as fig. 8, which Bara calls pointes en face; the French, as I observed before, know nothing of the pile; and would blazon these arms, parti emanché, argent and gules, of eight pieces.

"Émanché," says Menestrier, "se dit des partitions de l'écu, ou les pièces s'en clavent l'une dans l'autre, en forme des longs triangles piramidaux," i. e. emanché is said of the partitions of the shield, whose pieces enter the one in the other, in long triangular piramidal forms; so that, when the piles are counter-placed in pale, fesse, bend.-lexer and sinister, the French say, parti emanché; coupé emanché, tranché emanché and tainté emanché, and the English, paly pilie, barry pilie, bendy pilie of so many pieces. Mr Gibbon says, the French term emanché cannot be well etymologized, and therefore cannot latinize it: yet, he offers the latin blazon of the arms of the territory of Landas of the same form with the figure 8, but of ten pieces, "Quina (ex argento) pontis pile traveisses, totidemque, e minio vicissim contra posita, tum clypeum transeuntes," for which the French say, parti emanché d'argent, et d'gueules de dix pièces; and the English barry pilie of ten, argent and gules. As for the signification of the word emanché, Menestrier says, as the girons represent in arms gussets of garments, so do the manches, the sleeves, narrow below, and wide above towards the shoulders.

These are terms of figures treated of by the English, which are to be found in their armorial bearings, but very rarely with the French: I have not met with them as yet in our blazons; however I shall treat of them briefly here.

Gerard Leigh would make them distinct, and subordinate to one another, but I take them to be all one; and the first is only a term used in heraldry. Guillim says, they are made by an arch-line, drawn somewhat distinct from the corners of the chief, on both sides, and swelling by degrees to the middle of the escutcheon, and thence decreasing gradually in the base points. The flasque is lesser than the flanche, and the voider is the diminutive of both. Spelman will have them to represent the facings of robes and gowns, and Guillim says, such figures are fit rewards for learning, and especially for service performed in embassies; and the voider, the diminutive of the flasque, a suitable reward for a gentlewoman that has dutifully served her prince or princess. Some heralds write them flanches.

I shall add two or three examples of these figures in arms, taken out of the Dictionary of Arms, by Samuel Kent, printed in October 1717.

Aldham of Shrilling in Norfolk, argent, a leopard between two flanches.

Antony of Suffolk, argent, a leopard between two flanches sable.

Aphrey of Wales, gules, five plates between two flanches argent, on each a trefoil of the first.

Mr Gibbon, in his Introduction ad Latinam Blazonium, latins the flanche and flasque, (the first signifying a side, in French) latus or latuseolum; and from its form he puts the epithet gibbosum to it; and the flanche, being the same with the flasque, are segments of a circular superficies, and latins them orbiculi segmentum; as in his blazon of the arms of Sir Henry Hobart of Blicklinge in Norfolk, "in area nigra stellam octo radiorum auream gerit, inter duo orbiculi segmenta muri armeniae vellere impressa," i. e. sable, a star of eight points, waved or, between two flanches ermine, as Plate IX. fig. 9.
The French use the term flanc, or flanque, when figurés are placed on the sides and flanques of the shield; and especially when a shield of arms is parted per saltier; the two sides are called the flanques, as in the blazon of the arms of the kingdom of Sicily, d'or à quatre pâux de guenles, flanqué d'argent, à deux aigles de sable, i.e. parted per saltier, above and below or, four pales gules, the two flanques argent, each charged with an eagle sable; but here the flanques is no charge nor figure, but the sides of the field being the triangular areas made by the partition lines; so that the French know little or nothing of those as armorial figures; for figures, which Canton the saltier at the sides, are said to be in flanques, as by the blazons of that figure in the chapter of the Saltier.

OF THE LOZENGE AND LOZENGY, RUDSTRE, MASCLE, FUSIL AND FUSILY.

Having treated of square, triangular, and conal figures, I proceed now to rhombular ones, as.

The lozenge, a figure that has equal sides and unequal angles, as the quarry of a glass-window, placed erect point-ways; the Latinis say, lozenge facte sunt ad modum losangiorum in vitreis.

Menestrier says, "Lozange est une figure de quatre pointes, dont deux sont un "peu plus etendues que les autres, et assises sur une des pointes. C'est le rhombe "des mathematiciens, et les quarreaux de vitres ordinaires en ont la figure."

Heralds tell us, that their use in armories came from the pavement of marble stones, of churches, fine palaces, and houses, cut after the form of lozenges; which pavements the French and Italians call loze, and the Spaniards lozas; and, when in arms, are used for marks of honourable descent from some noble house.

Sylvester Petra Sancta says the same, when he treats of lozenges, which he calls, "Scutulas oxigoniae seu acutangulas erectas, & quasi gradiles, referri debere ad "latericas & antiquas domus olim, viz. nobilium quia vulgus, & infamiae sortis "homines, intra humiles casas vel antra inhabitantur."

Some Latin them in blazon, lozengias, rhombos, as Uredus; and rhombulos, as Camden; they are said by Sir George Mackenzie to be symbols of exact honesty and constancy, being figures whose right sides are always highest.

When there is but one lozenge in the field, and that it touches the four sides of the shield, which is not ordinary with us) it is called a grand lozenge; and the field that is seen a vestu, as in the arms of Puted, in France, azure, a grand lozenge or, charged with a crescent of the first; this by Menestrier, d'or vestu d'azur, au croissant de meme; here the angles of the shield is the vestu, fig. 10. And in his blazon of the arms of Carrara, in Venice, "coupé d'argent et "d'azur, vestu de l'un a l'autre, ou coupé d'argent et d'azur, a une grande "lozenge, de l'un a l'autre aboutissante aux quatre flancs de l'ecu," i.e. parted per fesse, argent and azure, a grand lozenge counter-changed of the same. As fig. 11.

When the lozenge touches not the sides of the shield, and when more than one are placed on it, as 2 and 1, as in other figures which accompany or charge ordinaries, they are only called lozenges; of which I shall add some examples.

Strang of Balcaskie, argent, a chevron sable, ensigned on the top with a cross patte azure, between three lozenges of the second. Pont's Manuscript. Fig. 12.

John Strang, Merchant and Citizen in London, descended of Balcaskie, carries the same; but, for difference, makes the chevron waved; and, for crest, a cluster of wine grapes; with the motto, Dulce quod utile. L. R.

The surname of Dalrymple carries, for their armorial figures, lozenges. There was an ancient family of this name, in the shire of Ayr, who possessed the barony of Dalrymple, which John and Roland de Dalrymple did possess, and their heirs made over the same to Sir John Kennedy in the year 1376.

There was another family of this name, in the reign of Robert III. designated of Inglisston, as is evident by an obligation, from James de Dalrymple of Inglisston and Anniston, to Sir Robert Stewart of Durresdier, his superior; wherein he obliges himself, and his heirs, not to build a corn-mill in the abovenamed lands, as the obligation bears, dated at Perth the 20th of April 1422. Which obligation is in my custody for the present, to which his seal of arms is appended, being of red wax, upon white; and thereupon a shield couché, charged with a salter lozenge, (or as some say, eight lozenges in salter) and in chief a buckle; which last figure,
I take to be a sign of his vassallage to the STEWARTS of D Ardreshier, who carried buckles, as descended of the STEWARTS of Bonkill: The shield is also honourably trimmed with helmet, capelon, and wreath; upon which is a hart’s head, for crest; supporters, two lions gardant, and the legend round the seal S. JACOB DALrymple. Which seal is cut in the Plate of Achievements.

The same James Dalrymple was CLERICUS REGIS ROBERTI III. as by a charter of that king’s (also in my hands), Dilecto Nepote nostro Thome de Dibishing, filio & baretei Willielmi de Dibishing militi, of the lands of Kinbrachmount: Which charter ends thus, “Testibus clarissimo fratre nostro Waltero Comite de Catness, Johanne Sennsical de Achengowan, filio meo naturali, Johanne Barclay de Kip-pow, Alexandro Vans, Willicchio Pog Capellano nostro, Thoma de Lecky, & Jacobo de Dalrymple, clerico nostro, apud Lauchenan, 28th Nov. 1422, & regni nostri tertio decimo.”

DALRYMPE of Stair, or, on a salter azure, nine mascles of the first. Pont’s Manuscript. This family had its rise, (as Mr Crawford, in his Peerage) from one William Dalrymple, who married Agues Kennedy, sole heir of the barony of Stair, about the year 1420; from whom was lineally descended James Dalrymple of Stair, who gave a beginning to the eminency of his family, being first a professor of philosophy at Glasgow, and then an advocate; and, in anno 1658, was one of the Senators of the College of Justice: In which office he continued after the Restitution of King Charles II. and by that king made baronet and President of the Session. He was out of that post 1681. His arms are matriculated in the Lyon Register, the 2d of June 1664: Thus, Sir James Dalrymple of Stair, knight and baronet, Lord President of the Session, bears two coats, quarterly, first and fourth or, on a salter azure, nine lozenges of the first, as his paternal coat, for Dalrymple; second and third or, a chevron chequy, sable and argent, betwixt three water-budgets of the second, for the name of Ross; crest, a rock, proper: motto, Quies-cam.

Upon the Revolution, in the year 1689, he was restored to his post, as Preside of the Session; and afterwards, in the year 1692, by letters patent, he was made Viscount of Stair. He died the 24th of November 1695. He had for his wife, Margaret, eldest daughter and heir of JAMES Ross of Balmecl, and marshalled her arms with his own, as in the above blazon. Their eldest son, Sir John Dalrymple, was Lord Advocate, in the year 1682. And in the year 1692, he was made one of the Principal Secretaries of State, and succeeded his father in the title of Viscount of Stair; and afterwards was raised to the honour of the Earl of Stair, in the year 1703. He died 1727. He had for wife, Elizabeth Dundas, daughter and heir of Sir John Dundas of Newliston, with whom he had issue, John Earl of Stair, his successor, Colonel William Dalrymple of Glenmure, George Dalrymple, one of the Barons of Exchequer, and a daughter, Margaret, married to Hugh Earl of Loudon.

The achievements of the Earl of Stair, are, quarterly, first and fourth or, on a salter azure, nine lozenges of the first, for Dalrymple; second and third or, a cheveron chequy, sable and argent, betwixt three water-budgets of the second, for Ross; and over all, by way of sartout, an escautcheon argent, charged with a lion rampant gules, for Dundas; supporters, two stoiks, proper; crest, a rock, proper: motto, Quies-cam.

Sir Hugh Dalrymple of North-Berwick, Baronet, and Lord President of the Session, third son of James Viscount of Stair, and his lady, Margaret Ross, carries for arms, as matriculated in the Lyon Register, or, on a salter azure, betwixt two water-budgets in the flanks sable, nine lozenges of the first; crest, a rock, proper:
motto, Firm, supported on the dexter by a lion gardant gules, and, on the sinister, by a falcon, proper. See Plate of Achievements.

Hyde Earl of Clarendon, Viscount Cornbury, and Lord Baron Hyde of Hindon, azure, a chevron between three lozenges or, thus latinied by Imhoff, “Hey-dence digna, cantherium aureum in scuto corulco, inter tres rhombulos priores metalli interpositum representat.” This ancient and noble family descends from

266 OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.
OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.

Sir Robert Hyde of Hyde, in Com. Chest, living in the reign of Henry III., of whom was descended Sir Edward Hyde, who manifested his loyalty and fidelity to King Charles I., and was made Chancellor of his Majesty's Exchequer, and afterwards one of his Privy Council; and was Secretary of State to King Charles II. when abroad, and after his Majesty's Restoration he was raised to the degrees of dignity as above. By the command of King Charles II. he wrote that excellent work called the History of the Rebellion; which is, and will be a living instance of his great abilities. He held the office of Lord Chancellor till the year 1667, at which time, upon some disgust taken against him, he retired into France, and there died 1674. He left three sons and two daughters behind him, the eldest Henry Earl of Clarendon; the second, Laurence, was made Earl of Rochester by King Charles II. 1682, who carries the foresaid arms, with a crescent, for a brotherly difference: The third son, James, was drowned on board the Gloucester Frigate, attending his Royal Highness the Duke of Albany and York into Scotland. His eldest daughter, Lady Asne, married to his Royal Highness the Duke of Albany and York, afterwards King of England; and his second daughter, Lady Frances, married to Thomas Knightly of Hartingtonbury in Com. Derby, Esq.

Fielding Earl of Denbigh, argent, on a fesse azure, three lozenges or, for the paternal bearing of the ancient family of Fielding, descended of the Earls of Hapsburg, who were Counts Palatine in Germany: As appears by a letter of attorney, made by Jeffrey Fielding, in the 9th year of the reign of Edward II., wherein he calls himself, Filius Galfridi Comitis de Hapsburg, &c. of whom was lineally descended William Fielding, who was knighted by King Henry VIII. and his successor. Another William was knighted by King James I. of Great Britain, and in the 8th year of the same king's reign advanced to the dignity of a baron of the realm of England, as also Viscount Fielding there; and in the year ensuing was made Earl of Denbigh. He married Mary, daughter to Sir George Villiers of Brockbeby, son to George Duke of Buckingham; she bore to him two sons, Basil, who succeeded his father in his honours, and George, the second son, who was created Lord Fielding of Caphe in Ireland, as also, Viscount Callan, and Earl of Desmond, by King James I. She likewise had four daughters, the eldest married to James Marquis of Hamilton in Scotland, afterwards Duke of Hamilton.

Montagu Earl of Montagu, descended of Edward Montagu, who was first dignified with the title of Lord Montagu by King James I. of Great Britain, the 24th of June 1621, carries argent, three lozenges in fesse gules, within a bordure sable. And the same is carried by Montagu Earl of Manchester, and Montagu Earl of Sandwich, with the addition of a crescent and a mulet, as brotherly differences of the same family.

Some of the name of Allen in England, argent, three lozenges sable, 2, and 1. The name of Lillburn, sable, three lozenges argent.

Freeman in Northampton, azure, three lozenges argent, 2, and 1. The surname of Crispin in England, gules, ten lozenges argent, 4, 3, 2 and 1, as in Morgan's Heraldry, fig. 13.

When the field or any other charge is filled with lozenges alternately of metal and colour, (as chequé, of which before) they are then blazoned lozengé.

"Lozengé," says Menestrier, "se dit de l'écu et figures couvertés des lozenges," i. e. when the field or any other figure is covered with lozenges, as in the bearing of Caon in France, lozengé, gules and or: The Latins ordinarily say, Plinthei seu rhombulis repletus (seu interruptus) elyptus, i. e. lozengy, argent and gules, by the family of Cudenhau in Norfolk; and the same was carried by Fitzwilliams, sometime Earl of Southampton. Fig. 14.

When the field or figure is so covered with lozenges erect, we say only lozengy; but if they incline diagonally to the right or left, we say lozengy in bend or bar; and if they be horizontal in fesse, as Sylvester Petra Sancta says, "Hi thombi tesserarii, quando scuti symbolici universalum paginam replent, aut instar fasciarii sunt erecti, aut proni & obliqui more balteorum:" For examples he gives us first, lozengy in fesse, or and gules. The arms of Bianmonti and Graoni in Flanders, and the arms of Bavaria, lozengy in bend, argent and azur; the French call these lozenges, finis, as Menestrier in his blazon of the arms of Bavaria, fusile en bande, d'argent et d'azur; of fusils afterwards. When the lozenges incline to the left, they are said to be in bend sinister, or bar, as the arms of Coningsbree in the Empire, given us by Sylvester Petra Sancta, lozenge or and gules, in bend sinister.

OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.

This is a lozenge pierced round in the middle, so that the field appears through it; named rustre by the French, and by the Germans, rotten; which some will have represent the button at the end of lances, used in tiltings and tournaments; and so is an armorial figure from these noble and manly exercises. Others will have rustre to represent a piece of iron of that form, which is sometimes interposed between the heads of nails fixed on posts of cities and castles; Menestrier gives us an example of them in the arms of Lefare in France, argent, three rustres azure, as fig. 15.

Sylvester Petra Sancta observes, that these figures are very seldom used in Germany and Italy; his words are, "Rhombi tesserarii, nempa in orbem pertusi, " rarios obveniunt in gentilitiam tesselarii:" I have never met with them nor their name in British Armories. Sir George Mackenzie observes, that we and the English call such masculer; and to distinguish them, would call them masculs pierced round, instead of rustres.

MASCLE OR MACLE.

Is a lozenge voided of the field; that is, when the middle part of the lozenge is evacuate or cut out after a square form, like a lozenge, and so differs from rustre, which is pierced with a small round hole. "Macle," says Menestrier, "Est une "maille de cuirasse, ou lozange, ouverte et percee en lozange."

The Mascle has not only been anciently, but frequently carried in arms all Europe over. Heralds make it to represent different things; as first, the eye, or ring to fasten a coat of mail, and so a piece of armour fit for a military badge.

Others with Sir John Ferne will have it to represent the mosh of a net, and Latin it macula; and some add the word causum or retium macula, signifying that the first assumer of it had been prudent and politic in military affairs. And our author instances the seven mascles granted by King William H. of England, to William Roumarch (who, in evidents and writs, is called de rubro mari) for his military conduct and bravery in the Holy Land against the Saracens. Some again more particularly tell us, that the mascles borne by the house of Rohan in France, viz. gules, nine mascles, three, three and three, or, fig. 16, are upon the account, that all the carps and flint-stones of that duchy are marked with figures like the mascle so called there; and whilst singularity, the Dukes of that country take mascles for their armorial figures, with a motto relative to them, viz. Sine macula macula. Sir George Mackenzie, in his Science of Heraldry, thinks, that mascles look like mirrors, and upon that account are carried by the name of Purves with us, deriving the name from the French word Pourvoir, to see. In whatever sense the mascle may be taken, it is, as I said before, an ancient and frequent armorial figure all Europe over.

Robert Quincy who came over with William the Conqueror, and got many lands in England by that King's favour, carried gules, seven mascles, three, three, and one, or. Some of his issue I shall here mention, since they had considerable interests and employments in Scotland.

One Robert de Quincy is witness in a charter of confirmation of the lands of Seaton, Winton, and Winchburgh, by King William, to Alexander Seaton, son of Philip de Seaton; (the principal charter I have had in my custody, and several others, where this Robert de Quincy is a witness). His son was Siurus de Quincy, who was likewise a witness in the charters of King William, and was designed Earl of Winchester in England. The occasion of their being in Scotland with other English was, their being enemies to King John of England, and, in conjunction with William King of Scotland for setting up Lewis, the eldest son of France, to be King of England, and to dethrone King John; but after his death, his son Henry III. by the conduct of Ralph, Earl of Chester, defeated the French Lewis, and his confederates the Scots and English in a battle at Lincoln; the English who escaped came to Scotland, amongst whom were the Quincys, who got several lands, and married with the best families there.

Roger Quincy, Earl of Winchester, was High Constable of Scotland in right of his wife, the eldest daughter of Allan of Galloway, High Constable; as is evident by many charters with us, to which I have seen appended their seals of arms, which were of an equestrian form, and on the shield, seven mascles, three, three, and one. These of this name were worn out afterwards, for joining with the Baliols against the Bruce.

The name of Weapont of Vipont, in old writs de Vetere Ponte, carried for arms azure, six mascles, three, two, and one, (some books make the field gules.) These of this name anciently possessed great estates in Scotland; the Mortimers got the lands of Adbour in Fife, by marrying Anicia, daughter and heiress Domini Joannis de Vetere Ponte, anno secundo Regni Davidis 1126. For which see Sir Robert Sibbald's History of Fife. And in the Register of Kelso, Fol. 53. there is a charter of William de Vetere Ponte, confirming a prior deed of Roger de Ov, of the church of Lanton to the abbacy of Kelso. The charter appears to have been granted in the reign of King William, for it bears, Pro salute dominorum meorum Regis Williami, & eorum filii Alexander. The same William de Vetere Ponte gives donations to the abbacy of Holyroodhouse, out of the barony of Carriden in West-Lothian. His successors retained the possession of the lands of Langton in the Merse and Carriden in Lothian, till Sir William Weapont was killed fighting valiantly for King Robert the Bruce, at the battle of Bannockburn, against the English, 1314. Afterwards these lands came to the Cockburns, now of Langton, upon marrying the heiress of Weapont of Langton; for which the Cockburns of Langton have ever since been in use to quarter the arms of Weapont with their own; gules, six mascles, three, two, and one, or; and these mascles are carried by other families, upon account of their descent from the Weaponts, as the Kers of Roxburgh and Lothian; of whom before.

The surname of Purves, argent, on a fesse azure, between three mascles gules, as many cinquefoils of the first. Font's Manuscript.

When the Purveses assumed the mascles, representing mirrors, as equivocally relative to their name, as Sir George Mackenzie fancies, I know not; but anciently they had no such figure, as by the seal of our William Purgoys de Mosie, appended to a charter of his, about the end of King William's reign, granting to the Monks of Melrose a free passage through his lands of Mosppenoch. The seal thereto appended was entire (which I see in the custody of William Wilson, one of the Under-Clerks of the Session), and after an oval form, and had no shield upon it; but in the middle was a very rude and irregular figure, which I cannot name: It is true, there were several families who lived about Earlston, in the west end of the shire of Berwick, and the east end of Teviotdale, who carried mascles, as the Purveses and Learmonts.

The eminentest family of late, of the name of Purves, is that of Sir William Purves of that ilk, in the shire of Berwick, fig. 17. azure, on a fesse between three mascles argent, as many cinquefoils of the first; crest, the sun rising out of a cloud, proper; with the motto, Clarior et tenebris. New Register.

The surname of Bethune or Beatone, anciently with us, azure, a fesse between three mascles or: I know that our modern books call them lozenges, and our old books mascles or lozenges voided, which is the same with mascle. As for the antiquity of the family, I have met with Robert de Bethune, witness in a charter of Rogerus de Quincey, in the reign of King William, to Soperus de Seton, of an annuity of the mill and mill-lands of Tranent; and afterwards David de Bethune sells, about the year 1296, and Alexander de Bethune, is mentioned in the parliament held at Cambuskenneth, the 6th of November 1314, in the 1st year of the reign of King Robert I. Robertus de Bethune, familiarius Regis Roberti II. married the daughter and heiress of Sir John Balfour of that ilk, and with her got the lands of Balfour in Fife; for which the family has been designed since, Bethune of Balfour: Which being the principal seat of the family, yet they retained the name of Bethune, and quartered the arms of Balfour with their own, viz. quarterly, first and fourth _azure_, a fesse between three mascles or, (as I observed before, they are called lozenges, especially in the New Register) second and third _argent_, on a chevron _sable_, an otter's head erased of the first, for Balfour; supporters, two otters, proper; and an otter's head for crest, with the word _Debonnaire_: Of this family there were several eminent learned men, as James Bethune, Archbishop of St. Andrew's, Chancellor of Scotland 1518; David Bethune, his nephew, was Archbishop of St. Andrew's upon his death, and created Cardinal by Pope Paul III. and Bishop of Mirepoix by the French King; and Chancellor of Scotland 1522, till 1540. James Bethune, his nephew, was elected Archbishop of Glasgow, and carried the foresaid quartered arms, as did David the cardinal; supported by two men in priestly habits; yet to be seen on his lodging in the foot of Blackfriar's Wynd.

Bethune of Creigh, another goodly family in Fife of that name, was a younger son of Bethune of Balfour, in the reign of King James IV. and carried the foresaid quartered arms, with a cinquefoil, for difference.

Janet Bethune, a daughter of Sir David Bethune of Creigh, then his Majesty's High Comptroller, was married to James Earl of Arran, Lord Hamilton. She bore to him James Earl of Arran, his successor, and a daughter, Helen, who was married to Archibald Earl of Argyle, and Jane, to the Earl of Glencairn: This family continued till of late, and the estate is now united to that of Bethune of Balfour.

David Bethune of Bandon, descended of a second son of Bethune of Balfour, carries the quartered arms of that family, within a bordure _or_; crest, an otter's head, couped _argent_. Lyon Register.

John Bethune of Blebo, whose father was a fourth brother of the House of Balfour, carries the quartered arms of that family, but takes the fesse _chequè_, in the first and fourth quarters, for his maternal descent of the house of Lindsay; with the crest and motto of the family. Lyon Register.

Alexander Bethune of Longermiston, whose father was a second brother of Bethune of Balfour, quarterly, first and fourth _azure_, a fesse _chequè_, _argent_ and _gules_, between three muscles _or_; second and third _argent_, on a chevron _sable_, a selch's head erased of the first, all within a bordure indented _or_; His daughter and heiress, Grisel Bethune, was married to William M'Dowal of Garthland, so mentioned and matriculated in the New Register.

James Bethune of Nether-Tarvit, descended of Cardinal Bethune, and Mary Ogilvie, daughter to the Lord Ogilvie. Their son was Alexander Bethune, Archdean of Lothan, and Laird of Carsgornny, who turned Protestant, and married: Of whom is descended Mr Thomas Bethune of Nether-Tarvit, quarterly, first and fourth _azure_, on a fesse, between three lozenges _or_, a betune leaf slipped _vert_, as relative to the name of Bethune; second and third Balfour, as before; crest, a physician's quadrangular cap, proper; motto, _Resolutio cœnus_. N. R.

I observed before, that some of the name of Bethune have lozenges instead of muscles, and that some have been in use to add a betune leaf on the fesse, as relative to the name.

Wardlaw of that ilk, _azure_, three muscles _or_, fig. 18. This surname Hector Boece places amongst the first of surnames in Scotland, in the reign of Malcolm III.

Wardlaw of Torry carried as the forner: I have seen the seal of Henry Wardlaw of Torry appended to his charter, granted by him to Alexander Lord Home Great Chamberlain of Scotland, in the year 1455; which seal of arms had only three muscles, 2 and 1; but afterwards that family was in use to quarter them with the arms of Valance, _viz._ _azure_, three water-budgets _or_, upon the account that the family matched with one of the co-heirs of Sir James Valance, and got with her Wester-Lochire in Fife: Of this family were two bishops of the name of Wardlaw with us.

Sir Henry Wardlaw of Pitrevie, Baronet, as descended, it seems, of this family, carried the quartered coat thereof; and for crest, a star; with the motto, _Familias firmat pictar_. Lyon Register.

Wardlaw of Riccarton, _azure_, on a fesse _argent_, between three muscles _or_, as many crescents of the first, (some say _gules_): Pont's Manuscript. In a charter of
OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.

ALEXANDER FORRESTER of Corstorphine to his son Archibald, of the lands of Clerkington, 12th October 1464, amongst the witnesses is John Wardlaw of Riccarton. In the year 1529, Walter Wardlaw of Riccarton resigns the lands of Priestfield, as proprietor thereof, in favours of Walter Chapman burgess in Edinburgh: This family is now extinct.

WARDLAW of Warriston, azure, on a fesse, between three salters or, a cross-gules.

Blair of that Ilk, an ancient family in the shire of Ayr, argent, on a saltier sable, nine mases of the first.

WILLIAM DE BLAIR, in anno 1255, is mentioned in a contract of agreement between RALPH DE EGLINTON and the village of Irvine, which is in the Charter-Chest of the borough of Irvine. And in a charter of King Alexander III. to the abbacy of Dunfermline, William de Blair is a witness.

John Blair of that Ilk gets a charter from King David Bruce of the lands of Airdblair, (as in Haddington’s Collections.) From this family of Blair the lands of Bognon came to Sir ADAM BLAIR of Bogton, nephew of BRYCE BLAIR of that Ilk, (History of Renfrew.) The Family of Blair have had inter-marriages with many honourable families, as Hamilton, Glencairn, Semple, &c. And there are few families of any note in the western shires that are not related to them.

The present WILLIAM BLAIR of that Ilk disposed his estate of Blair in favours of his only son John, reserving to himself a lertent. His son, John Blair, died without issue, and his sister Magdalen succeeded him. She married Mr WILLIAM SCOTT, Advocate, second son of JOHN SCOTT of Mullenoy, and to him she bore a son. He takes upon him the name and arms of Blair, which he quarters with Scott, viz. first and fourth argent, on a saltier sable, nine mases of the first, for Blair; second and third or, on a bend azure, a star between two crescents of the field, and in base, an arrow bend-ways, proper, feathered, headed, and barbed argent; crest, a stag lodged, proper; motto, Ano probas; which are the arms of Scott of Mullenoy, of which before, as in the Plate of Achievements.

The cadets of this family, with arms, that I have met with in our old and modern books of blazons, are these,

Blair of Adington or Adamanton, argent, on a saltier ingrailed sable, five mases of the first. Pont’s Manuscript. And sometimes a saltier and a chief sable, the last charged with three mases. W. M.

Blair of the Carse, as descended of Blair of that Ilk, argent, on a bend sable, three mases of the first. Ibid.

JAMES BLAIR of Milgerholm, sometime Provost of Irvine, argent, on a saltier, betwixt two crescents in the flanks, and garb in base sable, five mases of the first: motto, God be our guide. Lyon Register.

GILBERT BLAIR, sometime Dean of Guild of Aberdeen, argent, a saltier sable, betwixt a mullet in chief, and a crescent in base of the last: motto, Non crux sed lux. Lyon Register.

The surname of PITECAIRN, argent, three mases gules; as in Pont’s Manuscript: But in our New Register they are called lozenges.

Pitecairn of that Ilk, quarterly, first and fourth argent, three lozenges gules, (so called) second and third argent, an eagle with wings displayed sable, for RAMEY: They got the lands of Forthar by marrying the lieuesst: From which lands the family is now designed. And the lands of Pitecairn went off with a younger son, of whom was lineally descended ALEXANDER PITECAIRN of Pitecairn, who carried the same quartered arms of Pitecairn of that Ilk and Forthar, within a bordure ingrailed gules; crest, a moon in her complement, proper: motto, Plena refuglet. Lyon Register. Which family was represented by that learned and eminent physician ARCHIBALD PITECAIRN of that Ilk, who carries the arms of Pitecairn only, within a bordure ermine.

WILLIAM PITECAIRN of Pitfour, quarterly, first and fourth argent, three lozenges, 2 and 1 gules, for Pitecairn; second and third azure, a cheveron between three crescents argent; crest, an anchor in pale azure: motto, Sperabo. Lyon Register.

Pitecairn of Dreghorn, argent, three lozenges, within a bordure gules; as in the Plate of Achievements.
The surname of Tindal, in the year 1484, says Sir James Balfour, carried azure, two mascles in fesse or.

The name of Trail, argent, on a fesse gules, between three cross crozets fitched azure, as many mascles or. Pont's Manuscript.

The first of this name is said to have come from Tyrol in Germany, from whence the name, by corruption Trail.

There was one Hugh Trail, in the reign of Robert III. who defeat an English champion in a tournament at Berwick, as our histories acquaint us.

Walter Trail, Bishop of St Andrews, eminent both in the church and state, in the reign of King Robert III. purchased the lands of Blebo; which he gave to his nephew Trail of Blebo, who carried azure, a chevron between two mascles in chief or, and a trefoil slipped in base argent. Balfour's Manuscript.

Robert Trail, Merchant in Edinburgh, descended of the family of Blebo, azure, a chevron between two mascles in chief, and a trefoil slipped in base, within a bordure waved argent; crest, a column, or pillar, set in sea, proper: motto, Discrimine talis. Lyon Register.

The surname of Philips, argent, a chevron gules, between three mascles sable, Balfour's Manuscript.

James Philips of Amyr-cross in Angus, azure, a chevron between three talbot heads, couped argent; in the New Register.

The surname of Mitchell, sable, a fesse between six mascles or. Workman's Manuscript. And in Pont's Manuscript, sable, a fesse between three mascles argent; and these families following, of the name, in the New Register, are.

Alexander Mitchell of Mitchell, Writer to the Signet, sometime designed of Craigend, viz. sable, a fesse betwixt three mascles, two and one or; and in the middle chief, a dagger erected, point upward, proper, handled of the second, all within a bordure argent, charged with eight cinquefoils gules; crest, a hand holding a writing pen, proper; and for motto, Faveunte Deo; as in the Plate of Achievements.

He married Alisia Livingston, daughter and heiress of William Livingston of Parkhall, grandchild and representative of John Livingston, sometime designed of Baldarow, and after of Haining, brother of Livingston of Kilsyth.

Alexander Livingston, now of Parkhall, eldest son of the above Alexander Mitchell, and Alisia Livingston, as representative of the said family, bears the name and arms of Livingston, with a suitable difference, of which in another place.

David Mitchell of Wester-Newburnie, sable, a fesse inverced between three mascles or; motto, Omnia superat diligentia.

Andrew Mitchell of Filligrige, Merchant in Aberdeen, sable, a fesse waved between three mascles or; motto, Secura frugalitas.

John Mitchell of Barry, descended of the family of Bandreth, sable, a fesse between three mascles or, within a bordure chequed of the second and first; crest, three ears of barley conjoined in the stalk, proper; motto, Sapienti qui assiduus.

Mr John Mitchell of Landirth, sable, a fesse ingrailed between three mascles or; motto, Labor imprehens omnium vinet.

Don of Teath, vert, on a fesse argent between three crescents of the last, as many mascles sable. Pont's Manuscript.

Sir Alexander Don of Newton, Baronet, vert, on a fesse argent, three mascles sable; crest, a pomegranate, proper; motto, Non debit alter aureus. New Register and Plate of Achievement.

Patrick Don, Baillie of Kelso, brother to the said Sir Alexander Don of Newton, the same within a bordure argent, for a brotherly difference. Lyon Register.

The name of Lisk, argent, three mascles azure, and on a chief gules, as many mascles of the first. Pont's Manuscript.

Dalemspin of Lackleid, argent, on a saltier ingrailed sable, nine mascles of the first. Pont's Manuscript. And there the surname of St Michael of Blackwater, sable, on a bend argent; between six mascles or, three cushions of the last. Pont's Manuscript.

St Michael of Bramson, argent, a chevron between three cushions sable. B. M.
OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.

The name of Rassenden, gules, on a chevron argent, between three mullets or, as many mascles azure. Pont's Manuscript.

And there these of the name of Nicot, azure, a fesse between six mascles argent.

In England, Caterall of Holderness, in Yorkshire, sable, three mascles argent. Morgan's Heraldry. And there, Whitaker, sable, three mascles or.

Carleton of Amthill, in Bedfordshire, argent, on a bend sable, three mascles of the first; the same are given by Mr Gibbon, to Dudley, Lord Carleton of Embercourt, in Surry, (Viscount Dorchester in the county of Oxford) which he latins thus, "Qui gestavit in suco argenteo, teniem obliquam nigrum, tribus metallici primi imp. "pressam maculis." He says, because of the various significations of macula, it were not amiss to add castium and retiun, to maculis, which he takes to represent the mascles of a net; and, in another sense, he latins them rhombulos evacuatos, i.e. lozenges voided.

Fusil and fusilly.

The fusil is another rhombular figure like the lozenge, but more long than broad, and its upper and lower points are more acute and sharp than the two side points. Chassanus, with others, makes their sides round, as in his description of them, "Fusile sunt acute in superiore & inferiore partibus & rotundae ex utroque latere;" which description has occasioned some English heralds, when so painted or engraved, to call them miller's picks, as John Boswell, in his Concord of Armory, Fol. ii. and others, to call them sweater's shuttles; but the French make their side angles more acute than round, and to represent spindles. Menestrier says, "Fusées sont plus entendues en longueur que les lozanges et alliées en pointe, comme les fuseaux, elles ont pièces d'architecture, ou bon se sort pour ornement de fusées et de pesons, and gives us the arms of Loquet in Artois, "Porte d'azur a trois fusées d'or, acollées en face," i.e. azure, three fusils in fesse or.

Sylvester Petra Sancta says, "Fusi ex ingenio & opificio muliebri petantur," and that women's shields are after this form, upon which are placed their paternal figures, of which before in the chapter of Shields. For fusil, the ancients used the words, fusillus, fusis, and fusis; according to the last, Mr Gibbon blazons the arms of Montagu Earl of Manchester, "Seutum argentem cum ternis fusis coccineis in loco fasciae dispositis, limbo nigro circumducto," i.e. argent, three fusils in fesse gules, bordure sable; of which, speaking before, I gave them as lozenges, from other English writers, who take the one for the other, as they are painted or engraven, longer or shorter.

With us, Leith of Restahirg, argent, five fusils in fesse sable; some say argent, a fesse fusilly sable, as Sir George Mackenzie in the chapter of the Bar.

Leith of Overhall, or, a chevron between three fusils azure; crest, a turtledove, proper: motto, Semper fidelis. Fig. 19.

Leith of Leithhall, or, a cross croset fitched sable, between three crescents in chief, and as many fusils in base gules; crest, a cross croset fitched sable: motto, Trusty to the end.

Leith of Craighall, descended of Leith of Harthill, or, a cross croset fiché sable, between two crescents in chief gules, and in base, three fusils, 2 and 1 azure, all within a bordure of the third: motto, Trusty and byland. New Register. As fig. 20.

These of the surname of Daniel, argent, five fusils in pale sable, and, as some say, a pale fusilly sable. Balfour's Manuscript. And there the name of Lambert, in the reign of King James IV. carried sable, a star between three fusils argent, 2 and 1.

Lambertons of that ilk were ancient in the Merse; and are frequently met with as witnesses in charters granted by our old kings, David I. and King William, to the Church of Durham, and Abacy of Coldingham.

William Lambert was Bishop of St Andrews in the time of the Competition for the Crown of Scotland, by the Bruce and the Baliol: He adhered to the former, and set out his cousin, good Sir James Douglas, with all necessaries to assist King Robert the Bruce.

The name of Shaw, argent, a cheveron between three fusils erminois, so carried by Shaw of Eltham, in Kentshire, Baronet; as in the Art of Heraldry, a little book lately set out.

When the field is filled all over with fusils, alternately of metal and colour, it is then said to be fusilly; the Latinus, fusilatum; or thus, fusis aureis & coerulis interstinctum, i.e. fusilly or and azure, the arms of the ancient kingdom of Australia.

Dukebeck, an ancient family in Normandy, fusilly, argent and gules, the French blazon fuselé d’argent, et de gueules; the same arms are borne by the Grimaldi de Monaco in Genoa.

As I said before of the lozenges, so now of the fusils, that when the field or any figure is filled with them, being erected in pale, they are then only blazoned fusilly; but, when they are horizontally, fusilly in fesse, or in bar; if diagonally to the left, in bend-sinister, and according to the French, bar-swayers; and when diagonally to the right, in bend; for an example, I here give the arms of the Princes of Bavaria in the Empire, fig. 21. which the French blazon thus, Fuselé en bonne d’argent et d’azur de vingt-et-une pièces, qui est de Bavier; here the French number the fusils; but it is not usual with us to tell their number when there are so many, and the shield filled with them; we only say, fusilly in bend-dexter, argent and azure.

The Prince Palatine of the Rhine, Elector, the Duke of Bavaria, Elector, the Duke of Deux Ponts and of Newburg, as descended from one stem. The house of Bavaria carry the same arms, but differently disposed or marshalled, viz. the Elector of Bavaria has three coats in distinct escutcheons, two acollé joined together, and one below. On the first, the arms of the Palatinat, viz. sable, a lion rampant or, crowned and langued gules contourné, after the German fashion; looking to the other escutcheons of arms on the left, which is, fusilly in bend, argent azure, for Bavaria; and, the third escutcheon below both, is gules, charged with the imperial globes or, for the electorship.

The Prince Palatine of the Rhine carries the same three armorial bearings, otherwise marshalled in an escutcheon, viz. the Palatinat, parti with Bavaria, and enté in base, the globe, as elector. Which way of marshalling I have spoke before in my Essay of the Ancient and Modern Use of Arms.

OF THE FRET, FRETTED, AND PRETTY.

I thought fit to treat of this figure here, because it is somewhat of kin to the mace; for it is said to be composed of a mace and two battons, dexter and sinister, braced or interlaced together, as fig. 22.

Mr Thomas Crawford, in the Fragment of his Manuscript of Heraldry, now to be met with, says, the fret is composed of a saltier and mace, and is a badge of fastness and fidelity, like a knot or tie of ribbons. The English, I find, take it so, and call it the love knot; and by some Harrington’s knot, because carried by them for their armorial figure; with the motto, Noto firma. But since it is borne by other ancient and honourable families, it ought not to be appropriate to that family; and is called by some English heralds, heraldorum modus amatorius, the heralds’ love knot; because it is devised by them as an armorial figure; and so Mr Gibbon blazoned the arms of Harrington, Clypeum atrum heraldico veri amoris nodo impressum argentos i.e. sable, a fret argent, as fig. 22.

The family of Maltravers, in England, sable, a fret or; the English, of old, latinized it, fretum simplex; and Imholi, in the blazon of Spencer Earl of Sunderland, latins it, clathrum, a grate or lattice.

With us, the surname of McColloch bears ermine, a fret gules.

Sir Godfrey McColloch of Merton, Knight and Baronet, ermine, a fret ingrained gules; crest, a hand throwing a dart, proper: motto, Vi e animo, as fig. 23. Lyon Register.
OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.

Sir Hugh McCulloch of Pitlon, ermine, a fret gules, as descended of McCulloch of Cadbol; but our New Register makes the fret ingrailed, the same with Myrtyon; and for crest, the little creature ermine; with the motto, Sine macula.

Daniel Fleming of Ryhall in Westmoreland, gules; a fret argent, and the same by Edward Fleming of Lustow, in Devonshire, as in the English books; and in the Dictionary of Arms, lately published, the arms of Gloucester, or, a fret sable.

Fretted or fretted is said when there are six, eight, or more pieces, such as, battons salier-ways, which fill the field; are so changed, the spaces of the field that are left by them, formed like lozenges, and the fretty resembles a grante or lattice; but, in this, they differ, that the pieces of fretty are interchangeably passing one over another, and under the other; whereas, in grates or lattices, the pieces pass entirely all over the other, sometimes pale-ways and bar-ways, and are always nailed at their joints or meetings; whereas, fretty is always bend-dexter and bend-sinister-ways, for fretted arms; the ancients said arma frettata, and others, arma clathrata, or cancelleta, i.e. latticed arms: as Uredus blazons the arms of Willoughby, scutum aureum, clathris cornulis, i.e. or, fretty azure; but, Mr Gibbon, to distinguish fretty from latticed arms, blazons more distinctly the same arms of Willoughby, or, fretty of eight pieces azure, thus, "Scutum aureum octonis baccillis " cornulis impressum obliquus (quatuor dextris totidem sinistris) qui alius super " alium vicissim & subter subalternatim interponitur;" which handsomely distinguishes fretted arms from latticed ones, of which I shall add some examples of the one and the other; and first, of fretted arms.

James McCulloch of Mul, descended also of the family of Myrtyon, ermine, fretty gules, within a bordure indented of the second, as in the New Register; but here the blazon docs not tell how many pieces the fretty is made up of.

McCulloch of Cardiness, ermine, fretty gules of eight pieces; and on an escutecheon azure, three wolves' heads erased argent, as in Mr Pont's Book of Blazons.

The surname of Lauderdale, of old, sable, fretty or; Workman's Manuscript.

St Amond, of old, or de Sancto Amando, or, fretty sable, and on a chief of the second, three besants of the first. B. M.

Lyle or L'Isle, gules, fretty or; some say gules a fret or. The first of this name and family to be met with on record is William L'Isle, one of the witnesses in the charter of foundation of the Monastery of Paisley, by Walter, High Steward of Scotland, in the reign of Malcolm IV. anno 1164. These of this family had very soon a local designation, as Le Isle Dominus de Duchal, a barony in the sheriffdom of Renfrew, in the reign of Alexander II. After the death of Alexander III. in the unhappy competition for the crown betwixt the Bruce and the Baliol, the family and surname of L'Isle were, as many others in the kingdom, divided in their loyalty; for Sir Walter and Sir William L'Isle were firm for King Robert the Bruce, and Sir Allan L'Isle was on the Baliol's side. Edward Baliol made him Sheriff of the Isle of Bute, which some say was their ancient possession; and from it came their name L'Isle, afterward named Lyle. He was also by that Edward made Lord High Chamberlain of Scotland. Sir John de Isle Dominus de Duchal was in great favour with King David Bruce in the time of Edward Baliol's usurpation, and got from King David, (as in Rotulii David II.) a charter of the barony of Boquhan in Stirlingshire; he is there, and in other evidences, designated Johanne de Lyle Dominus de Duchal, Miles. His son and successor John de Lyle of Duchal married one of the co-heirs of the old Earls of Marr. His son and successor Robert is styled Chevalier de Duchal, being one of the hostages for King James I. as in Rymer's Federar-Annales. Upon the death of Alexander Stewart Earl of Marr, he put in his claim as one of the heirs of the earldom of Marr, to which he and the Lord Erskine should have succeeded by right and proximity of blood, but King James I. took possession of it; as Fordan's Continuator says, anno 1438., "Obit Alexander Sewart, Comes de Mar, & quin bastardus erat, Rex " elli successit quamvis jure hereditario Domini Erskine & Lyle successisse de-" buissent." Both Robert de Lyle and the Lord Erskine, as having right to that earldom, marshalled the arms of Marr, viz. azure, a bend betwixt six cross croslets.
fitched or, in the first and fourth quarters, with their paternal arms, and which have been continued by their successors.

ROBERT DE LYLE was raised to the honour of a Peer, by the title of Lord LYLE; by King James II. About the year 1446, he carried, as by our old books of blazons, quarterly, first and fourth Marr, second and third Lyle, as above blazoned; for crest, a cock or, crested and barbed gules: motto, _An I may_; supported by two cats, proper.

The Lord LYLE's family continued in a lineal male descent to the reign of Queen Mary, when John Lord Lyle left a son James, who died without issue, and a daughter, Jean Lyle, his heir, who was married to Sir NIEL MONTGOMERY of Lainshaw, from whom is descended the present JAMES MONTGOMERY of Lainshaw, Clerk to the Justiciary; and as representative of the Lord LYLE, marshalls the arms of that family with these of his own, as in the Plate of Achievements, of which in another place. See Plate of Achievements for the nobility.

Many of the sons of this noble family went to England, France, and other foreign places, where some of them came to be great men.

LYLE of Stonypeth, _gules_, pretty of six pieces or, with a mullet in chief for difference. Pont's Manuscript.

There are some of the name of LYLE or LYELL, in the north, who carry different arms from those of Lyle above, as in our New Register; whose blazons I shall here insert, lest I have not occasion afterwards; and though their names seem to be one, yet they are distinct and different families.

DAVID LYLE of Woodhead, descended of the family of Murthil, _or_, a cross _azure_, between four cross patees fitched _gules_, within a border inralled of the second; crest, a swallow _volant_, proper; motto, _Sedulo & Honeste_.

John LYLE of Murthil, _or_, a plain cross _azure_, between four crosses _patée_, fitched _gules_; crest, a dexter hand holding a sword erect, proper; motto, _Fort non ignavo_.

THOMAS LYLE of Dysart, _or_, a plain cross _azure_, between four cross croslets _fitché gules_; crest, a dexter hand holding a sword erect, proper: motto, _Tutela_.

CHARLES CHEYNE of Chelsea, in the county of Middlesex, was created Lord Cheyne, Viscount of Newhaven in Scotland, by King Charles II. and carried for his paternal arms, _chequè_, or and _azure_, a fesse _gules_, fitched _argent_.

The surname of ABBE in England, _vert_, _fretty argent_, and a fesse _gules_, Kent's Dictionary of Arms; and there ALFORD of Northampton, _gules_, _fretty ermine_.

Arms latticed differ from fretted ones, as before shown; and are called by the French, _treillé_ or _treillissé_, from which our word _tirlace_ for a lattice; these pieces which make it are not interlaced with one another, as in the fretty, but lie straight upon the undermost pieces, fixed with nails; which, if of a different tincture, are mentioned also in the blazon, as in the arms of BARDONNECHE en Dauphiné, by Menestrier, _d'argent treillé de queuez cloué d'or, i.e. argent_, a lattice or _tirlace gules_, nailed _or_, fig. 25. Sir John Ferne says, such arms were given to a French Knight, and continued by his posterity, for taking Gundemarius, King of Burgundy, prisoner in a battle, in the reign of Childebert, King of France. Which arms he thus blazons, _sable_, a _musion_ (a cat) _or_, opprest with a _treillisse gules_, _cloué argent_.

Before I end this chapter I cannot but give account what some say of the fretty, who will have it to represent a flower garden; especially when below the fretty, and in the interstices of the field, there appear flowers, as in the arms of GARDINER with us; _argent_, on a fret of four pieces _gules_, as many hearts _or_, and in every interstice, a rose of the second, as in Pont's Manuscript.

Others again will have pretty to represent a net, as Guillim, who derives _fretty_ from _veto_, which signifies a net; and especially when fishes appear under it, as in the armorial bearings of some of the name of STURGEON in England; _azure_, three sturgeons _naissant or_, surmounted of pretty of six pieces _gules_; some say a net _gules_, which Mr Gibbon thus Latin, "Scutum coeruleum, tribus sturjonibus " (altero alteri impositis) impressum aureis & deinde filis sex rubeis reticulatum."

When there are three or four, or more figures, proper or natural, placed one over the other, and under the other alternately, then they are said to be _fretted_, as in the bearing of the surname of TARSET, _argent_, three _turbot fishes_ fretted, proper, one fesse-ways, looking to the sinister, and two to the dexter chief and flank points; Mackenzie's Heraldry, as fig. 26.

OF THE SUB-ORDINARIES.

OF ROUND FIGURES, BESANTS AND TORTEAUXES.

Round figures, when of metal, are called besants; when of colour, torteauxes; yet they have specific names with the English, of which immediately; and then I shall treat of boxes and annulets as armorial figures.

Besants represent, in armories, pieces of gold or silver, and have their name from the city Byzantium, now called Constantinople, where such pieces were coined. Lewis Lejeune, as the French historians tell, in his return from the Holy Land, brought home a quantity of besants of gold, and made an offeratory of them; and, ever since, the Kings of France, in the solemnities of their coronations, make an offeratory of pieces of gold, which they call besantines. The Kings of England have been in use to do the same, as Camden, in his Remains, tells us, that Edward III. caused coin a piece of gold, called besantine, to the value of L. 15; for such an use, says he, there were two pieces of gold used at the coronation of the Kings of England; which had on the one side a resemblance of the Blessed Trinity, with these words, In honorem Sancta Trinitatis, and, on the other side, the picture of the Virgin Mary, with the words, In honorem Sancta Maria Virginis. And these pieces were used by the Kings of England, in the offeratories at their coronations, till the accession of King James to the English throne, who likewise caused two besants to be made for himself and his Queen. That for himself had, on the one side, the picture of a king kneeling before an altar, with four crowns upon it, representing his four kingdoms, with the circumscription, Quid tribuat Domino pro omnibus, qua tribuit mihi; and on the other side of the besant was a lamb lying by the side of a lion, with these words, Cor contritum & humilliatum non despiciet Deus. The besant for the Queen had on the one side a crown, protected by a cherubim, and over that an eye, with the word Deus, in a cloud, with the circumscription, Tegit ala sumnum; and on the other side was portrayed a Queen kneeling before an altar, with these words, Piis praebuit, fervente fide, humili obsequius; but having digressed, I return to the besants as armorial figures.

Besants, when they are armorial figures in armories, they have no impression or figure as coins, but plain; Menestrier says, "Besans sont monnoyes d'or, ou d'argent, sans marque, qui du nom de la ville Byzance ont en le nom de besans."

The Italian, Sylvester Petra Sancta, calls them numeros Byzantii, liber sancti albanii, talenta. Chifletius and Uredus, numeros Byzantos aureos seu argenteos.

They were generally assumed, as armorial figures, by those who had been in the expeditions to the Holy Land; and by others since, upon the account they had possessed honourable and beneficial offices, as Treasurers, Comptrollers, Collectors of Public Taxes and Revenues. And carried by others, as a sign of power and liberty of coinage, as Sylvester Petra Sancta likewise observes, in his chapter of Besants. "Sunt qui pertinere arbitrantur ad ararvi supremos presides, seu regios quastes, aut ad summos dynastas, qui monetam propriam cudendi jus ac potestatem habuerunt."

The name of Mercer, or, on a fesse between three cross pates gules, as many besants of the first. Pont's Manuscript.

By these figures it seems the first assumer of them had been in the Holy Land; one of this name that has been entrusted with a naval force by our Kings, as by the Histories of England and Scotland, and particularly that of Howe's, p. 231, who tells us, that in the year 1378, John Mercer, with many ships, set upon the English fleet at Scarborough, defeat and brought them to Scotland, &c.

The principal family of this name is Mercer of Aldie, in the shire of Perth, who carries or, on a fesse between three cross pates in chief gules, and a star in base azure, three besants of the first, supported by two savages with steel caps on their heads, holding battons downward, before their legs, and standing on a compartment, with these words, Cruix Christi nostra corona; which supporters are to be seen, of old, finely cut in the house of Aldie; and, for crest, the head and neck of a heron, holding in its beak an eel; with the motto, on an escrol, the \textit{Griot poul}, being the slughorn of the family, as on the Plate of Achievements.

One of their predecessors, John Mercer, in Perth, purchased the lands of Meikleour from \textit{Maurinus de Cramond}, in the reign of King David II, which were confirmed by that King, in the 33d year of his reign, and afterwards took the designation from the lands of Aldie, of whom is descended the present Sir Laurence Mercer of Aldie, Bart.

Fawsie de of that Ilk, in East Lothian, an ancient family, though now extinct. There are several of that name with us, who carry \textit{gules}, a fesse between three besants or. Pont's Manuscript. Fig. 27.

\textit{Allan de Fawsie} gives an obligation to the monks of Dunfermline, of the date 1253, to pay yearly \textit{quique solidos argentii} out of his lands.

\textit{Roger de Fawsie} gives a charter of the lands of Fawsie from Robert the Bruce, and, in the year 1359, \textit{Thomas de Fawsie}, Miles, is witness in a charter of Duncan Earl of Fife, to the abbacy of Lindores.

Mr James Fawsie, designated eldest lawful son to the deceased John Fawsie of that Ilk, is witness in a charter of George Earl of Winton, to David Allan in Tranent, in the year 1666. The lands of Fawsie belong now to Dundas of Arniston.

The surname of Hope carries besants.

Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, \textit{azure}, a chevron between three besants, or; crest, a broken globe surmounted of a rainbow, proper: motto, \textit{At spes infracta}. He was Advocate to King Charles I. 1628, whose father or grandfather came from Holland, and was the first of the name of Hope in Scotland. Sir Thomas had, by his wife Elizabeth Bennet, daughter of John Bennet in Tranent, and his wife Gissel Seaton, of the family of Seaton, first, Sir John Hope of Craighall, who was President of the Session; second son, Sir Thomas Hope of Kerse, Bart. one of the Senators of the College of Justice, who carries \textit{azure}, on a chevron betwixt three besants or, a roebuck current of the first; crest, a broken globe surmounted of a rainbow, proper: motto, \textit{Spes tamen infracta}. Lyon Register.

Third son, Sir Alexander Hope of Granton, Cup-bearer to King Charles I. carried the arms of Hope, and, for his difference, charged the chevron with a rose \textit{gules}, but kept the crest of the family; with the motto, \textit{Spero suspiro donec}. Lyon Register.

Fourth son, Sir James Hope of Hopetoun, was one of the Senators of the College of Justice 1649, till that judiciary was dissolved by Oliver Cromwell, anno 1651. He married Anna, daughter of John Foulis of Leadhills, in the shire of Lanark, by whom he had John his successor, and a daughter Rachel, married to David Bethune of Balfour, in Fife. He married, for his second wife, Mary, eldest daughter of William Earl Marischal, by whom he had one son, Sir William Hope of Balcomy, Bart. formerly designed of Granton, and late Depute-governor of Edinburgh Castle; who carries \textit{azure} on a chevron \textit{argent}, betwixt three besants or, as many pallets \textit{gules}, being his maternal figures of the name of Keith; crest, a broken globe, with the rainbow as before: motto, \textit{At spes salutem}. Lyon Register.

Which John Hope of Hopetoun married Margaret, daughter of John Earl of Haddington, by whom he had Charles, his only son and heir, and a daughter, Eleanor, married to Thomas Earl of Haddington. Charles was raised to the honour and dignity of Earl of Hopetoun, by letters patent, bearing date the 15th of April 1703. He married Henrietta, daughter of William, first Marquis of Annandale, and with her has issue his eldest son John Lord Hope. The Earl's arms, as in the Plate of Achievements of the nobility, \textit{azure}, on a chevron betwixt three besants or, a bay leaf, proper, adorned with crown, helmet, and mantlings, bespicing his quality, and on a wreath of his tinctures; for crest, a broken globe surmounted of a rainbow, all proper: with the motto, on an escrol, \textit{At spes infracta}; supporters, two women, their hair hanging down, with loose garments, holding anchors in their hands. L. R.

Hope of Rankeillor, descended of Craighall, the same as Craighall, within a bordure, or, for his filial difference. Lyon Register.

The name of Torshorald, says Sir James Balfour, in his Manuscript, carried, in the year 1232, or, a saltier and chief gules, the last charged with three besants of the first.

The motto of LAIDLAW, sable, three besants or. Balfour's Manuscript.

The name of Guid, argent, on a chevron gules, three besants or, and, in base, a dove with an olive branch in its beak. Herbert Guid is infeft in the lands of Auchencain 1501, upon a charter granted by Robert Crawford of Crawford, as superior. Herbert's grandchild, John Guid, is infeft in the said lands 1625, whose grandchild is Mr John Guid, minister at Carnwath, and possessor of Auchencain.

Edward Fountain of Loch-Hill, sometime Master of the Revels, argent, on a fesse azure, three besants; crest, an eagle rising, proper: motto, Praecipitius quo difficilium.

Robert Fennison, Merchant in Edinburgh, gules, a fesse between three besants in chief, and a crane in base; crest, a crane's head, proper: motto, Vigilat & ornat. Lyon Register.

I have seen the arms of the name of McMillan painted thus, argent, on a chevron, between three mullets sable, as many besants or. The McMillans are said to be Buchanans by descent, and to have changed their name upon account of slaughter.

In England, the family of Bisset in Warwickshire has, for arms, azure, ten besants, 4, 3, 2 and 1.

When the besants are of gold, the metal may be named or not named in the blazon; but if of silver, argent must be named by the practice of all Europe, except with the English, who, from their particular fancy, call them plates.

Forus of Ratho, descended of a younger son of Collington, argent, on a chevron, between three laurel leaves vert, as many besants of the first, (the English would call them plates;) crest, a dove holding an olive-branch in her beak, proper; and for motto, Pax. New Register, fig. 28.

Sir James Falconer of Phesdo, one of the Senators of the College of Justice, descended of Falcnoner Lord Halkerton, a falcon's head, issuing out of a man's heart, proper, between three mullets azure, all within a bordure of the last, charged with eight besants argent; crest, a falcon perching and hooded, proper: motto, Paratus ad aethera. New Register.

In England, the name of Clarke in Somersetshire carries, as Morgan gives us, three plates; and the name of Trotsham, gules, four plates, 2 and 2; and Ramsay in Derbyshire, azure, six plates, 3, 2 and 1; and the name of Sandys there, sable, six plates, 3, 2 and 1.

When the field, or other armorial figures, seems to be filled with besants of an indefinite number, they are then said to be semé of besants, or besantie. The ancient Earls of Cornwall in England carried sable, besantie or, as in Sandford's Genealogical History. When Richard, second son of King John, was created Earl of Pioctiers, and Earl of Cornwall in England, he did not carry the arms of his father, but those of Pioctiers and Cornwall, which he composed together, in one shield, thus: argent, a lion rampant gules, crowned or, for Pioctiers, within a bordure sable, besantie or, for Cornwall.

Rochford in England, quarterly, or and gules, a bordure azure, besantie or.

Tortoaux

Is a round figure, always of one of the colours received in the science of heraldry; which colour must be expressed in the blazon, as tortoaux, azure, sable, &c. but the English appropriate particular names to them, as they are variously coloured, except to those of red colour, which they call only tortoaux, without naming the colour.

Tortoaux represents, in armory, cakes of bread, called wastals; of old, liba torta seu rotunda; from which tortoaux, the Italian Sylvester Petra Sancta, in the 43d chapter of his Treatise of Heraldry, entitled De Libis Tesseraritis, calls them scutarias placentalus, which heralds take to represent in armories cakes and wastals, and are so taken by the Spaniards, as Menestrier tells us, from a story out of Argot de Molina, a Spanish herald, speaking in his First Book of the Nobles of Andalusia, who carry in their arms torteauxes, upon the account, says he, that one of the Kings of Spain, being to give battle to the Moors, convened his principal captains and commanders to eat; telling them, that so many cakes as they did eat, each of them would kill as many Moors: And, after a memorable victory, considering how many cakes each had ate, some five, eight, or twelve, took as many torteauxes in their arms, or added them to their ancient bearings; and this is the reason why so many torteauxes are carried in the arms of the nobles of Andalusia. So that they are taken by the French, Italians, Spaniards, English, and us, for cakes of bread. Fig. 29.

There are two ancient families in Scotland who contend for chieftship, but carry different arms; Blair of Balthyock, in the shire of Perth, argent, a chevron sable, between three torteauxes gules; crest, a dove, with her wings expanded, proper: motto, Virtute tatus. Lyon Register.

Blair of that ilk, in the shire of Ayr, the other family, of whom before; the controversy about the precedence of these two families is said to have been adjusted by King James VI. ordering that the eldest man representor of these two families should precede the younger: These two families are to be found in records in the reign of Alexander III. and have several families descended of them, whose blazons I have before mentioned, and shall here add as in our records.

Those descended of Balthyock are George Blair of Lethingdy, descended of Balthyock, the same with Balthyock, with a martlet for difference; crest, a garb, proper: motto, Nee tenere, nec timide. Lyon Register.

John Blair of Balmill, a younger son of Balthyock, the same as his father, within a bordure sable; crest, a Roman head; with the motto, Facies qualis mens talis.

Alexander Blair, residenter in France, descended of a second son of Balthyock, for his difference, makes the chevron waved. Ibid.

Laurence Blair of Overburdy, descended of Balthayock, for his difference, invects the chevron.

Captain Andrew Blair of Inchyra, descended of Balthock, embattles the chevron for his difference. Ibid.

The name of Courtney in England, or, three torteauxes: The first of this name came to England with Henry II. and afterwards his descendant, Henry Courtney, was made Earl of Devon by Edward III. in right of his mother, who was a daughter of William Rivers Earl of Devon. Morgan's Heraldry.

The arms of the Episcopall See of Worcester, argent, ten torteauxes, 4, 3, 2 and 1, as in Dale Pursuivant's Catalogue of Nobility. The name of Babington in England carries the same arms, with a label of three points azure; and it is pretty remarkable, says Kent, in his Dictionary of Arms, that Dr Gervase Babington, being made Bishop of Worcester, by Queen Elizabeth, his paternal coat was the same with the See, excepting only the label: Here the English, when they say torteaux, do not add gules, supposing it always to be red.

The German Jacob Imhoff will have the torteaux to represent the yolk of an egg in arms, for he latins them vitelllos, in his Blazons of the Nobility of Great Britain, as in those of Edmond Langley Duke of York, fifth son of Edward III. from whom issued the English kings, of the House of York, who carried France and England, quarterly, as his father; and for a filial difference, added a label of three points argent, each charged with three torteauxes, which Imhoff calls vitelllos, yolks of eggs. And the same in the arms of Grey Earl of Kent, and others, thus; "Insignia famillie Graue, e qua Comites Cancie & Stanfords prodiere, \[\text{sic}\] senis transversis fasciolis ex argento & cyano exarato, tribus vitellis in cephalo distincto constant," i. e. barry of six, argent and azure, in chief three torteauxes, and so of the rest of the nobility of England who carry torteauxes.

When torteauxes are of the colour azure, we name them, as the French, torteaux azure, as in the arms of Armstrong of Mangerton, argent, three torteauxes azure; Balfour's Manuscript: But the English, upon some singularity of their own, call them burts, without naming the colour, that is, marks of some violent strokes, as Gerard Leigh; though Guillim will have them to represent hurtle-berries.

When they are green, they call them pomiers, i.e. apple, which Morgan thus blazons in the arms of the name of Smith in Essex, ermine, three pomiers, i.e. with us, three torteauxes sable.

When black, they call them pellets, or agesses, which they take to represent bullets or balls; as in the blazon of the arms of Sir Robert Clayton, sometime Lord Mayor of London, in the book entitled the Art of Heraldry, viz, argent, a cross sable between four pellets. We with others call them torteaux table.

The surname of MYRTON of Cambo in Fife, now extinct, argent, a chevron between three torteauxes sable: Those of this surname, says Hector Boece, were in the reign of Malcolm III. and got the lands of Cambo in Fife, by marrying the heiress of the name of Camboys in the reign of the Bruces; which barony is now possessed by Sir Alexander Erskine of Cambo, Lyon King at Arms.

When those round figures we have been treating of are of two tinctures, half metal, and half colour, they are called besant torteaux; and when half colour, and half metal, torteaux besants, observing the tincture that lies on the right or upper part of the roundlet. These ordinarily fall out when the field is parti, or coupee of metal and colour, and then they are counter-changed of the field. I shall here add an example out of Testex Genitilia, given by Sylvester Petra Saneta, as fig. 30. parted per pale, argent and sable, a roundle counter-changed of the same. The French say, "Parti d'argent et de sable au torteaux besants, parti de l'un en l'autre." And our author says, "Bizanti-libum semi-aaurum, semi-argentum, in scuto serao, ad perpendiculum secto, & ad dextram argentum, ad laevam atro: quod est Kluchemiorum in Bavaria." Camden latins torteauxes, pilas vel globulas; but these differ from torteaux, for bowls in paintings are always shadowed; whereas torteaux, or flat roundles, and bowls, or globes, are different figures, and keep their own name, as those in the arms of the Duke of Tuscany, viz. five bowls in orle gules, and in chief, a torteaux azure, charged with three flower-de-luces or: As Menestrier, en la Science de la Noblesse, "Or, a cinque boules de gueules, en orle; en chef un torteaux d'azur, charge de trois fleurs-de-lis d'or:" Some say they are blazoned bowls, from the reason of their first assumption by Averardo de Medicis, who served under Charles the Great of France, upon his killing Mugello, a giant, who destroyed the inhabitants and passengers in and about Florence, by a mace of iron, at which he hung five iron bowls, which the Medicis took for armorial figures: Others say again, the bowls in these arms represent medicinal pills, in allusion to the name Medicis.

ANNULETS, RINGS, VIRES AND VIROLES:

The first needs no description, being well known. Rings and annulets were anciently marks of nobility and jurisdiction with the Romans, and have been continued as armorial ones of honour, and symbols of investiture in dominions. The Duke of Savoy takes possession of his dominions by the ring of St Maurice. The Doge of Venice pretends dominion in the sea, which he is said to wed, by throwing a gold ring into it every year; and bishops receive investiture of their sees by a ring and pastoral-staff. The ring has been also the prize of tournaments and joustings, and the riding at the ring was a part of these exercises: It also was the reward to those who believed themselves best in such military exploits. All which may be said to have given occasion for rings to be frequent in armories.

Eglinton, the surname of an ancient and honourable family with us, carried gules, three annulets or, stoned azure. Some of this family are to be found witnesses in the charters of King William and the Alexanders II. and III. and were patriots for their King and country against the English, in the time of competition for the crown by Bruce and Balliol: And in the reign of King David II. Sir Hugh Eglinton of that ilk is Justicarius Londoni. This family ended in a daughter and heiress of Sir Hugh Eglinton, and his wife Giles, daughter of Walter High Steward of Scotland, and sister to King Robert II. who was married to Sir John Montgomery of Eaglesham: He got with her the baronies of Eglinton and Ar-drossin, of whom were descended Montgomeries Earls of Eglinton, who have of a long time been in use to quarter the arms of Eglinton with their own, of whom afterwards.

HUTTON of that Ilk, in the shire of Berwick, or, three annulets gules, Mackenzie's Heraldry. In our New Register, I find Doctor John Hutton said to be representor of Hutton of that Ilk; he was chief Physician to their Majesties 1692, and carried other arms, viz. or, a lion rampant azure between three arrows, points downward, 2 and 1, proper, headed and feathered argent, on a chief gules, as many bezants; crest, a serpent, catching a finger of a man's hand, which issues from a cloud, all proper: motto, Si Deus, quis contra?

HIRTON of that Ilk, argent, three annulets gules. Pont's Manuscript.

MOLIN in Bretagne, azure, three heads of lances, within an annulet argent, upon the account, says Menestrier, that one of that family, in a military exercise, before a great assembly, carried the ring three times on end.

LEAKE Earl of SCARSDALE, in Derbyshire, Baron Deincourt, of Sutton, argent, on a saltier in grained sable, nine annulets, or: This family was dignified with the title of Baron, by King James I. of Great Britain, and in the reign of King Charles I. Francis Lord Deincourt was advanced to the dignity of Earl, by the title of Scarsdale, who, in the time of the late Civil Wars, being a man of a great fortune and bright parts, manifested his loyalty, in a most exemplary manner to King Charles I.; for his two sons, dying in that king's service, and, having suffered much for his loyalty, in these ruinous times, he became so much mortified after the murder of his Sovereign King Charles I. that he apperceived himself in sackcloth, and causing his grave to be dug some years before his death, laid himself down in it every Friday, and exercising himself frequently in divine meditations and prayer, departed this life, at Sullen, anno 1655: He was succeeded by Nicolas his son, of whom is descended the present Earl of Scarsdale.

LOWTHER Viscount LONSDALE, which family is of great antiquity in Westmoreland. The name is local from the town and manor of Lowther, i. e. lower than the hills that surround it. Of this family there have been many eminent branches of the name.

Sir John LOWTHER, son and heir of Sir John Lowther of that Ilk, was created a Knight Baronet of Scotland, by King Charles I. but afterwards the family was raised to the honour of Baron Lowther of Lowther, and Viscount Lonsdale, in the year 1696. The armorial bearing of the family, or, six annulets, 3, 2, and 1, sable.

The name of Musgrave, azure, six annulets, 3, 2, and 1, or. Ibid. The name of Addison, in England, ermine, on a bend gules, three annulets or, a chief azure, charged with as many leopards' heads of the second: these belong, says Kent, in his Dictionary of Arms, to Joseph Addison, Esq. one of the Members of Parliament for Malmsbury. And there also the name of Amerville, parted per fesse indented, argent and gules, three annulets counter-changed. Also the bearing of Aylet, in England, azure, three annulets argent.

When annulets or great rings are carried in arms, one within another, the French call them vires.

"Vires," says Menestrier, "Sont anneaux passés les uns dans les autres, comme aux armoiries de virice: De gueules, a trois vires d'argent," i.e. gules, three annulets within one another, argent. As fig. 32.

From vires, are the terms viroles, and virole, in the blazons of figures that have hoops and rings round them, such as casks, barrels, battering-rams, hunting-bows, and other utensils, of which afterwards.

OF GUTTES AND GUTTE.

These I mention in the end of the sub-ordinaries, because they receive divers terms of blazons, according to the tinctures they are of. Guttes are drops of things that are liquid, either by nature or by art; if they be yellow, they are called gouttes d'or, drops of liquid gold; when white, gouttes de l'eau, or larmes d'argent, i.e. drops of water or tears, such as these with which they use to besprinkle funeral escutcheons and monuments of the dead on a black field. Thus the penitents of the Order of St Francis have, for arms, sable, semé de larmes, and a dove moving from the chief argent; the emblem of true repentance, coming from the Holy Spirit, represented by the dove; with the motto, Habis spiritus ejus, & fluent aequa.

When they are of red colour, they are called gouttes de sang, i.e. drops of blood; when blue, gouttes de larmes; when green, gouttes de vie, which represent the oil of olive; and, when black, gouttes de poix, from the French word which signifies pitch; though sometimes they are called gouttes de sable. These gouttes may be disposed as other figures in armories, 2 and 1; and, if more, the greatest numbers are in chief; and, if otherways, are after the position of the ordinaries.

Sir James Turner, sometime Major-General to King Charles II. quarterly, first and fourth sable, a St Katharine's wheel argent, second and third argent, 3 gouttes de sang, 2 and 1; crest, a heart flaming: motto, Tune cede malis.

Mr Archibald Turner, sometime one of the Ministers of Edinburgh, carries the same with Sir James, with a crescent for difference, as in our New Register.

The name of Athell of Northampton, in England, argent, a chevron sable, goutte d'or, Kent's Dictionary of Arms.

The name of Crossie there, argent, three gouttes de poix.

If these drops exceed the number ten, and irregularly sprinkle the field or charge, we then call them gouttes.

Cornwallis Lord Cornwallis of Eye, in Suffolk, sable, goutte argent, on a fesse of the last, three Cornish cheughs, proper; Imhoff, speaking of this family, says, "Scutum Baronis Cornwallis its delineaturn legi, nigrum lachrymis argenteis 'respersum, & baltheo ejusdem metalli distinctum, cui tres monedulae (i.e. jacks- daws) nigra impressae sunt."

Sir Frederick Cornwallis of Brome, in Suffolk, was made a Knight Baronet by King Charles I. who, for his loyalty to that king, suffered in his fortune and person, by imprisonment and exile; but on the Restoration of King Charles II. he was created Lord Cornwallis, by letters patent, dated 20th April 1661.

The ensign of the Episcopal See of Bangor, in Carnarvonshire, a bend argent, goutte de poix, between two mullets of the second.

With us, the ancient name of Mortimer, or, a lion rampant, sable, goutte of the first. Mackenzie's Heraldry. Fig. 34.

Mortimer of Vamouth, argent, a lion rampant, sable, goutte de l'eau. Balfour's Manuscript.

Mortimer of Craigievar, argent, a lion rampant, sable, goutte d'or, Pont's Manuscript. But Mortimer of Auchenboddy, barry of six pieces, or and azure, on a chief of the second, two pallets of the first; crest, a buck's head cabossed sable: motto, Acquirit qui inetur. Lyon Register.

Mr Gibbon gives an ancient bearing of drops, by one of the name of Drop, Lord Mayor of London, in the year of Edward IV. viz. argent, goutte de poix, on a chief gules, a lion passant gardant, or, which arms, says he, were standing in Cornhill, London 1666. He latins them thus, "Scutum argenteum, guttis atris respersum, caput autem scuti est sanguineum & leone gradiente aureo (obverso ore) exaratur."

Of Papelonne and Diapering of Arms.

I thought it was not amiss to add the explanation of these terms before I put an end to the first part of heraldry, that I might not seem to omit any figure or shadow of things that have their names from this science.

Papelonne is said of a field or charge that is covered with figures like the scales of a fish, as Monsieur Baron in his l'Art Heraldique, says, "Papelonne se dit de l'écu qui est remplé de figures semblables a des écailles," and gives for example the arms of Monti, gueules papelonné d'argent, fig. 35; and Menestrier says of it.
papelonné se dit d’un ouvrage à écaill es i.e. a work of scales; and gives, for instance, the arms of Arquinvilliers, d’ermine papelonné de guéules, i.e. ermine, papelonné gules. The same arms are given by Mr Kent in his Dictionary of Arms, and Ferne gives us such another, argent, papelonné gules: This figure is only frequent with the French; I have met with no English that has treated of it, but Holmes in his Academy of Armory, who has it from Ferne, and says, it signifies any thing beset with spangles; and, in his judgment, they may be termed, according to the English language, instead of or papelonné, gules mailed or escaloppy gules, seeing it resembles both iron rings quilted in coats of mail, and the lower part of escalop-shells; some artists say, he terms this in their profession, scallop-work, which, if this figure were in use for English coats, would be so termed.

Diapering is said when the field is shadowed with flourishings and various turnings by purfles of gold or silver, or other colours, after the form of flowers or leaves, as the weavers’ diaper-napery; the Germans practise it most in their illuminated arms, but rarely the Britons; such diaperings are to be found in armories; it is only used but to beautify the field and figure, and is no part of the blazon.

THE END OF THE FIRST PART.
HAVING treated of the proper figures in armories, I shall now give some general rules and observations relative to natural and artificial figures, called the common charges, with their attributes, which make the second part of this system; in which I am to describe and blazon them in their proper and armorial terms, according to their position, disposition, situation, and number in armorial bearings.

These, then, are the representations of all things, natural and artificial, animate and inanimate, which retain their own proper names and colours in this science, as they do in others, on which account they are called the common charges.

Of old, only hieroglyphics, emblems, and devices, the early seed of armories, were composed of such figures; for the ancientest arms in Europe are but old emblems and devices regulate into a form, and used as fixed hereditary marks of honour, to distinguish the noble from the ignoble.

We are not here to consider those figures either as hieroglyphical or symbolical, nor as devices; for then they would be but arbitrary and temporary, and might be used or laid aside by any person at pleasure, as serving only to show their inclinations or intentions, and to represent their present conditions or future designs: But we are here to consider these figures as armorial ones, representing something already performed, and as fixed marks of honour allowed by authority, and trans-missible to posterity, for distinguishing the noble from the ignoble. And, as it is said of nobility itself, of which they are signs, the older and longer its progression be, by descents, it is of more esteem and honour. The same may be said of the

Heralds tell us, that the good and commendable qualities of figures which form armorial bearings, do not give preference to some bearings before others, which have not figures of the like commendable qualities; but that all arms are of equal honour and dignity, data paritate gestantium, the bears being of equal dignity.
And though some consideration be had of the natural qualities of figures, by the first obtainers of arms, to represent the like virtues and good qualities in themselves, yet these figures being hereditary, and descending to all the issue, they cannot be supposed to represent the like good qualities in all of them, but can only be taken as a silent surname or tessera of their noble descent from the first assumers and obtainers of such arms; that being the main end of armories, as before defined, hereditary marks of honour, regularly composed of tinctures and figures granted by Sovereigns, for distinguishing persons, families, and communities.
Notwithstanding of which, it is to be observed, that there is a dignity, decent regularity, and beauty in armories; proceeding from the quality of the bearings, the regular disposition of the figures in the shield, and a certain number of them, which gives preference and lustre to arms so formed; of which I shall here briefly speak before I proceed to treat of the figures themselves.

And first, It must be owned that some figures are of more honour than others, and have precedence in an armorial sense; though not universally, yet in some certain places, as for instance, the armorial figures of sovereigns: Thus, the lion and double treasure are the most honourable figures that can be used in Scotland, because such compose the imperial ensign. In France they are not so honourable, for there the flower-de-luces have the precedence. In Sweden the crowns are preferrable to the lilies; and in the Empire the eagle is preferred to all others. Figures then within their respective dominions and jurisdictions are to be considered, as feudal arms, being those of patrons, which the vassals and clients carry in imitation of their over-lords and patrons, may be reckoned preferable within their jurisdictions; of which arms, I have treated in my Essay of the Ancient and Modern Use of Armories.

Again, a fair shield of arms, regularly formed with decent figures, is more preferrable and praise-worthy than an irregular one with mean and obscure figures, unfit to represent the honour and dignity of a worthy person. In remedy of which,
I shall add here some general rules from heralds.

I. In commendation of armories, say they, all creatures are presumed to be carried, upon account of their noble and best qualities; as a lion for his magnanimity, and not for his rapacious nature. A fox for his wit and cunning, and not on account of his pilfering and stealing. This is, says Guillim, the honour of a gentleman of coat-armour (the first obtainer of arms) to have his virtues under these types, and to consider the commendable properties of such tokens as he bears, thereby manifesting to the world that he hath the like good qualities in himself.

II. That every thing be placed in its natural posture, form, and colour; because nature is the chief model and pattern of art, providing there be no special reason for having them otherwise; that is to say, though the proper colour of an eagle be black, yet a red, green, or blue one, carried for distinction's sake, or upon other special accounts, is as honourable arms as that of the natural colour; data paritate gestantium, the bears being of equal dignity.

III. That magnanimous creatures ought to be represented in armories, in their fiestest postures, as lions, boars, &c. rampant, that is erected; because then they are presumed to show strength, as Bartolus de Insigniis says, "Animalia fera de" bint exprimi in actu ferociore."

IV. Other creatures that are not wild or ravenous ought to be represented in their noblest positions; as a horse salient, a grey-hound running, &c.

V. Creatures that are remarkable for any posture ought to be carried in that position, as a lamb passant, because it is naturally simple. A serpent gliding or circling in a knot, because remarkable for these postures.

VI. All things that have fore and hind parts, ante and post, should be carried in armories, looking to the right side of the shield; if to the left, they are said to be contourné. When two animals are in one field, they are always placed affronté, and look to one another, by the Germans, but not so by other nations. Of which afterwards.

VII. Heralds tell us also, that when arms of subjects are set up, or painted, near the place where the sovereign ones are, all the creatures in the arms of the subjects are to be turned looking to the sovereign’s. As Sylvester Petrus Sancta, “Sicubi tamen simulacrum, aut stemma principis, fuerit medio loco a dextra levaque, icones omnes gentilium parrularum, co converti debere.” And the same says Bartolus de Insigniti. When creatures are painted upon banners, they must look to the staff; when upon caparisons and other horse-furniture, they ought to look to the head of the horse or beast that bears them; and so of all things whose parts are distinguished by ante and post.

VIII. As the right side is nobler than the left, so the upper part of the shield is more noble than the lower part; therefore, tokens granted by sovereigns to subjects are always placed in chief.

IX. All things in arms, being of their own natural colour, are blazoned proper; such as grapes, peacocks, &c.

X. The most commendable part of any creature, in armories, is the head; for that, say heralds, shows that the bearer feared not to stand before the face of his enemy.

These are the general observations given by heralds concerning the common charges; whose nature to describe is not the business of those who act the part of a herald, but rather that of a natural philosopher, or of those conversing in hieroglyphics, emblems, and devices, which are composed only upon the consideration of the nature and qualities of the creatures; whereas in armories there are many other reasons, occasions, facts, and events, which bring those creatures into armories. These I may have occasion to mention, as I treat of them separately, in the arms of particular families, and blazon them in the terms of heraldry, as to their position, disposition, and situation in the shield.

I have already treated of the position, disposition, and situation of figures, as they accompany the ordinaries, and shall here insist a little, as they are situate alone without the ordinaries, and especially as to the number of figures in a shield. Number is counted by some to be one of the elements of armory, without which arms cannot be, for in them there must be some number, either of lines, tinctures, or resemblances of things.

Number then, (or rather things numbered in arms) is finite or indefinite. Finite, whose number is certain; as one, two, three, or more: Indefinite, whose number is uncertain in armories, as when they exceed sixteen, and are irregularly situate.

Arms may be looked upon as good and warrantable of whatsoever number of things they consist; yet the beauty of arms consists in a certain number of figures, keeping their due distance, fullness, and identity in the shield, which are called armorial numbers, and should be taken notice of, especially by those who give out arms to the public.

By an armorial number of figures, whether even or odd, I understand those figures which, being alone in the shield, are so situate, that in every rank one decreases to the base, and there end in one, which most agreeably declines to the form of a triangular shield, and gives a beauty to the eye.

Of all even numbers, those of six and ten can be so situate; as, for example, azure, six besants or, 3, 2 and 1. And gules, ten lozenges argent, 4, 3, 2 and 1, by the surname of Cuspin in England, as in Plate IX. fig. 13.

Figures of other even numbers cannot be so disposed to beautify the field, except they accompany other things, as two, a bend, four, a cross, and as many the saltier; eight handsomely fill a bordure; twelve may accompany a cross and saltier, placing three in each canton; and also sixteen, the same two ordinaries; placing four figures in each canton; as in the arms of the ancient family of Montmorency in France, or, a cross gules, betwixt sixteen alerions azure.
OF NATURAL AND ARTIFICIAL FIGURES.

As for the odd numbers, one is counted the best, being situate in the centre of the shield, and frequently to be seen in ancient paintings and engravings. Next to it is the number three, called of old ternio, or trilis; most frequently in arms, disposed 2 and 1, towards the angles of the shield. And these figures, being all of one kind, (which the ancients call identity) are said to represent but one thing multiplied to 2 and 1, for beauty's sake; as, for instance, the ancient Earls of Leicester carried gules, a cinquefoil ermine; and afterwards the family carried gules, three cinquefoils ermine; as did the old Earls of Angus, gules, a cinquefoil or; and the Gonons of old, a boar's head couped or; as did many other old families with us, whose old arms I have seen, which had but one figure, afterwards multiplied to 3, 2 and 1.

There is none of all the odd number that decreases, in every rank one, to the point of the shield, except the number three, and number fifteen: For an example of the last, I shall mention the arms of the duchy of Cornwall in England, azure, fifteen besants or, 5, 4, 3, 2 and 1.

The odd numbers of things, by their situation in a shield, are capable of more armorial forms than the even numbers; which Edward Bolton observes, in his Elements of Armories, and lays down this for a rule, that no even number of things, of one kind, possessing the field only, and alone, and keeping all of them one state or way, with requisite distance, can be capable of such diversity of forms in their situation as the odd. For example, five figures can be placed in cross, and in salter, as the five escutcheons in the arms of the Kingdom of Portugal in cross, and the five stars of eight points gules, in salter, in a field or; for which see Plate X. fig. 16. It may be objected, that four figures may be placed formally in cross, as the four filbert-nuts, Plate VI. fig. 25. And there the four flower-duces in cross, fig. 26. To which it is answered, these figures do not keep the same state and way mentioned in the above rule, not being situate one way, nor after their natural position; which, if they were, the centre or middle of the shield would be empty, and so a deformity would appear.

Figures placed in bend, bar, and pale, are always of an odd number, for four figures so disposed are hardly to be met with; but frequently three, or five, which are armorial numbers. Plate IV. fig. 23. Argent, five fusils in fesse sable. And there, azure, three stars in fesse argent.

Whether these armorial figures be odd or even, there is these three things to be observed, as the causes of armorial beauties, which are, distance, fullness, and identity, which I shall show by the following examples.

The number three is beautiful, being disposed 2 and 1, with equal distance, but without that there will appear a deformity and want; thus, if two stars were placed in chief, and the third in the centre of the shield, for want of spreading distance, the arms would be placed deformed, except the third appear below, towards the base.

As to fulness, when there are three stars in chief, as in the arms of Dalmahoy of that Ilk, Plate IV. fig. 34. (though these arms be warrantable and good) the three stars having requisite distance in regard of themselves, yet the arms fail of complete beauty, being destitute of fulness in respect of the whole shield; for the designed end of arms is manifestation, and the more extended and dilated the figures are in the shield, the more manifest they must be, that every angular portion of the shield may answer the eye with an object: So that if one of the stars were placed towards the base, in equal distance with the other two, the coat would be then more beautiful; and, being azure, three stars argent, would belong to the name of Murray: So that beauty here cedes to necessity, by placing the stars in chief, to distinguish Dalmahoy from Murray, the last having them disposed 2 and 1; in which bearing are three causes of armorial beauties, distance, fulness, and identity.

Identity is when the figures are of one kind: If of different kinds, there appears a discord or deformity, let the figures be never so noble: Amongst many examples to be met with in this system, I shall only mention the arms of Wauchope of Niddry, Plate IV. fig. 35. azure, a garb or, and in chief two mullets argent: Though the arms be good and warrantable, yet beauty failth, because the figures are not all of one sort.
When three things of one kind are situate, 2 and 1, their situation is seldom mentioned in the blazon, being supposed always to be so; and also, when they accompany the ordinaries, the fesse and bar. When many figures are situate in a shield, the greatest number is always upmost, and decreaseth always in number towards the base; in which is beauty, as is observed before. But if contrary ways situate, the smallest number uppermost, there is deformity; for which the French say, in blazon, mal-ordonnés.

Indefinite numbers of figures, in arms, is, when they exceed sixteen, and are irregularly placed: And, in blazon, they are said to be sans nombre; or seulé. Sans nombre is said of figures, when more than sixteen, and irregularly situate, and all entire within the shield; which the English call arma gerat&M, or powdered, with such figures. The term seulé, more frequently used in blazon, is thought to be brought from the Latin word seminariis to sow, because then the figures are sown over the field as seed. Some bring the term seulé from semé half a thing, because the half part of some of the semé figures appears on the sides of the shield: And so semé differs from sans nombre, gerating or powdering: As the old arms of France, azure, six flower-de-luces or: And in the arms of Denmark, or, semé of hearts gules, three lions passant gardant azure, Plate X. fig. 35. For the term semé, see page 24. And so much for numbers, and the causes of armorial beauties.

I now proceed to treat of the common charges separately. And, as for the method I take, it is not much matter with which of them I begin, since their knowledge does not depend upon one another, nor any precedence due to them to be here considered; neither is it here to be expected, that I should treat of all natural and artificial things, but only of such as fall within the compass of our practice in armories in Britain, and other places, where they are signs and notes of nobility.

CHAPTER II.

OFGE CELESTIAL FIGURES, THE SUN, MOON, AND STARS.

The sun, the chief of all planets and celestial bodies, is latined, say some, sol, quia aume*, exortus omnibus planetis solus apparat, i.e. when it appears, it is seen alone in the heavens; upon which account, when Louis le Grand, as the only hero in Europe, over-run Flanders, in the year 1672, he took for his device the sun, with the motto, Unus in orbe: But here we are to speak of the sun as an armorial figure, and carried by several families in Europe, as relative to their name; and upon other accounts.

The family of Solis, in Spain, carries gules, a sun or.

Sonenberg, in Switzerland, azure, the sun in his glory, as relative to the name: such another bearing is carried in the achievement of the Marquis of Lothian, as a coat of augmentation. Plate X. fig. 1.

With us the name of Brownhill, azure, the sun in his glory, between three flower-de-luces argent; and for crest, a mount, the sun arising out of the top of it, both proper; with the motto, Radii omnia lustrant. Pont's Manuscript.

The name of Gilchrist, azure, the sun in his splendour, between two cross patées fitted in chief, and a mullet in base argent. Sir George Mackenzie.

When the sun is of the metal or, in blazon, it is said to be proper, or in its splendour, or glory; and is always represented with rays and beams, whereof the one half straight, being the beams; and the other, the rays, are crooked or waved, the number of them being ordinarily twelve or sixteen. "Sol pingitur," says Sylvester Petru Sanceta, " semper radii circumfusius duodenis, isaque partim rectis, partim " autem crispatis seu sinusosis."

In England, the name of Sunybank in Oxfordshire, azure, on a bank in base, a sun arising, both proper. Morgan's Heraldry.

The surname of Richmond there, azure, a sun in his glory. Morgan's Heraldry.

* The word aume, in this quotation, unintelligible: We suspect the author meant to refer to the common derivation, "sol quod solis apparat, ceteris sideribus suo fulgere obscursatur." E.
THOMPSON Lord Haversham, whose family is thought to have come from the north, and settled in Hertfordshire; from which was descended Maurice Thompson in Haversham, in the county of Bucks. He was an eminent merchant, and was made by King Charles II. a knight-baronet, in the year 1673, the 25th year of that king's reign. He for a long time continued Member of the House of Commons, till the year 1696 that he was created a peer, by the title of Baron Haversham of Haversham; whose arms are, or, on a fesse dancette azure, three stars argent, a canton of the second charged with a sun in its splendour.

The Cressoles in France, azure, three suns, proper, 2 and 1, as relative to the name, as Sylvester Petra Sancta, from Marcus Gilbert.

Bailie of Jerviswood, descended of the family of Bailie of St John's-Kirk, sable, a sun or, between nine stars argent, 3, 2, 3 and 1; crest, a crescent or; motto, Major virtus quam splendor. New Register.

Bailie of Manner-Hall, a second son of Jerviswood, carries the same, with a crescent for his difference.

I have not met with any armorial bearings where the sun is argent, but always of or.

When the sun is in the arms of, or surrounded with stars of the same; and the body of the sun parted per pale, with the arms of Castile and Leon: On the account, that one of the family, Grand Master of the Order of Calatrava, being at the siege of the Castle of Vilohes in Spain, then in the hands of the Moors, was the first that mounted on the wall, and planted the standards of Castile and Leon, then, in the presence of their kings. He got those arms thus blazoned by Favin, "d'azur a un soleil d'or entoure d'etoiles de meme, et dans le " rond du dikt soleil du Castile parti de Leon."

Mr Holmes, in his Academy of Armory, gives us some blazons like to the last, where the body of the sun is charged with figures.

Sylvester Petra Sancta gives an example of the sun counter-changed, Plate X. fig. 6. parted per bend dexter, azure and or, the sun counter-changed, which he describes thus: "Sol ab angulo dextro partitione diagonia sectus, & semi-aureus " in supero semisse, cyanoc, semi-cyanus, vero in aureo imo semisse, est Volsgch " aeniorum inditione tiro lensi." Plate X. fig. 3.

The name of Pearson in Devonshire, parted per fesse crenellé, gules and azure, three suns, proper. Morgan's Heraldry.

The name of Adam there, azure, a ray of the sun issuing out of the dexter corner bend-ways, proper.

OF THE MOON.

It is never carried in arms, says Sylvester Petra Sancta, full: Luna nunquam pin- gitar orbe pleno. He tells us not the reason; which may be, that it is then taken for the sun, argent. In devices, it has been used full, as in that of the late Dauphine of France, which had the full moon for its body and for the soul, uno sole minor; when his father Lewis XIV. had for his device, unus solus in orbe.

I have met sometimes with the full moon in arms, which is then said to be in her complement; the English tell us it must be always argent; as Guillim, who says, when we blazon by planets, we name gold, sol; and silver, luna; and for a farther distinction of it from the sun, its rays are small, as the light of the moon is weak. Thus, in the arms of John de Fontibus, accounted the sixth Bishop of Ely in England, is carried azure, the sun in chief, and full moon in base, within an orle of seven stars or.

Christopher Bailie of Walston, descended of the family of St John's-Kirk, azure, the moon in her complement, between nine stars argent, 3, 2, 3, and 1;
OF CELESTIAL FIGURES, &c. 231
crest, a dove volant holding in her beak a branch of olive: motto, patior & spero.
Lyhou Register. Plate X. fig. 4.
The half moon is frequently in armories an ancient sign of honour with many nations. The priests of the Jews, as a sign of eminency, had their tires and mitres after the form of a half moon; as the prophet Isaiah tells them, that their tires like the moon should be taken from them. The Romans used the half moon as a sign of honour, which they wore on their shoes, called lunati calcei, and were allowed to none but those that were noble. The false prophet Mahomet, who began to appear in anno 674, had an half moon on his ensign, which is still continued; and St Lewis of France, in the year 1269, upon his expedition to Africa, to honour and encourage his subjects, instituted an order of knighthood, called the Double Crescents, i. e. half moons; of which the collar of the order was composed, and thence hung for badge, a ship; for which that order was called sometimes, the Order of the ship.
The half moon is termed crescent, increcent, decrecent, and crescent reversed, according to its position in the shield.

THE CRESCENT.
It is the half moon with the points or horns upward towards the end of the shield, Plate X. fig. 5. By the Latin, luna erectis cornibus, or cornibus sursum versis; and by the French, croissant, or croissant montant, to distinguish it from increcent. Many families in Europe carry crescents: Some as relative to their name, as the families of Luna in Spain, Crescenti in Rome, Lunati in Pavia, and the Lonati in Milan.
Others again, upon the account their lands and territories are formed like a half moon: Thus, the city of Bourdeaux, in Guienne, is, by cosinographers, called portus luna, because situate like a half moon in the river Garonne, for which it carries in its arms a crescent.
The ancient and honourable family of SEATON may be said to have assumed crescents for armorial figures, upon the account that their ancient territories and lands, in East-Lothian, are formed by the river of Forth into three great bays, lke three half moons; and from which lands they have the surname of Seaton, which is among the ancientest surnames with us. They had other lands in England, as Seaton in Northumberland, now called Seaton-Delaval, since it was possessed by the honourable family of the name of Delaval, and Seaton of Whitbystrand, in Yorkshire; for proof of this, Dugdale, in his Baronage of England, tom. II.
page 736, says, that Edmond Manly, who had behaved himself so valorously in the wars against Scotland, obtained from King Edward I. the manor of Seaton of Whitbystrand, which was a part of the lands of Christopher Seaton, (one of the progenitors of the family of Seaton, Earls of Winton) who married the sister of Robert the Bruce, King of Scotland. As for the antiquity of this noble family, we have, by the history of the family, and an old genealogical tree, and other documents, that Dougal de Seaton, who lived in the reign of King Edgar, son to King Malcolm III. was succeeded by his son, Seber de Seaton, in the lands of Seaton, Winton and Winchburgh, who is to be found a witness in the charters of King David I.; and his son, Alexander de Seaton, is witness in that king's charters to Walter de Riddile, (as in Sir James Dalrymple's Collections.) And his son and successor, Philip de Seaton, obtains a charter of confirmation of the above-mentioned lands which belonged to his father: Which principal charter I had several times in my hands, of which I shall give here a short abstract.
"Williamus Dei gratia, Rex Scotorum Episcopis, &c. sciatris presentes & futuri me concessisse, & hoc presenti charta mea confirmasse, Philippo de Seaton, terram quæ fuit patris Seaton & Winton, & Winchburgh tenendum, sibi & hæreditibus suis, de & hæreditibus meis, per servitium unitis militis, &c." to which the king's seal is appended; on the one side is the king's image, on a throne, and on the other side on, horseback, holding a sword in his right hand, and a shield in his left.

Philip de Seaton, by his Lady Alice, daughter to Waldeve, Earl of Dunbar, had his son and successor.

Sir Alexander Seaton got another charter of confirmation of the abovementioned lands from the same king, about the end of his reign; which is in the charter- chest of the Earl of Winton, which I have also seen. And this Alexander Seaton is to be met with as a witness.

In the charter of Averus de Quincey, of the lands of Beith to the Abbacy of Dunfermline, he married Margaret, daughter to Walter Barclay, Chancellor to King William; the arms of Barclay are painted and impaled with Sir Alexander’s; his wife on the genealogical tree of the family, assure, a chevron between nine cross pates, six in chief, and three in base argent; as on the seal of the Chancellor’s, frequently to be met with, appended to evidents. Their grandson, or rather great-grandson, was Sir Christopher Seaton, who bravely stood for the freedom of his country against the English usurpations, and joined Robert the Bruce for the recovery of his kingdom; and, at the battle of Methven, was one of those brave worthies that rescued King Robert out of the hands of the English and Scots rebels, as our historians and the English, too, tell to their immortal glory. This piece of signal and eminent service endeared him much to the king, who gave to him, in marriage, his sister, Christian Bruce, with whom he had issue. He adhered to his king in all his troubles, and, at last, had the ill fortune to be taken by the English, and carried to London, where, with his brother John Scaton, and his brother-in-law Nigel Bruce, the king’s brother, were all put to death by order of Edward I. as in Howe’s History of England, page 210 and 211. King Robert, after he had recovered and settled his kingdom, in memory of the said Sir Christopher and his lady, erected a chapel near Dumfries, that prayers might be said for their souls; the ruins of which are yet known by the name of Christal’s Chapel; the Charter of Erection is to be seen in the Lawyer’s Library.

On the genealogical tree of Seaton are finely illuminated the arms of Christian Bruce, quarterly, first and fourth or, a sattier and chief gules, for Bruce; second and third or, a chevron gules, for the Earldom of Carrick; which arms her father and brother carried before the last’s accession to the crown, impaled with these of Seaton, gules, three crescents or.

Their son and successor, Sir Alexander Seaton, nephew to King Robert the Bruce, was restored to his lands which his progenitors had possessed in Scotland; but could not, by his uncle the king, be put in possession of these lands which belonged to the family in England; which, as Dugdale, in his forecited book, tells us, were of as great value as his Scotch estate. In place of which, he granted him many privileges, erecting the lands of Seaton into a free barony; and, in another charter, in liberam suaverrimum, discharging all persons to hunt, hawk, or fish within that barony, without consent of Sir Alexander and his successors: Which charters are dated at Berwick the 16th year of his reign; and, the same year, he grants a charter, erecting the town of Seaton into a burgh of barony, with a free weekly market. Besides, he grants a charter to Sir Alexander for his special services of the lands of Fawside, Elphingston, and that part of the barony of Tranent which belonged to Sir William Ferrier; and the lands of Dundas, cum Villa Passagii Regiae, i.e. Queensferry; and, by another charter, of the dominium totius de West-Craig; all which are dated at Berwick, the 16th year of that king’s reign. And further, he grants to the said Sir Alexander, two charters of the barony of Barns in East-Lothian; the one is in French, where he mentions Sir Alexander’s valour and faithful service, in the kingdom of Ireland, for his brother King Edward Bruce, which is sealed by the King’s sigillum secretum, whereon is a plain shield, without trimmings, of the arms of Scotland. The other charter of the barony of Barns is in Latin, under the king’s Great-Seal, where on the one side he is enthroned, and on the other, upon horseback, in his coat armour; upon his left arm a shield of the arms of Scotland; and, upon the caparisons of his horse, both behind and before, are the same arms; all which charters I have seen in the Earl of Winton’s charter-chest, and taken copies of them too long here to be inserted.

Sir Alexander is often to be met with as a witness in the same king’s charters, with other great men, designed militibus only; as with Sir Thomas Randolph Earl of Murray, Lord Annandale and Man, Patrick Dunbar Earl of March, Walter, Great Steward of Scotland, and James Lord Douglas. But after the 22nd year of that king's reign, when it is said those received the ancient Order of St Andrew or the Thistle, and which is very probable, these great men are not then de-signèd militibus, a title common to ordinary knights, but are designed patriæ millitibus, as extraordinary knights; and are witnesses in that charter of King Robert's, confirming the donations of King Edgar and King David I. to the church of Dur-lam, of the date the 15th of November, the 21st year of his reign, in Hadding-ton's Collections.

This Sir Alexander, upon account of his maternal descent, was the first of his family that placed the double trezure round the crescents, Plate X. fig. 11. and got from that king a coat of augmentation, as Sir George Mackenzie has also observed, viz. gules, a sword supporting an imperial crown, to perpetuate to posterity the memory of his own and progenitors' worthy actions for their king and country.
He was also Governor of Berwick upon Tweed, and had the town in feu-farm, as is evident by the Burrow-Rolls of Exchequer in those times. In other charters he is designated, Custos Villes Berwick, sur Tweedam, as in a charter of Adam Hepburn, in the year 1320, to John Renton, burgess of Berwick, of lands in the village of Mordington. He married Isabel, sister to the Earl of Fife, in which country he was when Edward Baliol, with the English and Scots rebels, made a descent from England into Fife; against whom, Sir Alexander, with all the force he could gather at the time, marched and gave them battle; but had the misfortune to be defeat and killed near Kinghorn, in the year 1330, as our historians and the English Holinshed tell us.

Sir Alexander Seaton succeeded his father in his estate and office, as governor of Berwick, where he gave an evident testimony of his inherent loyalty, and personal valour and resolution, in defending the town of Berwick against King Edward III. on the head of a most potent army. How the said Alexander carried, in all the dismal periods of that fatal siege, I recommend the reader to our own and English historians, who magnify him as a great and worthy patriot. He had for his wife Christian Cheyne, of the family of Straloch, and with her had issue, besides William and Thomas Sentons, who were execute at Berwick, Alexander his successor, and John, who married Elizabeth Ramsay heiress of Parbroth.

Which Sir Alexander succeeded his father, and married Margaret, sister to William Murray, designed Captain of the Castle of Edinburgh, as by the history of the family. Her arms, being three stars within a double treisure, impaled with those of her husband, are cut on a stone, yet to be seen on the south side of the Collegiate Church of Seaton.

Their son, Sir William Seaton, who is said, by the History of the Family, to have been created Lord Seaton, married Katharine, daughter to Sinclair of Hrdmanston, whose arms on the genealogical tree, impaled with her husband's, are argent, a cross ingrained azure. Sir William's arms are also to be seen engraven on a stone upon the south door of the church of Seaton, upon a shield coubré, three crescents within a double treisure; which shield is timbred with a side standing helmet, with violets; and, in place of a wreath, a ducal crown; and upon it, for crest, a crescent, between two plumes of feathers, supported by two mertrixes, the present supporters of the family. And near to this achievement there is a little shield, charged with a cross ingrained, for his lady, who bore to him two sons and five daughters.

John, the heir and successor, and Alexander, who, by marriage with Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Adam Gordon of Gordon, was not only the common ancestor of the family of Gordon, but also of the Sentons of Touch and Meldrum, of whom afterwards. Sir William's eldest daughter, Isabel Seaton, was married to Sir John Stewart of Darnly, of whom came the Lords Darnley and Aubigny in France; and of them Henry Lord Darnly, Prince of Scotland, father of King James VI. The second daughter, Margaret, was married to John Lord Kennedy, progenitor of the Earls of Cassils. The third, Marion, to Sir John Ogilvie, of whom the Earls of Arth. The fourth, Jean, to John Lyle Lord Lyle. The fifth, Katharine, to Bernard Haldane of Glencairne.

Sir John Seaton succeeded his father Sir William, and, by all writers, is designed Lord Seaton. He was Master of the Household to King James I. and attended Margaret the king's daughter to France, in order to her marriage with Lewis the Dauphine, eldest son of Charles VII. of France. He died the 5th year of the reign of James II. and was interred in the Collegiate Church of Seaton. He had with his lady, Janet Dunbar, daughter to George Earl of March, George his successor, and a daughter, Janet, married to Robert Keith, Marischal of Scotland.

Which George, Lord Seaton, married Lady Jean Stewart, only daughter and heir of John Stewart Earl of Buchan, in whose right he claimed the Earldom of Buchan: And ever since, the family, to show their right of pretension, have been in use to carry the feudal arms of that family, and marshal them with their own. Their son John, master of Seaton, died in the lifetime of his father, leaving issue by Mary, his wife, daughter of the Lord Lindsay, George, who succeeded his grandfather in his estate and honours.

Which George, third Lord Seaton, married Isabel, daughter of Colin first Earl of Argyle. She bore to him George his successor; John, who married Sinclair, the heiress of Northrig, the first of the Seatons of that family, and a daughter, Margaret, married to William Maitland of Lethlington. He died 1538, and was succeeded by George, fourth Lord Seaton, who married Jean Hepburn, eldest daughter to Patrick first Earl of Bothwell. He was killed with King James IV. at Flodden, 1513. His own arms, and his lady's, are yet to be seen on a great stone above the principal gate of the House of Seaton, thus, quarterly, first and fourth Seaton, as before; second and third, three garbs, for the Earldom of Buchan, impaled with those of his lady's; also, quarterly, first and fourth, on a chevron, two lions pulling at a rose, for Hepburn; second and third, a bend for Vass Lord Dirleton; which arms are adorned with helmet and mantlings, and a mertrix-head for a crest; supported on the right side by a mertrix, and on the left by a lion; and above all, for a motto, Set for ward. He had with his lady, a son, George, his successor, and a daughter, Marion, married to Hugh Earl of Eglinton.

George succeeded his father. He married Elizabeth Hay, daughter of John Lord Yester, whose arms are dimidiate with those of her husband's in the House of Seaton. He had, with her, two sons, George, his successor, and John, first of the family of Carriston: Likewise four daughters, Marion, married to William Earl of Montceith; Margaret, to Sir Robert Logan of Restalrig; Helen, to Hugh Lord Somerville; Beatrix, to Sir Walter Ogilvie of Dunlugas. He departed this life the 17th of June 1545: And was succeeded by George, sixth Lord Seaton, was Provost of Edinburgh, in the Regency of Queen Mary of Lorraine, and was commissioned by the States of Scotland, the 16th of March 1557, to treat with the French King about the marriage of Queen Mary with Francis the Dauphin. When Queen Mary returned to Scotland from France, he was Master of the Household to her Majesty. In the House of Seaton his picture is curiously done, in his own time, where he is made to hold the button of his office, being red semé of M. R. ensigned with imperial crowns. He was made one of the Lords of her Privy Council, and was one of the Knights of the most noble Order of the Thistle; for, on the great hall of the House of Seaton, his arms are yet to be seen, quartered with those of the Earldom of Buchan, surrounded with the collar of that Order, with the badge of St Andrew pendent: Which, with the Sovereign's, are to be seen finely carved on the boxing of the chimney of that magnificent hall. He likewise repaired the fore part of the House of Seaton, and especially that room called Samson's Hall, which he adorned with a roof of a curious structure; whereupon are twenty-eight large achievements, being those of Scotland, France, Lorraine, and the noble families that were allied with his family, curiously embossed and illuminated, and are the most exact pieces of armories to be met with. He firmly adhered to Queen Mary in all her troubles with an inviolable fidelity. Her son King James VI. had a great respect and value for him, insomuch, that he was pleased, in the year 1583, to send him ambassador extraordinary to the court of France; which negotiation he performed with honour and success; and which commission is in the charter-chest of Seaton. He died soon after his return, on the 8th January 1584. He had, for his lady, Isabel Hamilton, daughter to Sir William Hamilton of Sanquhar, Lord High Treasurer of Scotland, in the reign of King James V. and his wife Katharine Kennedy, a daughter of.

the Earl of Cassillis. Her arms and his are curiously dimidiated in the abovementioned hall. She bore to him Robert his successor; John, the first of the family of Barns; Alexander, the first Earl of Dunfermline; Sir William Seaton, one of the Chief Justices of the Borders of Scotland and England, and General Post-Master, in which office his son Sir William succeeded him, and died without issue; and a daughter, Margaret, married to Claud, Lord Paisley, of whom are descended the Earls of Abercom.

Robert, seventh Lord Seaton, was, with all solemnity and pomp, at Holyrood-house, created Earl of Winton, Lord Seaton and Tranent, the 5th of November 1650. He was the first of our nobility, as I observed elsewhere, that took a coat of augmentation as Earl, viz. azure, a star of twelve points or, which he placed by way of an escutcheon over his quartered arms, and has been since, by his successors, impaled with the coat of special concession, beforementioned, granted to the family by King Robert the Bruce. He departed this life 1623, and left issue by Margaret Montgomery, his wife, daughter to Hugh Earl of Eglinton, Robert, who died without issue; George, who succeeded; Sir Alexander, who became Earl of Eglinton; Sir Thomas, of whom the Seatons of Olivestob; Sir John of St Germain; and a daughter, Lady Isabel, married first to James the first Earl of Perth. She bore to him a daughter, Jean, married to the Earl of Sutherland. Secondly, she married Francis Stewart, son to Francis Earl of Bothwell.

Which George was Earl of Winton. He married first Lady Anna Hay, daughter to Francis Earl of Errol, by whom he had George Lord Seaton, who died in his father's lifetime, leaving a son, George, by Henrietta his wife, daughter of George Marquis of Huntly, who succeeded his grandfather; whose second son, Sir Alexander, was the first Viscount of Kingston. Likewise a daughter, Lady Elizabeth, married to William Earl Marischal. Secondly, he married Elizabeth Maxwell, daughter to John Lord Herries, with whom he had Sir John Seaton of Garleton, Sir Robert Seaton of Windygowl, who died without issue, Isabel, married to Francis Lord Semple, Anna, to John Earl of Traquair, Mary, to the Earl of Carnwath. Earl George built the House of Winton, where his arms, and those of his two ladies are finely cut. He died the 17th of December 1659, and was succeeded by his grandson.

George Earl of Winton was educate in France, both at court and camp, where he accomplished himself in the knowledge of arms and arts. He gave an eminent proof of his conduct and bravery at the siege of Besancon in Burgundy. He came over to England with a singular reputation, where he was graciously received by King Charles II. and made one of his Majesty's Privy Council in Scotland. He married first Mary, daughter of Hugh Earl of Eglinton, and with her had a daughter, who died young. Secondly, he married Christian, daughter and co-heir of John Hepburn of Adiston, and with her had two sons, George Lord Seaton, and Mr Christopher, who died unmarried. The Lord Seaton went abroad to his travels in June 1702, and before his return his mother died, the 18th of November 1703, and was interred in the north-aisle of the Collegiate Church of Seaton. His father, the Earl, died soon after, the 6th of March 1704.

George Lord Seaton, being Earl of Winton after his father's death, returned home from his travels the 1st of November 1707. He buried his father with a great pomp and solemnity, in the abovementioned aisle, beside his mother: The achievement then used at that solemnity was, quarterly, first and fourth or, three crescents within a double trezure, flowered and counter-flowered gules, for Seaton; second and third azure, three garbs or, as a coat de pretension to the Earl-dom of Buchan; over all, by way of surtous, an escutcheon parted per pale; on the dexter, gules, a sword pale-ways, proper, hilted and pommelled or, supporting an imperial crown within a double trezure of the last, as arms of special concession by King Robert the Bruce; and on the sinister, azure, a blazing star of twelve points argent, within a double trezure counter-flowered or, for the title of Winton. Which arms were adorned with crown, helmet, and violets, suitable to the quality; and, in place of the wreath, a ducal crown; and upon it for crest, a dragon vert, spouting fire, proper, with wings elevated and charged with a star argent: above, on an escrol, for motto, Hazard set forward; supporters, two mertrixes, proper, coloured or, and charged with three crescents gules; to their collars chains are.
fixed, passing between their fore legs, and reflexing over their backs; upon an escrol, coming from behind the shield, and passing over the middle of the supporters, are these words, \textit{Intaminatis fulget honoribus}, relative to the surnout: And on the compartment upon which the supporters stand, are these words, \textit{Invia virtutis via nullas}, the old motto of the family.

The branches of this noble family of the surname of Seaton (besides those who have changed the name) whose arms I find upon record, are these following, according to the time of their descent from the principal stem.

The first is \textbf{John Seaton}, fourth son of the famous Sir Alexander Seaton of that Ilk, Governor of Berwick, and his lady, Christian Cheyne. He got the lands of Parbroth by marrying Elizabeth Ramsay, heiress thereof. She bore to him a son, Alexander, whose arms I have seen illuminated in the House of Seaton, being the paternal coat of Seaton, with the double presure, with a small crescent in the centre, for his difference, his father being the second son of the family who had issue. His son was Sir Gilbert Seaton of Parbroth, father of Sir Alexander and John. From Alexander the lineal succession continued till the reign of King James VI.

From John descended \textbf{John Seaton}, who married Janet Lathrisk heiress of Lathrisk, of whom are descended the present Seaton of Lathrisk; who have been in use to carry the paternal coat of Seaton, with a boy's head in the centre, for difference, being the armorial figure of the name of Lathrisk.

Sir Alexander Seaton, second son of Sir William Seaton of that Ilk, and his lady, Katharine, daughter to Sinclair of Herdmanston, married Elizabeth Gordon, daughter and heiress of Sir Adam Gordon of Gordon and Strathbogie. She bore to him Alexander Seaton, who succeeded, of whom afterwards; and \textbf{William Seaton}, the first of the family of Meldrum, by marrying Elizabeth Meldrum, daughter and heiress of \textit{William de Meldrum}, who, dying about the end of King James I.'s reign, left the estate to his daughter and son-in-law; whose son and successor was Alexander Seaton, who was served heir to his mother, heiress of Meldrum, 1456, and married a daughter of Sutherland Laird of Duffus, progenitor of the present Lord Duffus; and he quartered the arms of Meldrum, being argent, a demi-otter issuing out of a bar, waved sable, with the paternal coat of Seaton. By whom he had

William Seaton, who married Elizabeth Leslie, daughter to the Laird of Wards; and with her he had only one son, Alexander, who was served heir to his grandfather, 1512. He married Agnes, daughter to Gordon of Haddo, predecessor to the present Earl of Aberdeen; by whom he had two sons, William his successor, and Alexander, Chancellor of Aberdeen, and Vicar of Bethelney.

Which William married, for his first wife, Janet, daughter to Gordon of Lessmore. She bore to him three sons, Alexander, John, and William, stiled portioner of Slety; and, after her death, for his second wife, Margaret Innes, by whom he had two sons; Mr George Seaton, who was Chancellor of Aberdeen, and purchaser of the estate of Bara, which he left to the house of Meldrum, and James Seaton, Progenitor of the Seaton's of Pitmedden. William Seaton of Meldrum died in the year 1571, and was succeeded by his eldest son.

Alexander married Elizabeth, daughter of Irvine of Drum, by whom he had Alexander, who, in the year 1584, married Christian, daughter to Michael Fraser of Stonywood, predecessor to the present Lord Fraser; and, by her, had only one daughter, Elizabeth, who, in the year 1610, married John Urquhart of Craigminty; but he dying before his father, his father took a second wife, Jean, daughter to Abernethy Lord Salton, by whom he had two sons, John and William, successively Lairds of Meldrum, who died without issue; and, by the last, the course of succession in the male line, in whom the estate of Meldrum stood tailzied, was altered, and, by disposition, conveyed to Patrick Urquhart of Lethendy, his grandson- nephew, in prejudice of the heirs-male of John Seaton, his uncle.

Which John was second son of \textbf{William Seaton} of Meldrum, and Janet, daughter of Gordon of Lessmir. He married Marjory Panton, daughter to John Panton of Pitmedden, who, by resignation of his father, became seized of the lands of Lumfart and Broomhill, and the heirs of his body, confirmed by charter under the Great Seal, in the year 1575, as were the lands of Moiney, anno 1597.
He was succeeded by his son William Seaton, designed of Mounie, and served heir to his father in those lands, 1597. He married first Helen, daughter and heir of Woodney of that Ilk, for which he was designed Seaton of Woodney; by her he had sons, William and Alexander of Kinkilch; and, by his second wife, Marjory, a daughter of Innes of Coats, three sons, James, David, and Thomas.

William, the eldest son and successor, married Margaret, daughter of Sir Robert Graham of Morphy: It was this William that was disappointed of the estate of Meldrum, by his cousin William Seaton, the last of the name of Seaton of Meldrum, by breaking the tuitie as abovementioned. He had with his wife two sons, who died without issue, and William, whose only son James, died also without issue, in France, of the wounds he received in the French service at the siege of Lisle, 1707; so that the representation of the Seatons of Meldrum fell to the heirs of Alexander Seaton of Kinloch, second son of William Seaton of Woodney, and Helen Woodney, his spouse.

Which Alexander Seaton married Margaret Body, heiress of Pitfour, by whom he had only six daughters; and to his second wife, he married Mary Murray, one of the maids of honour to King Charles I's Queen, daughter of Sir Mungo Murray of Craigie, by Margaret Halket, a daughter of Pitifran, and which Sir Mungo was third son to Sir Robert Murray of Abercairny, by Catharine, daughter of Sir William Murray of Tullibardin; by her he had two sons, Alexander, who died abroad in his travels, and Robert, now living. This Alexander, during the rebellion against King Charles I raised a troop of the horse which he kept up upon his own expences for two years and more; after which, dismounting his men, with them he kept the castle of Ravenscraig nine months for the king, for which he was fined, and obliged to pay to the then prevailing powers 60000 marks for his loyal services, which proved the ruin of the family. He died at Kinkilch, in October 1672, and was succeeded by his only surviving son.

Which Robert Seaton, who, by the death of the above James Seaton of Mounie, grandson to William Seaton, his father's eldest brother, to whom he is served and restored heir, became the true and immediate heir-male and representative of the Seatons of Meldrum; he married Katharine, daughter of James Fall, Gentleman in Dunbar, and his wife Elizabeth, a daughter of Cockburn of Cedra, by whom he has issue, four sons, Robert, George, William, and James; Robert, sometime Captain in the third Regiment of Guards, and late Lieutenant-Governor of Blackness Castle, married to Mary Long, daughter of Richard Long of Brimzy, Esq. in Somersethire, and Francis Bransby, his wife. George Seaton was also an Officer in the Scots Guards; William, a Writer to the Signet, and the fourth son James.

Robert Seaton, as Representer of the family of the Seatons of Meldrum, carries the entire arms of that family, as above blazoned, with the crest and motto, as in the Plate of Achievements.

The other branch of the family of Meldrum is Seaton of Pitmedden, the first of which was, James Seaton of Burtie, abovementioned; because, being son of William Seaton of Meldrum, and his wife, Margaret Innes, daughter of Innes of Leuchars, who was born by her in the year 1553. He married Margaret Rolland, grand-daughter to William Rolland; Master of the Mint of Aberdeen, in the reign of King James V. She bore to him Alexander his successor in the lands of Burtie, Pitmedden, &c. and James; in case of his son's decease, he taintized his estate to his nephew, John Seaton of Meldrum, as appears from a charter of the date 1653, which I have seen in the custody of the present Sir William Seaton of Pitmedden, with the other evidences which instruct the following descent of the family. This James of Pitmedden carried the arms of Seaton, with a mullet for difference, as they stand this day on his house in the city of Aberdeen, in the year 1591, and in the church of Udny, 1605. He was a person of great merit, as appears by his epitaph, composed by Dr Arthur Johnston, and published by all the editions of his Epigrams, thus,

Tumulus JACOBI SETONI PITMEDDENI.
Quem tegit hic cespes, fastu SETONUS honoris,
Divinias luxu, posse carere docet.

3 O
Alexander succeeded his father James, married Beatrice Ogilvie, sister to the first Lord Banff, and had by her a son, John, and several daughters, married to honourable families. The estate of Barra was disposed to him by his cousin-german, William Seaton of Meldrum, in the year 1632.

Which John Married Elizabeth Johnston, daughter to Sir Samuel Johnston of Elphinston, and had issue by her two sons, James and Alexander: He was a firm loyalist, and was unlickily shot in the year 1639, endeavouring, with other loyalists, to put a stop to the king's enemies about the bridge of Dee, as they were advancing to the town of Aberdeen, and his eldest son James died, without issue, at London 1667, of the wounds he received from the Dutch in their attack upon the English fleet at Chatham: The abovementioned Elizabeth Johnston, after her husband's death, was second wife to James Johnston, Earl of Hartfield, predecessor of the Marquis of Annandale.

Alexander succeeded his father John Seaton of Pitmedden, who, for the loyalty of his predecessors, and his own merit, was created a baronet in the year 1683, and promoted to be one of the Judges in the Session and Criminal Court by King Charles II. He married Margaret Lauder, daughter to Mr William Lauder, one of the Under-Clerks of the Session; by whom he had Sir William Seaton, Baronet, his successor; George Seaton of Mounie, and several other children. He died the 29th of May 1719. His armorial bearing, as recorded in the Lyon Register, is, quarterly, first and fourth or, three crescents within a double treisure, counter-flowered gules, and, in the centre, a man's heart, for Seaton of Pitmedden; second and third argent, a demi-ottter sable, crowned gules, issuing out of a bar waved of the second, for Meldrum; crest, a demi-man in a military habit, holding the banner of Scotland; with the motto, on an escrol above, Sustento vanguine signa; supported on the dexter by a greyhound, proper, collared gules, and, on the sinister, by an otter sable, standing on a compartment, whereon are these words, Merece bee certa laborum.

Seaton of Touch, quarterly, first and fourth Seaton, second and third argent, three escutcheons gules, (some old books give the field ermine) supporters, two greyhounds, proper; crest, a boar's head couped or: motto, Forward our's. The first of this family was Alexander Seaton, eldest son of Alexander Seaton, Lord Gordon; the eldest son Sir Alexander Seaton, (second son of William Lord Seaton) who married Elizabeth Gordon, heiress of Gordon of Strathbogie. The above Lord Gordon begot Alexander, on his lady Giles Hay, daughter and heiress of Baron Hay of Enzie, who, in right of his mother, was laid of Touch and Tullibody, and got the lands of Gordon in the Merse, and was the first Baron of Touch of the name of Seaton; and from him the family continues in a lineal succession to the present Archibald Seaton of Touch: The barons of this family, for their valour and loyalty, have been armour-bearers to our kings since the first of the reign of King James IV. with whom Seaton of Touch fell in the fatal battle of Flodden.

Seaton of Gargunnock, descended of Touch, carried three coats, quarterly, first Seaton, second argent, three bulls' heads erased sable, horned vert, for marrying the heiress of Turnball of Bedrule; third azure, three escutcheons argent, for the name of Hay, and the fourth as the first. Pont's Manuscript.

Sir Walter Seaton of Abercorn, Baronet, descended of Touch, carries as Touch before, within a bordure gules, for his difference; crest, a Cornish kec on the face of a rock, proper: motto, Huarda warryly, Lyon Register.

Seaton of Carlston, the first of this family was John, second son of George Lord Seaton, and his lady, Elizabeth Hay, daughter of John Lord Yester. He married Isabel Balfour, heiress of Carlston; of whom is lineally descended the present Lord Seaton of Carlston. The family have been in use to place in the centre of the paternal coat of Seaton, an otter's head sable, being a part of the Balfour's arms, and sometimes to quarter the entire arms of Balfour with their own, as before in the Essay of the Ancient and Modern use of Arms.

Seaton of Barns, or, a sword in pale azure, hilted and pommed of the first, supporting an imperial crown between three crescents gules, all within a double treisure, flowered and counter-flowered of the last. The first of this family was John, second son of George Lord Seaton, and his lady, Isabel Hamilton, and immediate elder brother to Alexander, first Earl of Dunfermline. He went abroad young, and was one of the household of Philip King of Spain, and was made a Knight of the Order of Calatrava; upon his return home, he was, by King James VI. made one of the gentlemen of his Bed-Chamber, and Comptroller to his Majesty's Exchequer and Treasury in Scotland. He got from his father the lands of East-Barns, which were given by King Robert the Bruce to the family of Seaton, as before; with the sword supporting the crown, which the family of Barns has been in use to carry as an additional figure, because (as Sir George Mackenzie says in his Science of Heraldry) these lands were at first granted with that coat of augmentation. He married the eldest daughter of the Lord Forbes, from whom is descended the present George Seaton of Barns.

Seaton Earl of Dunfermline carried quarterly first and fourth Seaton; second and third argent, on a fesse gules, three cinquefoils of the first; supporters, two horses at liberty; crest, a crescent gules, with the word imper. The first of this family was Alexander Seaton, third son of George Lord Seaton, and his Lady Isabel Hamilton; he, for his bright parts, was first commissary of Pluseardine, and after was one of the Senators of the College of Justice; and then President of that learned Bench; and, by King James VI. created Lord Urquhart, thereafter designated Lord Eyvie; and, in the year 1625, was created Earl of Dunfermline, and was High Chancellor of Scotland for eighteen years, till he departed this life, the 16th of June 1622. He was thrice married, first, with a daughter of Patrick, Lord Drummond; 2dly, To a daughter of the Earl of Rothes. By these two wives he had only daughters; and, by his third wife Margaret, daughter to John Lord Yester, he had Charles his son and successor, who was one of King Charles II.'s Privy Council, and Lord Privy Seal, in the year 1671. He married Mary, daughter of the Earl of Morton, and with her had Alexander, who died unmarried; Charles killed aboard the fleet in the sea-fight against the Dutch, anno 1672; and James, who succeeded his brother Alexander in the honours; and his only daughter Henrietta, married first to William, Earl of Wigtoun; and after to William, Earl of Crawford, and had issue.

James, Earl of Dunfermline, was one of the Scots Peers, who, in the year 1658, kept firm in his duty to King James VII. and joined the Viscount of Dundee with a troop of horse at the battle of Killiecrankie, for which he was forfeited by the Parliament 1692. He retired to France, and died at St Germain 1694, having no issue by his wife Jean, daughter of Lewis, Marquis of Huntly: So that the honours, by reason of the entail to heirs-male, fell to George Seaton of Barns, were it not for the forfeitures.

Seaton of St Germaines, or, a fesse between three crescents in chief, and as many flower-de-luces in base gules, bar-ways; so cut upon stone above the entry to the house of St Germaines. The first of this family was John, a younger son of Robert, first Earl of Winton, and his lady, Margaret Montgomery, daughter to Hugh, Earl of Eglinton. He married one of the name of Kelly, for which the flower-de-luces are added in base.

Seaton Viscount of Kingston, quarterly, first and fourth Seaton, second and third argent, a dragon with wings expanded, tail moved vert, as a coat of augmentation, being the crest of the family; supporters, two negroes wreathed about the head and middle with laurel, proper; crest, a crescent flaming: motto, Habet & suam. The first of this family was Sir Alexander Seaton, a younger son of George, second Earl of Winton. By his first wife Anna Hay, daughter of Francis Earl of Errol, who, for his good and loyal services to his Sovereign Charles I. and II. he was by the last created Viscount of Kingston, 6th January 1652. He married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Sir Archibald Douglas of Whittingham; by whom he had Archibald his successor, and James who succeeded his brother in the honours, and Elizabeth, wife of William Hay of Drumelzier.

Seaton of Carleton, as in the Lyon Register, carries quarterly, first and fourth Seaton, second and third Buchan, all within a bordure, quarterly, azure and or; crest, a star of six points; with the motto, Habet & suam. The first of this family was Sir John Seaton, Bart. eldest son of George, second Earl of Winton, and his second wife, Elizabeth Maxwell, daughter of the Lord Herries.
There are several other ancient families who carry crescents for their armorial figures, distinguishing themselves by the different tinctures of their crescents and field of arms, as those of the surname of Oliphant, who carry gules, three crescents, two and one argent. As for the antiquity of the family and surname, there was an eminent baron of the name who accompanied King David I. to the siege of Winchester in England, in the year 1142, named David de Oliphard, as in Sir James Dalrymple's Collections, p. 147, and the same man, or another of that name, is to be found frequently a witness in that King's charters; and particularly, (says Mr Crawford in his Peerage) in that to the Priory of Cockingham, where to his seal is appended, which has thereupon, viz. three crescents, which clearly proves him to be the ancestor of the noble family of Oliphant, who still bear the same figures in their ensigns-armorial.

David de Oliphbard was Justiciary Laudonie, for so he is designed, being a witness in a grant by King William to the priory of St Andrews, and his son Walter de Oliphard, in the same office, is designed Justiciary Laudonie, in the grant of King Alexander III. to the canons of St Andrews.

Sir William Oliphant is one of the barons mentioned in the letter from the estates of Scotland to the Pope in the year 1322. Another, or the same Sir William Oliphant is witness in a charter of King Robert the Bruce, who married a daughter of Sir Robert Erskine of that Ilk; and the fifth, in a lineal descent from him, was Sir Laurence Oliphant, who was created a Lord of Parliament, by the title of Lord Oliphant, 1467. He married Isabel, a daughter of William Earl of Errol, High Constable of Scotland; whose posterity continued in a right line, without interruption, till Laurence Lord Oliphant, who had only one daughter Anne, by his lady, Anne Drummond, daughter to the Lord Maidery. She was married to Sir James Douglas, brother-german to the Marquis of Douglas, who was created Lord Mordington in the Merse, by King Charles I. with the precedence due to the Lord Oliphant, in right of his wife; notwithstanding of which, Patrick Oliphant was served and returned heir-male to his cousin-german Laurence Lord Oliphant, the heiress's father last deceased, and got a new patent from King Charles I. the 17th of June 1633. Both dignities stand in the Rolls of Parliament, with their respective precedence, as in Sir James Dalrymple's Collections, p. 326.

Of this Patrick Lord Oliphant is descended the present Charles Lord Oliphant, whose achievement is as his predecessors, gules, three crescents argent, supported by two elephants, proper; and for crest, an unicorn's head couped argent, maned and horned or: with the motto, Tout pourvoir.

The cadets of this family are these, whose arms are matriculated.

Oliphant of Kelly, in the shire of Fife, was descended of Thomas, eldest son of Sir John Oliphant of Aberdalgy, predecessor to the Lord Oliphant, by his second wife, a daughter of Home of that Ilk, in the reign of Robert III. three crescents within a bordure ingrailed argent.

Robert Oliphant of Bachilton, descended of the Lord Oliphant, gules, a chevron between three crescents argent; crest, a crescent or: motto, What was may be. Lyon Register.

Oliphant of Clasbinny, descended of Bachilton, the same, but makes the chevron for difference crenellé; crest, the sun in his glory, proper: motto, Hinc illuminabimur. Lyon Register.

Sir Laurence Oliphant of Gask, descended of a second son of Walter Lord Oliphant, carries the arms of Oliphant, with a small crescent in the centre for his difference; crest, a falcon perching, proper: motto, the same with the Lord Oliphant. Lyon Register.

Laurence Oliphant, Writer to the Signet, descended of a second son of Gask, parted per fesse wavey gules and argent, three crescents counter-changed of the same; crest, an elephant's head couped argent: motto, Non mutat fortuna genus. Lyon Register.

Oliphant of Condie, descended of the Lord Oliphant, gules, three crescents argent, within a bordure counter-composed of the first and second; crest, a falcon volant, proper: motto, Altiora peto. Lyon Register.

Oliphant of Kinmedder, descended of the Lord Oliphant, the arms of Oliphant within a bordure chequé, argent and gules: motto, Honesta peto. L. R.
OLIPHANT of Langton, descended of a third son of the Lord Oliphant, _gules_, a chevron _crescelle_, between three crescents _argent_; crest, the sun in his glory, proper: motto, _Hinc illuminabitur_. Lyon Register.

OLIPHANT of Prinles, descended of Oliphant of Oldcairn, _gules_, a saltier between three crescents, one in chief, and two in the flanks _argent_; crest, a hand pointing to the clouds, proper: motto, _Hope and not rue_. L. R.

OLIPHANT of Culquhair, _gules_, a cinquefoil slipped, between three crescents _argent_; crest, a proboscide or elephant's trunk, proper. Lyon Register.

EDMONSTONE of that Ilk, now designed of Ednam, or, three crescents _gules_; supported by two camels, proper; and for crest, a camel's head and neck. Workman's Manuscript.

The first of this family is said to have been one ADMUNDUS, who came with Queen Margaret to Scotland, and to have got from King Malcolm III. some lands near Edinburgh, called after him Admowntoun, or Edmiston, which became the surname of the family. In the reign of Alexander III. I find Henry de Edmiston mentioned in a charter (in the Earl of Haddington's Collections) of William de Craigmillar, son of Henry de Craigmillar, to the church of Dunfermline, of the date 1253, concerning a toft of land, which Henry de Edmiston held of Henry de Craigmillar, _in australi parte que ducit de villa de Noddriiff, ad Ecclesiæ de Libbertoun_.

John de Edmiston gets a charter of the crownership of Edinburgh, from King David II. and he or his son, John Edmonstone, gets a charter from King Robert II. of the barony of Ednam, mentioning him to be married to Isabel Countess of Douglas, (relict of James Earl of Douglas, killed at the battle of Otterburn) a daughter of that King's, as also a charter of the thanedom of Boyne, the 24th year of his reign. The son of this marriage was David de Edmiston, who is witness in a charter of Robert Duke of Albany, to his son John Earl of Buchan, wherein David is designed, _Nepos noster dilectus_. And King James II. gives a new charter of the thanedom of Boyne and the lands of Tulliallan to James Edmonstone of that Ilk, and his spouse Janet Napier, daughter of Alexander Napier of Merchiston, dated at Stirling the first of February 1456. It seems they had no male issue, but two daughters, who got the lands of Boyne and Tulliallan. The eldest, Elizabeth, married Blackadder of that Ilk; the second was married to Walter Ogilvie, a younger son of Findlater, of which two in their proper places; and the lands of Ednam went to the next heir-male, from whom is descended the present laird of Ednam, who carries the foresaid arms.

EDMONSTONE of Duntreath, or, three crescents _gules_, with an annulet in the centre, so illuminated in the house of Falahall, which, with the lands of Fala, belonged to Ednam.

Mr James Edmonstone of Newton, or, three crescents _gules_, in _cœur_, an annulet of the second, surmounted of a mullet of the first, for a brotherly difference: motto, _Be hardy_. Lyon Register.

John Edmonstone of Bellewen-Edmonstone, now of Braik, descended of a second son of the family of Duntreath, carries or, three crescents _gules_, an annulet surmounted of a crescent in the centre of the second; crest, a hand drawing a semicircle with a compass, proper: motto, _Gauge and measure_. Lyon Register.

Cathcart, an ancient family, who took their surname from their lands of that name in Renfrewshire: The chief is the Lord Cathcart, who carries _azure_, three cross creslets fitched, issuing out of as many crescents, _argent_; supporters, two parrots, proper; crest, a hand issuing out of a wreath, holding up a crescent _argent_; with the motto, _I hope to speed_. See Plate of Achievements.

It is said that, of old, they carried only crescents, and that after one of the family had been in the wars in the Holy Land, added the cross creslets. As for the antiquity of the name and family, _Raynaldis de Katcart_, so writ of old, is witness in a charter of Allan, _filius Walteri Dapifer_, in the year 1178. _Ramulbus de Cathcart_ is also witness in a charter of this Allan Dapifer, progenitor of the Stewarts, for which see Sir James Dalrymple's Collections. _Dominus Allanus de Cathcart, Dominus ejusdem, anno 1387_, in the reign of Robert II. obtained the baronies of Sundrum and Auchenruive in Kyle, in right of his wife, sister and one of the co-heirs of Sir Duncan Wallace of Sundrum. Sir Allan Cathcart of that Ilk was dignified with the honour of Lord Cathcart, by King James II. 1447, of whom is descended the present Allan, Lord Cathcart, who carries the above arms. And of late the family has been in use to quarter the arms of Wallace of Sundrum with their own, being gules, a lion rampant argent, as in Mr Crawford's Peerage. See Plate of Achievements.

Cathcart of Carleton, being of an eldest son of a second marriage of John Lord Cathcart, and his lady, a daughter of Douglas of Drumlanrig (now Duke of Queensberry) in the reign of King James V. carried the arms of the Lord Cathcart, as above, with a man's heart in the centre for his difference, being a figure of the arms of Douglas. Pont's Manuscript.

Cathcart of Carbiston, another son of John Lord Cathcart, and Margaret Douglas, daughter to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig, ancestor to the present Duke of Queensberry, carries azure, three cross creslets fiéch, issuing out of as many crescents argent, two and one; and in the collar point a man's heart ensign with an imperial crown, proper, as a maternal difference, from other descendants of the family of Cathcart, and adorned with the crest and motto of the Lord Cathcart abovementioned. For which see Plate of Achievements.

The first of this family was David Cachcart of Duchray, which lands he got from his father John Lord Cathcart about 200 years since: He married Agnes, daughter of Sir George Crawford of Lifhloris, by whom he had Allan Cathcart, his son and heir, in the time of Queen Mary; who added to his paternal estate the barony of Carbiston, by marrying Janet, daughter and heir of William Cathcart of Carbiston, an old cadet of the family of Cathcart, as far back as the time of King Robert III. from whom is lineally descended the present James Cathcart of Carbiston, who married Magdalen, eldest daughter of Sir James Roche of Innerleith, baronet. By her he had the present Colonel James Cathcart, and Captain Thomas Cathcart, a brave youth, who was unluckily killed in Spain in the late wars.

There have been several sons of this family, who have been eminent abroad in the wars of France and Germany; and particularly, one James Cathcart, a younger son of William Cathcart of Carbiston, and of his wife Janet, one of the daughters and co-heirs of Sir Robert Fairly of that Ilk in the county of Ayr, who went to Germany, and, for his merit, was advanced to honourable offices, by which he acquired a considerable fortune. He married the only daughter and heir of Balthasar Schemet Schemet-Felt, Chancellor to the Duke of Deux-Ponts in Germany. He was made one of the Gentlemen of his Bed-Chamber, Master of the Horse, and one of his Counsellors; in which offices he continued till his death, and was solemnly interred in the great church of Heidelberg, where a noble monument was erected over him, with his arms; which last I have seen on his seals, affixed to his missive-letters to his cousin, the present Laird of Carbiston, whereupon were two oval shields accolé; that on the right hand contained the arms of Carbiston, as above, but the heart was not ensignied with an imperial crown; and that on the left had a deer springing, the arms of his wife; and both those oval shields accolé, were under a large coronet. Their grandson, William de Cathcart, is one of the Gentlemen of the Bed-Chamber to Prince Palatine and Duke of Deux-Ponts, and enjoys his grandfather's estate near Deux-Ponts.

The name of Hummel, argent, a bend between two crescents gules. Pont's Manuscript.

Melville Earl of Melville carries crescents, as do the name of Craig and Craigie, of whom before.

Kincraigie, sable, a fesse ermine, between three crescents argent.

Kirkaldy, gules, a chevron argent, between two stars in chief, and a crescent or, in base. Pont's Manuscript.

There was an old family of this name designed of Inchturre, which ended in an heiress, Marjory Kirkaldy, who was married to Reginald Kinnaid. He got with her the lands of Inchturre, which were confirmed to her by a charter of Robert III. 1390, of which marriage descended the Lord Kinnaid.

The next principal family of the name was Kirkaldy of Grange, in the shire of Fife, gules, a chevron between three stars in chief, and a crescent in base or;
crest, a man's head, with the face looking upward, proper: motto, Fortissima veritas. New Register.

One of this family was Captain of the Castle of Edinburgh in the minority of King James VI.

The name of Paton, azure, a flower-de-luce or, between three crescents argent. Pont's Manuscript.

Mr Roger Paton of Ferrochie, azure, three crescents argent; crest, a spar-hawk with wings expanded, proper: motto, Virtute adepta.

The name of Spittle, argent, an eagle with wings displayed sable, between three crescents gules. Pont's Manuscript. But in Workman's Manuscript, sable, a fesse between three besants or.

Duke of that ilk, in the shire of Fife, azure, a chevron argent, between three crescents or. They were ancient possessors of the lands of Durie in Fife, in the reign of Alexander II. Afterwards they built the Castle of Burntisland, in the year 1352, called of old Wester-Kinghorn, whose name and arms are upon it, as Sir Robert Sibbald, in his History of Fife. This family continued till the reign of King James V. when Durie of that ilk, leaving only one daughter, that king was pleased to marry her to his favourite Sir Alexander Kemp, from whose issue Sir Alexander Gibson purchased the lands of Durie.

Captain George Durie, descended of the family of Durie, azure, a chevron argent, between three crescents or. New Register.

John Durie of Grange, in the parish of Burntisland, azure, a chevron argent, between three crescents, all within a bordure inverced or. New Register.

Martin of Meadhop, sable, a chevron between three crescents argent. Workman's Manuscript.

Andrew Martin, Writer in Edinburgh, as descended of the Martins of Meadhop, carries the arms of Meadhop, but changes the chevron with a mascle sable; and for crest, a lion holding in his dexter paw a crescent or, motto, Hinc forior & clarior. New Register. And there, Andrew Martin, Bailie of Anstruther, sable, a chevron inverced between three crescents argent.

Mr Robert Martin, sometime Clerk to the Justiciary, descended of the family of Giblis, sable, a chevron vair, between three crescents argent; crest, an adder with young bursting through the side of her, proper: motto, Ingratiss vertivere nefas.

The name of Kiltra, azure, two crescents and a star in pale argent. Workman's Manuscript. And there,

The name of Pettigrew, gules, a crescent between three stars argent.

Lawson of Humbie, azure, two crescents argent in chief, and a star in base or. Workman's Manuscript. But Pont's gives, azure, two mullets argent in chief, and a crescent in base or; and to others of that name, parted per pale, argent and sable, an orle counter-changed, and on a chief gules, three garbs or.

The surname of Durham, argent, on a fesse, between three crescents gules, as many stars of the first. Pont's Manuscript.

William Durham of Grange, or, on a fesse azure, three mullets argent, and, in base, a crescent gules; crest, two dolphins bouriant adosés, proper: motto, Ultra fert animus. New Register. And there,

James Durham of Ardounie, a second son of Grange, the same as Grange, but ingrals the fesse.

Durham of Largo, argent, a crescent gules, and, on a chief azure, three mullets of the first; crest, a dolphin, proper: motto, Victoria non praeda.

Sir Alexander Durham, sometime Lyon King at Arms, being a son of Durham of Pitkerrow, purchased the lands of Largo, from those of the name of Wood; for which see Sir Robert Sibbald's History of Fife.

Alexander Durham of Duntarvie, or, on a fesse azure, between two crescents, the upper inverted, three mullets argent; crest, a hand pulling a thistle, proper: motto, Vice Deo. New Register.

And there Adolphus Durham, Merchant in Edinburgh, son to the deceased Sir Alexander Durham of Largo, sometime Lyon King at Arms, or, a crescent gules, on a chief azure, three mullets argent; over all, a bend indented gules; crest, an increscent; with the motto, Augeor dum progredior. New Register.

The name of Nimmo, sometimes wrote Hemmick, or; on a salterine gules, cantoned with four crescents of the last, as many cinquefoils of the first. Pont's Manuscript.

Simpson of Udach, argent, on a chief vair, three crescents of the first; crest, a falcon volant, proper: motto, Allis nutrixor. New Register. And there, Robert Simpson of Thornton bears the same, but makes the chief indented; and, for crest, a crescent or: motto, Tandum impliebitur.

Black of Temple, argent, a chevron sable, between two mullets in chief, and a crescent in base gules. Pont's Manuscript.

Black of Denniston, vair, three boar's heads erased or. Pont's Manuscript.

Gilbert Black, Dean of Guild in Aberdeen, argent, a salterine sable, between a mullet in chief, and a crescent in base gules, a chief of the second: motto, Non crux sed lux. New Register.

The name of Glover, sable, a chevron argent between three crescents ermine; with the motto, Surgite, lumen adest.

Those of the name of Glover, in England, carry the same, but make the crescents argent.

A family of that name in Fife have their arms matriculated thus, sable, a cheveron ermine, between three crescents argent; crest, a cock, within the horns of a crescent: motto, Surgite, lumen adest.

La Porte de Vexins, in France, de guêules, au croissant d'argent chargé de cinque mouchetures de sable, i.e. gules, a crescent argent, charged with five ermine spots sable. See Monsieur Baron's Art of Blazon. By which last examples celestial figures may be of the furrs received in armories. Sylvester Petra Sancta gives us an example of a crescent vair, borne by Mervet in France, de guêules au croissant de vair, where he says, inventiumt etiam lunae, pellitae, vittatae, ac tesserulis verruculatae, that is, crescents of furrs, bars and bends, and chequé, of which he gives examples.

In England many families have crescents for their principal armorial figures.

A few examples I shall here subjoin.

Lee Earl of Litchfield, for his paternal coat, argent, a fesse between three crescents sable. The family of Lee has been very ancient in the county Palatine of Chester, and took its surname, as is presumed, from the lordship of Lee-in that county.

Sir Edward Henry Lee of Ditcheley, Baronet, was, by Charles II.'s letters patent, bearing date the 5th of June, in the 26th year of his reign, created Baron of Spilsbury, in the county of Bucks, Viscount Quarendon, and Earl of Litchfield. He married Lady Charlotte, one of the natural daughters of King Charles II. by Barbara Villiers Dutchess of Cleveland, and with her had thirteen sons and five daughters.

Jermyn Lord Jermyn, sable, a crescent, between two stars in pale argent. This family was dignified by King Charles I. JERMYN Lord Dover carried the same, with a brotherly difference, viz. a crescent in the dexter chief point. He was dignified by King James II. May 3d 1685.

The name of Lucy, in England, azure, a crescent argent. And there the name of Pierrepont, gules, three crescents argent.

The name of Fleming, in England, gules, three crescents ermine.

Coventry, sable, a fesse ermine, between three crescents or.

Otterburn there, gules, a crescent or. Morgan's Heraldry.

The name of Bell, in England, parted per chevron, gules and argent, a crescent counter-changed of the same. Ibid. Plate X. fig. 6.

The name of Chapman, in Yorkshire, parted per chevron, argent and gules, a crescent counter-changed of the same. Morgan's Heraldry.
OF CELESTIAL FIGURES, &c.

THE INCRESCENT

Is the half moon, with its horns, or points, towards the right side of the shield, called an _increscent_, from the Latins; and by the French, _cresissant couché_. It is said to represent the moon in its first quarter, and so the rising in time of some hopeful spark, illuminated and honoured by the glorious aspect and beams of his sovereign; as Guilleim in his Display: And the Essay to Heraldry, in England, exemplifies it, by the arms of one _Descus, gules_, an increscent or, as Plate X. fig. 7.

_Ermine_, three _increscents_ _gules_, by the family of _Symes_ of Daventry in Northamptonshire. Guilleim's Display.

GILBERT NIVEN of Shousburgh and Windhouse in Zetland, _azure_, a fesse betwixt an increscent and decrescent in-chief _argent_, and, in base, a branch of palm slipped of the last; _crest_, a branch of palm _vert_; motto, _Vivis sperandum_. Lyon Register. Plate X. fig. 8.

I know no bearing with us that carries only an-increscent, but it is ordinarily accompanied with other crescents, and then they are _crescents affronté_ or _adossé_.

THE DECRESCENT.

When the half moon looks to the left side of the shield, the French call it _cresissant contourné_: A _decrescent_, says Gerard Leigh, is fit for a man that is advanced to honour in his old age, when all other things decrease with him, being the moon in her third quarter: Mr Kent, in his Book of Blazons, gives us the arms of a baron in Yorkshire, thus, _azure_, a mullet _or_, in chief, an increscent and _decrescent argent_; for which we ordinarily say, _azure_, a star of five points or, and in chief two crescents _adossé argent_.

_Halo of Remerside_, an old family in the shire of Berwick, of which before; _azure_, a salier between two stars in chief and base, and, in the flanks, two crescents _affronté argent_, i.e. a _decrescent_ and _increscent_. See Plate of Achievements.

The _Lunati_ in Spain carry _azure_, three half moons _affronté_, Plate X. fig. 9. that is, a _decrescent_ and _increscent_, in the dexter and sinister chief points, and a _crescent_ in base.

Sylvester Petra Sancta describes them thus, "Argentee lunulae, tres adverse omnes, hoe est, in se inviceem vibrantes cornua, in corulea pirmula." The French say, _d'azur à trois croissants affrontés d'argent_.

These in the arms of _OSTELLI_ in Stiria are just contrary, _adossé_, _azure_, three half moons back to back _argent_; that is an increscent and decrescent in chief, and a crescent reversed in base.

Favini, in his Theatre of Honour, gives us the blazon of the arms of _VALERIA_ in Spain, thus, "d'azur au lion rampant d'or, ecartelé d'or a quatre croissants joints en forme d'annulet d'azur, a la bordure de gueules, chargé de huit sautoirs d'or," i.e. quarterly, first and fourth _azure_, a lion rampant _or_; second and third _or_, four half moons joined together, after the manner of an annulet _azure_, within a bordure _gules_, charged with eight saltiers _or_. Here the half moons, which seem to make an annulet, are, a _crescent_ reversed in chief, a _decrescent_ in the dexter, an _increscent_ in the sinister side, and a _crescent_ in-base.

CRESCEnt REVERSeD

Has its points or horns downwards; such an one, heralds and historians tell us; Aben Mahomet, the great Moorish Prince who over-ran Spain, carried on his banners, viz._vert_, a crescent reversed _argent_, all within a bordure, whereon were words which signified, _God is good_, and _Mahomet_ is _his great prophet_: And afterwards, at the famous battle of _Noves de Tolosa_, where that prince was defeat, and his banner beat down, many families in Spain, to show that their progenitors shared in that victory, carried crescents reverse, and bordures with holy words and sentences, Plate X. fig. 10. _Gules_, three crescents reversed _argent_; thus described by

3 Q
OF CELESTIAL FIGURES, &c.

Sylvester Petra Sancta, "Flexe deorum tres lunulce argenteole, in arvo scuti " punicceo, sunt Quasenarceorum in Belgio."

The positions then of the half moon are by way of crescent. The French say, croissant montant, tourne, contournee, renversé, which sometimes, are situate in bend-dexter and sinister, as the French, tourné en bande et en barre.

OF STARS.

Which are as frequent in armorics as the crescents, and have been considered, in their nature, influences, appearances, and names, in composing of devices and arms too; yet, in the last, through a long descent to succeeding bearers, the considerations upon their first assumption are almost totally forgot for want of record: In place of which, we find only some herald books stuffed with stories and symbolic representations of those figures, as if the present bearers of these were endowed with divine qualities, and to shine on earth like those bright luminaries; whereas, in the most of them, there is no such thing to be found, and their honour is only, that their brighter predecessors have transmitted to them those as marks of their ancient nobility.

They are to be considered here as principal figures, distinguishing families from one another, and not as marks of cadency and additional figures, to difference younger sons, by crescents and stars, among themselves.

The Star has, almost in all ages, been made use of as a mark of honour. Robert King of France instituted the Royal Order of the Star, being of gold, with five points in a field azure, Plate X. fig. 12. which the Knights of that Order wore on the left side as a badge of honour; and after the extinction of that Order, it became the badge of the night-watch in the city of Paris.

JOHN King of FRANCE took for his device a star, with these words, Monstrant regibus astra vivam; alluding to the star which appeared to the three kings in the east at the birth of our Saviour.

The ancient family of BEAUX, whom the Latins call BAUH, sometime Princes of Orange, carried for arms gules, a star of sixteen points argent, pretending to be descended of one of these kings or wise men who came to worship our Saviour. There was a branch of this family great Lords in the kingdom of Naples, as Jacob Imhoff, in his Treatise of the Princes of the Empire, says, carried the foresaid arms upon the same account.

The name of WISEMAN, with us, is said to carry both name and arms, in relation to that star which conducted the three wise men from the east, sable, a chevron between three stars of eight points waved or, as Sir James Ballour in his Manuscript of Blazons. Plate X. fig. 17.

The house of SALIS in Genoa, from which is descended the Marquis of SALE, azure, two bars or, each charged with another gules; in chief, a crescent and two stars of the second between the bars. The last figures were assumed, says Menestrier, by one of the family who was at sea with the Count of Savoy, in a great storm; but, perceiving the moon and two stars, gave great hope to all the company of a safe landing, which accordingly fell out; they have been since used in their arms to perpetuate that event.

STERNBERG, in Germany, carries a star, in allusion to the name.

I shall mention the family of STELLA in Genoa, viz. or, on a chief dancetté azure, three stars of the first.

OLIVER VANSOERT, Commander of the Dutch fleet, in passing the straits of Magellan, upon the account of that expedition, was honoured with these arms, viz. azure, a fesse undé argent between two stars, one in chief, and another in base or; crest, a terraqueous globe, and upon it a ship; which arms were enveloped with a mantle azure, semé of stars or. And Sir Francis Drake, who sailed about the world, got such another bearing, viz. sable, a fesse wavy, between two stars in chief and base argent; which represent the two polar stars, arctic and antarctic, and which are carried by his descendant Sir FRANCIS DRAKE of Buckland.

The name of BAULIE, with us, carries azure, nine stars, three, three, two, and one, argent; Sir George Mackenzie says they carried anciently only but six stars, as was on the seal of Sir John Baille of Hoperig, in East-Lothian, appended to that agreement made at Berwick in the year 1292, with Edward I. of England, to hear the claims of the competitors for the crown of Scotland. But afterwards, one of the heads of that family, being in France, killed a wild boar; and, to perpetuate this action to posterity, he added other three stars, which, in all, make up nine, to represent the constellation ursa major, and, to make his achievement more adequate, took, for crest, a boar’s head couped, and, for supporters, two boars, proper; with the motto, Quid clarus astra.

This family of Hoperig, after they got the lands of Lamington, has been designed Baille of Lamington, who uses the foresaid achievement.

I shall give several instances of the branches of this family, with their arms.

An ancient cadet of Hoperig or Lamington, was Baille of Carphin, who carried as Lamington, with a crescent for difference.

Baille of Balmudyside, afterwards designed of Parbroth in Fife, a cadet of Carphin, carries as Lamington, within a bordure _argent_, charged with eight crescents of the first, as Plate X. fig. 13. crest, the morning-star, proper: motto, Vertitur in lucem. New Register.

Baille of Polkemmet, descended of Gereston, a cadet of Carphin, _azure_, nine stars, three, three, two and one, all within a bordure *counter-nébulé_, _argent_ and _sable_; crest, a star of eight points or, issuing out of a cloud: motto, _In caliginem lucet_.

New Register.

Baille of Inshaugy in Ireland, descended of Lamington, bears as Lamington, within a bordure waved or; crest, a star of eight points issuing from a cloud: motto, Nil clarus astra. Lyon Register.

These figures in the arms of the name of Baille are known to be stars by the motto; yet some with us, and especially the English, call such figures, _mullets_ or _mollets_, even when accompanied with the moon, or surrounded with clouds, whom I have followed before in several blazons, of which I thought fit here to advertise my reader, and to show the difference between stars and mollets or mullets.

_Mollet_ is the rowel of a spur, and has ordinarily six points, and is always pierced in the middle, and so differs from stars, which have but five points ordinarily, as Monsieur Baron, in his Art Heroldique, " Molletes d’Esperon, que l’on appelle simplement mollettes, ont pour l’ordinaire six pointes, et sont percées au milieu en " quoi’elles sont différentes des étoiles."

Yet the English call such figures of five points, _unpierced mullets_ or _mollets_; Leigh, Guilm, and Morgan say, they represent fallen stars or meteors; and tell us, that such an one fell down from heaven upon the shield of one of the progenitors of Vere, Earl of Oxford, when he was at the siege of Jerusalem, who carried at that time, quarterly, _gules_ and _or_; and, ever since, the family has charged the first quarter with a mullet _argent_. Whence all other stars, like it, in other arms, upon other occasions, though representing fixed stars, more honourable than fallen ones, are by them called _mollets_ or _mollets_.

Mullets, having five points, and unpierced, are taken for stars and _étoiles_, especially when alone, and when they accompany other celestial figures; but mullets, when of six points, and pierced in the middle, and accompanying military figures, are to be taken for spur-rowels, of which afterwards.

Mullets, then, of five points unpierced, are stars, as Plate X. fig. 12. and are very frequent in old armorial bearings with us. Whether the frequency proceeded from the ancient custom of the Scots and Picts, who went naked to the wars, having their bodies adorned with figures of divers colours, to distinguish themselves by kindreds and clans, I shall not be positive; though some, as the learned Camden, in his Remains, at the title of Armories, tell us, that some ascribe the first use of armories, in this part of the world, to the Picts and Britons; who, going naked to the wars, adorned their bodies with figures and blazons of divers colours. And Monypenny, in his Manuscript Histoire of the Scots and Picts, in the Lawyers’ Library, tell us, that they artificially pounced or cut small holes in their skin, and poured in coloured liquors, over which the skin grew, and the colour of the liquor appeared through in the form of stars and other figures, by which they were distinguished in kindreds and clans; for which our author vouches Verimond, a very ancient historian of Scots affairs.
OF CELESTIAL FIGURES, &c.

The ancient and numerous surname of Murray carry for their armorial figures stars. Whether they be originally Scots, or from a colony of Germans which is said to have come to Scotland in the reign of Corbedeus II. or that of Fergus II. I shall not offer to determine, but leave it to our historians and antiquaries. It is evident their name is from the country of Murray in the north, the ancient place of their residence, and who owned a dependence upon their descent of their kindred from one common stock and head of the family, as their neighbours round them did, to whom they were very troublesome, being powerful and numerous, given to rebellion, against whom King Alexander I. marched and quelled in the year 1108, as did his brother and successor David I. in the year 1132, when Anegus Earl of Murray was killed with the most of his people (see Chronicon de Melross), and those that were left were dispersed through the kingdom, but still kept their name, as appears from Prynne's History, where they are to be found residents in many shires of the kingdom. Their descents I leave to our genealogists, and shall mention them here only as to their armorial bearings and antiquity of their families, according to the documents and vouchers I have met with.

In the reign of King William the Lion, Lord de Moravia, filius Friskini, is a witness in that King's charter to the Earl of Strathern, (Mackenzie's Manuscript of the Nobility); and his son Willielmus de Moravia is witness in another charter of that King's to the abbacy of Holyroodhouse, Dalrymple's Collections. He was father of Walter de Moravia, father of another William de Moravia, designed Panetarius Scotiæ; and Dominus de Bothwell & Drumsargard, Rymer's Federæ Angliæ ad annum 1284. And in chartularies with us, he was one of the great barons summoned to Berwick, as an auditor of the claims of the Bruce and the Baliol. In Prynne's Collections, commonly called the Ragman-Roll, there are several of the name of Murray submitting and swearing allegiance to King Edward I.; some designed Milites, others Chevaliers; so that the most eminent families then, of the name, seems to be Dominus Willielmus de Moravia, de Bothwell, miles, and Willielmus de Moravia de Tulibardin, de Conte de Pertb. This William Moravia de Bothwell had, by his wife, a daughter of Sir John Cummin of Badenoich, Sir Andrew his successor, and John of Drumsargard.

Murray of Bothwell carried azure, three stars argent, as by his seals; which arms, as I am informed, are yet to be seen upon the church and castle of Bothwell.

Sir Andrew Murray Lord of Bothwell, by some designed Lord of Clydesdale, joined in arms with William Wallace, and was killed in the battle of Stirling, 1297. His eldest son was Sir Andrew Murray of Bothwell, who married Christian Bruce, sister to King Robert I. and widow of Sir Christopher Seaton of that Ilk, as by a charter granted by that King to Sir Andrew and his lady, of the lands of Garrie, which is to be seen in the Earl of Haddington's Collections. He died anno 1338. By his lady, Christian Bruce, he had John de Moravia, Panetarius Scotiæ, his son and heir, who died without issue, and was succeeded by his brother Thomas, who, dying without male issue, left a daughter Jean, his sole heir, married to Sir Archibald Douglas, Lord of Galloway, thereafter Earl of Douglis, By her he brought the lordship of Bothwell to his family, for which the Douglasses have been in use to marshal the arms of Murray of Bothwell, being azure, three stars argent, with their own.

The Murrays of Tulibardin, (in Sir James Balfour's Blazon) azure, a chevron between three stars argent. The same, Sir George Mackenzie asserts in his Manuscript, to have seen on the seal of William de Moravia of Tulibardin, 1292, among these of the barons who were called to Berwick by Edward I. of England; for hearing the claims between the Bruce and the Baliol. The family of Tulibardin has been in use, for many years bygone, to carry for their paternal arms, azure, three stars argent, within a double tressure, flowered and counter-flowered or. This family was dignified with the title of Lord and Earl of Tulibardin, in the person of Sir John Murray of Tulibardin, by King James VI. 1626. His son William, second Earl of Tulibardin, married Dorothée Stewart, eldest daughter to John Earl of Athol, by whose right the fortune and dignity came to the family of Tulibardin, of whom, the Earls, Marquisses, and present Duke of Athol, who were in use to quarter the arms of Stewart of Athol with their own, thus, first and fourth azure, three stars argent, within a double tressure flowered and counter-flowered or, for Murray; second and third, quarterly, Stewart and Athol; the last, paly of six, or and sable; supported on the dexter by a lion gules, collared azure, and charged with three stars argent, being the supporter of Tullibardine; and, on the sinister, by that of Athol, a naked savage, having his feet in fetters of iron, with one hand holding the chain, and with the other the shield: crest, a demi-savage holding in his right hand a sword, and in his left a key, all proper; with the motto, Forth fortune and fill the fetters.

Andrew Murray of Touchadam gets a charter from King David II. in the last year of his reign, of the lands of Touchadam and Touchmellar, in the shire of Stirling; which charter I did see in the custody of the laird of Polmaise, descended of him. In which charter, the King calls this Andrew Murray his cousin, dilectus consanguineus noster. He was succeeded by his son William, as by another charter, which also I did see in the custody of Murray of Polmaise, granted by King Robert III. "Direccto & fidelis nostro Willielmo de Moravia, filio Andree de Moravia, militis, superioritatem Dominii terrarum de Touchadam, Touchmalar, lar, & Kipmar, cum pertinentiis." I have seen the seal of arms of William Murray of Touchadam, appended to a charter (penes Polmaise) of John Haldane, son and apparent heir of Bernard Haldane of Glenegles, and his spouse Agnes Monteith, to Matthew Forrester, burgess of Stirling, of the date the penult day of April 1463. Upon the account that Agnes Monteith had no seal of her own, she appeals the seal of William Murray of Touchadam, as by the words in the charter, "Et quia ego dicta Agnes Sponsa dicti Johannis sigillum proprium non habui, sigillum honorabilis viiri Willielmi de Murray de Touchadam, tunc Constabularii & Custodis Castri de Stirline, in testimonium consensus & assensum mei presentibus apponi procuravi."

Upon this seal of Touchadam's is a shield, and thereon three stars within a double tressure, flowered and counter-flowered, tinctred with helmet and mantlings; and, for crest, a mermaid, holding in her dexter hand a mirror, and, in the sinister, a comb; supporters, two lions; and for motto, Tuum pret, i.e. Altogether ready.

Which arms the present Murray of Polmaise and Touchadam, as descendant and representative of this honourable and loyal family, carries on his seal; as likewise do the cadets of the family, as George Murray, Doctor of Medicine, fourth son, now living; of John Murray of Touchadam and Polmaise, and his lady, Anne, a daughter of Gibson of Durie; with an annulet in the centre, for his difference, without the supporters.

Murray of Abercairny, another ancient family of the name; some of whose evidents I have seen in the custody of the present Abercairny; by which the family has been anciently designed barons of Drumsargath. John Murray, Dominus de Drumsargath, grants a charter of the barony of Ballinacrief, in favours of his future spouse Mary, daughter to Malisius Earl of Strathern; which charter has no date; and it seems, after the marriage, the said earl grants a charter of the lands of Abercairny, to John Murray of Drumsargath, and to his spouse Mary, his daughter, which also wants date. Their eldest son and heir, Sir Maurice, was killed in the battle of Durham, in the year 1446, without issue, and was succeeded by his brother Sir Alexander Murray, who gets a charter from Robert, Great Steward of Scotland and Earl of Strathern, confirming all the lands which Malisius Earl of Strathern had given to his father John, and his mother Mary. On the seal of the High Steward, appended to this charter, was only a triangular shield, charged with the fesse chequed, for Stewart. This Sir Alexander Murray of Drumsargath married Janet, daughter of Hugh Earl of Ross, widow of the Baron of Monymusk, and sister to Euphame Ross, Queen to King Robert II. as by the contract of marriage, penes Abercairny; which I have seen. This family was afterward designed Barons of Ogilvie and Abercairny. John Murray, Dominus de Ogilviana, grants a charter of some of the lands of Ogilvie to the convent of Holyroodhouse, in the year 1429, to which charter his seal of arms was appended, having a fesse between three stars, 2 and 1. I have likewise seen a procuratory of resignation, by John Murray of Ogilvie, of the date 1426, where he says, because he has not a seal of his own, he therefore appends the seal of John Landal, which has an orle between three cinquefoils, all within a bordure.

Winfredus Murray, Dominus de Ogilfæ, makes a resignation of the lands of Ogilfæ, Abercairn, Kintocher, &c. in the hands of King James III, who grants a new charter of them, in the year 1473, to Winfredus and his heirs, erecting them into a free barony, independent of the Stewartry of Strathern. As for the seal of arms of this Winfred, I have seen it appended to a discharge of his, to Alexander Robertson of Struan, of forty merks, as a part of the sum of five hundred merks, as a tocher due by Struan to Alexander Murray, younger of Abercarnie, who married his daughter, Margaret Robertson; on which was a shield, charged with a chevron between three stars, 2 and 1. Andrew succeeded to his father Winfred, and was designed of Abercairn, as all the barons of that family were afterwards.

Of whom was lineally descended Sir Robert Murray of Abercarnie, who has his arms matriculated in the Lyon Register thus, azure, a chevron between three stars argent; crest, a mullet or: motto, Sans tache.

Murray of Cockpool carried for arms argent, a saltier in-garled, and, on a chief azure, three stars of the first; as in Balbou's and Pont's Manuscripts.

The saltier and chief are the figures of the old Earls of Annandale, which many principal families, of different surnames, have used, who lived in or near that country; as the Johnston's, Kirkpatricks, Jardens, Griersons, &c. of whom before.

The family of Cockpool changed the tinctures, making them azure after the colour of the field of the arms of Murray, and placed the stars on the chief. The original charter of this family is from Thomas Randolph Earl of Murray, to his nephew William de Moravia, the first of the house of Cockpool. Of this family was John Murray of Dunrenan, a son of Charles Murray of Cockpool, who came to be one of the gentlemen of the Bed-Chamber to King James VI. His Majesty's Master of Horses and Privy Purse, and, by that King's letters patent, was made Lord of Lochmaben, Viscount Annan; who, afterwards, 1624, was honoured, and the heirs-male of his body, with the title of Earl of Annandale; who, in that quality, carried for arms, (as in Pont's Manuscript) azure, a crescent between three stars, all within a double trezure counter-flowered, with flower-de-luces argent, and a dexter canton of the last, charged with a thistle vert, crowned or, as an augmentation; and, for supporters, two lions argent, crowned or; crest, an eagle with wings, proper: motto, Noctesque diesque prexto.

This family ended in his son James Murray Earl of Annandale, and the honours returned again to the crown.

Murray Viscount of Stormont, Lord Scoon, of the house of Balvaid, descended of Tullibardin, carries, quarterly, first and fourth, the arms of Tullibardin; second and third gules, three cross patees argent, for Barclay of Balvaid; supporters, two lions gules, armed or; crest, a buck's head couped, proper, with a cross patée betwixt his attires argent: motto, Spero meliora.

The first of this family was Andrew Murray, a younger son of Sir William Murray of Tullibardin, and his wife Mary, daughter to the Earl Marischal. He married Margaret Barclay, daughter and sole heir to James Barclay of Arnosk and Kippo, and with her got these baronies in the reign of King James IV. From them was lineally descended Sir Andrew Murray of Balvaid, father of Sir Andrcw, his successor, and Sir David Murray of Gosparty, his younger son, who laid the foundation of the honour of the family, being Master of Horses and Captain of the Guards to King James IV. of Scotland, and I. of England. He was created with all solemnity Lord Scoon, 7th April 1624; (as, by letters patent, and a note of his creation and arms in a manuscript of Mr Workman, herald-painter, who assisted in the solemnity of his creation) by Alexander Earl of Dunfermline, Viceroy for the time, in presence of the Earls of Angus, Sutherland, Errol, Morton, Marischal, Linlithgow, Fleming, Drummond, Lauderdale, and many other nobles: And the two barons who carried the banner and pennon of his arms in the solemnity, were knighted by the Viceroy, being Sir Andrew Balfour of Balmount, and Sir John Moncrief of that Ilk; in that Manuscript their arms are marked thus,
Which Lord Scoon carried on a shield a cross patee in the centre betwixt two crescents, and as many hearts azure, in chief, each charged with a star, and another of the last in base; which seems to me to have been a very odd composed coat; crest, a deer tripping before two trees: motto, Spero meliora; supporters, that on the dexter, a savage, wreathed about the head and middle, and the other on the sinister, a lion rampant gules.

Sir Andrew Balfour of Balmouth's arms were argent, on a chevronon sable, an otter's head erased of the first, and a mullet in base; crest, an otter's head; supporters, two women in rich apparel: motto, Forward, non temere.

Sir John Moncrieff of that Ilk, whose arms there were argent, a lion rampant gules, and a chief ermine; crest, a stork's head: motto, Virescit; supporters, two lions.

It is to be observed, not only by these instances, but many others, that knights, with us, have been allowed to carry supporters, of which in another place.

David Lord Scoon, in the year 1621, was advanced to the dignity of Viscount of Stormont, and the heirs-male of his body; and, in tailzie of such, to his heirs of entail: It seems he laid aside his former coat of arms, (as Mr Pont, in his Manuscript) and carried quarterly, first and fourth azure, three stars argent, within a double trezure, flowered and counter-flowed or; for Murray; second and third gules, three cross pates argent, for the name of Barclay; and, by way of surnout, an escutcheon azure, a crescent argent, containing a flaming heart, proper, within a double treasure flowered, or, upon what account I cannot learn; crest, a buck's head couped, proper, and betwixt his attire, a cross patee argent: motto, Spero meliora; supporters, two lions gules, armed or; which arms, as I am informed, stand on the house of Scoon. He died 1631, without issue, and was succeeded by Sir Mungo Murray, brother to the Earl of Tullibardin into his honour, and a part of his estate as heir of tailzie. He died also without issue.

Mr Andrew Murray of Balvaird, the first Viscount of Stormont's nephew, was created Lord Balvaird, 1641; his son and successor, David Lord Balvaird, came to be Viscount of Stormont, upon the demise of James Murray Earl of Annandale, who had also the title of Stormont. He was succeeded by his son David, Earl of Stormont; and he again, by his son David, the present Viscount of Stormont; which last Viscounts have disused the surnout in the last blazon, and carry only as the first mentioned blazon.

Murray of Broughton, an old family in the shire of Wigton, is said to have settled there some time after the factions and divisions fell out among the families of that name in the shire of Murray; whereby many of them left that country, and scattered themselves through several shires of Scotland, of which this family is the only one of the name that settled there: As several other ancient families of the name have settled in the South, of which immediately.

Alexander Murray of Broughton, a Member of Parliament for the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright, is the lineal representative of the said family, whose great-grandfather, George Murray of Broughton, was Gentleman of the Bed-Chamber to King James VI. and for his good services had several lands of considerable value in Ireland, with divers superiorities in Scotland, given him by his Majesty; among which are all the St John's lands in the shire of Wigton, as appears by a charter under the Great Seal to the said George Murray, anno 1592, and the return of the said Alexander thereon. The arms of the family have formerly been the Murray's arms only, but now they are quartered with those of Lennox of Calley, as marrying the heiress thereof; which Lennox of Calley had formerly married the heiress of Sir John Stewart of Girthon, whose arms were composed of the Stewarts and Lennoxes, viz. or, a fesse chequy, argent and azure, for Stewart, accompanied with three roses gules, for Lennox; as is to be seen on the gate of the old house of Calley. So that now the armorial achievement of the family is, quarterly, first and fourth azure, three stars argent, for the name of Murray; second and third or, a fesse chequy argent and azure, betwixt three roses gules; crest, a griffin salient motto, Imperio; supported by two savages, holding battle on their shoulders, wreathed about the head and middle, all proper, as registered in the Lyon's Books.
Murray of Falaiball, of late designed of Philiphaugh, an ancient family in Teviotdale, argent, a hunting-horn sable, stringed and garnished gules on a chief azure, three stars of the first; crest, a demi-man clothed in green, winding an hunting-horn, proper: motto, Hinc usque superna venabos. These of this family have been long heritable Sheriffs of Selkirk and the Forest. Their ancient charter, as Sir James Dalrymple, in his Collections, tells us, is from James Lord Douglas, to Roger de Moravia, the son of Archibald of the lands of Fala, in the year 1321. Of whom was descended, Sir John Murray, one of the Commissioners for the shire of Selkirk to the Parliament, in the year 1612, who was designed of Falaiball; and these of the family since have been stiled of Philiphaugh.

Murray of Blackbarony, in the South, a knightly family, claims also an ancient descent; for which see Dalrymple’s Collections. And, in the Earl of Haddington’s Collections, there is a charter of Robert Duke of Albany, Governor of Scotland, of the lands of Traquair and Shillinglaw, to William Watson and his spouse Janet, daughter to John Carmichael, and to the heirs of their body; which failing, to Andrew Murray, son to the deceased John Murray of Blackbarony, from whom is descended the present Laird of Blackbarony, who carries argent, a letter-lock azure, on a chief of the last, three stars of the first; crest, a dexter hand holding a scroll, proper: motto, Deum time. As in our old books and New Register.

Murray of Elibank, in Selkirkshire; the first of which family was Sir Gideon Murray, Treasurer Depute to King James VI. third son to Andrew Murray of Blackbarony, and his wife Grisel Bethune, a daughter of Creigh: Their son Sir Patrick was made a Lord of Parliament by King Charles I. in the year 1643. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir James Dundas of Arniston, by whom he had his son and successor, Patrick Lord Elibank. He married Elizabeth Stewart, daughter of John, first Earl of Traquair, father and mother of Alexander Murray, third Lord Elibank, who married Anne, daughter of Alexander Burnet, Archbishop of St Andrews, by whom he had Alexander, the present Lord Elibank. The arms he now useth bespeak him rather a cadet of Tullibardin, than of Blackbarony, viz. azure, three stars within a double trezure counter-flowered argent, and, in the centre, a marlet or, supported by two horses argent, bridled gules; crest, a lion rampant gules, holding a battle-ax, proper: motto, Virtute sedes. As in the Plate of Achievements.

Murray of Livingston, descended of a second son of Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank, Treasurer Depute to King James VI. or, a letter-lock azure, on a chief of the second, three stars argent, within a bordure indented gules; crest, a hand, proper, holding a letter-lock or: motto, Inde secundus. New Register.

Murray of Spot, a second son of the first Lord Elibank, azure, a martlet, between three stars argent, within a double trezure, flowered and counter-flowered or, all surrounded within a bordure parted per pale, of the second and third; crest, a horse argent, furnished gules: motto, Virtute sedes. Lyon Register.

Murray Earl of Dysart, azure, an imperial crown or, between three stars argent, within a double trezure flowered and counter-flowered of the second; crest, a mermaid, holding a mirror in her right hand, and in her left a comb, all proper; supporters, two lions gules, collared azure, and charged with three stars argent: motto, Vat pret.

The first of this family was William Murray, a son of William Murray, parson of Dysart, a younger brother of Murray of Woodend in Perthshire, who descended in the reign of King James III. of a younger son of Tullibardin; to whom King Charles I. granted letters patent for making him Earl of Dysart Lord Huntingtoun; but those letters did not pass the seals till the third year of the reign of King Charles II. He had, by his wife Elizabeth Bruce, of the family of Clackmanan, two daughters: The eldest, Elizabeth Countess of Dysart, procured letters patent, whereby the honour was conferred on herself and her heirs. She was twice married; first, to Sir Lionel Talmash of Hemlingham in England, and bore to him Lionel Talmash, Lord Huntingtoun and Earl of Dysart, and two daughters. The first, Elizabeth Talmash, Duchess of Argyle, and mother to the present duke; the second, Katharine, wife to the Lord Down: And after his decease, to John Earl of Sutherland, but had no issue. The Countess of Dysart.
married, secondly, John Duke of Lauderdale, and her sister, Margaret, married William Lord Maynard in England.

Charles Murray Earl of Dunmore, a second son of John Marquis of Athol, and his lady, Emilia Stanley, daughter of James Earl of Derby, was dignified by King James VII. with the title of Earl, and carried the quartered arms of Athol, with a crescent for difference: And since, as by Mr Crawford's Peercage, with a part of his mother's paternal bearing.

Sir Thomas Murray of Glendoick, Baronet, and Clerk-Register, a son of Sir Robert Murray of Woodend, descended of Murray of Ochteryte, who was descended of Tulibardin, azure, a cross patee between three mullets argent, within a double trezure counter-flowered or, with the badge of Nova Scotia; crest, a dexter hand holding a mirror, proper: motto, Nostra teipsum. New Register.

David Murray, Apothecary and Burgess of Perth, descended of a fourth son of the family of Ochteryte, bears as Ochteryte, and, for difference, in the dexter chief, a martlet or. Ibid.

David Murray, a third son of the House of Dullace, descended of a second brother of the family of Ochteryte, carries as Ochteryte, and, for difference, a crescent, surmounted of a mullet, in the dexter chief point. New Register.

John Murray of Struan, one of the seventeen brothers of Tulibardin, azure, three mullets argent; and, for a brotherly difference, in the middle chief point, a crescent or. Ibid.

Murray of Stanhope, Baronet, bears three coats, quarterly, first argent, a hunting-horn sable, stringed and garnished gules; on a chief azure three stars of the first, as descended of Philiphaugh; second azure, three frases argent, for Fraser; third argent, on a chief gules, three crescents or; fourth as first; crest, a dove with an olive branch in her beak, proper: motto, Paisis nuncia. Lyon Register.

Gideon Murray of Pitkeirne, descended of Philiphaugh, as Philiphaugh; and, for difference, in the collar point, a mullet surmounted of a crescent; crest, a ship under sail, proper: motto, Tutum te litorum sistum. Lyon Register.

Alexander Murray of Priestfield, descended of Philiphaugh, as Philiphaugh; but for difference, has the chief waved; crest, a burning lamp, proper; motto, Placeam. Ibid.

Captain John Murray, in General-Major Kirkpatrick's regiment, under the Prince of Orange, descended of a younger brother of the family of Tulibardin, azure, a thistle or, between three stars argent; all within a double trezure counter-flowered of the second; crest, a lion's paw holding a sword, proper: motto, Fortis fortuna advicat. Ibid.

George Murray, sometime Cornet of the King's Guard of Horse, a younger son of the Lord Elibank, carried as Elibank, within a bordure embattled argent; crest, a horse salient, proper, furnished gules: motto, Juncta virtuti fides. L. R.

There are other ancient families of the name of Murray in the north; as Murray of Cobine, and Murray of Pulrosie in Sutherland, and others of the name in Caithness, whose armorial bearings I have not met with. The name has spread.
from the shire of Murray, to Caithness and Sutherland, to Galloway, Teviotdale and East-Lothian; as Sir James Dalrymple observes in his preface to his Scots Collections.

These of the name of Sutherland, gules, three stars or, are said to be originally from a part of a colony of Germans, called the Catti, who came to Scotland in the reign of Corbreds II. about the year of Christ 76, and possessed that north part of Scotland called from them Caithness; and these of that colony who lived southward, called the country Sutherland, from which came the name of the family; the heads of which were Thanes, afterwards Earls of Sutherland; as Alexander Ross, in his Description of that Country. Favin, in his Theatre of Honour, speaking of these Allemagne people, the Catti, says, they carried for arms, d'argent un ébat de sable, i. e. argent, a black cat. The cat has always been the badge or crest of those families with us that are said to be descended of the Catti; as the Sutherlands, the Macphersons, and others of the Clan-chattans. Sir George Mackenzie has this conjecture for Sutherland carrying a cat salient for crest; because, says he, the country of Sutherland is called Cattu, from the great number of wild cats which were of old in that country. As for the ancient use of the cat for the crest of the family of Sutherland, Sir James Balfour, in his Manuscript, says, he has seen the seal of arms of one of the old Earls of Sutherland, which had a shield charged with three stars, and adorned with a cat salient for crest, appended to a charter of that Earl's to the Monks of Dunfermline, in the reign of King David I. As for the antiquity of this noble family, all our national historians, and others, upon very good vouchers, tell us, that Alanus Thane of Sutherland was killed by Macbeth the Usurper: And his son Walter, was made Earl of Sutherland by Malcolm Canmore, in the year 1061: His son, the second Earl, built the Castle of Dumrobin, i. e. the Hill of Robert. His great-grandson, William, fifth Earl of Sutherland, entered into a contract of agreement with Archibald, Bishop of Caithness: I have seen the principal writ betwixt the Earl of Sutherland and the said bishop, dated the 10th of the calends of October 1275, wherein it is narrated, that there had been a long controversy between Gilbert, William, and Walter, Bishops of Caithness, and William, and his son William, Earls of Sutherland.

William's son and successor was Kenneth, sixth Earl of Sutherland, who was father of William and Nicol, the first of the House of Duffus; which William was the seventh Earl: From him was lineally descended John Earl of Sutherland, who died without issue in the year 1526, and was succeeded by his sister Elizabeth. She was served heir to her brother, Earl John, 1514, and had for her husband Adam Gordon of Boyne, second son to George second Earl of Huntly; of whom were descended the Earls of Sutherland, who retained the surname of Gordon, and marshalled the arms of Huntly and Sutherland together. Sometimes they placed the arms of Sutherland by way of surto, out over the quartered arms of Gordon and Seaton; and at other times, they quartered Sutherland in the first and fourth quarters, and in the second and third, Gordon and Seaton, quarterly. John, the present Earl of Sutherland, has laid aside the name and arms of Gordon, and uses only the name and arms of Sutherland, surrounded with the double treasure of Scotland; the supporters are two savages, proper, wreathed about the head and middle with laurel; and for crest, a cat sejant, proper: motto: Sine peur, i. e. Without fear.

The ancientest cadet of the Earl of Sutherland, now extant, is the Lord Duffus. The first of this noble family was Nicol Sutherland, who got from his father, the Earl of Sutherland, the lands of Torboll. He married Jean, heiress of Cheyne of Duffus, and with her got those lands; her paternal coat being gules, three cross croslets fitched or; which were composed together with his paternal arms in one shield. Afterwards one of his successors married an heiress of the name of Chisholm, who carried azure, three boar's heads erased or; for which the family carried one of them in the centre, and composed the armorial coat of Duffus thus: gules, a boar's head erased between three stars, 2 and 1, and as many cross croslets 1 and 2 or. Of late they have marshalled the arms, as first and fourth Sutherland, second and third, Cheyne and Chisholm, which are adorned with exterior ornaments, as those of the Earl of Sutherland. This family was dignified with the title of Lord Duffus by King Charles II. the 8th of December 1652.
William Sutherland of Kinstory, descended of Duflis, gules, a boar's head erased between three mullets in chief, and as many croslets fitted in base or, within a bordure argent; crest, a cat salient, proper; motto, Still without fear.

The other cadets of the Earl of Sutherland, since the year 1514, continue in the surname of Gordon, as Sir Robert Gordon of Gordonston, second son of Alexander Earl of Sutherland, and his lady, Jean, Countess of Bothwell, daughter to the Earl of Huntly. He was one of the Gentlemen of the Bed-Chamber to King Charles I. and was the first Knight-Baronet in Scotland; he carried, quarterly, first and fourth grand quarters, quarterly, first azure, three boars' heads couped or, for Gordon; second or, three lions' heads erased gules, for Badenoch; third or, three crescents within a double treurese counter-flowered gules, for Seaton; fourth azure, three cinquefoils argent, for Fraser, being the quartered arms of the family of Huntly; second and third grand quarters, gules, three stars or, for the name of Sutherland; all surrounded with a bordure of the last, for difference; crest, a cat salient, armed azure, supported on the dexter by a deer-hound argent, collared gules, and charged with three buckles or, and on the sinister by a savage, proper, wreathed about the head and middle with laurel vert. Lyon Register.

Gordon of Clunie, a second son of Gordonston, carries the same with Gordonston, and, for a further difference, charges the bordure with crescents gules; crest, a dove volant argent, with an olive branch in its beak: motto, Pax & libertas. New Register.

Somerville Lord Somerville, azure, three stars or, accompanied with seven cross croslets fitted argent, 3, 1, 2 and 1; as on a seal and old stone belonging to the family, which I have seen, and in Evison's Illuminated Book of the Arms of the Nobility. But in other old books of blazon, I have found those figures thus disposed, the three stars, two and one, within an orle of seven cross croslets; supporters, two hounds, proper, collared gules; crest, a wheel or, and upon it a dragon vert, spouting out fire behind and before: motto, Fear God in life. The first of this name and family is said to be a Norman, who came to England with William the Conqueror, and got the lands of Whichnour, in the county of Stafford in England. William de Somervill, a son of that family, came to Scotland in the reign of King Edgar, as by the Historical and Genealogical Manuscript of the Family. Besides which, William de Somervill is witness in a charter of King David I. to the abbacy of Coldingham, and in the charters of Kelso and Melrose; for which see more fully Dalrymple's Collections, page 394.

William Somerville of Linton was one of the nobles that exercised in a tourname nt at Roxburgh Castle, appointed by Alexander II. upon the festivals of his Majesty's marriage.

John Somerville, by marrying the daughter of Douglas of Loudounhill, got with her the lands of Carnwath. Their son, Walter, obtained from King David II. two charters of confirmation of the lands of Linton and Carnwath, (penes Somerville of Drum). This Sir Walter married Giles, daughter to Sir John Herring of Edmonstone in Clydesdale, and got with her the barony of Gilmerton, containing the lands of Drum in Mid-Lothian: Their son and successor was Sir John Somerville, Baron of Carnwath. He married Margaret Edmonstone, daughter of Sir John Edmonstone of that Ilk, and got with her the lands of Cambusnethan, which formerly belonged to the Bairds, confirmed to him by King Robert II.'s charter, at Stirling the 14th of July 1381. And their son, Sir Thomas Somerville, married Mary Sinclair, daughter to the Earl of Orkney, who (as the Manuscript of the Family) was created Lord Somerville by King James I. But others say, his son William was the first Lord Somerville, by King James II. Dalrymple's Collections. Of him was finally descended Hugh, sixth Lord Somerville, who married Helen, daughter to George Lord Seaton. He had with her several children, Gilbert Lord Somerville, and Hugh, the first of Drum.

Lord Gilbert sold the lordship of Carnwath to John Earl of Marr, and James Earl of Buchan. He had only one daughter, who, by a settlement and decree, was divested of these lands and honours. And his brother, Hugh Somerville of Drum, being one of the Pages of the Bed-Chamber to King James VI. and as heir- male to his brother, might have taken upon him the title and dignity of Lord Somerville; but he nor his successors never claimed it, but carried the foresaid arms, as doth the present Somerville of Drum. Of whom before.

Another eminent family of this name, was the Somervilles Barons of Cambusnethan, or Cambusnethan. The first was Sir John Somerville, a son of John Lord Somerville, by his second marriage with his lady, Mary Baillie, a daughter of Lamington. I have not met with this family's arms in old books; but in the Lyon Register they are, of late, recorded thus. James Somerville of Usher to his Majesty's Exchequer, representor of the family of Cambusnethan, bears argent, three mullets gules, within an orle of six cross croislets fitched sable; crest, a dexter hand in pale, proper, holding a crescent argent: motto, Donecurususimpleorben.

Arbuthnot Viscount of Arbuthnot, chief of the name, azure, a crescent between three stars argent; supporters, two dragons with wings expanded, and tails nowed vert, spouting out fire; crest, a peacock's head and neck, proper: motto, Laus Deo.

The first of this family is said to have married a daughter of Oliphard, Sheriff of the Merns, in the reign of King Edgar; and with her got the lands of Aberbothenoth, from which the name.

Richard de Aberbothenoth is witness in a charter granted by the abbot and convent of Kelso, in the year 1178, to Reginald, then elected abbot of Aberbrothick. Sir George Mackenzie's Manuscript.

Duncan de Aberbothenoth is witness to a donation of King Alexander II. to the abbacy of Aberbroth 1242: As in the Register of that Abbey. And there, in the year 1282, Hugh de Aberbroth grants the patronage of the church of Garvock, in pure alms, to the Monks of Aberbrothick: And, in the year 1367, Philip de Aberbothenoth Dominus ejusdem was a benefactor to the church of Aberdeen.

In the year 1421, Hugh Arbuthnot (the same with Aberbothenoth) with other gentlemen of the Merns, who had been accessory to the slaughter of John Melville of Glenbervie, were received to the Lack of Clan M'Duff, as being within nine degrees of kin to M'Duff Earl of Fife; as by a certificate under the hand and seal of one Johnston, Steward of Fife. From this Hugh was lineally descended Robert Arbuthnot of that Ilk, who was dignified with the title of Viscount of Arbuthnot, by letters patent, dated at Holyroodhouse, the 16th of November 1641; of whom is the present Viscount.

Arbuthnot of Findowry, descended of Arbuthnot of that Ilk, azure, a crescent between three stars within a bordure argent; crest, a peacock issuing out of the wreath, proper: motto, Interna praestaunt. New Register.

Simeon Arbuthnot of Catherlan, a third son of Arbuthnot of that Ilk, and his lady, Margaret Fraser, daughter of the Lord Fraser, azure, a crescent between three stars within a bordure argent, charged with eight cinquefoils of the first; crest, a peacock's head couped, proper, charged with a mullet or: motto, Sit laus Deo. Ibid.

John Arbuthnot of Fiddes, another younger son, the arms of Arbuthnot, within an orle of eight cinquefoils argent, because his mother was a Fraser; with the crest of Arbuthnot; and for motto, Tam interna-quam externa. Ibid.

The surname of Brodie, argent, a chevron gules, between three stars azure. The chief is Brodie of that Ilk, in the shire of Murray. The first of this family was one Michael, son of Malcolm, who got the lands of Brodie, in the reign of King Robert I. and, from the lands, took the surname of Brodie. See Sir George Mackenzie's Manuscript. Of whom is descended the present Laird of Brodie. The family, it seems, has been in use, as chief of the name, to carry supporters, viz. two savages wreathed about the head and middle with laurel; and for crest, a right hand holding a bunch of arrows, all proper; with the motto, Unite. As in Plate of Achievements.

The surname of Causland, argent, two stars, and a crescent in base sable, a chief chequé, of the first and second. Pont's Manuscript.

The surname of Auston, gules, six stars, three, two, and one, argent, within a bordure indented or. Pont's Manuscript.

Some Heralds, as I observed before; but especially the English, call stars of five straight points, mullets; but, if of more points than five, and wavy, they blazon them stars, of so many points.

INNES of that ilk, argent, three stars of six points waved azure, Plate X. fig. 15. and, in the dexter canton, the badge of Knight Baronet; supporters, two greyhounds, proper, collared azure, and charged with three stars; crest, a boar's head couped or; with the motto, Be truis. This family was in use to quarter their arms (till of late) with these of the surname of Aberkerder, viz. gules, three bear's heads erased or, muzzled sable.

The first of this family was Berewaldus Flandrensis. The name Flandrensis, says Sir James Dalrymple, in the Appendix to his Historical Collections, is frequently to be found in the Charters of Kelso and Paisley. And it is not to be doubted but Flandrensis, Fleming, and Flemmaticus, are all one surname, frequent in old charters, given to persons residing in Scotland come from Flanders; and that these in the South and West of Scotland, have retained the name Flandrensis, or Fleming; but these in Murray have taken their surname from their lands, as Innes of that ilk; and have made their arms agreeable to those of the old Murays in the shire of Murray. I have seen a transumt of the charter of Malcolm VI. of the lands of Innes, granted to Berewaldus Flandrensis, penses Don. de Innes; as also, a principal one, granted by Alexander II. in the 12th year of his reign, which confirms the lands of Innes, to Walter Innes the son of John, the son of Berewald Flandrensis. In a charter of Kind David II. of the Forestry of Boyne, amongst the witnesses is Robertus de Innes, Dominus ejusdem.

James INNES of that ilk, was Armour-Bearer to King James III. He gets from that king several lands in the shire of Elgin; as by that king's charter, (in the Earl of Haddington's Collections) of which follows a short abstract. "Jacobus &c. Sciatiss nos pro fideli gratuitaque servitio nobis per armigerum nostrum Jacobum Innes, de eodem temporebus retroactis multipliciter impeno suis servitibus & amicis, in exercitu nostro apud Blackness, sub nostro vexillo in defensione nostrae persona regis & corone, &c." dated at Edinburgh the 24th of May.

The cadets of this family are as follows in the New Register.

Alexander INNES of Blairton, descended of Innes of Benwall, argent, a fesse between three stars azure; crest, a primrose, proper, and thereupon a bee sucking the same; with the motto, E labore ducedo. These arms were altered by a new warrant under the Lyons' hand and seal, dated 9th of November 1688, in favour of Mr Robert INNES, now of Blairton, Writer to his Majesty's signet and Lyon-Depute, thus, ermine, three stars, two and one azure; crest, a thistle, proper, with a bee sucking the flower thereof: motto, E labore ducedo.

Mr Robert INNES, Minister of Gamry, descended of Innes of Benwall, argent, a fesse ingrailed between three stars azure, with Blairton's first crest and motto, &c.

Mr John INNES, parson of Balhavie, descended of Benwall, carries the same arms and crest, but makes the fesse waved. And Thomas INNES, another cadet of Benwall, the same arms and crest, but counter-embattles the fesse.

John INNES, Writer in Edinburgh, argent, a cross patée between three stars azure; crest, two hands joined fesse-ways, grasping a sword, all proper: motto, Ditat servata fides. New Register.

James INNES of Thursten, descended of Innes of Innermarkie, argent, three stars, each of five points, within a bordure indented azure; crest, a star of six rays, environed with clouds proper: motto, Dum spiro, coelestis spiro. Ibid.

John INNES of Edingsight, argent, three stars azure, within a bordure chequè of the first and second; crest, a branch of palm slipped, proper: motto, Ornatur vanda fronde. Lyon Register.

Alexander INNES Merchant in Edinburgh, third son to the deceased William INNES, sometime in Barnyards, in the parish of Peterhead and shire of Aberdeen, whose predecessors were for many years heritors of a part of the lands of Pitfour in the said shire, being descended of the family of Balveny in the shire of Banff, carries argent, three stars of six rays azure, within a bordure of the second, charged with eight roundlets or; crest, an inerCESS proper: with this motto, Je reçois pour donner. As in the Lyon Register and Plate of Achievements.

The English, when stars are of six points or more, blazon them stars of so many 3 T points; and when waved, call them only estoils, as in the arms of Mordaunt Earl of Peterborough, argent, a chevron between three estoils sable. As by Mr Dale Puruviang, in his Catalogue of the Nobility of England; and by the author of the Peerage of England. This family was dignified with the title of Lord Mordaunt by King Henry VIII.; and afterwards the family was dignified with the title of Earl of Peterborough by King Charles I.

Roberts Earl of Radnor; this family was anciently seated in the country of Cornwall, and began to flourish more conspicuously in the reign of King James I. at which time Richard Roberts of Truro was created a baronet; and shortly thereafter was advanced to the dignity of Baron, by the title of Lord Truro. His son and successor John was advanced by King Charles II. to the dignity of Viscount Radnor, and Earl of Falmouth; which last title was soon after changed for that of Radnor; his arms, azure, three estoils, and a chief wavy or.

Langdale Lord Langdale, in the county of York; Marmaduke Langdale was advanced to the dignity of Baron, at Bruges in Flanders, by King Charles II. the fourth of February 1657, and carries sable, a chevron between three estoils argent; supporters, two bulls sable, unguled and maned argent; and for crest, a star, as in the above blazon, which they call estoils when of six rays or more waved, but when of five plain points, mullets; as in the bearing of Ashburnham Lord Ashburnham; gules, a fesse between six mullets argent. This is one of the ancientest families in England, which can be instructed to have been of good account in England before the Conquest; and was only advanced to the title and dignity of Baron Ashburnham of Ashburnham, in the year 1659.

When mullets or estoils, with the English, are pierced like the rowel of a spur, they blazon them mullets and estoils pierced, and take them for stars, and not for spur-rowels, as the French and other nations do who call them mollets.

The name of Doughty in England, argent, two bars between three mullets of six points pierced sable.

Whittingham there, azure, three mullets pierced or. So much then for stars.

Blazing stars or comets, having many points and rays, as also having a tail, are to be met with in arms, together with the rainbow; as in the following Blazons.

With us the name of Cartwright, azure, a comet in the dexter chief point, having its rays streaming in bend or. Plate X. fig. 18.

Pont of Shires-mill, argent, a rain-bow proper, between two stars in chief gules, and a galley ship in base sable; crest, a sphere azure, beautified with six of the celestial signs, environing the terrestrial globe, all proper: motto, Terrene sub poli nibil; so given by one James Pont, in his Collections of the Blazons of the Nobility and Gentry in Scotland, in the year 1624. Which Manuscript is often mentioned by me in this treatise; the exactest copy that I have seen is that in the house of Seaton, where he died.

The family of L'Iris in Languedoc, as relative to the name Piris, i. e. a rainbow; argent, a rainbow surmounted of a cross, and accompanied with six stars of the last.

C H A P. III.

OF MAN AND HIS PARTS IN ARMS.

Those who are nicely known in devices will not allow human figures in the compose of perfect devices; because a comparison of a man cannot be taken from a man, but from things generally or specifically different; notwithstanding which, others do allow them, for we find human figures frequently in the Egyptian hieroglyphics, Grecian and Roman emblems and medals, and in armories, as marks of nobility.

The use of man and his parts, in arms, may be said, amongst many reasons for their practice, to have proceeded from the old seals of princes, great men, and from the seals of churchmen, upon which they had their own images, these of their patron saints, and of angels and cherubims, as signs of authority, piety, and devotion.
The arms of the Episcopal See of St Andrews, azure, St Andrew carrying on his breast his proper cross argent. And on that saltier he is sometimes represented expanded.

The See of Salisbury in England, azure, our blessed lady crowned, holding on her right arm the Holy Babe, and, in her left hand, a sceptre, all or; the church of Salisbury being dedicated to her; and so of other churches which have for their arms the figures of their patron saints. Yea, angels and cherubims have been, and are used by private families. For which see Guillim's and Morgan's Heraldry.

From the old seals of Princes, where, ordinarily on the one side, they are represented enthronized, and on the other, on horseback, as a chevalier, came the practice of such into the arms of countries, cities, and families.

The country of Andalusia in Spain, being recovered from the Moors by Ferdinand II. of Castile, anno 1248, as a sign of that conquest, carries, azure, a King on his throne or; Plate X. fig. 22. as orance fine. And Seville, the capital city of that country, carries the same, as Guillim, in his Display, who says, as it is prescribed by heralds, that as all creatures should be set forth in their noblest actions, so it is fit that man should be set forth in his greatest dignity. And as Bartolus, "Prin-" ceps in solio Majestatis, Pontifex in pontificibus, miles in armis, sive eques-" tris, sive pedestris, depingi debet," i. e. a King should be painted on his throne of Majesty, a Bishop in his Pontifical vestures, and a soldier in his military habit, either on foot or horseback, that they might receive reverence suitable to their respective functions.

The city of Toledo in Spain had, for arms, the figure of an Emperor crowned, sitting on a throne in his robes, holding in his right hand a mond, and in his left a sword; being the face of the Sigillum Imaginis of the Kings of Spain; because, of old, the ceremonies of the coronation of the Kings of Spain could not be legally performed but in that place, as the chief city of the empire; as Selden, in his Titles of Honour, observes. But that city carries now only gules, a crown imperial or. With us, Robert the natural son of King James V. Prior of Holyroodhouse, Lord Kincliven, and Earl of Orkney, carried the arms of his father, bruised with a batton sinister; and, for crest, took the imperial side of the King's seal; being a King in his royal robes, enthronized, holding in his right hand a sword; but in place of the mond or globe, in the left, he had a gos-hawk.

The county of Lithuania has arms from the equestrian side of its Princes' Seal, being gules, a chevalier armed cap-a-pié, argent; in his right hand a sword, and on his left arm, a shield azure, charged with a double barred cross or; mounted on a courser of the second, barbed of the third, and nailed of the fourth. Which arms are now quartered with those of Poland, since Lithuania was united to that kingdom.

The family of Nevoy of that Ilk, with us, sable, a man armed at all parts, on horseback, brandishing a sword argent. Plate X. fig. 23.

Sir David Nevoy, sometime one of the Senators of the College of Justice, carried the same arms within a bordure argent; crest, a pegasus proper; motto, Marte & arte. Lyon Register.

Human figures, when they are not of the armorial tinctures, but of their own natural colour, are said, in blazon, to be proper.

Dalziel of that Ilk, sable, a naked man proper; Plate X. fig. 24. Some old paintings and seals made the man hanging on a gibbet; which seemed a little odd to some, though not so in itself, considering the tradition of their rise, and the bearings of other families; as that of Drolle in Denmark, given us by Menestrier, argent, a devil in an ugly shape sable, in allusion to the name Drolle, which signifies the wicked one.

These of Dalziel are said to perpetuate the memory of a brave and dangerous exploit performed by one of their progenitors, in taking down from a gibbet the body of a favourite and near kinsman of King Kenneth II. whether true or false, it is all one, since it gave occasion to such a bearing. For, as the story goes, the King being exceedingly grieved that the body of his friend should be so disgracefully treated by his enemies, proffered a great reward to any of his subjects who would adventure to rescue it; but when none would undertake that hazardous enterprise, a valorous gentleman came and said to the King, Dalziel, which signifies, as I am informed by those who pretend to know the old Scots language, I dare; which attempt he effectually performed to the King's satisfaction. And his posterity took this remarkable bearing, and the word Dalziel for their surname, when surnames came to be used, with the signification thereof, I dare, for their motto; the crest being a sword in pale, proper; supporters, two men in armour cap-a-file, with round targets; now used by this ancient family, which stood up eminently for King Robert Bruce, as did Sir Robert Dalziel for King David Bruce, who got from that King the barony of Selkirk; as by a charter of the date 15th May 1365. His successor was Sir John Dalziel, Knight; from whom was descended Robert Dalziel of that Ilk, who firmly adhered to Queen Mary in all her troubles. He was father of another Robert, who was knighted by King James VI. of Scotland; and afterwards, for his own merit, and the constant loyalty of his ancestors in all time past, was by King Charles I. raised to the honour of Lord Dalziel, 15th of September 1625; and thereafter made Earl of Carnwath, in the year 1639. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Robert Grichton of Cluny, by whom he had Robert his successor, and Sir John Dalziel of Glenca, of whom is descended the present Earl of Carnwath.

Which Robert, second Earl of Carnwath, was a great sufferer for his loyalty to King Charles I. and II. He married Christian, daughter of William Douglas of Drumlanrig, one of the progenitors of the Dukes of Queensberry, by whom he had Gavin, his son and successor, and father of James and John, both Earls of Carnwath. The last Earl, John, died unmarried, whose estate and honour devolved upon Sir Robert Dalziel of Glenca, Bart. now Earl of Carnwath, who carries the foresaid achievement.

Thomas Dalziel of Bunns, Lieutenant-General of Scotland in the reign of King Charles II. carries the same arms with his chief, with the addition of a dexter canton, argent, charged with a sword and pistol saltier-ways proper; crest, a dexter hand brandishing a scimitar; the shield cottised with two pavilion-poles, in place of supporters; motto, I dare. New Register. And there,

John Dalziel, Merchant in London, son to William Dalziel, sometime Commissary of Wigton, descended of the house of Dalziel, now Earl of Carnwath, carries the arms of the family within a bordure ingrailed argent; crest, a demi-man brandishing a scimitar proper; motto, I dare.

The name of Walterton or Waterston, azure, a naked man riding on a dolphin, and playing on a harp or. Workman's Manuscript.

The name of Carwood or Carvewood, parted per fesse, sable and argent, on the first a demi-man, proper, holding in his right hand a sword pale-ways, and in the left a carpenter's axe, all proper; and in base, the branch of an oak tree, acorned vert; as relative to the name. Workman's Manuscript.

Gavin Drummond, descended of the family of Kildies, which was descended of Drummond of Pitkellanie, or, three bars waved gules, over all a naked man naiant in pale, holding in his right hand a sword; crest, a dexter hand holding a spear. New Register.

Bonyman, argent, a naked man, proper, shooting an arrow out of a bow gules. Workman's Manuscript.

The name of Oswald, azure, a naked boy pointing at a star in the dexter chief point. Pont's Manuscript.

And in our New Register, the arms of James Oswald of Fingalton are matriculated thus; azure, a savage wraithed about the middle with bay leaves, having a shear of arrows hanging by his side, and bearing a bow in his left hand, all proper, and pointing with the other hand to a comet, placed in the dexter chief point or; crest, a dexter hand issuing out of a cloud, and pointing to a star of eight rays, proper; motto, Forti faciet cœnorum. And in the same Register, it was permitted to the said James Oswald to impale with the above-written coat the bearing of Elizabeth Gillespie, his deceased spouse, being azure, in base, a ship under sail argent; in the sinister canton, a hand couped, gauntleted, and grasping a sword, proper.
The parts of man, such as the head, arms, hands, legs, &c. are frequent in arms; as trophies of victory, signs of great expeditions, and as relative to the names of the bearers.

These parts, whether of man or beast, when cut off from the body, are either couped or erased. Couped, when those parts are cleanly cut off, as it were by a straight line, and erased, when they seem to be torn or plucked off, having pieces of the skin or flesh hanging at them, as some say like the teeth of a saw; for which the French say, arraché, the Latins, eranu, avulsus, or lacer.

As for the position of the head in a shield of arms, when the half of the face, or little more, is only seen, it is said then to be in profile: After this position are all the heads of Moors, wherefore the word profile is omitted in the blazon of them. Moors' heads are frequently surrounded with a ribbon or bandage, like a wreath, for which they are said to be banded, or tortillé.

The old arms of ARRAGON, which are now the ensign of the Island of Sardinia, are by Favin thus blazoned, d'argent, à une croix de guettes, cantonnée de quatre têtes de Mores sable, au bandeau royal, i.e. argent, a cross gules, between four Moorish Kings' heads, banded of the first: Here the author omits the word couped, for so their necks are cut, and tells us, for the rise of them, that Pedro the King of Arragon, in the year 1106, in memory of his victory over four Moorish Kings, whom he killed in the battle of Alarcon, took their heads for the armorial figures of the Kingdom of Arragon: But afterwards James King of Arragon disused them, and carried only the arms of BARCELONA, giving the former to a younger son, whom he made King of Sardinia, with the motto, Trophée Royal Arragonum.

The arms of ALGARVE, and of many families in Spain, are of the same kind, and rise, viz. from victories over Moorish Princes. Those of Algarve are, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a Moor's head couped sable, tortillé of the first; second and third gules, the bust of a king clothed and crowned or. Plate X. fig. 25.

But is said of the head of a man or woman, with a full face, neck and shoulders; as Monsieur Baron, in his blazon of the arms of CAMPION, in France, d'or, coupee d'azur, au buste de femme de carnation, couronnée à l'antique d'or, i.e. parted per fesse, or and azur, the head, neck, and shoulders of a woman in full front, proper, crowned with an antique crown of the first.

GLADSTANES of that Ilk, in the shire of Teviotdale, argent, a savage head couped, distilling drops of blood, and thereupon a bonnet composed of bay and holly leaves, all proper, within an orle of eight martlets sable; crest, a griffin issuing out of the wreath, holding in his right talon a sword, proper: motto, Fide et virtute. New Register.

This family is pretty ancient, being formerly designed of Cocklaw. I have observed in a charter granted by King Robert III. of several lands to William Inglis of Manor, that the right of Gladstanes of Cocklaw is reserved. George Gladstanes, and William Gladstanes, are witnesses in a charter of Archibald Earl of Angus to his apparent heir James Douglas, July 2d 1479.

I have seen a charter of Matthew Gladstanes of that Ilk, by which he dispone and alienates the lands of Overkellwood in Galloway, to Mirabel Gladstanes, his daughter, and apparent heiress, and to Herbert Gladstanes her husband, of the date 1541; which charter is confirmed by King James VI. the 20th year of his reign: As also another charter of that king's, of the date 1620, of the lands of Overkellwood, to Matthew Hirstanes, and his spouse Elizabeth Gladstanes, who was heiress of these lands, now called Craigs. Upon which account, the present Hirstanes of Craigs, as lineally descended of them, quarters the arms of Gladstanes with his own. Of which afterwards.

GLADSTANES of Whitleau, as a cadet, carries the same arms with Gladstanes of that Ilk, within a bordure invected gules; crest and motto as before. Ibid.

HALBERT GLADSTANES, Merchant in Edinburgh, as descended of a second brother of Gladstanes of that Ilk, the same, within a bordure indented gules.

MOIR of Scotston, argent, three negroes' heads couped, proper, banded of the first; crest, a mort-head, with two leg bones, saltier-ways, proper: motto, Non sibi sed euniis. New Register. See Plate X. fig. 26.
OF MAN AND HIS PARTS IN ARMS.

JOHN Moir of Stonywood, argent, three Moors' heads couped, distilling drops of blood, proper; crest, a Mauritanian's head couped as the former. Ibid.

THOMAS Moir of Otterburn, whose grandfather was a second son of the family of Abergeldie, argent, three negroes' heads couped, proper, within a bordure counter-indented, sable and or.

Those of the name of Moir and Morison carry Moors' heads, relative to their name.

Mr William Moir of Hilton, Advocate, or, three Moors' heads couped, distilling drops of blood, proper, wreathed about with bay leaves vert; crest, a dexter arm from the shoulder issuing out of a cloud, holding a branch of laurel slipped: motto, Virtute non aliier. New Register.

Morison of Dairsie, in Fife, azure, three Saracens' heads conjoined in one neck, proper, the faces looking to the chief dexter and sinister sides of the shield. Mackenzie's Heraldry. Plate X. fig. 27.

Morison of Bogney, the same, with this difference, that the uppermost head was affixed by a wreath to the other two. Mackenzie's Heraldry.

Henry Morison, sometime Writer to the Signet, descended of a second son of Dairsie, carries as Dairsie, with two falcons' heads azure, couped in the flanks, for difference; crest, a serpent issuing out of the torse, proper: motto, Pretio prudentia praestat. Lyon Register.

Morison of Prestongrange, argent, three Moors' heads couped sable, 2 and 1, and banded of the first; for crest, he carries the three heads of Descay, with the motto, Pretio prudentia praestat. New Register.

Edington of Balberton, azure, three savage heads couped argent. Lyon Register.

The chief family of this name was Edington of that Ilk, in the shire of Berwick, now extinct.

Ethlington of that Ilk, argent, three boys' heads erased gules. Pont's Manuscript.

The surname of Jew, in England, carry Jews' heads: As Sir John Jew of Whitefield, argent, a cheveron between three Jews' heads couped sable, as relative to the name.

The arm of a man is frequently carried as the emblem of strength; as in the bearing of Scavonia, or, an arm clothed gules, holding a scimitar argent. And the arms of Bosnia, a famous province in Dacia, azure, an arm armed or, holding a sword erect, proper.

The Armstrongs in the south of Scotland, as relative to their name, argent, a dexter arm issuing from the sinister side of the shield, clothed gules, holding a tree erantidant in pale, proper, broken at the top; and some of the name has the arm holding a sword, as in our old books.

Armstrong of Mangerton, argent, three pallets azure, which, as John Ferc says, represent strength; and for crest, an arm from the shoulder, armed, proper.

Armstrong of Whittock, descended of Mangerton, argent, three pallets sable; crest, an arm from the shoulder gules: motto, Invictus manae. New Register.

Francis Armstrong, son to John Armstrong of Parknow, azure, a fesse or, between two arms armed, and couped at the shoulder argent; crest, an arm issuing out of a cloud holding a club, proper: motto, Invicta laboure. New Register. Plate X. fig. 28.

The surname of Fender, azure, a dexter hand holding, upon the point of a sword argent, an otter's head couped or. Pont's Manuscript.

The surname of Jex, argent, a cheveron azure, between two crescents gules in chief, and in base an arm armed of the second, holding a sword, proper, hilted and pommelled or. Ogilvie's Manuscript.

Tremain in Devonshire in England, carries arms relative to the name; as Guilliam, in his Display, gules, three dexter arms conjoined at the shoulders, and flexed in triangle or, with lists folded argent. Plate X. fig. 29.

Sylvester Petra Sancta has the same arms from Guillim which he thus describes, "Brachia tria auro manicata, & que flexis cubitis more pugillum videntur ictum validum interminari, in miniato scuti alveolo invicem junctum sunt."
Hands are frequent in arms, as signs of valour, and symbols of faith and justice; when expanded, and the palm seen, they are said to be palmé.

Robert Adair of Kinhilt, parted per bend dexter, or and argent, three dexter hands palmé, and erected, 2 and 1 gules, fig. 32; erest, a man's head couped and bloody, proper: motto, Loyal au Mart. New Register.

Those of this name in Scotland are originally descended from the FitzGeralds, now Earls of Desmond in Ireland, and take their name from the barony of Adair in that earldom: It is said they carry for crest a bloody head, for killing one Carey of Dunkey, a proscribed rebel in Scotland.

It is to be observed in blazon, when we say he carries three figures, that they are situate two in chief and one in base, without naming their situation: But if otherwise situate, it must be told in the blazon how, as in pale, in bend, and in fesse, after the position of the ordinaries; when we say pale-ways, bend-ways, and fesse-ways, those do not relate to the situation, but to the position of the figures, as erect, diagonal, or horizontal.

Agnew of Lochnaw, as in Sir George Mackenzie's Heraldry, argent, three sinister hands couped, and erect in pale, 2 and 1 gules. But more properly we would say, argent, three sinister hands couped pale-ways, and not in pale, which supposes them to be above one another. For this family see page 162.

The McDonalds, as a part of their armorial bearings, have a dexter hand couped, fesse-ways, proper, holding a cross croslet fitché sable, upon the account, it is said, that one of their progenitors assisted St. Patrick to propagate the Christian faith in Ireland, and to reduce the barbarous people there to civility and Christianity, and then their ensign was the hand holding a cross croslet fitched.

The Clan Chattan, Clan Urquih, and MacPhersons, have in their arms a right hand couped gules, holding a dagger pale-ways as a badge of their faithfulness and loyalty to King Robert the Bruce, in killing of a great man of the name of Cummin his enemy.

The McIntoshes, since they married the heiress of the chief of the Macphersons, as also the Farquharsons, as descended of the McIntoshes, have the same hand and dagger in their arms.

Hardie of Cargarse, gules, a dexter hand fesse-ways, holding a dagger argent, point downward, between two mullets (i.e. spur-rowels) or. The first of this name, says Sir George Mackenzie, in his Manuscript, was a Frenchman, who waited upon John, King of France, when prisoner in England with King David II. of Scotland. King Edward III. of England, coming to visit them, ordered his cup-bearer to fill a glass of wine to the most worthy: He gave it to his own King; upon which the French King's servant gave him a box on the ear. His King reproved him, saying, Toni hardie; upon which he got the name of Hardie; and coming to Scotland with King David Bruce, by that King's charters got the lands of Cargarse. His posterity lost these lands of late; and several branches of the family of the name of Hardie are vassals and tenants to the Duke of Gordon.

Neilson of Craigo, argent, three left hands bend sinister-ways, couped gules, 2 and 1. The first of this family was, William, filius Sigilli, so designed in a charter which he got from King Robert I. of the lands of Craigo; which I saw in the hands of Major John Neilson.

Neilson of Craigaffie, argent, three left hands bend sinister-ways, two in chief, and one in base, holding a dagger aszure; as by Mr Thomas Crawford's blazons. Of late, Gilbert Neilson of Craigaffie has matriculated his bearing in our New Register, thus, parted per chevron, argent and or; in chief, two sinister hands couped, and erect gules, and, in base a dagger, point downward, proper, fig. 31; erest, a dexter hand holding a lance erect, proper: motto, His regis servitium.

Alexander Neilson of Maxwood, descended of Craigaffie, carries the same with Craigaffie, with a man's heart, proper, in the coeur point, for difference; and, his errest, a dexter hand holding a dagger, proper: motto, Virtue & voix. Ibidem.

The surname of Steven, argent, on a chevron between two crescents in chief, and a sinister hand couped in base, gules, two mullets of the field. Ogilvy's Manuscript.
OF MAN AND HIS PARTS IN ARMS.

The left hand is taken to be the Symbol of justice, because the right (say heralds and writers of devices) est prompta ad omnia neguita. With the Romans, the left hand is an ensign of empire, and has been continued since by the Kings of France; who, when enthronised, hold in their right hand a sceptre of gold, and, in their left, a rod of ivory, topped with a left hand palmé, called the rod of justice, to show the integrity, that sovereigns and judges should observe, in administering justice; it is one of the regalia of the kings of France, and sometimes represented on the seals of Henry V. and VI. of England, when they thought themselves masters and kings of France. For which see Sandford's Genealogical History.

The arms of the province of Ulster, in Ireland, argent, a sinister hand couped gules, palmé. This is now become the badge of the Knights Baronets in England, of which before. Besides, the left hand is carried as an armorial figure by many good families in Britain.

William Maynard, Lord Maynard, argent, a chevron azure, between three sinister hands erected coupe at the wrist gules. This family was ancient in England; the heads of which served under Prince Edward, called the Black Prince, in the wars against France. Of this family was descended Sir William Maynard, who was dignified with the title of Baronet, the 9th year of the reign of King James I. 1611, and, in the 18th year of that king's reign, with the title of Lord Maynard, of Wicklow, in Ireland; and, by King James I. in the third year of his reign, he was advanced to the degree of a Peer of England, by the title of Lord Maynard of Estaines. His son William married, for his second wife, Lady Margaret Murray, daughter to James Earl of Dysart, in Scotland, and sister to the Dutchess of Lauderdale, by whom she had issue a son, called Henry. His eldest son, by his first marriage, is Bannaster, the present Lord Maynard.

Two right hands, grasping each other, is called by the French foi, and is taken for the emblem of friendship, fidelity, and alliance; and is frequently met with on medals and ensigns. The Swiss Cantons, when they united, had, on a medal on that occasion, two dexter hands joined, with the words, omnia inseparabilis.

Monsieur Baron, in his l'Art Heraldique, gives the arms of Piperat in France, d'ermine à la foi d'argent emanchés d'azur, i.e. ermine, two hands joined ferse-ways, with sleeves azure. Plate X, fig. 32.

As for legs of men carried in arms I shall here add but a few instances, since these parts have no proper terms given them in this science, but these that relate to their situation and position, as to other natural figures.

The arms of the Isle of Man, Plate X. fig. 33, are often to be met with in the armorial seals of our nobility, and in these in England also, who have been dignified with the title of Lords of the Isle of Man; they are gules, three legs armed, proper, conjoined in the centre at the upper part of the thighs, flexed in triangle, garnished and spurred or.

Imhoff, in his Blazons, gives the achievement of Henry Stewart, Lord Darnly, and Man, where these arms are marshalled with others; he looks upon the three legs not as armed, but booted, and blazons them thus, "Crura tria femoribus " connexa, & oreis calcarius armata, quorum duo plantam pedis sursum, tertia " deorsum, horrendunt." This island belonged anciently to Scotland, and, as feudal arms, were quartered by the nobility that were ancient proprietors thereof; and since dignified with the title of that island.

The McLeods quarter their arms of pretension with their own. Upon the account that their progenitors were proprietors and possessors of that island. And, MACKENZIE Earl of Cromarty, by being come of an heirees of McLeod, quarters these arms in his achievement.

These arms of Man have likewise been carried by noble families with us, who were dignified with the title of Lords of Man. King James II. of Scotland, created Alexander his second son, Duke of Albany, Earl of March, Lord of Annandale, and of the Isle of Man; upon which account he carried the arms of these dignities, quarterly, first, the arms of Scotland; second, gules, a lion rampant argent, within a bordure of the last, charged with eight roses of the first, for the commend of March; third, gules, three legs of a man armed, proper, conjoined in the centre, at the upper parts of the thighs, flexed in triangle, garnished and spurred or, for the Isle of Man; and fourth, or, a saltier and chief gules, for the Lordship of Annan-dale. Which arms were on his seals appended to charters and other evidences granted by him; and are yet to be seen on the College Church of Edinburgh, to which he was a benefactor; and were also carried by his sons, his successors in those dignities.

Stanley Earl of Derby, and Lord of Man, in England, as present possessor of the Isle of Man, quarters the same arms with his own.

I have no where met with any account of carrying such figures for that island, but in Edward Bolton's Elements of Armories; where he says, these three legs represent the three corners, capes, or promontories of the island which point to England, Scotland, and Ireland; and, being equivocally relative to the name of man, these legs are adorned as belonging to a chevalier. And he observes, that, from these ancient arms of the Isle of Man, legs have crept into the bearings of many private families in England; and I may say the same too of some private families in Scotland; as those of the surname of Man carry the same; particularly, Captain John Man, one of that name, in the county of Murray.

Birnie of Broomhill, gules, a fesse argent, between a bow and an arrow in full draught, in chief, and three men's legs couped at the thighs, in fesse, pale-ways argent; crest, a lion's head erased gules; with the motto, Sperare aude incipe. New Register.

Sir Andrew Birnie of Saline, sometime one of the Senators of the College of Justice, the same with Broomhill, but charged the fesse with a lion's head erased sable: crest, a dexter hand, proper, holding an anchor erected or, environed with clouds, proper: motto, Arcus artes astra. Lyon Register.

The name of Haddon, in England, or, a man's leg couped at the middle of the thigh, azure.

The name of Prime there, argent, a man's leg erazed at the thigh, sable.

The name of Bain or Bone with us, sable, two leg-bones in cross argent; for which see Sir George Mackenzie's Heraldry. But the name of Bane carries other figures. Of which afterwards.

The name of Boulter, in England, or, on a chevron gules, three dead men's skulls of the field.

The other principal part of man, the heart, is frequent in arms, upon the account of affection, event, religion, and as speaking to the name.

The name of Douglas carries a man's heart, proper; since Sir James Douglas's affectionate expedition to Jerusalem to bury the heart of the valiant King Robert the Bruce.

The name of Lockhart has a man's heart also; because one of their predecessors is said to have accompanied Sir James Lord Douglas to the Holy Hand, with the skewer said king's heart, which, being placed within a padlock, makes a rebus, with the name Lockhart; and motto, Corda serrata pando. And some of them say fero.

Seaton of Pitmedden, of whom before, placing a man's heart distilling drops of blood in the middle of his paternal coat, upon the account of the manner of his father's death, who was shot through the heart in his early appearance in arms for King Charles I. against the rebels.

The surname of Rule, which they bring from St Regulus, who brought the relics of St Andrew to Scotland, or, three men's hearts within a bordure engrailed gules. Mackenzie's Heraldry.

As for the antiquity of the name; Sir Robert Sibbald, in his History of Fife, page 161, says, Adam de Sutwell, brother and heir to Ricard de Rule, son of Henry, resigned the lands of Balmerino, Cultrach, and Balindine, "In curia regis "Alexandri apud Forfar, die post festum St. Dionysii, anno 1215." in favour of Queen Emergarda for 1000 merks Sterling.

I find another of the name of Rule mentioned in the Minutes of the Register of Melrose, viz. in the charter of Lanercostini de Moll to that Abbey, about the year 1236. And, in the year 1482, Andrew Rule is designed Armiger Domini de Home, in a charter peces Domini de Home. And, in our Histories, William Rule is forfeited for keeping out the Castle of Crichton against King James III.

The surname of Hart carry relative to the name, viz. gules, on a chief argent, three hearts of the first.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

Robert Hart, a valiant man, (as by our historians) was killed with the Lord Douglas, fighting against the English in the battle of Otterburn. The name of Howison, argent, a heart, proper, and, on a chief, azure, three flower-de-luces or. Pont's Manuscript.

Thorn of that ilk, gules, on a fesse argent, three mens' hearts of the first. Crawford's Manuscript.

The name of Algoe, argent, three hearts conjoined in triangle by the points gules, and in base by a martlet sable. Og. Manuscript.

The first of this name is said to have come from Italy with one of the Abbots of Paisley. And his grandchild, Peter Algoe, got the lands of Easter Walkinshaw, by marrying Marion Morton, heiress thereof, 1547.

The name of Clunie, argent, three mens' hearts, proper. Ogilvy's Manuscript.

The religious of the Order of St Augustine have for arms, argent, the heart of that saint, proper, with flames of fire issuing out of it on a chief sable.

The Jesuits carry on their arms a heart pierced with three passion-nails.

The Royal bearing of Denmark, or, sené of hearts gules, three lions passant of the same, crowned, armed, and langued azure.

OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

These are esteemed by some more worthy bearings than fowls and fishes, for their more lively and noble qualities; they prefer the male to the female, and rapacious, fierce beasts, to tame, meek, and serviceable ones. As Cornelius Agric. d'Art Herald. "Quae hominibus servituti vel usu necessaria sunt in ar- mis, gerere, nefas est & infamia; sed omnes a crudelibus, bellicos & rapacibus, nobilitatis suae insignia auspiciari oportebat." Whatever might have been the opinion of the ancients of the natural qualities of things, in their first assumption, and in the infancy of heraldry, yet now, in its perfection, these qualities, though commendable, are not so much considered as their long continuance in ancient families as signs of nobility; being, in their formal armorial dress, in position, disposition, and situation, with their armorial attributes; of which particularly, as I go along; treating separately of animals most used in armories, in their proper terms of blazon. And first then,

OF THE LION.

For his heroic qualities he is used as the emblem of strength, courage, generosity, power, and royalty, being called the king of beasts. His noble posture, or position in arms, is, to be erect on his hinder feet, with his fore feet towards the right side and upper angle of the shield; his head direct forward, showing but one ear and one eye; in which position, as the best, he is called by the French a Lion; but we, and the English, add the term rampont. As Plate XI. fig. 1.

In this posture the lion has been carried on the armorial ensign of Scotland, since the first founding of its monarchy by King Fergus I.; which is not only asserted by our own historians and antiquaries, but also by foreign writers. Tavin, in his Theatre of Honour, Book Third, Chap. Third, says, "Fergus I. of Scotland, for the magnanimity of his courage, took, for his arms and device, the creature counted the symbol of valiancy and generosity, viz. d'or, un lion rampant de gueules;" which his successors, the Kings of Scotland, have retained without change to this time.

And Hopingius, cap. 6. "Cum Picti in agros Scotorum copias primum ducerent, quibus haud minus cupide quam strenue obviaam ivit Fergusius, sublatis signis & rumpendo ipsorum clastra, assumptique leonem rubeum erectum, in aurca facie descriptum, cauda tergum, ut fere mos est, dum sc ad pugnam incitat, verberans; eaque generosam iracundiam significans." eites Laurentius Beyerlink, Franciscus Memenius, and others, whom I forbear to cite for brevity's sake.

I do not mean here that arms are as old as Fergus I. of Scotland, nor for many hundred years after; but that nations, principalities, and other colonies of men, under a head and leader, had ensigns, banners, and badges, under which they fought, and were distinguished in time of war; and these cognizances were long in use before hereditary armorial bearings of subjects. Of whose rise and distinction from imperial ensigns I have treated here, and on my Essay on the Ancient and Modern Use of Armories.

We have a testimonium from the History of Florence for the antiquity of the Lion, the Scots ensign, carried by William, the brother of King Achaius, on the head of 4000 Scots, in the wars of Charles the Great of France, in Italy; where the people, in honour of the Scots and their ensign, appointed public games, in which a lion was crowned with many honours and ceremonies for the Scots valour in their relief, as the custom was in those times; and Arnoldus Uvion, an ancient writer, in his Additionibus ad Lignum Vitae, speaks of the two conditions of the ensign of Scotland, first, That it was a red lion in a gold field, and secondly, that lion was surrounded with a double trezure flowered with counter-flowered with flower-de-luces gules, after the union with France. His words are, " leonem rubeum in " aurea planicie, primum fuisse Regum Scotorum stemma. Leonem vero cum lilis " positis tumma secundum." The lion has been also very ancietly carried by the Lords and Counts of Flan- ders. Where Olivarius Uredus, De Sigillis Comitum Flandriae, page 96, speaking of the lion as borne by the ancients on their ensign, says, it was hieroglyphicum indo- mite virtutis; and very ancietly borne on the ensigns of the princes of the Low Countries of Germany, whether called Franks or Frisians. His words are, " In " Germania inferiori theotica lingua utentes, a Morinis ad Euburnos usque, qui " Franci seu Frisii sunt appellati, ab omni antiquitate, leonem in insignibus ha- " buisse." And that the Franks, before they took their peregrination to France, carried a lion, and, when settled there, had the same. Which Lazius also wit- neseth, who says, that Cadomirus, King of France, son of Clovis, having de- feated several kings, placed a crown on the head of his lion, which he bore for his ensign. And as for other figures which the French have used afterwards, I shall speak to, them at the title of the Flower-de-l-uce.

Though the old princes and counts in the Low Countries of Germany, which are now extinct, carried the lion, the same is still the ensign of these countries, and carried by the ancients families there. Which made Menestrier observe, that the most part of the nobility and gentry there carry lions, in imitation of, and affect- ion to the old counts and princes of Flanders.

Such imitation and affectious are not only to be found there, but almost every where, for subjects to imitate as near as they can, those figures of their sovereigns; and the more their own are like to them they are thought the more honourable; and, I doubt not, but many ancient families with us have assumed the lion rampant in imitation of the sovereign's one.

The old Earls of Dunbar carried a lion rampant. The first of the family I met with was Cospatrick, son of Cospatrick, Earl of Northumberland, who got from Malcolm Canmore the lands of Dunbar, and several others in Lothian and the Merse. His son and successor was Cospatricius Comes, without any local appellation, who carried gule, a lion rampant argent, within a bordure of the first, charged with roses of the second. He, in the reign of King David I. grants a donation of the churches of Home, Lunden, Greenlaw, the lands of Fogo, and the lands called Bothcallshields, to the Abbey of Kelso; as by the chartulary of that Abbey. He is said to have died 1166, and was succeeded by his son or grandson Wallevus, or Waldevus Earl of Dunbar, who confirms his father's and grandfathers's charters to the abbacy of Kelso. His younger brother Patrick, was designed Dominus de Greenlaw, and Filiius Cospatricii Comitis, in his charter of the Church of Greenlaw to the Monks of Kelso. Of this Patrick of Greenlaw were descended William, his son, and John, his grandson, both designed Dominus de Home and Green- law in their charters.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

Patrick, son of Waldeve Earl of Dunbar, married Ada, natural daughter of King William. In his charter of confirmation of that of his father's to the abbacy of Kelso, he is designed Patrickus Comes de Dunbar, filius Waldeve Comitis. I have seen five charters of this earl in the custody of Mr. David Simpson, historian, and who had them out of the Earl of Morton's charter-chest, all granted by him to the abbacy of Melrose, with the consent of his wife Ada, of the lands of Redpath, for prayers to be said for the souls of predecessors, and for the health of King William, his Queen, and their son Alexander. The seals appended to these five charters were entire, being of red wax upon white, having the impression of a man in armour upon horseback, holding in his right hand a sword, and on his left arm a shield, charged with a lion rampant within a bordure of roses, being about eight in number, and the legend round, sigillum Comitis Patrickii de Dunbar.

Another Patrick Earl of Dunbar, in his charter of confirmation of these of his predecessors to Kelso, is designed Patrickus, viles, filius & heres Domini Patrickii Comitis de Dunbar, & Comitiæ filia Johannis. In this charter he disposes the lands therein mentioned thus: " Prout in charta bone memorie Cospatricii, Wal-" vi, Patrieii, & Patrieii avi mei, Comitum de Dunbar, plenius continentur." Here he gives a deduction of his genealogy as before. I have seen other five principal charters of this Earl's to the abbacy of Melrose, in the custody of the foresaid Mr. Simpson; the seals thereto appended were the same with the former five, only with these variations, viz. the caparisons of the horse were charged with the foresaid arms, and, on the back of the seal, by way of reverse, was a round impression of a lesser seal, having a triangular shield charged with a lion rampant, and the legend sigillum armuum. His successor, Patrick Earl of Dunbar, is designed Earl of March. From him was descended Patrick Earl of March and Dunbar, who married Agnes, sister and heiress of John Randolph Earl of Murray, who was killed at the battle of Dunbar 1346, without issue: She bore to him two sons, George and John.

George was designed Earl of March and Dunbar, Lord Annandale and Man; as in a charter of his, penes Comitem de Morton, to the abbacy of Melrose. And, in another charter of his to French of Thornydyke, which I have seen in the custody of David French of Frenshland, re-presenter of Thornydyke. His seal of arms is appended to both, not in an equestrian form, as his predecessors before carried them, but in another form; viz. a large triangular shield couched, and thereon a lion rampant, within a bordure charged with eight roses; the shield was adorned with a helmet, and therupon, for crest, a horse's neck and head, supported by two lions rampant, and behind each of their backs a tree growing. This Earl, being dispossessed by King Robert III. for refusing to marry his eldest son the Prince with his daughter, conform to an agreement with the Earl, who had him advanced considerable sums of money, renounced his allegiance to the crown of Scotland, joined with the English, and made a great havock on the borders of his native country, for which he was forfeited. But afterwards he procured a pardon from Robert Duke of Albany, then Governor of Scotland, returned home, and lived in peace till his death, which happened anno 1416. He had for issue, George, his son and heir, and Sir Gavin Dunbar of Beil.

George his son and heir was not reposed to his father's estate, which was annexed to the crown. But King James I. of Scotland was graciously pleased to give him a pension out of the earldom of Buchan, which supported him according to his quality. He died without issue.

The above-mentioned John Dunbar, second son of Patrick Earl of March, and his lady Agnes, sister and heir of John Randolph Earl of Murray, married Marjory, daughter of King Robert II. He, in the right of his mother, pretended to the earldom of Murray, which he got confirmed to him by a charter from the King his father-in-law, dated the 9th March, "Anno regni secundo, dilecto filio nostro " Johanni de Dunbar, & Mariota sponsae ejus, filia nostre carissime." I have insisted longer on this family than I designed, upon the account of their ancient seals, and because many other noble families have their armorial figures from them by descent, viz. the Homes, Hepburns, and others, as vassals and followers of that ancient and great family. But, before I descend to them, I shall speak a little of the branches of the surname of Dunbar.
THOMAS DUNBAR, son and heir of JOHN Earl of MURRAY, carried, quarterly, first and fourth Dunbar, second and third or; three cushions pendent by the corners, within a double treasure flowered and counter-flowered .gules, for Randolph Earl of Murray.

There were three or four of this family successively Earls of Murray. The last of whom, James Dunbar Earl of Murray, is said to have been affianced to a near kinswoman of his own, Isabel, daughter of Innes of that ilk. She died, bearing to him a son Alexander, before dispensation could be obtained from the Pope, as was requisite, by reason of consanguinity between them. Afterwards he married Katharine Gordon, daughter to the Earl of Huntly; she bore to him two daughters, Marion Dunbar, the eldest, wife to James Crichton, who got with her the lands of Frenandraught; of whom the Viscounts of Frenandraught. Anne, the second daughter, was married to Archibald, a younger son of William Earl of Douglas, who was made Earl of Murray by King James II. and shortly after forfeited for his rebellion.

The above-mentioned Alexander, upon the account his mother was not legally married to his father, was disappointed of the earldom, but got the lands of Westfield, and the office of the sherifdom of Murray heritably, which continues in the family at this day. He married a daughter of Sutherland of Duffus. Their son and heir, James Dunbar, married Euphame, the eldest daughter and co-heir of Dunbar of Cumnock, and got with her these lands, which his successors enjoyed under the designation of Barons of Cumnock, for an hundred years, till they sold it, and then the family returned to their old designation of Westfield; of whom is descended the present James, Laird of Westfield, Sheriff of Murray, whose achievement is quarterly, first and fourth gules, a lion rampant argent, within a bordure of the last, charged with eight roses of the first, for Dunbar; second and third, or, three cushions within a double treasure, flowered and counter-flowered gules, for Randolph; crest, a right hand palmé proper, reaching to two Earl's coronets tied together; with the motto, Sub spe; supporters, two lions argent, standing on a compartment, whereon are these words, Præcipitatus attamen vivus. See Plate of Achievements.

DUNBAR of Mochrum carries the arms of Randolph, with a mullet for his difference; as in Pont's Manuscript.

This family got the lands of Mochrum by marrying the second daughter and co-heir of Patrick Dunbar of Cumnock, who was probably, says Sir James Dalrymple, a brother of Patrick Earl of March; because, in the Register of King David II. there is a charter of George Dunbar of Cumnock, in the Sherifdom of Ayr, and of Blantyre, in the shire of Lanark. Which last-mentioned lands went with the third daughter of Patrick Dunbar of Cumnock, who married one of the name. Of whom were the Dunbars of Enterkin.

GAVIN DUNBAR, Archdeacon of St Andrews, and Clerk Register, being thirteen years Bishop of Aberdeen, died the 6th of March 1531. He was of the House of Westfield, and carried the arms of the family.

Mr GAVIN DUNBAR, Tutor to King James V. is said to be a brother of Mochrum. He was Archbishop of Glasgow, and Chancellor of Scotland.

ALEXANDER DUNBAR, Dean of Murray, a younger son of Westfield, embracing the reformed religion, became one of the Senators of the College of Justice; and was progenitor of the Dunbars of Grange, who carry, quarterly, Dunbar and Randolph, and, for his difference, all within a bordure argent, charged with eight frases gules; crest, a wreath of laurel proper: motto, Sub spe. As in the Lyon Register.

WILLIAM DUNBAR of Hemprigs, descended of Kilbuiak, who was the eldest edict of Westfield, Sheriff of Murray, quarterly, Dunbar and Randolph, all within a bordure, vair, gules and or; crest, a lion naissant out of a wreath, holding in the dexter paw a rose slipped gules, leaved and barbed vert: motto, Ornat fortém prudentiá. Lyon Register.

Sir DAVID DUNBAR of Baldoon, Bart. gules, a lion rampant argent, with a bordure of the second, charged with ten roses of the first; crest, a horse-head argent, bridled gules; supporters, two lions gardant argent, each having, in one of their fore paws, a rose slipped gules; motto, Firmior quo pater. Ibid.
DUNBAR of Barnuchettie; parted per chevron embattled, or and gules, three cushions counter-changed of the same. Ibid.

DUNBAR of Hillhead, descended of the family of Grangehill, gules, a lion rampant argent, within a bordure of the second, charged with three roses and as many cushions, alternately of the first; crest, a rose slipped gules: motto, Olit & sanat. Ibid.

DUNBAR of Dunn, a second son of Grangehill, carries Dunbar and Randolph, quarterly, all within a bordure nebule, quartered azure and gules; crest, two sprigs of laurel disposed in saltier, proper: motto, Spes dabit auxilium. Ibid.

DUNBAR of Inchbreck, whose predecessor was a son of Dunbar of Tarbet, descended of Westfield, carries Dunbar and Randolph, quarterly, all within a bordure gules, charged with eight annulets or; crest, a hand holding an ear of wheat, proper: motto, Sapiens non eget. Ibid.

DUNBAR of Leuchit, gules, a lion rampant argent, between three cushions or, within a bordure of the second, charged with eight roses of the first; crest, a Dexter hand holding a glove, proper: motto, Sapt qui laborat. Ibid.

Before I proceed to another branch of the family of the old Earls of March, and its dependants, who carry arms in imitation of theirs, I must advertise my reader, that when a lion's tongue, teeth, and claws, are of different tinctures from their bodies, they are to be mentioned in the blazon, as armed and langued of such a tincture.

The surname of Home is from the castle of Home in the Merse. The principal family of the name is that of the Earl of Home, who has its rise from Willielmus filius Patricii Comitis de Dunbar, Dominus de Home & de Greenlaw. He is a witness in a charter of King William; and that he was a son of Cospatrick Earl of Dunbar appears by a charter of his son, a second William de Home, in the Register of Kelso, ratifying the donations of his predecessors, the Earls of Dunbar, to that abbacy; in which he is designed, "Willielmus Dominus de Home, filius & færes nobilis viri Williemi de Home, militis quondam, Dominii dictæ Ville de "Home." And, besides, their arms show their descent from the Earls of Dunbar, whose armorial figure was a white lion in a red field; and the Homes have always had the same lion in a green field, for difference, as relative to their old designation Greenlaw.

Gulsredus Dominus de Home gives to the abbacy of Kelso a pension of 12s. 6d. Sterling, out of the lands of Home, in the year 1305. His son was Sir John Home of that Ilk, father of Sir Thomas, who married Nicola Pepdie, heiress of Dunglas, and got with her these lands. He built the Collegiate Church of Dunglas, whereon was his arms, which I have seen impaled with his lady's, being three birds called pipingoes, relative to the name Pepdie. The shield of these arms was coué, and timbred with a cross helmet. The arms of Pepdie have since been always marshalled with the arms of Home and the descendants of that family. She had to Sir Thomas two sons, Alexander, who succeeded him, and David the first of the Homes of Wedderburn.

Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk and of Dunglass; he was in battle against the English at Homildoun, where he was taken prisoner, and died a captive there. His son and successor was Alexander, who distinguished himself in the wars of France, in company with the Earl of Douglas at the battle of Verneuil, where he was slain; having married Jean, daughter of Hay of Yester: She bore to him Alexander, who succeeded Thomas Home of Tyningham, and James, laird of Spot in East Lothian. Mr Thomas Crawford says, in his Manuscript, that he has seen the seal of arms of this Sir Alexander, which were, quarterly, first and fourth Home, second and third three pipingoes, two and one for Pepdie of Dunglas, and supported with two lions.

I have seen the seal of his son and successor Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk, which was quarterly as before; the shield coué, timbred with a helmet, and upon it a pipingoe's head for crest, and supported with two lions, appened to a charter of his of some lands in Chirnside, which he gives to the Collegiate Church of Dunglas, of the date 1445. He married Margaret Landel, daughter and heiress of the Lord Landel. She bore to him Sir Alexander, who succeeded John, prior of Coldingham, George laird of Aytorn, and Patrick Home of Fastcastle. He married secondly, a daughter of the Lord Montgomery, and had with her a son Thomas Home, laird of Cockburnspath.

This Sir Alexander Home was served heir to his father, anno 1450, before these gentlemen in the shire of Berwick, Dominus de Abernethie de Saltoun, miles, Robert Lanier de Edderington, John Sinclair de Polzwar, Adam Nisbet de eodem, James Spottiswood de eodem, Robert Blackadder de eodem, William Manderston de eodem, Alexander Nisbet de Slineswood, James Nisbet de Paxton, Robert Rule aruigeir.

This Sir Alexander Home of that ilk married a daughter of Hepburn of Hales.

Which Alexander Home of that ilk was Great Chamberlain of Scotland, and the first Lord Home. He placed over his quartered arms, by way of surtouts, the arms of his grandmother Landel, heiress of the Lord Landel, being or, an orle azure. He was succeeded by his eldest son.

Alexander, second Lord Home, was with his brother William, forfeited and beheaded at Edinburgh, in the minority of King James V.

George, third Lord Home, brother of Lord Alexander who was forfeited, got the forfeiture reduced, in modum justitiae. He was Chief Warden of the East and Middle Marches with England, and the King's Lieutenant of the shires of Merse, Lauderdale, Teviotdale, and East Lothian; as by the commission under the Great Seal of King James V. dated the 16th year of his reign. He married Mary Halibburton, eldest daughter and co-heir of the Lord Dirleton. She bore to him Alexander, who succeeded him, and Mr Andrew, Abbot of Jedburgh, and a daughter Margaret, married to Sir Alexander Erskine of Gogar, ancestor to the Earl of Kelly.

Alexander, fourth Lord Home, was served heir to his father Lord George 1551.
He married first Margaret Ker, daughter to Ker of Cessford, by whom he had only one daughter, Margaret, married to George Earl Marishal. He was also Warden of the Marches, and quartered his mother's arms with those of his own family, in his father's lifetime, as by his seal appended with his father's to a charter of the lands of Graeling, granted by them to John Ker of Fernihirst, in the year 1547.
The seal of his father was, quarterly, Home and Pepdie, with Landel in surtouts.
He had also the same, but in the third quarter he had a bend charged with three lozenges, for Haliburton; and, for crest, a deer lodged. He married next Agnes, daughter of Patrick Lord Gray: By whom he had

Alexander, fifth Lord Home, who was by King James VI. created Earl of Home, Lord Jedburgh and Dunglas. I have seen also his seal of arms when earl: His shield was adorned with an earl's coronet, and with a lion's head erased, for crest, supporters, two lions; with the motto, True to the end. He married first a daughter of Douglas Earl of Morton; by her he had no issue; secondly, Margaret Sutton, eldest daughter to the Lord Dudley in England. She bore to him a son, James, who succeeded his father, and two daughters, Margaret and Anne. The first was married to James Earl of Murray, Lord Down; and the second, Anne,
-to John, first Earl of Lauderdale.

James, second Earl of Home, married first Katharine Carey, eldest daughter to Henry Carey Viscount of Falkland, and Lord Deputy of Ireland; secondly, he married Grace Fane, daughter to the Earl of Westmoreland, but with neither of his wives had he any issue; so that the fortune and honours of Home came to the next heir-male of tailzie, by reason of an entail on his nearest cousin.

Sir James Home of Cowdenknows succeeded into the estate and honours of Home, which were ratified to him by King Charles I. May 22d 1636. He had with his lady, Jean Douglas, a daughter of the Earl of Morton, Alexander and James, who were successively Earls of Home, but died both without issue, and were succeeded by their third brother, Charles Earl of Home, who married a daughter of Sir William Purves of that ilk. She bore to him three sons, Alexander, James, laird of Ayton, George, and as many daughters.

Which Alexander, the seventh and present Earl of Home, and Lord Dunglas, married Anne, a daughter of William Marquis of Lothian. His achievement, as that of his predecessors, is, quarterly, first and fourth vert, a lion rampant argent, armed and langued gules; second and third argent, three papingoes vert, beaked and membred _gules_, for Pepdie of Dunglas; and, by way of surtou, an escutecheon _or_, charged with an ortle _azure_, for Landel; supporters, two lions _argent_, armed and langued _gules_, standing on a compartment; with these words for motto, _True to the end_. The shield is adorned with a crown, helmet and valets befitting its quality, and on a wreath of his tinctures; for crest, a lion's head erased _gules_, with a cap of state _gules_, turned up _ermine_; and above, on an escrol, the cry of war, _A Home, a Home._

The oldest and most eminent cadet of the House of Home is the family of Wedderburn: The first of it was Sir David Home, or Hume, of Thurston, second son of Sir Thomas Home of that Ilk, and his lady, Nicola Pepdie, heiress of Dunglas. It is said by Godcroft, in his History, that Sir David got the lands of Wedderburn from Archibald Earl of Douglas, for military services, as by a charter dated in the year 1413. I have seen the seal of this Sir David appended to a discharge of his, to his nephew Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk, dated at Cockburnspath, the 27th of January 1443, on which was a lion rampant, the shield _coubé_, timbred with a side standing helmet; and upon it for crest, an unicorn's head, supported by two falcons _regardant_. Which discharge is in the custody of the present lord of Wedderburn. Sir David's wife's name was Alice, but of what family I cannot learn. She bore him two sons, David and Alexander. David married Elizabeth Carmichael, and had by her two sons, viz. George, who succeeded his grandfather, and Patrick Hume, the first of Polwarth. I have seen a principal charter of confirmation of the lands of Wedderburn, from King James II. upon a resignation of the said Sir David and his wife Alice, in lieu of, and after their decease to George Home: " Filio quondam Davidis Home, filii dicti Davidis " _resignantis_, _hæredibus suis masculis_, quibus _deficientibus_, Patricio Home, fratris _germano dicti Georgii & hæredibus suis masculis_, quibus _deficientibus_ Alex- " _andro Home, fratris Germano dicti quondam Davidis Home:" Which charter is dated at Stirling the 16th of May 1450, and is in the custody of the present lord of Wedderburn.

George Hume succeeded his grandfather Sir David, and married the eldest of the two daughters and co-heirs of John Sinclair of Polwarth, eldest son of Sinclair of Herdmanston, who had married the heiress of Polwarth of that Ilk. The other co-heiress was married to his brother Patrick. Of whom the Humes of Polwarth.

George Hume of Wedderburn had with his lady two sons, David and John. He built the House of Wedderburn, as it now stands, and fortified it with three towers and ditches, and placed upon the outer-gate the arms of the family, as upon the seal before described, with crest and supporters, which are still to be seen. But afterwards his successors, with the arms of Home, marshalled those of Pepdic and Sinclair, as arms of descent. Of which immediately.

The barons of the family of _Wedderburn_ were brave and valiant knights, having great followings, and fighting valiantly against the English, almost all of them dying in the field of battle, as in the History of the Family. Of whom is lineally descended the present _George Home_ of Wedderburn, whose achievement is, quarterly, first Hume, second Pepdie, third _argent_, a cross in granite _azure_, for Sinclair of Polwarth; and fourth as first; crest, an unicorn's head and neck _argent_, collared with an open crown, maned and horned _or_; motto, _Remember_; supporters, two falcons, proper, jessed and belled _or_, _adissié_ and _regardant_, standing on a compartment, upon which these words, _True to the end._

The Humes of Ayton, as before, were descended of George Home, who got those lands by marrying the heiress of Ayton of that Ilk; for which the family has been in use to carry, in the centre of the quartered arms of Home and Pepdie, a rose _gules_, the armorial figure of the name of Ayton. Mr James Home, second son of Charles Earl of Home, as laird of Ayton, carries the same.

There are several honourable families descended of the House of Wedderburn, whose arms I have met with in our new and old books of blazon, which I shall here give.

The first cadet of Hume of Wedderburn was Patrick Hume of Polwarth, as before, who married the youngest co-heiress of John Sinclair of Polwarth, by whom he had Patrick, his son and heir. He was knighted, and made Lord Comptroller of Scotland by King James IV. in the year 1499. I have seen a charter of this king's to Dilecto Patricio Home de Polwarth, militi, pro singulari favore & amore speciali, quas erga eum gerimus; by which the king gives to him several lands in Perthshire. He married, first, Margaret, a daughter of Sir John Edmonstone of that Ilk. She bore to him Alexander, his successor. Secondly, a daughter of Schaw of Sauchie, and she bore to him George, first of the Humes of Argathy in Stirlingshire.

Alexander Hume of Polwarth succeeded his father Sir Patrick. His son and successor was Patrick, who married Elizabeth, a daughter of Sir Patrick Hepburn of Wauchton, by whom he had sons and daughters, viz. Patrick, his successor, and Sir Alexander Hume of North-Berwick, an eminent gentleman, Provost of Edinburgh 1593.

This Patrick married Agnes, a daughter of Alexander Home of Manderston, by whom he had Patrick, his successor, and Sir John of North-Berwick, from whom are descended the Humes of Castle-Home in Ireland. Which Patrick, the next heir of Polwarth, was a favourite of King James VI. and married Julian, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Fernhirst, sister to Andrew Lord Jedburgh, and Robert Ker Earl of Somerest, by whom he had Sir Patrick, his successor, Thomas Hume of Coldstream, George Hume of Kimerghame, Elizabeth, married to Sir John Carmichael of that Ilk, Jean, to Christopher Cockburn of Chauly, and Sophia, to Joseph Johnston of Hilton.

Sir Patrick succeeded his father, and was made a Knight-Baronet in the year 1625. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Alexander Hamilton of Innerwick, by whom he had Patrick, who was created Earl of Marchmont, Viscount of Blas-sonberry, Lord Polwarth of Polwarth, Redbraes and Greenlaw, by letters patent, 27th of April 1697. He was Chancellor of Scotland four years, and High Commissioner to the Parliament in the year 1698. He had for his lady, Grissel, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers. She bore to him three sons and four daughters; first, Patrick Lord Polwarth, who died without issue; second, Alexander, the present Lord Polwarth, who has issue by a daughter of Sir George Campbell of Cassnock; third, Sir Andrew Hume of Kimerghame, one of the Senators of the College of Justice. The eldest daughter, Grissel, was married to George Baillie of Jerviswood; second, Anne, to Sir John Hall of Dunglas; third, Julian, to Charles Bellingham, Esq.; and the fourth, Jean, to James Lord Torphichen.

The Earl of Marchmont's achievement is, quarterly, first grand quarter quartered, Hume and Pepdie; second argent, there piles ingrailed gules, issuing from the chief, for the surname of Polwarth; third argent, a cross ingrailed azure, for Sinclair; and the fourth quarter as the first; over all, in the centre, an escutcheon argent, charged with an orange, proper, stalked and slipped vert, ensigned with an imperial crown, proper, as a coat of augmentation; supporters, two lions regardant argent, armed and langued gules; crest, a hand holding a scimitar, proper; motto, True to the end. As in the Plate of Achievements.

George Hume, a younger son of Hume of Manderston, who was a younger son of David Hume of Wedderburn, and his lady, Isabel Pringle, daughter of Galashiel, for his eminent parts, was made a baron in England, by title of Lord Hume of Berwick, by King James VI. 7th July 1624; and thereafter, on the 3d of March 1625, Earl of Dunbar in Scotland; and two years after was installed a Knight Companion of the most Noble Order of the Garter. He was a long time Principal Secretary of State, and joint Commissioner with the Lord Fyvie to the Parliament of Scotland. He died at Whitehall 1618. His corpse was brought down to Scotland, and interred in the church of Dunbar, under a magnificent tomb, leaving behind him two daughters, by his wife, a daughter of Alexander Gordon of Gigh, Anne, married to Home of Cowdenknows, and the other, Elizabeth, to the Earl of Suffolk in England. He carried, quarterly, first Home, second Pepdie, third argent, three inescutcheons vert, for Home of Broxmouth, who had married the heiress thereof of the name of Hay, and the fourth as the first; and, in surtoe, the arms of Dunbar Earl of March.

The male representor of this family is Alexander Hume in West-Friesland, being descended from a brother of Home Earl of Dunbar.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

Home of Blackadder, descended of John Home, fourth son of Home of Wedderburn, who was killed at Flodden, married one of the heiresses of Blackadder of that Ilk. Of whom is lineally descended Sir John Home of Blackadder, baronet. He carries, quarterly, first azure, on a cheveron argent, three roses gules, for Blackadder; second Home, third Pedi, fourth Sinclair of Herdmiston, argent, a cross ingrainled azure, supported on the dexter by an otter, and on the sinister by a falcon, all proper; crest, an adder sable in pale, holding in its mouth a rose gules, leaved and stalked vert: motto, Vite à la fin.

Home of Renton, descended of Manderston, a younger son of Wedderburn. Of whom is Sir Robert Home of Renton, Knight-Baronet, who carries, quarterly, first Home, second Pedi, third argent, three hunting-horns sable, stringed gules, for Forrester; fourth gules, a pelican feeding her young argent, vulnered, proper, for Elme of Elmeford, whose heiress they married; and for crest, a pelican vulnered, proper.

Home of Todrig in the Merse, an ancient cadet of the family of Home, carried, quarterly, first and fourth Home, second and third argent, one papagoa vert, beaked and membrand gules, for Pedi; as on his seal appended to a resignation of the lands of Todrig in the year 1491.

Home of Eccles, quarterly, first Home, second Pedi, third argent, three escutcheons vert, for Home of Broxmouth; the fourth as the first; crest, a lion's head erased, and full faced: motto, True to the end.

The first of this family was Sir James Home, who got from his father, Cowdenknows, the barony of Eccles. He married Isabel, daughter to the Lord Home. She bore to him several children. The eldest son, Sir George, married Jean Home, heiress of Broxmouth and Pinkerton. He was one of those who accompanied Sir William Alexander to plant Nova Scotia in America, according to the tenor of the institution of the Order of Knight-Baronet, whose posterity enjoyed the estate of Eccles till of late. This family is now represented by Alexander Home, Esq. a son of that family, who has right to carry the above arms: As in the Plate of Achievements.

Home of Kinnerghame, descended of a second brother of the House of Polwarth, carried, quarterly, first Home, within a bordure ingrailed argent; second Polwarth, third Sinclair; and fourth as first; crest, a lion's head erased argent, with a collar powdered with roses and flower-de-luces gules: motto, True to the end.

This family has of late failed in an heir-male, and the fortune is now fallen to Sir Andrew Hume, a younger son of the Earl of Marchmont, as heir-male, one of the Senators of the College of Justice, who carries his father's arms, as before, within a bordure ermine. As in Plate of Achievements.

Sir Gustavus Hume of Home-Castle in Ireland, descended of Sir Alexander Hume of North-Berwick, a younger son of Polwarth, who was Provost of Edinburgh in the reign of King James VI. carried, quarterly, first and fourth, the arms of Polwarth of that Ilk; second and third Sinclair; and over all an escutcheon, by way of surloutt vert, a lion rampant argent, on a chief of the last, three papagoes of the first, for Home and Pedi: Which arms were lately placed by our heralds on the funeral escutcheon of George Hume of Kinnerghame, and are so cut in the Plate of Achievements.

Home of Ninewells is said to be descended of Home of Tynningham, who was of a younger son of Home of that Ilk, vert, a lion rampant argent, within a bordure or, charged with nine fountains or wells, proper, relative to his designation; crest, a lion's head erased argent, collared gules: motto, True to the end. Lyon Register.

Home of Whitefield, descended of a brother of Ninewells, quarterly, first and fourth Home of Ninewells; second Pedi, third argent, a stag's head erased, with a cross patee fleche, between his attires gules, for Cairncross; his mother being the only sister of Mr Alexander Cairncross, sometime Parson of Dunfries, and after Archbishop of Glasgow. He died unmarried, Bishop of Raphoe in Ireland, to whose fortune the above George Home of Whitefield succeeded.

Home of Crossrig, one of the Senators of the College of Justice, a second brother of Sir James Home of Blackadder, quarterly, first and fourth vert, a lion rampant argent, within a bordure ermine; second and third azure, on a chevron argent, three roses gules, for the name of Blackadder; crest, a lion’s head erased argent, collared gules: motto, True to the end.

Home of West-Reston, a cadet of Home of Ayton, carries the arms of Ayton, as before, within a bordure gules, for difference; crest, a lion’s head erased argent, collared gules, charged with roses of the first: motto, True to the end.

So much then for the surname of Home or Hume, whose arms I have found in our records, who were originally descended of the old Earls of Dunbar and March, whose surname Home became as soon hereditary as the surname of Dunbar, to the descendants of that family; and the same I may say of the name of Dundas, who is thought to be another branch of the old Earls of Dunbar, upon the account they carry the lion of Dunbar, with transmutation of the tinctures only, viz. argent, a lion rampant gules. For

The first of the family of Dundas, was one Helias son of Uchtred, who got the lands of Dundas from Waldeve, who, as some say, was father of Codpatricius Comes de Dunbar, the first Earl of March, about the year 1124, in the reign of King Alexander I. as by the principal charter in the family of Dundas. They took the surnames from their lands of Dundas.

I have met with another Helias de Dundass, witness in a charter of Philip de Monbray, of lands in Innerkeithing, to the abbacy of Dunfermline, in the reign of Alexander II. And in Alexander III.’s reign, Rodolphus de Dundass is frequently to be met with as a witness in the charters of Alexander III. For which see Haddington’s Collection. And in Prynne’s History of Edward I. Sevel de Dundass is to be found. James de Dundas makes a resignation in the hands of King David II. of the lands of Fingask, to his son John de Dundass, of whom is descended the present laird of Dundas. The achievement of the family, for many ages, is argent, a lion rampant gules; crest, a lion’s head full faced, looking through a bush of oak, proper; with the motto, Essayez; supporters, two lions gules; and below the shield, for a device, or, as some call it, a compartment, (of which afterward) a salamander in flames of fire, proper. As in Plate of Achievements.

There are several honourable families, branches of the ancient family of Dundas of that ilk.

- Dundas of Arniston, argent, a lion rampant gules, within a bordure ermine; crest, a lion’s head couped or: motto, Essayez.

The first of this family was Sir James Dundas, son of the second marriage of George Dundas of that ilk, and his wife Katharine Oliphant, daughter to the Lord Oliphant. His son, Sir James, was one of the Senators of the College of Justice, and his grandson, the present Robert Dundas of Arniston, also another Senator of that learned Bench, obtained from the Lyon Herald a new extract of the fore- said blazon, with the addition of supporters, viz. that on the right right side, a lion rampant gules, and the other, on the left, an elephant, proper, to show his descent from the Lord Oliphant.

Dundas of Newliston, designed formerly of Craigton, descended of Duncan Dundas, a second son of James Dundas of that ilk, and his lady, a daughter of the House of Callander, carries the arms of Dundas, with a suitable difference; without which, they are now quartered in the achievement of John Earl of Stair, for marrying Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Sir John Dundas of Newliston.

George Dundas of Duddingston, descended of the family of Dundas, carries Dundas, with a man’s heart betwixt the lion’s paws gules; crest, a dexter hand holding a star azure: motto, Essayez. New Register. And there, Dundas of Manor, a second son of Duddingston, carries as Duddingston, with a crescent for his difference.

Dundas of Philpston, descended of a second son of the family of Dundas of that ilk, argent, a lion rampant, within a bordure gules; crest, a demi-lion garter, proper, issuing out of a bush of oak vert: motto, Essayez. New Register.

Dundas of Kincavel, Advocate, another cadet of Dundas of that ilk, argent, a lion rampant gules, on a chief sable, a salamander in the fire, proper; crest, a lion’s paw erect, proper: motto, Essayez bordament. Ibid.

Dundas of Baudary, another cadet, carries the lion of Dundas, within a bordure indented gules; crest, a lion’s paw bend-ways: motto, Essayez. Ibid.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

Dundas of Breastmill, another cadet of Dundas of that Ilk, the arms of that family, within a bordure gorged, gules and argent; crest, a lion from the shoulders, proper, issuing out of a bush of oak vert: motto, Liriges. Ibid.

The arms of Macduff, Thanes and Earls of Fife, most probably are originally in imitation of the sovereign bearing, being of the same tinctures and figure, viz. or, a lion rampant gules, armed and langued azure; the double pressure being only omitted, to distinguish those from the royal arms, to which they might have gone as near as any family in the kingdom, having many privileges and honours, anciently conferred upon them by our old kings, upon the account of alliance and noble exploits. The family was early dignified with the title of Earl of Fife, by King Malcolm III. as by our historians and genealogists, to whom I refer my reader for the descent of the family, which continued one of the greatest in the nation for many years, and ended in the reign of King David II. when Duncan Macduff Earl of Fife was killed at the battle of Durham, 1346, having daughters, Israel, who succeeded him in the privileges and honours of the earldom, married first Sir William Ramsay, and afterwards Sir Thomas Bisset, but had no issue to either of them. She therefore resigned the honours to Robert Earl of Montecht, her brother-in-law, afterwards Duke of Albany: And so this noble family ended.

Sir George Mackenzie, in his Science of Heraldry, gives us a copy of one of the seals of the Macduffs Earls of Fife, being after an equestrian form, having the representation of a man in armour on horseback, with a capilion on his helmet, hanging down to the horse-tail, and on the top of the helmet a demi-lion for crest; in his right hand a sword, and on his left arm a shield, charged with a lion rampant; and upon the caparisons of his horse are placed several little triangular shields, each charged with a lion rampant.

There are four families of different surnames that pretend to be descended of the Macduffs old Earls of Fife, viz. the Wemyss, M'Intosh, those of the surname of Fife and Farquharson, who all carry or, a lion rampant gules, to hold forth their descendants. Of whom I shall give a short detail, as to their antiquities, with the blazon of their armorial achievements.

There is a strong tradition that the first of the family of Wemyss of that Ilk was a son of Macduff Thane of Fife, in the Usurpation of Macbeth; who, having hit himself from that tyrant's cruelty in Coves, in the east end of Fife, near his own residence, from which he took the name Wemyss, the Irish word weinmb signifying a cove: And Sir Robert Sibbald, in his History of Fife, tells us, that the family of Wemyss is descended of a younger son of the old Earls of Fife, and took their names from the Coves upon the coast of Fife.

The family of Wemyss is both ancient and honourable, as Sir George Mackenzie, in his Manuscript, says, in the reign of King William, about the year 1165, Johannes de Annete, miles, gives a charter Johanni de Weems, & Annabellio sponsae sua filie meve of the lands Cambron, usque ad le Harla, inter terram Domini Michaeis de Weems & Cambron. Those of the family of Wemyss were principal sheriffs in Fife in the year 1299.

In the Chartulary of Dunfermline there is a precept directed Domino Davidi de Weems, Vice-Comitii de Fife, by William Earl of Ross, Justiciarius ex parte boreali marii Scoticani, anent the eighth part of the amerciation of the Justice ayres of Fife, to be paid to the abbacy of Dunfermline, anno 1239; which is also in the Earl of Haddington's Collections. Sir David Wemyss, and Sir Michael Scott, knights, as our historians, and especially Buchanan, who calls them "Equites " Fifani illustres, & summæ prudentiæ apud suos illis temporibus habiti, were sent after the death of Alexander III. by the Estates of Scotland, to Norway, for to bring home the deceased king's grand-daughter, Queen Margaret, who died unluckily in her journey to Scotland. As for the descent of the honourable family of Wemyss, I refer the reader to Sir Robert Sibbald's History of Fife, and to Mr Crawford's Peerage. The family was honoured in the person of Sir James Wemyss of that Ilk; with the title of Lord Wemyss of Elcho, by letters 1628; and, in the year 1633, was advanced to the degree of Earl of Wemyss, Lord Elcho. The heir-male and representative of this family is the present David Earl of Wemyss, whose achievement is, quarterly, first and fourth or, a lion rampant gules, armed and langued azure, for Wemyss; second and third argent, a lion rampant sable, armed and langued _gules_; some say for Glen of Inchmartine, others say for Mortimer of Inchmartine, with which family the barous of Wemyss matched; and, as a coat of alliance, marshalled it with their own, as on their seals, since the year 1423. But of late the present Earl has disused these arms, and carries only those of Wemyss, supported by two swans, and another for crest, all proper; with the motto, _Je pense_.

Wemyss of Rives, an old cadet of Wemyss of that ilk, quarterly, first and fourth Wemyss; second and third _azure_, a bend _argent_, for Bisset of Rives, as descended of an heiress of that family. _Pont's Manuscript._

Dr James Wemyss, Dean of the Chapter of St Andrews, and Principal of St Leonard's College, lawful son to Henry Wemyss of Fudie, who was a younger son of Wemyss of that ilk, carries the quartered coat of that family, as above, within a bordure counter-composed _or_ and _gules_; crest, a cross crosslet _or_, within two branches of palm, disposed in orle _vert_; motto, _Virtus dum pater vincit_. _New Register._

Mr David Wemyss of Balfargie, whose grandfather was Sir James Wemyss, a second lawful son of the Earl of Wemyss, carries quarterly, as the Earl of Wemyss, within a bordure quartered _gules_ and _sable_; crest, a demi-swan, with wings expanded, proper; motto, _Cynoge_. _Lyon Register._

The first of the family of Macintosh is said to have been a younger son of Duncan Macduff, third Earl of Fife, who accompanied King Malcolm IV. in his expedition for suppressing the rebels in Murray-land, and, for his good services, was rewarded with many lands in the North, and was commonly called _Macintosh of Macduff_ that is to say, Thane Macduff, his son; from which the name Macintosh became a surname to his posterity. One of this family, about the year 1292, married the daughter and heiress of a branch of the Clan-chattans, and with her got some lands in Lochaber, and since they have been in use to carry the arms of Clan-chattan, known by the name of Macpherson, with their own, viz. quarterly, _first_, _or_, a lion rampant _gules_, as descended of Macduff Earl of Fife; _second_, _argent_, a dexter hand couped fesse-ways, grasping a man's heart pale-ways _gules_; _third_, _azure_, a boar's head couped _or_, said to be for Gordon of Lochinvar, as a coat of alliance with that family, now Viscount of Kenmore; _fourth_, _or_, a lymphad, her ears erect in salter _sable_, upon the account of the marriage with the heiress of Clan-chattan; _crest_, a cat _sauent_, proper, and supported by two cats, as the former: motto, _Touch not the cat, but a glove_. _Lyon Register._

And there are matriculated the arms of the following cadets of Macintosh.

Donald Macintosh of Killachie, descended of a second brother of the family of Macintosh of that ilk, quarterly, first and fourth _or_, a lion rampant _gules_, for Macduff; second and third _or_, a dexter hand couped fesse-ways, holding a dagger pale-ways in chief _gules_, and a galley, her ears saltier-ways in base _sable_, for the Clan-chattan; _crest_ and _motto_ as Macintosh of that ilk.

Alexander Macintosh of Conndage, descended of another younger son of Macintosh, carries as Killachie, within a bordure _vair_, for difference; with the same crest and motto.

Lauchlan Macintosh of Kinnara, descended of a second son of Macintosh of that ilk, bears three coats quarterly; _first_, Macintosh; _second_, that of Clan-chattan, as above; _third_, _azure_, a boar's head couped _or_; and, the fourth, as the first; crest and motto, as above.

Lauchlan Macintosh of Aberardor, Representer of Duncan Macintosh, his grandfather, who was a fifth son of the Laird of Macintosh, bears four coats quarterly, as Macintosh of that ilk, all within a bordure _gules_, charged with eight annulets _or_; crest, a cat _crouant_ and _gardant_, proper; motto, _Touch not the cat, but a glove._

The surname of Fife, (but a small name now) as I have said, pretends likewise to be descended of a younger son of Macduff Earl of Fife; from which title they have the name, and carry the arms.

Sir James Balfour, in his Manuscript of Blazons, says, that in the reign of King William there was a family of the name of Fife, designed of Kennow, in that shire, who carried _or_, a lion rampant _gules_, armed and langued _azure_, on a chief of the second, a crescent between two stars of the first.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

There is one Alexander de Fife witness in a charter of King Alexander III. the thirteenth year of his reign, to Richard de Moravia, brother to Gilbert, Bishop of Caithness, peces Dom. de Kinnae.

Our Scots Highland Senachies will have the Farquharsons, and others of the late surnames, to be descended of Shaw, a son of Macduff, one of the Earls of Fife.

The principal family of the name is Farquharson of Invercauld, who carries, quarterly, first and fourth or, a lion rampant gules, as descended of Macduff Earl of Fife; second and third argent, a fir tree growing out of a mount, in base, seeded proper (upon the account his country abounds with such trees) on a chief gules the banner of Scotland displayed, (upon the account one of his progenitors, Finlay More, was killed at the battle of Pinkie, holding the royal banner) and a canton dexter of the first, charged with a dagger, point downward, to perpetuate the action of his progenitors of Rothiemurcus, who joined with the Macphersons in defeating and killing Cumin of Strathbogie, enemy to King Robert the Bruce; (which figure upon the same account is carried by the Macphersons) and, for crest, a lion issuing out of a wreath gules and or, holding a sword in his right paw, proper, hilted and pommelled or; supporters, two wild cats, proper: motto, Fide & fortitudine. As the abstract of his arms from the Lyon Olice. And there,

The name of Farquhar, Robert Farquhar of Gillmye's croft, argent, a lion rampant sable, armed and langued or, between three sinister hands, two and one, couped pale ways gules; crest, a dexter hand couped as the former: motto, Sto, cado, fide & armis.

Farquhar of Manie, quarterly, first argent, a lion rampant sable, armed or, and langued gules; second, azure, a sinister hand in pale, couped argent; third or, a gauley with masts and tackling sable; fourth, argent, an oak tree vert; and, for a brotherly difference in the middle fesse point, a crescent gules; crest, a star argent issuing out of a cloud, proper: motto, Veritur in dieum. New Register.

Many other Highland families carry lions and hands couped, and lymphads, as the M'Lauchlans, M'Conells, M'Dowies, and M'Cowans, Finlays and M'Jandes, as branches of the M'Donalds, Macphersons, and Macintoshes, being of the tribe of the Clan-chatt, whom I forbear here to mention; their descents being uncertain, their arms unfixed, and their names mutable patronimics.

The surname of Crichton, argent, a lion rampant azure. This surname is among the first surnames mentioned by our historians in the reign of Malcolm III. I have seen the charter of erection of the abbacy of Holyroodhouse by King David I. in the archives of the town of Edinburgh, to which Thubstanus de Crichton is a witness. There have been several great families of this name. The principal, as I suppose, was Crichton of that Ilk, in the shire of Edinburgh; and from it originally the surname. John de Crichton is frequently a witness in the charters of King Robert the Bruce; and William de Crichton, Dominus ejusdem, is witness in a charter of Alexander Lindsay of Ormiston, of the lands of Ormiston, to Janet Lindsay his daughter, and her spouse, John Cockburn; which charter is confirmed by King David II. the 20th year of his reign: For which see the Earl of Haddington's Collections.

From this Sir William de Crichton of that Ilk was descended Sir William Crichton, Chancellor of Scotland, in the minority of King James II. who was then designed Lord Crichton, and who carried, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a lion rampant azure; second and third argent, a saltier and chief azure, to show a maternal descent from the heiress of Boyes, Lord Boyes, as some say. His son, Sir James Crichton, married Mary Dunbar, as before, daughter to James Earl of Murray, and got with her the lands of Freendraught. He was, by King James II. made Earl of Murray; but, for fear of the Douglases, resigned the same in the King's hands again, who bestowed it upon the Douglas of whom before. His son, George Crichton, was made Earl of Caithness and Admiral of Scotland; but he enjoyed that dignity but a short time, dying without issue. His brother William was Laird of Freendraught, and carried the foresaid quartered arms, and, by way of surtou, or, three cushions within a double treasure, counter-flowered with flower-de-luaces gules, as descended of the Dunbars Earls of Murray, as did his successors; they are thus illuminated amongst the Barons' Arms in the House of Palshall, 1634.
JAMES CRICHTON of Frendraught was created Viscount of Frendraught by King Charles I. in the year 1642. His son was James Viscount of Frendraught, whose son, William, died without issue, and the honours fell to his uncle Lewis; they carried, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a lion rampant azure, armed and langued gules, for Crichton; second and third argent, a salter and chief azure, for the Lord Boyes; over all an escutcheon azure, three stars argent, within a double tressure counter-flowered or, in place of the former surlot; supporters, two lions azure, armed and crowned or; crest, a dragon spouting out fire, proper, and crowned with a Viscount’s coronet.

Crichton Earl of Dumfried, quarterly, first and fourth Crichton; second and third azure, three water-budgets or, for Ross of Sanquhar; supporters, two lions azure, armed and langued gules, and crowned or; crest, a dragon vert, spouting out fire: motto, _God send grace._

The first of this family was William de Crichton, a son of Crichton of that Ilk, in the reign of King Robert the Bruce, who married Isabel, one of the co-heirs of Ross of Sanquhar: for which see Dalrymple’s Collections, page 419, and, with her, got the half of the barony of Sanquhar; his successors purchased the whole barony afterwards; for there is a charter in the reign of King James II. of Sir Robert Crichton of Sanquhar, and his son Robert Crichton of Kinnoul, who had married Catharine, heiress of Sir Nicol Erskine of Kinnoul: There is also a gift of the Sheriffship of Dumfried, by King James II. to Sir Robert Crichton of Sanquhar, dated at Stirling the 5th of November 1452. Amongst the witnesses is _Williamius de Crichton, vixer cancellarius & consanguineus predilectus_; for which see Haddington’s Collections. Sir Robert Crichton was created a Lord of Parliament by the title of Lord Crichton of Sanquhar, by King James III. about the year 1487. William Crichton, Lord Crichton of Sanquhar, was created Viscount of Ayr, anno 1622; and, by King Charles I. Earl of Dumfried, in the year 1633. He had, by his Lady Euphaine, daughter of James Seaton of Touch, William Earl of Dumfried, who was one of the Privy Council to King Charles II. His son was Charles Lord Crichton, who died before his father, Earl William, leaving a son, William, by his wife Sarah, daughter of James, first Viscount of Stair, who died young; and his sister Penelope succeeded into the fortune and honours. She married William Dalrymple, son to John, first Earl of Stair, and has issue.

There were several other families of the name of Crichton, as Crichton of Cranston, who carried quarterly, first and fourth or, a lion rampant azure, within a bordure gules, for Crichton; second and third argent, a salter and chief azure, for Boyes.

DAVID CRICHTON of Cranston, who is descended of Frendraught, was one of the Commissioners nominated by King James III. in the treaty of marriage with his Majesty, and Margaret, daughter of the King of Denmark.

JAMES CRICHTON of Ruthven, argent, a lion rampant azure, on a chief of the last, three lozenges of the first; crest, a pillar argent: motto, _Stand sure._ New Register. And there, JAMES CRICHTON of Easthill, a cadet of Ruthven, argent, a lion rampant azure, armed and langued sable, and, in chief, two martlets gules: motto, _God me guide._

Mr John Crichton, descended of Mr Alexander Crichton, brother to Robert Lord Crichton of Sanquhar, residing in France, is the appearing heir-male of the family of Crawfordston; quarterly, first and fourth, Crichton; second and third azure, three water-budgets or, for Ross of Sanquhar, all within a bordure ingrailed azure; crest, a dragon’s head vert, spouting out fire proper. _Ibid._

Crichton of Waughton, quarterly, first and fourth, Crichton; second and third argent, three escutcheons, within a bordure gules, for the name of Hay. Balfour’s Manuscript.

Crichton of Innerneity, ermine, a lion rampant azure. Pont’s Manuscript.

Crichton of Brunston, argent, a lion rampant azure, armed and langued gules, within a bordure ingrailed of the second. _Ibid._

Crichton of Cairns, quarterly, first and fourth Crichton; second and third gules, three martlets or, for the name of Cairns. L. Manuscript.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

The surname of Wallace, gules, a lion rampant argent. Sir James Dalrymple brings the first of this family and name from one Eimorath Galu a Welshman, so called in Scotland, upon the account of his country. He is a witness in the charter of foundation of the abbacy of Selkirk, by David, younger son of King Malcolm III. From him was descended Ricardus Guallensis, as in a charter granted by him to the abbacy of Kelso in the reign of King Alexander II. From this Richard Guallensis or Walensis came the surname of Wallace to his posterity; and the place of his residence was called Riccarton, after his first name. One of his successors married Lindsay, heiress of Craige, and are designed of Craige, in the reign of Robert II. whose arms they quarter with their own.

The representative and chief of the family is Sir Thomas Wallace of Craige, Bart. who carries, quarterly, first and fourth gules, a lion rampant argent. Some make the lion or, and it is so illuminated in Falahall, anno 1624. Second and third gules, a fesse chequed azure and argent, for Lindsay of Craige. Workman, in his Manuscript, gives two savages supporters to this family.

Sir William Wallace of Ellerslie, patriot and champion for the freedom of his country against the usurping English, was Governor of Scotland. He was son and heir of Sir Malcolm Wallace, and his wife, a daughter of Sir Reginald Crawford of Loudon; which Sir Malcolm was a younger son of the family of Wallace of Riccarton, afterwards designed of Craige. The brave Sir William Wallace was betrayed by Sir John Monteiith to the English, who barbarously murdered him at London in the year 1325, by command of Edward I. leaving issue only one daughter, who was married to Sir William Bailie of Hoptig, from whom Bailie of Lamington is descended. The lands of Ellerslie returned to the family of Craige, and went off again, in patrimony, to another younger brother of that family about the beginning of the reign of King Robert III. and continued a separate family till the year 1698, and again returned to the family of Craige, and since became the patrimony and designation of Sir Thomas Wallace, now of Craige, during the life of Sir William Wallace, his elder brother; and are now again the property of John Wallace of Ellerslie, nephew and apparent heir of John Wallace of Neilstonside.

The arms of Wallace of Ellerslie, as in Sir George Mackenzie's Science of Heraldry, gules, a lion rampant argent, within a bordure gorgonated of the last, and azure.

Hugo Wallace, Writer to his Majesty's Signet, now of Ingliston, descended of a third son of the family of Craige, carries the arms of that family, with a mullet only for difference; crest, an ostrich in full flight, proper: motto, Sperandum est. New Register. And there,

Patrick Wallace, sometime Provost of Aberbrothick, quarterly, first and fourth or, a lion rampant gules, between two mullets in fesse azure; second and third gules, a fesse chequed, azure and argent.

In the shire of Berwick, besides the Homes, there were other ancient families of different surnames, who carried lions rampant, in variation of tinctures from the old Earls of Dunbar and March, whether upon the account of descent from that eminent family, or as vassals, carried lions in imitation of those of their patrons, I shall not be positive, as the Hepburns, Rentons, (of whom before) and those of the name of Edgar, who held their lands of the old Earls of Dunbar, and carried a lion rampant.

The principal family of the name of Edgar there, is Edgar of Waderly yet extant, who carried for their proper arms, sable, a lion rampant argent. As for the antiquity of the name I shall here vouch a charter of Earl Patrick, son of Waldeve, Earl of Dunbar, who grants to the monks of Durham the church and lands of Edrom, for prayers to be said for the souls of his father and mother, of King Malcolm, his sons, King Edgar, King Alexander, King David, and his son Earl Henry, and King Malcolm; and for the safety of his King William, his brother David, and for himself, wife, and children. The charter has no date, but is granted in the reign of King William; and in it are many witnesses, amongst whom are several Barons in the shire of Berwick, as coram Stephano Papedie, Roberto de Bonavil, Gilberto de Hum, Henrico de Pendeufrebeit, Edwardo de Aldcambus, Alano de Sayrton, Willielmo de Nesbi, Willielmo filio Edgari, & aliis multis.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

The last mentioned William, son of Edgar, I take to be one of the progenitors of Edgar of Wadderlie. The foresaid principal charter is fully repeated in the charter of Confirmation of King Robert the Bruce, dated at Berwick the 15th day of November, the 21st year of his reign. See Earl of Haddington's Collections.

Richard Edgar, in the reign of King Robert the Bruce, married the eldest daughter and co-heir of Ross of Sanquhar; and William Crichton married the other sister as before, as in Sir James Dalrymple's Collections. King Robert confirms to Richard and his son, Donald Edgar, the half of the lands of Sanquhar, with the Manor-Place. As the charter bears. Haddington's Collections: "De capitali Mannerio in Baronio de Sanquhar, cum mediate ejusdem Barronie ad ipsum Mannerium pertinen." It appears that Edgar of Wadderlie is descended of this Richard: I have seen a resignation in the custody of Edgar of Wadderlie, by Richard Edgar, son of Richard Edgar, of the lands of Wadderlie, in favours of Robert Edgar, Dominus de Wadderlie, in the year 1376, and confirmed to his son, John Edgar of Wadderlie, 1384. And besides, the arms of Wadderlie are quartered with figures like to those of Ross of Sanquhar; three water-buckets or, much defaced, as on an old stone on the house of Wadderlie, supported by two greyhounds; and for crest, a dexter hand holding a dagger, point downwards: motto, Man do it. And on a compartment below, Saluatem donum Deo.

David Edgar of Kithock, sable, a lion rampant, betwixt a garb in chief, and a writing-pen in base argent; crest, a dagger and quill crossing other in saltier: motto, Pottius linguo quam vi. New Register.

John Edgar in Poland, eldest lawful son of Thomas Edgar of Kithock, in Scotland, and Magdalen Guthrie, his spouse, daughter to John Guthrie of Over-Dysart, sable, a lion rampant argent, between two garbs in chief of the second, banded gules, and a besant in base; crest, a withered branch of oak, sprouting out some leaves proper: motto, Apparet quod infatbat. Lyon Register.

The Mowbrays are originally from Normandy.

Roger Mowbray, a Norman, came to England with William the Conqueror, and was by him made Earl of Northampton; he carried gules, a lion rampant argent. The Dukes of Norfolk carried the same as other families of that name in England, as did those of the name of Mowbray with us who came from England, and sometimes stood for the interest of England as occasion offered.

The first I meet with is Philip de Mowbray, frequently a witness in the charters of King Alexander II. He and his wife gave a charter of some lands in Inverkeithing, to the abbacy of Dunfermline, dated at Edinburgh the first of July. The witnesses are Emergards, the Queen, relict of King William, William, Bishop of St Andrews, William de Fontibus, Helias de Dunadar, and Rodger de Mowbray. (Haddington's Collections.) In a charter of John Baliol, pretender to the Crown of Scotland, to Robert de Keith Marischal, of the lands of Keith; amongst the witnesses is Guilfedus de Mowbray. His son Sir Roger Mowbray, for adhering to the Baliol and the English interest, was forfeited by King Robert I. and his barony of Eckford, in the shire of Roxburgh, was given to Robert the Great Steward, afterwards King; and his lands of Dummanie to Reginald Cheyne, Knight. As in Haddington's Collections. His son, James Mowbray, returned to Scotland with Edward Baliol, and took possession of his lands; but dying without male issue, they were divided betwixt his three daughters and their husbands, who were Englishmen. Upon which their uncle Alexander Mowbray left Baliol's service, and returned to his due allegiance to King David Bruce. He had only one daughter, who succeeded to the lands of Barnbougle; whom she married I know not; he was either of the name or took on the name of Mowbray. Sir George Mackenzie, in his Manuscript, says the family carried gules, a lion rampant argent, supported with a man and woman. David Mowbray of Barnbougle was one of the hostages sent to England for the ransom of King James I. In that King's reign the family came to another heiress, who married Robert Drummond, second son to Sir John Drummond of Stobhall. He took upon him the name and arms of the family, which is lately extinct.

Abernethy, or, a lion rampant gules, surmounted of a ribbon sable. The first of this surname being proprietor of the town and lands of Abernethy, in the shire of Fife, took his surname from these lands. And, by our records, there is Orme de Abernethy, son of Hugh, in the reign of King William; and amongst the witnesses in the charters of King Alexander II. Laurentius de Abernethy and Reginaldus de Abernethy are frequently to be met with. Haddington's Collections. I have seen a charter of Hugh de Abernethy, of the lands of Ovrebenchery to William de Federeth, exonerating him and his heirs from making any appearance in his Court for these lands. This charter was granted in the reign of Alexander III. and the seal thereto appended was entire, having a lion rampant bruised with a ribbon. In the reign of Robert I. Alexander de Abernethy, Dominus de eodem, (Sir Robert Sibbald's History of Fife) left behind him three daughters, co-heirs; Margaret, married to John Stewart, Earl of Angus, who got with her the barony of Abernethy, Helen to Norman de Lindsay of Crawford, who got with her the barony of Balinbreich, and the third daughter Mary, was wife to Andrew Leslie of Rothes, who with her got the barony of Downy in Angus. These three daughters were the mothers of three great families, Earls of Angus, Rothes, and Crawford, who have been in use to marshal the arms of Abernethy, as before blazoned, with their own.

Of the male line of the family of Abernethy was Abernethy of Rotheimay. Laurence Abernethy was created Lord of Parliament by King James II. in the year 1455, to be stiled Lord Abernethy in Rotheimay, amongst the Lords in Parliament 1464. In the Act of Revocation of King James III. is William Dominus de Abernethy of Rotheimay. He is a witness in that King's charter of the lands of Corstophiph to Alexander Forrester. His successors were commonly stiled Lords Abernethy of Salton, and carried quarterly, first and fourth Abernethy, as above; second and third argent, three piles, points conjoined in base, gules, for Wishart; supported by two falcons proper; armed, chessed and belled or; crest, a parrot feeding on a bush of cherries proper: motto, Salus per Christum.

Alexander, the last Lord Abernethy, died about the year 1660. He sold the lands of Salton to Sir Andrew Fletcher; but the honours of the Lord Salton devolved to his nephew Sir Alexander Fraser of Philorth, in right of his mother, a sister of the last Lord Salton, whose successors have been in use to quarter these arms with their own: As afterwards.

The heir-male of the family was Alexander Abernethy of Auchnacloich, whom, it seems, the last Alexander Lord Abernethy, designed to have declared his heir and successor, as by his missive letters to him and his wife, which I have seen; wherein he invites and persuades his cousin, Auchnacloich, to come to Edinburgh, upon the account, as the words of the letters, that it is his conjunct interest with his, he being the nearest of kin and name to him. But death soon after prevented the effectuating any thing by Lord Alexander.

Alexander Abernethy of Auchnacloich stands recorded in the Lyon Register, descended of Abernethy Lord Salton, carrying the arms of the Lord Salton, as above, with a bordure for his difference. His son John Abernethy, now of Mayen, as male representative of Abernethy Lord Salton, disuses the bordure, and makes use of the principal arms of the name: with the crest and motto, as above.

The surname of Gray in Scotland, as descended from the Greys of Wark in Northumberland, carry the same arms, viz. gules, a lion rampant within a bordure ingrailed argent. Of whom before.

M'Dowall or M'Dougall, which I take to be the same, (the figures and tinctures of their arms being all alike, and they themselves using the name promiscuously,) is a very old Scots name, which they derive with their original, from Dowall of Galloway, who lived about 230 years before the birth of our Saviour, killed Nothatus the tyrant, the sixth King of Scotland, and established Reutherus, who had the better right to the throne, as our historians tell us. Afterwards, another Dowall, Captain of Galloway, with the Captain of Lorn, went into England against the Romans in support of the Britons, and put a stop to the Roman armies in defence of their own country. Upon this account, Sir George Mackenzie observes, in his Science of Heraldry, p. 3. The M'Dowall bears the lion collared with an antique crown.

The old Lords of Galloway were of this name, and one of the most powerful families in Scotland at that time. They built five abbeys and five priories, and enowed them with several lands, viz. the abbacies of Tongland, New-Abbey, Stauls-Seat, Kilconquhar, and Glenluce. The priories of Holycross, Lincluden, Leshimmung, St Mary-Isle, and Whithorn, a work of most prodigious charge, of which few private families in Europe can be said to have done the like.

The family of these ancient lords ended in Allan Lord of Galloway, and High Constable of Scotland, who, as Buchanan says, was Omnium Scotorum longe potentissimus: He, having no male issue, left three daughters, the eldest whereof was married to John Baliol, father to the competitor, in virtue of whose right he claimed the crown of Scotland and lordship of Galloway. Baliol being forfeited, the honour and remaining part of the estate devolved to the crown, where they continued till Sir Archibald Douglas, for his good services, in defeating Edward Baliol at Annan, had them bestowed on him by King David II. who nevertheless had a claim by blood of his wife Dormagill daughter to John Cumin, who married Mary, second daughter to the said Allan Lord of Galloway.

The Douglases continued to be lords of Galloway till the forfeiture of the Earls of Douglas, commonly called the Black Douglases, who carried the arms of Galloway, viz. azure, a lion rampant argent, crowned or, quartered with their own arms, as do yet the principal branches of that noble family.

It is said before that the arms of the old Lords of Galloway were azure, a lion rampant argent, collared with an antique crown or: But Camden, in his Britannia de Gallovidia, tells, that Henry I. King of England, gave a grant to Fergus Lord of Galloway, for some special services, of carrying the lion crowned; of which this family ever afterwards had the lion crowned, neglecting, it seems, to have it collared only with an open crown.

There are three old families of note in Galloway, with one in Teviotdale, of the name of M'Dowall, claiming their descent from the old Lords of Galloway, and carrying their arms as a tesseræ of their descent.

The first is that of M'Dowall or M'Douall of Garthland, which appears to be the principal family of the name; having seen in the custody of James Ferguson, Esq. younger of Kilkeran, two bonds of Manrent, granted by M'Dowall of Logan, and M'Dowall of Freugh, to Uthred M'Dowall of Garthland, as their chief and principal, as the bonds, of the date 1593, bear. This family derives its descent from Eithred M'Douall, a younger brother to Roland Lord of Galloway, and a younger brother of the abovementioned Allan, last Lord of Galloway, who from his father got the lands of Garthland, and others in Galloway, still in their possession, at least a great part of them; for, as I am informed, there are charters and evidents in the Tower of London which instruct their rise and descent to be such. I have seen few of their old evidents, and few of such are to be found with us of ancient families in that shire, they having suffered more deprivations than others; for, besides that devastation of Edward I. which was over the whole nation, the M'Dowalls, and most of the gentlemen in Galloway, had all their ancient charters carried off or destroyed; particularly in King Robert the Bruce's days, they being more attached to the Baliols than the Bruce's interest, Baliol being the true heir of Galloway; and after, by the tyrannical usurpation of the Black Douglas, then Lord of Galloway, who was so barbarous, that he not only destroyed the gentlemen's charters, that they might be forced to hold their lands of the Douglases, but exacted sums of money yearly, as black-mail, from them, and caused every parish pay a certain number of black cattle yearly, for his Ladner (thence called Ladner Marte Kyen), and upon refusal of any of his demands he imprisoned them. I have seen, in the hands of the said Mr Ferguson, a charter of Archibald Earl of Douglas, Lord of Galloway and Annandale, to Thomas M'Dowall of Garthland, of the lands of Garthland, &c. of the date 1413.

As for the arms of M'Dowall of Garthland, they are to be seen illuminated in the House of Falkahall, with those of other barons, in the year 1604, being azure, a water or sea in base, and in it a rock, proper, on which stands a lion rampant argent, gorged with an open crown or. I have also seen them illuminated in Esplin's Book of Blazons, with those of other barons and gentlemen of the kingdom, in the year 1650, being azure, a lion rampant argent, only; and next again, in the Lyon Register, since the year 1661, as descended of the old Lords of Galloway, azure, a lion rampant argent, crowned or; and for crest, a lion's paw erased.
argent, erect, proper; with the motto, Vincere vel mori; but there is no mention of supporters, yet I am informed the family has been in use to carry supporters. The present Alexander McDowall of Garthland sent me his seal of arms, which is cut in the Plate of Achievements, as last blazoned, supported with two lions crowned, and holding, in their paws, daggers or swords; and, for crest, a lion’s paw erased, holding up a dagger; with the motto, on an escrol, Vincere vel mori; and on the compartment those words, Fortis in arduis.

McDowall of Logan, though their old charters have met with the like destruction with others, yet it appears, by an authentic document still remaining, that they are very old barons; as by an old charter under the Great Seal, in the year 1454, confirming the lands of Alrick, Myroch and Balnagowan, jacen. in Dominio de Logan, to Andrew McDowall, upon resignation of Uthred McDowall of Garthland, in the hands of Patrick McDowall of Logan, superior; whereby the said Andrew was to hold these lands as freely and honourably as the said Uthred and his predecessors had held them of the said Patrick and his predecessors, viz. in ward, Redendo inde annuatim tres sectas ad tres curias capitales.

There are two things remarkable in this charter, first, the word dominium, used in old charters, to signify lordship or barony of the most honourable kind, by which barons have the privilege of pit and gallows, &c.; which kind of barons, before King James I. were dignified with the honour of being heritable members of Parliament, which is the chief reason why old barons, lineally descended from them, do use supporters to their arms. Secondly, the clause about Patrick and his predecessors, demonstrates that this family have been barons long before this time, which is in King James II.’s reign.

In three other charters granted by the lairds of Logan, for ward-service, and attendance at their courts, the word dominium is used, viz. in one, for the foresaid lands, to Margaret Kennedy, daughter of Hugh Kennedy of Girvanmains, for her life, as Lady Garthland, in the year 1549; and in other two, to Quintin and Ninian Agnews, for the lands of Killumpha and Gremen, the one in the year 1468, and the other 1596.

That the old charters of this family were destroyed is beyond dispute; for Patrick McDowall of Logan obtained a charter of novodamits, for his barony of Logan, in the year 1503, under the Great Seal; wherein it is acknowledged, though all the ancient charters of the family were lost, that it was known and perfectly understood, by certain returns shown, that the said Patrick and his predecessors had, ultra memoriam dominium, held their lands of Logan blanch of the crown: But seeing the charters were not then produced, he was obliged to take a new one, holding his lands ward, as his successors have ever since done.

All the forementioned charters I have seen, excepting the last, whereof there is only a copy amongst the Lord Haddington’s Collections, in the Lawyers’ Library.

Charles, the son of the last-mentioned Patrick, was killed at the misfortunes of the battle of Flodden, in the year 1513.

The arms of this family are azure, a lion rampant argent, collared with an antique crown or; which I do not find they have ever changed, for, in Esplin’s Heraldry, amongst the illuminated arms of many barons of the kingdom, in the year 1637, they are the same, as above blazoned, and the same way matriculated in the Lyon Register, anno 1676, and now of late matriculated thus:

Robert McDowall of Logan bears azure, a lion rampant argent, gorged with an antique crown or; crest, a demi-lion argent, crowned with an imperial crown or, holding in his right paw a flaming sword; motto, Pro rege in tyrannos, supported with two lions crowned with antique crowns, proper, standing on a compartment, whereon are these words, Victoria vel mors: As in the Plate of Achievements, conform to the Lyon King at Arms, his patent, under his hand and seal of office. The foresaid crest and motto, with others to be seen in the Register, are to perpetuate the story of their ancestor killing Nothatus the Tyrant, as before.

McDowall or McDougall of Frew is likewise an old family, but has been subject to the same misfortunes that most of the gentry of Galloway suffered, viz. of having all their ancient charters destroyed.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS. 285

The eldest document I have met with of this family, is a ratification of the lands of Freugh, Stephenkirk*, with the advocation and patronage thereof, 22d of January 1473, to Gilbert McDowall of Freugh. His son was Fergus McDowall, who married Janet Kennedy of the family of the Lord Kennedy, and was served heir to his father Gilbert, in the year 1518, as by the original inquest yet extant, signed by many of the best gentlemen of that country, does appear.

James, his son, married Florence, daughter to Uthred McDowall of Garthland, and he obtained a new charter of the said lands, with the advocation and patronage of Stephenkirk*.

Fergus, his son and heir, married Mary, daughter of John McCulloch of Myrton; and was succeeded by his son John, who married Margaret, daughter to Sir Patrick Vans of Barnbarroch, and obtained also a new charter of the above lands.

Uthred, his son and successor, married Agnes, daughter to Sir Patrick Agnew of Lochnaw, and was Commissioner for the shire of Wigtown to the Parliament, in the year 1661. His son Patrick married Barbara, daughter to Fullerton of that Ilk: Their son and successor is Patrick McDowall, now of Freugh, who married Margaret, daughter to John Haltridge of Dromore in Ireland. He obtained a new charter for uniting the lands of Urle, Lochronald, and Balgregan, into one barony with Freugh.

The family has been in use to carry the following arms, as cut on a large window-board, and on other utensils, in the old House of Freugh, which was attested by a certificate under the hands of several persons of credit in that country, being azure, a lion rampant argent, crowned with an imperial crown, and gorged with an antique one or; crest, a lion's paw erased, and erect: motto, Vincere vel mori; and on a compartment below the arms, these words, Pro Deo, rege, & patria, supported with two wild men, wreathed about the head and middle with laurel, holding flaming daggers in their hands, pointing upwards, all proper: As in Plate of Achievements. The date of the carving is in the year 1574, with the letters G. M'D, for Gilbert McDowall, and the same arms are cut out upon a bed 1543, with the letters J. M'D, being for James McDowall, then laird of Freugh: As the certificate bears, recorded in the Register of Probative Writs.

There are two of the name of McDowall mentioned in Prynne's Collections, page 654, among the barons who submitted to Edward I. of England, viz. Fergus McDowall, and Dougall McDowall, in Comitatus de Wigtoun: They not being designed, I shall not determine to what families they have been predecessors.

McDowall of M'Dougall of Makerston, is an old family in the shire of Teviotdale.

Fergus McDowall of Makerston, gets a charter of confirmation of those lands from King Robert II. the 15th year of his reign; as in the Lord Haddington's Collections: And in Rotula Roberti II. Dougall McDowall of Makerston married Euphame, one of the co-heirs of Gifford of Yester. I have seen a note of a charter, from Robert Duke of Albany to Dougall McDowall his son, of several lands belonging to the family of Yester, in right of his mother.

Mr. William McDougall, descended of Makerston, a great man for his learning, was made a professor of divinity and philosophy in Holland. Some of his works are extant, which show his learning. Another of this family is

Colonel McDougall, who has a regiment in Sweden: His predecessor gets a birth-brief from the Magistrates of Edinburgh, in Cromwell's time, upon the evidence of the most considerable barons and gentlemen of Teviotdale and the Merse, by which he pretends to be lineal heir of the family, how just I shall not determine; which birth-brief I have seen.

The arms of the family of M'Dougall of Makerston, as in Pont's Manuscript, are azure, a lion rampant argent, crowned or, with a star of the first on the lion's shoulder; their crest and motto I do not know, having never seen their arms at large.

M'Dowall of Stodrig, in Teviotdale, azure, a lion rampant argent, gorged with an open crown or, and between his fore paws a man's heart, proper; crest, a lions paw: motto, Vincere vel mori: Which arms were cut upon a stone above a door of the House of Stodrig, in the year 1593, as the stone bears.

The first of this family was Thomas M'Dowall, designed burgess of Edinburgh, who bought the lands of Stothart, now Stodrig, in the shire of Roxburgh, from John Ormiston of Meryden, as by his charter granted to the said Thomas, the 10th of July 1520, which I have seen. From him is lineally descended the present Thomas M'Dowall of Stodrig.

There was a great and old family of this name in Argyleshire, called M'Oul, M'Dowall, or M'Dougall, Lords of Lorn, whose title and lands went by an heiress, to Stewart, Lord of Lorn, and are now in the family of Argyle; Colin Campbell, the first Earl of Argyre, having married Isabel, heiress of Stewart of Lorn.

Duncan M'Oul, Lord of Lorn, built the Priory of Ard-chattan in Lorn, and endowed it with several lands.

The heir-male of this family is John M'Dougall of Dunolik, whose castle of Dunolik was the mansion-house of the said family.

The arms of this family were, quarterly, first and fourth azure, a lion rampant argent, for the name of M'Dougall; second and third or, a lymphad sable, with flames of fire issuing out of the top-mast, proper; as in the Plate of Achievements, cut at the charge of John M'Dowall, Younger of Logan.

Mr. John M'Dowall of Neikland, descended of M'Dowall or M'Dougall of Dunolik, parted per fesse waved azure and or, on the first, a lion rampant argent, gorged with an antique crown vert. Lyon Register.

Andrew M'Dowall, Citizen and Merchant in London, descended of M'Dowall of Garthland, argent, a lion rampant azure, crowned with an antique crown or, within a bordure chequy of the same tinctures; crest, a lion's paw erased and erected, proper, holding an olive branch vert: motto, Vincere vel mori. Lyon Register.

Mr. Andrew M'Dowall, Advocate, second son of the present Robert M'Dowall of Logan, by his wife Sarah, daughter to Sir John Shaw of Greenock, bears azure, a lion rampant argent, gorged with an antique crown or, in the Dexter chief point of the shield a covered cup or, for his maternal figure, all within a bordure ermine, for his difference: crest and motto, above and below, the same with his father, before blazoned: as in Plate of Achievements.

Patrick M'Dowall of Culgoat, brother to the present Robert, and son to the deceased Patrick M'Dowall of Logan, by Isabel, daughter to Sir Robert Adair of Kilhist, bears azure, a lion rampant argent, gorged with an antique crown or, with a bordure argent, charged with eight sinister hands couped and palmed gules, for a maternal difference; with crest and motto as carried by the said Robert. Plate of Achievements.

Patrick M'Dowall of Crichen, the eldest descendant of the M'Dowalls of Logan now extant, (one of his predecessors was a son of John M'Dowall of Logan by Margaret, daughter to Crawford of Carse, his second wife), bears azure, a lion rampant argent, gorged with an antique crown or, with a bordure argent, charged with eight sinister hands couped and palmed gules, for a maternal difference; with crest and motto as carried by the family. Plate of Achievements.

The surname of Maitland, or, a lion rampant gules, couped in all its joints of the first; relative to the name, writ of old Mautlant, quasi mutilatus in bello. In the Chartulary of Dryburgh, Richard de Mautlant gives several lands to that abbey, which are confirmed by his son William de Mautlant of Thirlestane. In a principal charter (which I did see in the custody of Sir John Laufer of Fountain-hall), granted by Robert Lauder of Quarrelwood, of some lands about the town of Lauder, to Thomas Borthwick, which wants a date; but, by the witnesses, it seems to have been granted in the reign of Robert I. Amongst the witnesses is Johannes Mautlant, Dominus de Thirlestane, and Willielmus Mautlant. The next in succession was Thomas de Thirlestane, who gives, in free alms to the religious of Dryburgh, the teinds of his mill of Thirlestane. His successor was Robert, who is a witness in a charter by John Maxwell of Penncaithan, to the abbey of Dryburgh, in the reign of King David II. This Robert got a charter from that king of the lands of Lethington. His son was John Mautlant of Thirlestane, who married Agnes, a daughter of Patrick Dunbar Earl of March. And their son, Robert of Thirlestane, was intrusted by his uncle, George Earl of March, to keep the castle of Dunbar when he went discontented to England, and turned an enemy to his country; but Robert Maitland surrendered the castle, and his family afterwards was designed of Lethington. His son and successor was William, father of John, who had two sons, William and James Maitlands of Achincastle, in Dumfriesshire; of whom branched the Maitlands of Eccles. William, last mentioned, died in his father's lifetime, being killed at Flodden, and left a son, Sir Richard, by his wife, a daughter of George Lord Seaton, who succeeded his grandfather; which Sir Richard Maitland of Lethington was a Lord of the Session, and Privy Seal to Queen Mary. He married a daughter of Thomas Cranston of Corby, and by her had three sons, Sir William, Sir John, and Mr Thomas. The first succeeded his father; he was Secretary of State to Queen Mary, and left a son by a daughter of the Lord Fleming, called James, who died without issue. His brother, Sir John, was Secretary to King James VI. and afterwards Chancellor of Scotland, and succeeded his brother Sir William. He, by that King, was created a Lord of Parliament, by the title of Lord Thirlestane, May 17th 1592. Before this time I do not observe that the family had the double treasure round their lion: for, in Sampson's Hall, in the house of Seaton, where the Achievements of the nobility and gentry that have relation to the family of Seaton, are truly and curiously embossed and illuminated by the order of George Lord Seaton, 1526, the arms of Maitland of Lethington are there blazoned without the double treasure, as above. But when they were dignified with the title of Lord, I observe the double treasure added to their arms in the year 1624, as on the house of Falahall, which was before John, second Lord Thirlestane, was advanced to the dignity of Viscount of Lauderdale, which was in the year 1616, and in the year 1624, he was honoured with the title of Earl of Lauderdale. He married Isabel Seaton, second daughter to Alexander Earl of Dunfermline, and Chancellor of Scotland, by his first wife, Lilias Drummond, daughter to Patrick Lord Drummond. Their son was John, third Earl of Lauderdale, a great favourite of King Charles II. long time Secretary to that King, and his High Commissioner for Scotland. He was, by that king, created Marquis of March and Duke of Lauderdale, the honours being provided to the heirs-male of his body; which failing, the dignity of Earl of Lauderdale, after his death, descended on his brother, Charles Maitland of Hatton, Lord Treasurer Depute. He married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Richard Lauder of Hatton, and by her he had Richard Earl of Lauderdale, who died without issue; second, John Earl of Lauderdale; third, Charles Maitland, who married Lilias, daughter to Sir John Colquhoun of Luss; fourth, William Maitland, who married Christian, daughter and heir of Robert Viscount of Oxenford; fifth, Alexander Maitland. Isabel, the eldest daughter, was married to John Lord Elphinstone, and Mary, the youngest, to Charles Earl of Southesk. This Earl John died 1712, and the estate and honour is now in the person of his son Charles, the present Earl of Lauderdale. The achievement of the family is, or, a lion rampant gules, couped at all joints of the first within a double treasure, flowered and counter-flowered with flower-de-luces of the second; supporters, two eagles, proper; and, for crest, that of Scotland, allowed by King Charles II. to John Duke of Lauderdale, with a little difference, viz. a lion sejant full faced, gules, crowned with an open crown or, holding in his dexter paw a sword, proper, hilted and pommelled or, and, in the sinister, a flower-de-luce azure, in place of the sceptre: motto, Consilio & animis: As in the Plate of Achievements.

The eldest cadet of this family now extant is Maitland of Pittrichie, descended of Robert Maitland, a younger son of Robert Maitland of Thirlestane, in the reign of Robert III. who married the heiress of Schives, alias Gight, in Viscount de Aberdon, where the family continued for many years, and were designed Maitlands of Gight; but since, having purchased the barony of Pittrichie, have now their designation from it.

Sir Richard Maitland of Pittrichie, Baronet, sometime one of the Senators of the College of Justice, caused matriculate his arms in the Lyon Register thus; or, a lion rampant gules, couped at all joints of the field, within a bordure chequé argent and azure; crest, a lion's head erased gules; motto, Paix et peu.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

John Maitland of Eccles, descended of a second son of John Maitland of Leithington, or, a lion rampant gules, couped in all joints of the first within a bordure azure; crest, a demi-lion rampant gules, couped, as the former, issuing out of the water, proper: motto, Luctor et emergam. These two blazons are so matriculated in the New Register. And there, Robert Maitland, Lieutenant of the Garrison in the Bass, or, a lion rampant gules, couped in all joints of the first, within a bordure waved azure; crest, a rock placed in the sea, proper.

James Maitland, Major to the Scots Regiment of Foot Guards, under the command of Lieut.-General James Douglas, carries as above, but charges the bordure with eight grenades of the first, with the same crest; and for motto, Attamen tranquillos. Lyon Register.

The name of Scrymgeour, gules, a lion rampant, or, armed and langued azure, holding, in his dexter paw, a crooked sword or scimitar, argent.

The first of this name, as our historians say, was one Sir Alexander Carron, son of Alexander Carron, who carried the banner of Scotland before King Alexander I. in his expedition against the rebels in Meras and Murray; where, by Sir Alexander's conduct and eminent valour, the king obtained a notable victory over the rebels, for which his name was changed from Carron to Scrymgeour, which signifies a hardy fighter, and he got a coat of arms suitable thereto, which he transmitted to his posterity, who were long standard-bearers to our kings, and constables of Dundee.

Sir James Scrymgeour, Constable of Dundee, was killed at the battle of Harlaw, and the family was long afterwards dignified with the titles of Viscount of Dunkeld, and Lord Scrymgeour, the 15th of November 1641. This family is now extinct. Their arms were supported by two greyhounds, collared gules; and, for crest, a lion's paw holding a scimitar, with the word Dissipate.

John Scrymgeour of Kirkton carried as above, within a bordure gules; crest, a lion's paw erased, holding a cutlass or scimitar, proper: motto, Dissipate. New Register. And there, John Scrymgeour, Bailie of Dundee, descended of a fourth son of Kirkton, carries the same as Kirkton, with a martlet for difference.

Mr David Scrymgeour of Bowhill, gules, two swords, points downwards, crossing other saltier-ways argent, hilted and pommelled or, a sinister hand couped in base; pointing downwards, proper; crest, a lion's paw grasping a sword fesse-ways, proper: motto, Dissipate. New Register. And there

Mr David Scrymgeour of Cartmore, carries the same with Scrymgeour of Bowhill, within a bordure or.

Mortimer, or, a lion rampant gules, gutté of the first. Some are of opinion that this name came from England to Scotland in the reign of King Edgar; but it seems they did not carry the arms of Mortimer in England. Allanus de Mortuo Mari, i. e. Mortimer Dominus de Aberdour, got these lands by marrying the daughter and heir of John de Vetere-Ponte (i. e. Vipont) in the year 1126. In the charters of King Alexander II. several of this name are to be found witnesses, as Hugo de Mortuo-Mari, and Rogerus de Mortuo-Mari. I have seen a principal charter (penes Rait of Halgreen) granted by John Campbell Earl of Athol, to Sir Roger de Mortuo-Mari, of the lands of Billandrie and others, which is confirmed by David II. There were several families of this name which ended in heiresses, married to the Lord Gray and Mortimer of Craigievar; these heiresses carried argent, a lion rampant sable, guttée or. But Mortimer of Auchenbody, pally of six pieces, argent and azure, a lion rampant sable, guttée d'or; crest, a bull's head cabossed sable: motto, Acquirí tueor. New Register.

The name of Mowat was anciently, in charters written de Monte alto. I have seen a perambulation of the lands of Cleish in Fife, (penes Lindsay of Dawhill) per Michaeli de Monte alto, & Philippum de Melgedrum, tunc Justiciarior Scottie, anno 1252. There were several families of this name, as Mowat of Balquhollie, who carried argent, a lion rampant sable, langued and armed gules. Pont's Manuscript.

Sir Alexander Mowat of Ingliston, Baronet, descended of Balquhollie, argent, a lion rampant sable, armed gules, within a bordure of the second; crest, an oak tree, growing out of a rock, proper; motto, Monte alto. New Register.

I find others of the name of Mowat carry argent on a fesse azure, three stars of the first.

AUCHTERLONY of Kelly, quarterly, first and fourth azure, a lion rampant argent, for Auchterloncy; second and third or, a fesse chequy, azure and argent, within a bordure gules, charged with eight buckles of the first, for Stewart of Rosyth. Pont's and Workman's Manuscripts.

But on the house of Falaahall the arms of Auchterloncy of Kelly are illuminat- ed, anno 1654, azure, a lion rampant within a bordure argent, charged with ten buckles gules.

CLEPHAN of Carslogie, argent, a lion rampant gules, and on his head a helmet azure; crest, a dexter hand holding a helmet, proper; motto, Ut sim parator. New Register.

As for the antiquity of this family, there is a charter of confirmation by Dun-can Earl of Fife, of the lands of Carslogie, to John Clephan, which bears him to possess them, atque libere sicut David de Clephan Pater ejus & praedecessores eam ten- erunt. By the witnesses of this charter, which wants a date, it appears to have been granted in the reign of Robert I.

FAIRLY of Braid, or, a lion rampant gules, between his fore-paws a star of the last, bruised with a bandlet azure; crest, an unicorn's head couped, argent; supporters, two ratches, proper; motto, I am ready. New Register.

It is said the first of this family was a natural son of King Robert II. Here they have the tincture and figure of the Royal Arms, (without the tressure) and bruised with a bendlet, a mark sometimes of illegitimation.

WILLIAM FAIRLY of Bruntsfield, or, a lion rampant, and, in chief, three stars gules; crest, a lion's head couped or; motto, Paratus sum. Ibid.

FERGUSON of Craigdarroch, argent, a lion rampant azure on a chief gules, a star between a cross croslet-fitched, and a rose of the field; crest, a dexter hand grasping a broken spear bend-ways, proper; motto, Fi & arte. Lyon Register, and in Plate of Achievements, as by Alexander Fergusson of Craigdarroch, Esq. repre- senter of the family.

HANGINGSIDE of HANDYSIDE, argent, a lion rampant, within a bordure ingrained sable. Pont's Manuscript.

Captain JAMES HANDYSIDE, of Scots extract, now in London, Gentleman, argent, a lion rampant sable, armed and langued gules, on a chief azure, three mullets of the first; crest, a dexter hand expanded, proper; motto, Munificæ & foritæ. New Register.

Colonel WILLIAM URIE, Major to King Charles II.'s Regiment of Guards, ar- gent, a lion rampant gules, crowned and chained or; crest, a lion's paw erased gules: motto, Saur tache. Lyon Register.

The first of this surname, says Sir George Mackenzie in his Manuscript of Ge- nealogies, came from England to Scotland in the reign of the Baliol, and was de- scended of the family of the Lord Ivers in England, with us, corruptly pron- nounced Urie, who were Barons of Pitfichy. I have seen a Genealogical Tree of this family, under the hand and seal of Sir Charles Erskine, Lyon King at arms, and other two heralds, where John Urie of Pitfichy married Katharine, daugh- ter of the Lord Forbes, and is there first mentioned; and the seventh, in a lineal descent from him, was the above Colonel William Urie. So much then for the bearings of a lion rampant. I proceed to other attributes given to the Lion in blazon.

OF A LION, MORNE, EVIRE, COUE, AND WITH A DOUBLE TAIL AND WINGS.

The Lion, as I said before, when his teeth, tongue, and claws are of a different tincture from his body, is said to be armed and langued of such a tincture; but, when he is represented without them, he is said to be morné; and that, even though he have tongue and teeth and wants claws. For which Menestrier gives us a story of the arms of the family Sforna in Italy, azure, a lion rampant or, in his left paw a quince-apple, stalked and leaved of the last. When the Emperor Robert of Bavaria entered Italy to dispossess Galeazzo of Milan, the great Sforza amic with his Florentine troops; the Emperor perceiving Sforza's arms on his standard, told him jestingly, that his lion's paw would spoil the quince; for which, says Menestrier, the lion of his family was represented afterwards without claws, and blazoned morné.

The lion is said to be eviré, by the French, when the marks of the masculine sex are not seen. A lion coué, is when he cowardly claps his tail between his legs, contrary to the natural fierceness of the lion, Plate XI. fig. 2. I have seen lions so painted in many coats of arms, in our old books of blazon, which are now otherwise presented, by making the tail turn up upon the lion's back.

The lion, in armories, is sometimes represented with two tails as the emblem of magnanimity and strenuousness, say the English, which they call a double queue or forked tail; the French say, à la queue fourchée or double queue; and because the two tails are ordinarily placed saltier-ways on the back of the lion, they say queue fourchée posée en savoir, and the Latins, duplex cauda in decussim trajecta. Fig. 3.

The Lion of the kingdom of Bohemia is represented with two tails, which was occasioned (as Menestrier says) by a jest of the Emperor Frederick, who was desirous to perpetuate the valour of Ladislaus II. King of Bohemia, by giving him new arms, viz. gules, a lion rampant argent, as more suitable to his valour than his old armorial figure, an eagle chequé, or and sable, which is now the bearing of the country of Murcia; but the lion was represented coué; that is, with his tail between his legs, which, being displayed before the soldiers, they refused to follow, calling it an ape; the Emperor told them he should cause help that, and ordered the lion to be painted with two tails, and with a crown on his head; thus blazoned by Favin, de gueules à un lion d'argent à la queue fourchée, et croisé, et couronné d'or.

Simon Montfort Earl of Leicester, who married Eleanor, second daughter to King John of England, carried gules, a lion rampant queue fourchée argent, as on a stone in the Abbey of Westminster, says Sandford in his History. And an English book of late, entitled the Art of Heraldry, gives sometimes examples of a lion with two tails, borne by Englishmen, as Sir Christopher Wandesford of Kirklington, in Yorkshire, Baronet, or, a lion rampant double queue azure.

The name of Kingston, sable, a lion rampant double queue or. The name of Broomhall, azure; a lion rampant double queue or. I have met with no such bearing with us.

I shall here add one instance of a lion with wings, as that in the arms of the republic of Venice, azure, a lion winged or, sejant, holding between his fore paws a book open, argent; on which are these words, Pax tibi Marce Evangelista meus; it is called St Mark's lion, the emblem of the Evangelist St Mark, the patron saint of Venice.

A LION SALIENT.

The posture of a lion salient is almost the same with rampant; but when salient, he is less erect, as his position were bend-ways. In this position he is said to prosecute his prey leaping. The French, German, and Latin heralds, make no difference between salient and rampant, but blazon it lion, or lion rampant. And in our old herald books I find sometimes one coat blazoned with a lion rampant, and at other times it is called a lion salient, as that of Buchanan of that Ilk, or, a lion salient sable, degutted of the first, within a double trellis flowered and counter-flowered of the second; but in our New Register, or, a lion rampant sable, armed and langued gules, within a double trellis, counter-flowered of the second; crest, a hand holding up a ducal cap, tufted on the top with a rose gules, within a laurel branch, disposed orle-ways, proper; supported by two falcons, proper; armed argent, chessed and belled gules; motto, Clarior binx bonus.

Buchanan of Leny, now representor of Buchanan of that Ilk, carried the arms of Buchanan, quartered with the arms of Leny, sable, on a chevron between three bears' heads erased, two in chief, and one in base argent, muzzled gules, a cinquefoil of the first. New Register.

Arthur Buchanan of Sound, the arms of Buchanan, with a crescent for difference; crest, a lion's paw erect, and erased, proper: motto, Nobiliti est ira leonis. Ibid.

William Buchanan of Drummakill, whose predecessor was a second son of Buchanan of that Ilk, or, a lion rampant sable, holding in his dexter paw a man's heart, proper; all within a double tressure counter-flowered of the second; crest, a dexter hand holding a sword: motto, God with my right. Ibid.

Archibald Buchanan of Drumhead, descended of Drummakill, or, a lion rampant sable, holding in his dexter paw an arrow, and in his sinister a bow, all proper, within a double tressure counter-flowered of the second; crest, a sinister hand holding a bent bow or: Par sit fortuna labori. Ibid.

Mr Patrick Buchanan, a son of Milton, descended of Buchanan of that Ilk, the arms of Buchanan, within a bordure gules, charged with eight crescents argent; crest, a rose slipped gules: motto, Dicitur bine bonus. Ibid. And there, John Buchanan, Chirurgeon and Bailie of Stirling, descended of Buchanan of that Ilk, parted per bend, or and sable, a lion rampant within a double tressure, all counter-changed of the same; crest, a hand pointing a lance in bend, proper: motto, Secundo euro.

Sir Richard Newton of that Ilk, vert, a lion rampant or, on a chief of the last, three roses gules; crest, a demi-lion or, holding in his dexter paw a scimitar, proper, with the motto, Propatria. Lyon Register, and in Plate of Achievements.

The lion rampant is sometimes accompanied with figures, and surmounted of them, such as the fezzi, bend, and other ordinaries; as also the lion is frequently carried issuing out of, or surmounting them, of which I have given several examples: But, before I proceed to other postures of the lion in armories, I shall again instance the arms of Robert Duke of Albany, Governor of Scotland in the minority of King James I. who was third lawful son of King Robert II. While he was Earl of Fife and Monteiith, he carried only or, a fesse chequy, azure and argent, surmounted of a lion rampant gules, armed and langued azure, being the Lion of Scotland, as by our old illuminated books of arms, and by his seals appended to his charters, as that one granted by him, Johanni de Weemys, de Terris de Curbrock, infra Comitatian de Fife: And afterwards, when he came to be dignified with the title of Duke of Albany and Regent of Scotland, he altered his bearing, and carried, quarterly, first and fourth or, a lion rampant gules, armed and langued azure, and in chief a label of three points of the last, for the title of Albany; second and third or, a fesse chequy, azure and argent, with a label of three points in chief of the second, for Stewart.

It is probable, that the Duke, upon that change, did assign that coat of arms, which he formerly carried while he was only Earl of Fife and Monteiith, to Sir John Stewart of Ardgowan and Achingowan, his nephew, or that Sir John or his successors assumed the same, which have been for a long time carried by the family, and still by the present Sir Archibald Stewart of Blackhall, Baronet, lineally descended of the above Sir John of Ardgowan, the first of the family, who was a natural son of King Robert III. which appears from three distinct charters in Sir Archibald's hands, granted by King Robert III. The first is of the lands of Achingowan, in Renfrew, the first year of his reign: The second is of the lands of Blackhall, the 6th year of his reign: And the third charter, of the lands of Ardgowan, in the 14th year of his reign: In all which the king designs him Johanni Senescalco filio nostro naturali. Though there be a charter, as I am informed, in the hands of the said Sir Archibald, granted by King James I. anno 1429, clarissimo fratri suus Johanni Senescalco Domino de Achingowan, without any appellation that would infer illegitimation. All these three baronies, which were given from the crown to Sir John, are still in the possession of the present Sir Archibald Stewart of Blackhall, Baronet, his lineal successor, who carries as above, viz. or, a fesse chequy, azure and argent, surmounted of a lion rampant gules, armed and langued of the second; crest, a lion's head erased gules; with the motto, Spero meliora, and sometimes Integritate stabit ingenuus; and so matriculated in the Lyon Register and Plate of Achievements.

Mr Walter Stewart, Advocate, his Majesty’s Solicitor, a younger son (where before, by mistake, I called him his brother) of Sir Archibald Stewart of Blackhall, Baronet, carries the same with his father, within a bordure ermine, for his difference; (upon account that his mother, Anne, eldest daughter and co-heiress of Sir John Crawfurd of Kilbirnie, carried gules, a fesse ermine;) and for crest, a lion’s head erased gules; with the motto, Laudare noli: As in the Plate of Achievements.

When the lion, as I have said, is bend-ways, it was anciently with us blazoned salient, and not rampant, as in the following coats of arms, in our old books, by the name of Leighton, argent, a lion salient gules.

There was an eminent prelate of this name, Henry Leighton, Bishop of Aberdeen, who was one of the Commissioners sent to London to negotiate the ransom of King James I. As also a family of this name, in the shire of Forfar, in Sir James Balfour’s Book of Blazons, carried argent, a lion salient gules, armed or: But in our new books, Leighton of Ullisheaven has the same bearing, but the lion is said to be rampant; crest, a lion’s head; and for motto, Light on. Lyon Register.

The name of Hastie, or, a lion salient vert, crowned azure. Pont’s Manuscript.

Rossie of that ilk, parted per bend, gules and argent, a lion salient counterchanged of the same.

Rossie in Fife belonged to Dominus Henricus Rossie de eodem, in the reign of King David I. and Malcom IV. In the last’s reign, Sir Alexander Rossie is forfeited, and his lands given to the Earl of Fife, now possessed by the name of Cheap: As in Sir Robert Sibbald’s History of Fife.

The English blazon a lion bend-ways salient. Two or three examples I shall take from the book entitled the Art of Heraldry.

The name of Sturmy, in England, sable, a lion salient argent.

The name of Salisbury, gules, a lion salient argent.

The name of Feleridge, argent, a lion salient gules.

THE LION PASSANT

Is represented in arms, going, having his right fore-foot a little lifted up.

The Latins, for passant, say prodiens, gradiens, and incomend. The French call a lion in this posture, lion lepardo, because all leopards are carried passant, for which says Silvester Petra Sancta, a facialisibus appellatur leopardus, and the word lion is added, because the head is in profile, showing but one eye, and one ear, as all lions do.

The surname of Touch, argent, a lion passant vert, armed gules. Ogilvie’s Manuscript, but Pont makes this lion salient.

Ker Earl of Ancrum carries a lion passant, as before.

The surname of Slowman, gules, a sword pale-ways argent, between two boars’ heads couped or, and, on a chief of the second, a lion passant of the first between two mascles vert. Pont’s Manuscript.

Newton of Dalcoif, parted per fesse, azure and gules, on the first two stars, and on the second a lion passant argent; as Workman: But Balfour says, gules, a lion passant argent, and in chief three stars of the last.

Stewart of Allanton, or, a fesse chequed, azure and argent, and in chief a lion passant gules. Pont’s Manuscript.

Stewart of Liston, the same; as in Mr Thomas Crawfurd’s Manuscript.

The surname of Gleg, both in Scotland and England, sable, two lions contrepassant argent, collared gules. Sir George Mackenzie’s Heraldry, fig. 5. and in the New Register.

Thomas Gleg, Doctor of Medicine, carries the same; and for crest, a falcon holding a partridge between her feet, proper: motto, Qui pest capere capiat. New Register.
The name of Ronald, argent, a lion passant gules, tied to an oak tree, proper, and on a chief azure three crescents of the first. Pont's Manuscript.

In our New Register, Robert Ronald, Provost of Montrose, argent, a lion passant gardant gules, tied to an oak tree, proper; and on a chief azure, a rose slipped, between two crescents of the first; crest, an oak tree, leaved and fruited, proper: motto, Sic virescit virtus. Lyon Register.

The name of Finlayson, argent, a lion passant gules, on a chief azure, a boar's head couped or, between two spur-towels of the first. Pont's Manuscript.

In England, Sir Andrew Hacket of Moxhill in Warwickshire, descended of the Halkets in Scotland, their arms being almost the same, tincture, three piles argent, on a chief of the last, a lion passant gules. Art. Her. And there, John Logan of Idbury, in Oxfordshire, Esq. or, a lion passant sable, and in chief three piles of the same, descended of the Logans in Scotland.

North Lord North, in England, azure, a lion passant or, between three flower-de-luces argent; supporters, two dragons, gorged with open crowns, and chains thereto affixed or; crest, a dragon's head. The first of this ancient family that was dignified, was Edward North, one of the Clerks of the Parliament, knighted by Henry VIII. and made Lord North by Queen Mary of England, February 17. 1553.

North Lord Guilford was dignified with that title, by letters patent, dated 27th September 1683. He was Keeper of the Great Seal, and Chancellor of England, and carried the arms of the Lord North, with a crescent for his difference, which Imhoff blazons thus, "Scutum quo Northorum familia uti solet: aureus est, leonem gradientem continens, quem lilia tria argentea ambulant."

Lion Gardant and Regardant.

These attributes are given to the lion, upon the account of the position of his head. If the lion be erect, and his head showing but one eye, and one ear, he is then called with us, and the English, a lion rampart; and by the French, only a lion, as I told before. If he be erected, showing a full face, with his two eyes and ears, he is called in Britain a lion rampart gardant; by the French, léopard lionné; léopard, for his full face, and lionné, for his body, being the posture of a lion which is erected. Lion regardant, when his head is turned back, looking over his shoulder, and showing but one eye and ear; such a lion with us, whether passant or rampant, is called a lion regardant; and with the English, who say, "Though it denoth a timorous mind, yet it betokens a diligent circumspection," as Guillim and Morgan: But Sylvester Petra Sancta, to the contrary, giving an example of a lion regardant, in his Treatise, page 305, says, "Leonis precipua in oculis est, & tam adspicere, quam respicere, absque suspicione ignavi potest; sic aureus leo in muricata parmula versus dextram se proripiens, atque in lavam respectans, est nobilis tessera comitum Ambanorum in Gallia." Fig. 7.

Sir George Mackenzie blazons the arms of Guthrie of Hackerton, or, a lion rampant, regardant gules, quartered with azure, three garbs or.

Sir Henry Guthrie of Kings-Edward, Knight and Baronet, quarterly, first and fourth or, a lion rampant regardant gules, holding in the dexter paw a cross croslet fitted azure, for Guthrie; second and third azure, three garbs or, for Cumin; crest, a lion's paw issuing out of the torce, grasping a branch of a palm-tree, all proper; supported by two naked women, wreathed about the head and loins with bay leaves, proper; motto, Sto pro veritate. New Register. And there, Thomas Guthrie, sometime Provost of Forfar, descended of the family of Halkerton, the quartered arms of Halkerton; as before, within a bordure indented argent; crest, a cross croslet fitted azure: motto, Ex unitate incrementum.

James Guthrie of Carsbank, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a cross sable; second and third azure, three garbs or, all within a bordure ingrailed gules: motto, Pictas & frugalitas. Ibid.

The name of Hume, in England, or, a lion rampant regardant vert. Art. Her. And there,
The surname of Roberts, or, a lion rampant regardant gules. And there the name of Morris, gules, a lion rampant, regardant or.

LION PASSANT GARDANT, OR LEOPARD.

These terms in blazon are all one, the first used by the English, and the other by the French: When a lion is represented passing in armories, showing a full face, with two eyes and two ears, he is then called by the English a lion passant gardant, and by the French a leopard, because all leopards and panthers are so represented: Those who write on the nature of beasts, say, that the leopard is got when the lion covereth the pard; but when the pard covereth the lioness, then their whelp is called a panther. The English, for the honour of their armorial figures, call them lions passant gardant, which, in that posture, they say, denotes consideration, and tell us, that their lions are distinguished from leopards and panthers by their shaggy locks, which cover their necks and shoulders: Though this may hold in other paintings, yet not in armories; for all leopards and panthers are represented with such shaggy locks passant and full-faced, as the learned Italian Sylvester Petra Sancta, in his Tessera Gentilitia, cap. 54, after he has treated of the postures of lions, proceeds to the leopard, and says, "Dicit agmen pardus, genere leoni proximus; nasci enim ex leone & panthera perhibetur: Ideoque in collo & armis est jubatus quasi leo; in humero deinde quasi panthera est maculosus; peculiariter tamen quod spectat ad ejus delineationem in pictura rei tesserariae; solit pardus figurari gradiens atque incedens, semperque est adversa fronte, ita ut oculo utroque, seu pleno intuitu feratur, caudam praxterea in dorsum reciprocat, seu reflectit: Cum leo interim erectus, unoque intuens oculo "pingatur, ac vibrat caudam versus cervicis." The first instance of the bearing of a leopard, among many that this author gives, is that of the Duky of Aquitaine, viz. gules, a leopard or; and a little after that, of the Dutchy of Normandy, gules, two leopards or, carried by William Duke of Normandy, Conqueror of England, which he set up for the ensign of that kingdom, and were continued by his sons and successors, till the reign of Henry II. who married Eleanor, heiress of Aquitaine, her arms being of the same field, metal, figure and form, with those of Normandy, joined them together in one shield, which now make the present ensign of England; and that these were taken for leopards, and so blazoned, I have fully evinced in my Essay on the Ancient and Modern Use of Armories, to which I recommend the curious.

Many great and honourable families in England carry leopards (which the English heralds call lions passant gardant), by way of imitation, or concession of, and from the Sovereign; for which see Jacob Imhofl's Historia Genealogica Regum Pariumque Magnae Britanniae, who blazon them leopards Anglicano. There are several families with us, who carry such figures, by our modern heralds blazoned after the English, lions passant gardant.

The old Earls of Angus carried argent, a lion rampant gules; and especially Gilchrist Earl of Ancus, that eminent soldier, in the reigns of Malcolm and William, whose brother Bredus got from the last of these Kings, the lands of Ogilvie in Angus, which lands gave to him and his descendants the surname of Ogilvie, who carried the same tinctures with his brother the Earl of Angus, but put the lion in the posture of a leopard, now blazoned argent, a lion passant gardant, and crowned or, for some special services done to their King.

Ogilvie of that Ilk in Angus was the principal family of the name. These of this family are to be found witnesses in the charters of the Alexanders II. and III. and were very eminent in the reign of Robert the Bruce; that King gave to Patrick Ogilvie of that Ilk the lands of Caithness, which belonged to Malcon de Caithness. (Earl of Haddington's Collections.)

The same Patrick Ogilvie of that Ilk and John Ogilvie are witnesses in that King's charter to the town of Dundee 1325.

Sir Walter Ogilvie of that Ilk, Sheriff of Angus, was killed by Duncan Stewart, natural son to Alexander Earl of Buchan, in the reign of Robert III.
David Ogilvie de eodem disposses the barony of Ogilvie to his grand-child, Alexander Ogilvie, as by his charter, dated at Dundee the 26th of October 1495: Amongst the witnesses are Alexander Ogilvie and James Ogilvie, brothers to the same David, which charter is confirmed by King James IV. in the eighth year of his reign. (Haddington's Collections, p. 359.) Which family afterwards failed; and the next of the name was Ogilvie of Auchenheurhouse, the first of which was Alexander, second son to Sir Walter Ogilvie, Sheriff of Angus, that was killed by Duncan Stewart. He married the daughter and heiress of Sir William Ramsay of Auchenheurhouse, for which this family was in use to carry, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a lion passant gardant gules, crowned or, for Ogilvie, second and third argent, an eagle displayed sable, beaked and membered gules, for Ramsay. This family ended in an heiress, Margaret Ogilvie, sole daughter of Sir Patrick Ogilvie of Auchenheurhouse, who was married to James Stewart Earl of Buchan, uterine brother to King James II. who with her got the barony of Auchenheurhouse.

The next branch of the family of the name standing, is Ogilvie Earl of Airly, the first of which was Sir Walter Ogilvie of Lintrathan, a second son of Ogilvie of Auchenheurhouse. He mortifies 20 merks yearly to the chaplains in Auchenheurhouse, to say prayers for his father Walter Ogilvie, and for the souls of his ancestors, 1426; which mortification is confirmed by King James I. He gave likewise a charter of the lands of Innerquharity, in the shire of Forfar, to his brother John Ogilvie, in the year 1429, confirmed by William Earl of Douglas the same year, as superior. This Sir Walter, in the year 1424, is designed Dominus de Lintrathan, miles. Thesaurarius noter, in a charter of King James I. Haddington's Collections. He married Elizabeth Glen, heiress of Inchmartin, and with her had three sons and two daughters; Sir John the eldest succeeded; second, Alexander was laird of Inchmartin in the Carse of Gowry, his mother's inheritance; third, Sir Walter, the first of Deskford and Findlater, in an agreement which I have seen between Alexander Lord Gordon, and William Keith Marischal, dated at Cluny the 1st of August 1442. Among the witnesses are Walter Ogilvie of Beaufort, Sir Alexander Ogilvie of Auchenheurhouse, Sir Alexander Ogilvie of Inchmartin, Alexander Ogilvie of Innerquharity, and Sir William Ogilvie of Deskford, afterwards designed of Findlater.

Sir John Ogilvie, designed Dominus de Lintrathan, in his two resignations made by him of that barony, and the barony of Airly, first in the hands of King James II. 1438; and afterwards in the hands of King James III. 1482. Who, from these two Kings, got new charters, erecting all his lands in a free barony, to be called the barony of Lintrathan. (Haddington's Collections, p. 48.) He had with his lady Marion Seaton, daughter to William Lord Seaton, three sons and as many daughters: James, the eldest, who succeeded; David Ogilvie of Newton; third, Thomas, Chanter of Dunkeld, and afterwards Abbot of Cupar.

Sir James succeeded his father; he took the designation of Airly in his father's lifetime, as in an assignation of an appraising of the barony of Kinniel, 1480. (Haddington's Collections, p. 579.) He was ambassador for King James III. to Denmark, and was by King James IV. 1491, made a Lord of Parliament by the title of Lord Ogilvie of Airly.

Of whom was descended James Lord Ogilvie of Airly, who married Isabel Hamilton, second daughter to Thomas Earl of Haddington. He was created Earl of Airly by King Charles I. 1639. Of whom the present Earl of Airly, whose achievement is argent, a lion passant gardant gules, crowned with an imperial crown, and collared with an open one; supporters, two bulls sable, unguled and horned vert, with a garland of flowers about their necks; and for crest, a gentlewoman, from the waist upwards, holding a port-cullie; motto, A fine.

Sir Walter Ogilvie, a third son of Lintrathan, married the heiress of Sinclair of Deskford in the reign of King James I. and with her had two sons, Sir James Ogilvie of Deskford, and Sir Walter Ogilvie of Boyne. Sir James succeeded his father, he was knighted by King James III. and married a daughter of Sir Robert Innes of that Ilk, from whom was lineally descended Sir Walter Ogilvie of Deskford, who was advanced to the dignity of Lord Deskford, the 4th of October 1616, by King James VI. and his son James Lord Deskford was created Earl of Furd-later, the 20th of February 1638, by King Charles I. This Earl, having no male issue of his body, he procured from King Charles I. on behalf of his daughter Mary and her descendants, certain letters patent, whereby the title and dignity of Earl of Findlater was conferred upon her, and Patrick Ogilvie of Auchmarthin, her husband. They had James, their son and heir, who married Anne, only daughter of Hugh Earl of Eglinton, by Anne his wife, daughter of James Marquis of Hamilton, by whom he had James the present Earl of Findlater, and his brother Colonel Patrick Ogilvie of Lonmoy; for which see Mr Crawford’s Peerage.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

The arms of this family of Deskford, before it was dignified, are illuminated on the house of Falahall, 1624, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a lion passant gardant gules, and a crescent in base of the same, for Ogilvie; second and third argent, a cross inrolled sable, for Sinclair of Deskford; and afterwards, when dignified with the title of Lord Deskford, they carried over their quartered arms, by way of surtoute, an escutcheon gules, with the sun in its splendour, proper, which of late has been disused, and have carried only, quarterly, Ogilvie, (with the lion crowned) and Sinclair, supported by two lions gardant gules; and for crest, another lion of the same, holding a plum-rule: with the motto, Tout four. As in Plate of Achievements.

Ogilvie Lord Banff, argent, a lion passant gardant, gules, crowned or; for Ogilvie, second and third argent, three papingoes vert, beaked and membred gules, for Hume of Fastcastle; supported on the dexter by a man in armour, with a target, all proper; and on the sinister, by a lion rampant, gules; crest, a lion’s head erased gules: motto, Fideliter.

The first of this family was Walter Ogilvie of Dunlugas, a son of Sir Walter Ogilvie of Boyne, by Margaret his wife, one of the daughters and co-heirs of Sir James Edmonstone of that Ilk. He married Alison, one of the heiresses of Patrick Hume of Fastcastle, in the reign of King James IV.; and by her had Sir Walter his son and successor. This Walter Ogilvie, designed of Banff, in a charter granted to him by George Earl of Huntly, of the lands of Auchanachic in the forestry of Boyne, of the date 1491, in which the Earl calls him, Armiger noster, which charter is confirmed by King James IV. 1495. (Haddington’s Collections.) Walter had by his wife Alison, George Ogilvie of Dunlugas, who married Beatrice, daughter of George Lord Seaton. Their son and successor was another Walter, father of Sir Walter Ogilvie of Dunlugas, father of Sir George; who, for his loyalty to King Charles I. was, by letters patent, bearing date 31st of August 1642, created Lord Banff, who, by a daughter of the Lord Duffus, had George his son and successor, who took to wife Agnes, a daughter of Alexander Lord Halkerton, and had with her Mr George and Sir Alexander Ogilvie of Forglen.

Which George, second Lord Banff, by his lady, a daughter of William Keith Earl Marischal, had, for his son and successor, George, the present Lord Banff, who married Helen, daughter of Sir John Lauder of Fountainhall, one of the Senators of the College of Justice.

Ogilvie of Innerquharity, the first of which was a younger son of Alexander Ogilvie of that Ilk, and the heiress of Auchterhouse. These of this family carry quarterly, first and fourth argent, a lion passant gardant gules, collared with an open crown, and crowned with a close imperial one, or, for Ogilvie; second and third argent, an eagle displayed sable, beaked and membred gules, for Ramsay of Auchterhouse; and in the centre, by way of surtoute, the badge of the Order of a Knight Baronet, as by the present Sir John Ogilvie, Bart.

Mr John Ogilvie of Balbegno, whose father is brother-german to Sir John Ogilvie of Innerquharity, carries the same with Innerquharity, within a bordure azure, for his difference; and for crest, a flower of the sun; with the motto, Quo duxeris adsum. Lyon Register, and Plate of Achievements.

Sir Walter Ogilvie of Boyne, second son of Sir Walter Ogilvie of Lintnathan, by his wife the heiress of Deskford, as before, married Margaret Edmonstone, second daughter and co-heir of James Edmonstone of that Ilk. He got with her, half of the lands of Tulliallan, which he excambled with his wife’s sister and her husband, Patrick Blackadder, for the thanedom of Boyne, as by the charter of excaubtion which I have seen (pens Ogilvie of Boyne) dated at Glasgow the 25th of February 1484, and confirmed by King James III. that same year. His son was George, and his son again, Walter Ogilvie, is served heir to his father George Ogilvie of Boyne, son of the first Sir Walter Ogilvie of Boyne, and is infeft in the thanedom of Boyne, 1524. Of him was descended Sir Patrick Ogilvie of Boyne, one of the Senators of the College of Justice. Their arms are, quarterly, first and fourth Ogilvie, second and third argent, three crescents gules, for Edmonstone; over all dividing the quarters, a cross ingrailed sable, for Sinclair of Deskford, as a younger son of Ogilvie of Deskford, who married the heiress; crest, a right hand holding a sword, proper: motto, Pro patria.

Ogilvie of Inchmartin, descended of a younger son of Sir Walter Ogilvie of Linrathian, argent, a lion passant gardant gules, crowned or, on his breast a star of the first. This family is now incorporate in the house of Findlater, by marrying the heiress. Of which before.

Ogilvie of Craige, descended of Sir John Ogilvie, second son to James Lord Ogilvie, and his lady, a daughter of the Lord Forbes, carried the arms of the Lord Ogilvie, with a crescent for difference.

Ogilvie of Balfour, in Angus, a cadet of James, first Lord Ogilvie, and his second wife, a daughter of the Earl of Angus, carried Ogilvie, with a suitable bussure; and Thomas Ogilvie of Logie, descended of a second son of Balfour, carries the same within a bordure gules, charged with eight crescents argent, for his difference; crest, a lion rampant, issuing out of a wreath, holding betwixt his fore paws a sword in pale, proper: motto, Ex armis bonus. New Register. And there,

Sir Francis Ogilvie of New-Grange, descended of Airly, the arms of that family within a bordure indented gules; crest, a demi-lion holding in his dexter paw a garb, proper: motto, Martis & Industria.

Walter Ogilvie of Ragel, descended of a second son of Boyne, carries the arms of Boyne as before, all within a bordure ingrailed azure; crest, a sword in bend, proper: motto, Pugno pro patria. Lyon Register.

Ogilvie of Carnousie, the same with Dunlugas, as before, with a crescent for difference, as a son of Dunlugas. Pont's Manuscript.

Ogilvie of Birnies, the quartered arms of Banff, with an escutcheon by way of surtoute, quartered with the arms of Abernethy Lord Salton, which are to be seen on a tomb in the Collegiate Church of Seaton.

Ogilvie of Glasshaugh, argent, a lion passant gules, crowned or, treading on a mound or globe, azure, environed with a circle, and ensigned with a cross avellaneous of the third. Pont's Manuscript.

Sir George Ogilvie of Barras, Baronet, argent, a lion passant gardant gules, gorged with an open crown, and crowned with an imperial one, proper, holding in his dexter paw a sword, proper, defending the thistle (placed in the dexter chief point) vert, ensigned with a crown or, with the badge of Knight-Baronet, by way of canton in the sinister chief point; crest, a demi-man in armour, holding forth his right hand; with the motto, Praeclarum regi & regno servitium.

Sir George Ogilvie got the lands of Barras by marrying Elizabeth Douglas, daughter and heir of William Douglas of Barras, descended of a younger brother of the Earl of Angus: This Sir George Ogilvie was intrusted by William Earl Marischal, in keeping his castle of Dunnotter, in which were lodged the crown, sword and sceptre, the regalia of Scotland, which he and his lady carefully preserved from the English, who forced him to surrender the castle; but missing the regalia, they kept him and his lady in a long imprisonment, of which she died: Upon the Restoration of King Charles II. Sir George Ogilvie delivered the regalia to the Earl Marischal entire; for which good service, King Charles honoured him with the title of Knight-Baronet, in the year 1661, and allowed the badge, the badge of the kingdom, to be carried in his arms, and changed the holding of his lands from ward to blanch, as his charter bears, for the foresaid piece of good service.

Mr James Ogilvie of Clunie, descended of a third son of Airly, carries the Earl of Airly's arms, within a bordure ingrailed gules; crest, a bull issuant sable out of the wreath, collared with a garland of roses, proper. Lyon Register.

James Ogilvie of Inchewen, descended of Clowa, a younger son of the Earl of
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

Airly, as Airly, within a bordure counter-componed, gules and argent; crest, a deer's head couped gules, attired or; motto, Bene parasitum dulce. Ibid.

John Ogilvie of Pitmouns, whose grandfather was a third son of Airly, carries Airly, within a bordure ingrailed gules; crest, a lion passant gardant of the same, standing on a garb fesse-ways or; motto, Quae moderata firma. Ibid.

Thomas Ogilvie, Provost of Banff, argent, a lion passant gardant, between two crescents in chief, and a cinquefoil in base gules; crest, a dexter hand holding a branch of palm, proper; motto, Secundat vera fides. Ibid.

Before I proceed to the multiplication of lions, whether passant or rampant in one field; I shall add two or three postures of the lion, to be met with in armorial bearings.

When a lion is represented sleeping, in blazon it is termed dormant, by the English, as fig. 8. azure, a lion dormant argent; and when in this posture, he is said to be couchant gules, and when sitting, is said to be sejant, as that lion for the crest of Scotland, and the Earl of Lauderdale's.

Sometimes the lion is not only crowned, and gorged with a crown about his neck, as in the bearings of some of the name of McDowall and Ogilvie, of which before, but sometimes he has only a common collar about his neck, with a chain affixed thereto: And, as we say of him, some say of other beasts, argent, a lion rampant sable, collared with a chain thereto affixed, passing betwixt his fore-legs, and reflexing over his back, by the name of Meredith in England. Art. Her.

Gerard Leigh gives us an example of a lion borne in arms, with two heads, which, says he, shows the bearer to be a homager or vassal to two princes, or overlords, that carry lions. In the Essay of Heraldry, by an Englishman, so often mentioned, I find the same figure carried by Simon Manson of Great Gransdane in Huntingdonshire, upon what account I know not. Gerard Leigh gives us another odd example of three lions' bodies joined in one head in the centre of the shield, the bodies, by way of pairole, that is, two bodies in chief, and one in base, which he says betoken an unity and agreement. Sylvester Petra Sancta takes notice of this figure, and gives it in his Taille-douce Cuts, page 334, from Guillim's Heraldry, gules, three lions in pairole, united in the centre, in one head affronté or: Our author's words are these, "Singularis est parrama gentilissima, tricorporum leonem, aureum habens, in alveolo purpurato; huit autem hae tessera Edmundi, cognomento Cruhebachii, et stripe regia in regno Angliae:"

This Edmond, surnamed Cruheback, who is said to have had such a bearing, was second son of Henry III. of England, who, upon the forfeiture of Simon Montfort Earl of Leicester, got from his father that earldom, and shortly after the earldom of Lancaster. Sandford, in his Genealogical History of England, gives us two seals of this earl's, appended to two deeds; the first seal, in the year 1273, which had the foreshaid figure, three lions conjoined in one head; but as fanciful and singular as it was, it seems he laid it aside: Upon his other seals he carried the arms of his father, being those of England, with a label azure of three points, charged with flower-de-luces or: So that I think the first seal was only a device, (though I cannot learn the import of it) since it did not descend to his posterity, as his paternal arms did to the House of Lancaster, who pretended right to the crown of England, as descended from him, who never used such a figure as a device, or as fixed armorial arms.

When two lions or more are in one field, they are either placed one above another, or face to face, or back to back; and sometimes with an ordinary between them. As for the first of these, I shall give, for instance, the arms of Daunce, in England, or, two lions passant gardant gules, in pale; and the arms of England, gules, three lions passant gardant in pale or. When placed face to face, and rampant, they are said to be combattant; the French say, affronté: For instance, the arms of Wycombe, in England, or, two lions combattant gules.

These of the name of Carter there, sable, two lions combattant or. And These of Sir Jaco Gerard of Langford, in Norfolk, Baronet, azure, two lions rampant gardant combattant argent.

When lions are placed back to back, the English say endorsed. Gerard Leigh gives us an example, azure, two lions rampant, endorsed or; which situation of lions, says he, represents an intended combat between two valiant men, who both meet in the field, but the prince, interposing, orders them to be reconciled; and to go back to back out of the field, so that none of them edes to other: But I neither like the reason, nor the term endorsed, for it is only a proper term to pules and bend, when betwixt two of their own diminutives, pultets and endorses. The French say, more properly, for lions, or any other figures, which have ante and post, face and back, and so placed to one another, as face to face, are said to be affronté, and adorset, when back to back.

The old Ears of Ross, and their descendents, carry pules; three lions rampant, 2 and 1. As for the antiquity of the old Ears of Ross, Sir James Balfour gives us this note out of the abbey of Melrose, that Mackinsargari Comes Rosensis de bellavit rebellios Gallvmidivere, cum eorum duce Thoma, Bastardo Galllvitivae filio Alani Comitis, anno 1235: Whose son was Farquhar Earl of Ross, in the reign of King Alexander II. father of William, who, in the Register of Dunfermline, is designed Comes de Ross, & Justiciarius Scotia; whose son was William Earl of Ross, that was killed at the battle of Bannockburn, 1314, leaving Hugh, his heir and successor, in the Earldom of Ross, which was killed in the battle of Halidonhill, 1333, leaving behind him two sons, William Earl of Ross, and Hugh Ross of Raniches, progenitor of the Rosses of Balnagowan; and two daughters, Euphame Ross, married to Robert Earl of Strathearn, afterwards King of Scotland, by the name of Robert II. She had issue, and was Queen of Scotland; and Janet, married first to Monymusk of Monymusk, and after his death, to Sir Robert Murray of Abercairnie. William Earl of Ross, married Isabel, daughter of Malisius Earl of Orkney and Caithness, and with her had only two daughters. The eldest, Euphame, Countess of Ross, was married to Walter Leslie, who in her right was looked upon as Earl of Ross, and had a son, and a daughter Euphame. Their son, Alexander, was Earl of Ross, as heir to his mother. The second daughter of Earl William, Johanna Ross, was married to Alexander Fraser of Philorth, one of the progenitors of the present Lord Salton. I have seen a principal charter of this Walter Leslie, and his spouse Euphame Countess of Ross, of several lands, some in the shire of Aberdeen, some in the shire of Ross, and some in the shire of Inverness, to their beloved brother and sister, Sir Alexander Fraser, and Johanna Ross, his spouse, in recompensation & satisfactionem terrarum suarum de Ross; which charter is dated at Aberdeen, the 4th of June 1375; and the seal appended thereto was of red wax, upon white, having the impression of an eagle displayed, surmounted with three shields tied together, and holden with a ligament by the beak of the eagle; the shield in the middle, lying on the breast of the eagle, was charged with three lions rampant, 2 and 1, within a double trezure, flowered and counter-flowered with flower-de-luces: It seems the doublestreure has been conferred upon the family of Ross by King Robert II. upon account of his matching with that family: The shield, which lay on the right wing of the eagle, had the arms of Leslie, a bend charged with buckles; and the other shield on the left wing had three garbs: Some years after this, Walter had his seal of arms otherwise marshall'd, viz. quarterly, first and fourth Leslie; second and third Ross; which shield of arms lay also upon the breast of an eagle displayed, in place of a supporter. Walter had with his wife, Euphame Countess of Ross, as before; a son, Alexander, who was Earl; and a daughter, Euphame, married to Donald Lord of the Isles; which Alexander Earl of Ross married Euphame Stewart, daughter to Robert Duke of Albany, Earl of Fife and Montaith. He had with her but only one daughter, Euphame Ross, his heir, who, being deformed in body, and unfit for marriage, did render herself religious; and, by the influence of her grandfather the Duke, resigned the earldom of Ross in favour of his second son, John Earl of Buchan, her uncle, who thereupon used the title of Earl of Ross.

Notwithstanding of this resignation, Donald Lord of the Isles took possession of the earldom, in right of his wife, Euphame Ross, who was lawful heir; upon which controversy the battle of Harlaw fell out: But upon the Restoration of King James I. their son, Alexander Lord of the Isles, was made Earl of Ross. I have seen the seal of arms of this Alexander Earl of Ross, Lord of the Isles, appended to a precept of his, of the date 1437, (which is in the Earl of Home's Charter-Chest) on which seal the shield was coucè, and the arms, quarterly, first a ship with sails striped up, as Lord of the Isles; second, three lions rampant, 2 and 1, for Ross; third, three garbs, for Buchan; fourth, a bend, charged with three buckles, for Leslie: And round all the quarters was the double treasure, flowered and counter-flowered; supporters, two lions; and on the helmet, for crest, an eagle displayed. This Earl Alexander was succeeded by his son John, and was forfeited for treason and rebellion 1476, and the earldom of Ross returned to the crown, in the reign of King James II. and was by that King and his successors conferred upon their younger sons, with the titles of Earl of Ross, who were in use to quarter the arms of Ross, as feudal ones, with their paternal bearings: Of which feudal arms I have described and treated of in my Essay of the Ancient and Modern Use of Armories.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

Ross of Balnagowan, as now the principal family of the name of Ross, carries gules, three lions rampant argent, without the addition of the bordure argent, (used of old) as male representer of the old Earls of Ross; being lineally descended of Hugh Ross of Raniches, son of Hugh Earl of Ross, who was killed in the battle of Hallidonhill: He got from his father the lands of Raniches, as also the lands of Easterallan, from his brother William Earl of Ross, 1357; and these lands were confirmed by a charter of King David II.

Mr George Ross of Morinchie, descended of Balnagowan, gules, three lions rampant, accompanied with as many stars argent; crest, a fox-head couped, proper: motto, Spec asp era levat. New Register.

William Ross of Knockbreck, sometime Bailie of Tain, descended of Balnagowan, gules, a bear's head couped argent, muzzled of the first, between three lions rampant of the second: motto, Time Devum. Lyon Register.

Mr Andrew Ross of Pilkerie, the arms of Balnagowan, within a bordure counter-compone, or and gules: motto, Non opes sed ingenium. Lyon Register.

Malcolm Ross of Kindace, descended of Balnagowan, his arms, within a bordure counter-compone, argent and gules; crest, a fox passant, proper: motto, Cauta non astute. Ibid.

And there Mr Charles Ross, lawful son to William Ross of Kindace, gules, three roses slipped in fesse, betwixt as many lions rampant; 2 and 1 argent; crest, a fox issuing out of the wreath, with a rose in his mouth argent: motto, Rossam ne Rowe.

Fiennes Viscount Say and Seale, azure, three lions rampant or, an ancient baron in England: He was advanced to the title of Viscount by King James I. of Great Britain, 1624.

The paternal bearing of the name of Herbert, parted per pale, azure and gules, three lions rampant argent, carried by Herbert Earl of Pembroke in England.

The name of Hoskins there, parted per pale, azure and gules, a chevron or, betwixt three lions rampant argent.

The English heralds, as Gerard Leigh and Guillim, tell us, when there be more lions in the field than one, they should be called lionceaux, or lioncel, i.e. lions subtexts; because the nature of the lion is such, that it will not suffer another lion in the field with itself; but this rule, say they, admits of two exceptions: First, if any of the ordinaries interpose between them, then they are still called lions; for, by such an interposition of an ordinary, says Leigh, every one of these creatures is reckoned to be of as great dignity as if they were borne separately in different escutcheons; for which cause the ordinaries have the title of worthy partitions; for example, the arms of the Episcopal See of Durham, blazoned azure, a cross or, between four lions rampant argent. The second exception is, that, in all sovereign ensigns, they are blazoned still lions, though three in number, proper dignitatem regiae majestatis, says Guillim; and so those in the arms of England are neither leopards nor lioncel.

The French and Latin heralds do not call lions lionceaux, or leunculi, till they exceed the number three; for three lions, or as many of other creatures, situate in one field, 2 and 1, are looked upon but as one thrice repeated, to beautify the shield of arms. Notwithstanding of this rule.

The arms of the name of Morton, in England, are blazoned or, six lions rampant azure, 3, 2 and 1, by the abovementioned heralds: And Robert Dale, Pursuant, in his Catalogue of the Nobility of England, and the author of the Peerage of that Kingdom, blazon the arms of Savage Earl Rivers, argent, six lions
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

From whole lions I proceed to their parts. And first, of the half forepart of the lion, called demi-lion.

The name of MALLORY, in England, or, a demi-lion rampant gules.

The surname of BENNET, in England, gules, three demi-lions rampant argent.

HENRY BENNET, son of John Benet of Arlington, was, by letters patent, the 14th of May 1663, made Baron of Arlington, and afterwards, Viscount and Earl of Arlington, the 22d of April 1672, carried the foresaid arms with a besant in the centre. His only daughter and heir, Isabella, was married to Henry Fitzroy Duke of Grafton, by whom she had Charles Fitzroy Duke of Grafton; and, upon the death of her father, the Earl of Arlington, she became Countess of Arlington; and, after the death of her first husband, she married Thomas Hanmer, Esq. and, at the Coronation of Queen Anne, (being then the wife of a Commoner) she attended thereon, as Countess of Arlington, by descent; and wore the robes and coronet of a Countess at that solemnity.

CHARLES BENNET, brother of Henry Bennet Earl of Arlington, was created Lord OSSULSTON of Ossulston, in Middlesex, by letters patent, the 24th of November 1683, by King Charles II. gules, a besant between three demi-lions argent, with a muller for his difference.

Demi-lions are often represented as if they were coming forth from one or other of the ordinaries, especially the chief, fesse, and bar, and are said to be either issuant or naisant from them; and these terms are given to all other creatures in the same posture. When a demi-lion is on a chief, he seems to come out of the bottom of the chief, his hinder parts of the body not seen, showing only his head, neck, and shoulders, with his two paws and the end of his tail, as that in the arms of LEALAND, being Barry wavy of four pieces, argent and azure, on a chief or, a lion issuant gules, thus blazoned by CHILLETUS; "Fasci quatuor ex argenteo & ciano undulatim fuse, caput scutii aureum leone cocineo emergente impersum, qui symbolum Hollandicum est." See Plate IV. fig 19.

The name of MELDRUM, of which before, argent, an otter issuing out of a bar waved sable. Plate IV. fig. 13.

The surname of MILLIKEN, argent, three lions gules, issuing out of two bars waved azure, two out of the uppermost, and one out of the undermost. Workman and Pont's Manuscripts.

The Latin, for the term issuant, use generally the word exiens, as Sylvester Petra Suncta, "Leones aliis minores & qui tantummodo extant capite tenus, leones exeuntes vocantur, ficialium decreto, in hac arte rei Tesserariae."

Lions and other beasts naisant show more of their fore parts than those issuant, which come forth from the upper line of the fesse or bar; whereas, these naisant emerge from the middle of the fesse or bar, and show more of their fore parts. The terms issuant and naisant are distinguished by some English heralds, who tell us, when these animals are on a chief, they are called issuant; and, when coming out of a fesse or bar, naisant. Mr Gibbon, in his Introductio ad Latinum Blazoniam, from the identity of the words issuant and naisant, exiens and emergens, and the similitude of the posture of the animals, they may be indifferently said to be issuant or naisant, exiens or emergens; but, for better distinction, to express how much of the animal is seen, it were not amiss, says he, to add also, ad buenarios, ad lumbo, exiens, sive emergens.

I shall here mention again the arms of JOHN Earl of Carrick, eldest son of King Robert II. when his father came to the crown, he, to intimate his right of succession, after his father's death, to the throne to which he succeeded by the name of Robert III. carried or, a demi-lion naisant out of a fesse chequy, azure and argent, as before. Chap. 10. page 48.
Sir James Suttie of Balgone, in East-Lothian, Baronet, carries quarterly, first and fourth, barry wavy of six pieces, azure and or, on a chief of the last, a lion rampant nainsett, with two tails vert, armed and langued gules, for the name of Suttie; second and third argent, a chevron chevènu gules, and of the first, between three hunting-horns sable, garnished of the second, within a bordure of the same, for Sample of Balgone; crest, a ship under sail, all proper: motto, on an escrol above, Mibi lucra pericula; and below, on a compartment, Nothing basard, nothing base.

He is son and heir of Sir George Suttie, Baronet, sometime designed of Addington, thereafter of Balgone, who got these lands with his wife Marion Semple, heiress of Balgone; for which their son, Sir James, quarters the arms of his mother, heir of Balgone, descended of Semple of Blackburn, an ancient family in the shire of Renfrew.

Mr Alexander Long of London, Merchant, or, crasilli, a lion rampant gules, impaled with those of his wife Margaret, descended of the Halls in England, being sable, three battle axes, argent. By the name of Hall; crest, a lion's head erased gules; motto, Tran levos noli timere.

Mr John Long, son of the above Mr Alexander, carries the arms of Hall, as above, with a suitable difference.

McBair of Netherwood, an ancient family in Dumfries-shire, argent, a fesse gules, between three stars in chief, and a lion rampant in base of the last. Ogilvie's Manuscript.

The surname of Chalmers, with us, the principal family, it seems, was designed of that ilk, which had for arms, argent, a demi-lion rampant sable, nainsett of a fesse gules, with a flower-de-luce in base of the last, as by our old books of blazon; and our New Register gives to Monsieur Chalmers, Baron of Tartas, in France, since the year 1661, as descended of the family of Chalmers of that ilk, argent, a demi-lion rampant sable, issuing out of a fesse, and in base, a flower-de-luce, all within a bordure gules; crest, a falcon belled, proper; with the motto, Non precedet victoria. And in the same Register.

Thomas Chalmers, lawful son to James Chalmers, Advocate, lineally descend­ed of a second brother of Chalmers of Ashentrees, who was a son of the family of Chalmers of that ilk, argent, a lion rampant sable, nainsett out of a fesse gules, and in base a flower-de-luce of the third, all within a bordure of the second; crest, a hand holding a pair of scales, proper; with the motto, Lux subi laurus. Lyon Register.

Some will have the name Chalmers to be from the ancient designation, de Cam­era, or from the clan Cameron, who carried or, two bars gules, as by our old books. Sir George Mackenzie, in his Manuscript of Scots Families, says, that one of the name de Camera went to France, and put his name Camera in a latin dress, Camerarius, and in French, de la Chambre; and upon his return to Scotland was called Chalmers; which tradition, says he, seems to be confirmed by the flower-de-luce in base.

There was an ancient family of this name designed of Cults, in the shire of Aberdeen, as in a genealogical tree of that family, illuminated and approved of by Sir Charles Erskine, Lyon King at Arms, whereunto his subscription and seal of arms are fixed, and the subscriptions of two heralds; which begins with Alexander Chalmers of Cults, who married a daughter of Hay Earl of Errol, and carried the principal arms of Chalmers, viz. argent, a demi-lion sable issuing out of a fesse gules, and in base, a flower-de-luce of the last, which are impaled with these of his wife's; and there, the seventh from him in a lineal descent was Alexander Chalmers of Cults, with the above arms; and, for crest, the head and neck of a lion sable, langued gules; with the motto, Avancez, impaled with the arms of his wife, a daughter of Lumisdaine of Cusheine, being azure, on a chevron argent between three stars or, a buckle of the first; crest, a battle-ax erected in pale. Their son William, married Elizabeth, a daughter of Chalmers of Binnie-Craig; whose son was Mr James Chalmers, Parson of Paisley; he married ——— Petrie, sister to Robert Petrie of Portlethen, sometime Provost of Aberdeen, with whom he had Charles Chalmers, Writer to the Signet, and Captain in the Scots Guards, who carried the above arms of Chalmers, as in the above-mentioned genealogical tree, which I have seen in the hands of Roderick Chalmers, herald-painter in Edinburgh, and eldest lawful son of the said Captain Charles Chalmers, and his wife Jean, daughter to Alexander Boog of Burnhouses, in the shire of Berwick. See Plate of Achievements.

But to proceed to the heads of such animals, in armories, which heralds esteem more honourable than their other parts, and next to the bearing of the whole animal, and to represent courage; which heads are either couped or erased; couped, when they are cleanly cut off; erased, as if they were pulled off, leaving the flesh and skin hanging down, which the French call arraché, and the Latins lacer or avulst.

Smeaton, or, a lion's head erased gules, between three papingoes vert. Pont's Manuscript.

The lordship of Badenoch, or, three lions' heads erased gules, quartered in the achievement of the Duke of Gordon.

Monk Duke of Albemarle, gules, a chevron between three lions' heads erased argent; thus blazoned by Imhoff, " In scuto coccineo cantherrum argentem, cinctum tribus capitibus leonum avulis, & codem metallo tinetis."

The ancient family of Scott of Balwearie, in Fife, argent, three lions' heads erased gules, langued azure. As for the antiquity of the name, there is to be met with Ubertredus filius Scott, witness in a charter of King David I. to the abbacy of Selkirk; and Robertus Scottus, a few years after, is witness in the charter of Robert Bishop of St Andrews, to the abbacy of Holyroodhouse; and, in the register of Kelsi, Ricardus Scottus is to be found in the reign of Alexander II.; and, in the reign of Alexander III. Michael Scott of Balwearie, and of Scots-Craig in Fife, after the death of that king, was sent Ambassador by the estates of Scotland to the King of Norway, and is aftermentioned as one of the barons convened at Berwick, by Edward I. of England, in the year 1292; Williamus Scottus is witness in a charter of Walter II. Senescallius Scotiio to the abbacy of Paisley; (see Sir James Dalrymple's Historical Collections, page 412, who says) perhaps was predecessor of the Scotts of Murdston in Clydesdale, who excambed these lands for Branxholm, in the shire of Roxburgh, from whom the Scotts of Buccleugh, of whom before. William Scott of Balwearie was taken prisoner at the battle of Flodden. He sold several lands to pay his ransom, and the family continued till the reign of King Charles I.

Scott of Abbotshall in Fife, also now extinct, who was a cadet of Balweary, carried argent, a pheon azure between three lions' heads erased, gules. Pont's Manuscript.

Sir John Scott of Ancrum, Baronet, argent, three lions' heads erased, gules, being eldest lawful son to Patrick Scott of Langshaw, who was grandson to Andrew Scott of Glendoe, in the sheriffdom of Perth, descended of a younger son of Scott of Balwearie, as by the records of our Lyon Office, and has the arms of Balwearie; crest, a lion's head erased gules, and the same are to be seen 40 years ago, painted or cut on stone, supported with two greyhounds, on the house of Vogrie, which formerly belonged to this family. See Plate of Achievements.

Pentland of that ilk, argent, a fesse azure between three lions' heads erased in chief, and as many crescents in base gules, Balfour's Manuscript.

Buchan of Achmacoy, argent, three lions' heads erased, gules. Crawford's Manuscript. Some of the name of Buchan place a garb in the centre, as originally descended from the Cumins of Buchan.

The surname of Fairholme, designed of that ilk, or, a fesse azure between three lions' heads erased gules. Ibid.

The name of Farmer in England, argent, a fesse sable between three lions' heads erased gules, an ancient family in Oxfordshire. Sir William Farmer served King Charles I. in his troubles with unshaken loyalty and honour; whose son was Lord Lempster.

Richardson in England, argent, on a chief sable, three lions' heads erased of the first, by Sir Thomas Richardson, Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in England; who being married to dame Elizabeth Beaumont, King Charles I. was pleased to advance her to the dignity of Baroness of Crannond, to her and Sir Thomas's heirs-male, by letters patent, 28th of February 1628, which, I think, is the only female creation to be found with us. Their arms carried, quarterly, first and fourth, argent, on a chief sable, three lions' heads erased of the first, for Richardson; second and third, ermine on a canton azure, a St Andrew's cross argent, as a coat of augmentation; on a ducal crown, in place of a wreath, an unicorn's head couped ermine, horned or, for a crest; and, for supporters, two horses maned or, hooved sable; with the motto, Virtute acquiritur bonus.

When a lion's head (without the neck) and the full face is only seen, then it is blazoned a leopard's head or face.

I have seen the seal of arms of one John Leper, Burgess in Edinburgh, appended to an assignation of 10 marks, payable out of the lands of Dundas, dated the 1st of September 1189, whereupon was a shield with a chevron between three leopards' heads, as equivoically relative to the name; and round the seal were these words, Sig. Johannis Leper Burgen. Burgi de Edinburgb; and was so dignified in the body of the assignation, which is yet to be seen in the custody of the Lairds of Dundas. And in our old records of arms, the name of Liberton bears azure, a leopard's head erased or. Plate XI. fig. 9

The name of McGhee, three leopards' heads argent. The principal family of the name is designed of Balmaghe, who makes the heads or.

The name of Wentworth in England, sable, a chevron between three leopards' faces or.

There are many families in England that carry leopards' heads or faces, as they promiscuously call them, and some have them with flower-de-luces issuing out of the top of the head and mouth, which they blazon thus, sable, a leopard's head argent, jessant a flower-de-luce or, by the name of Morley of Halhaker, in Sussex, and the Episcopal See of Hereford in England, gules, three leopards' heads jessant, and as many flower-de-luces or.

Lions' paws and tails are frequently used as armorial figures in England, being either erased or couped, and situate as other figures, 2 and 1, or after the position of the ordinaries.

The name of Usher there, sable, three lions' paws couped and erect, 2 and 1 argent.

The name of Frampton there, sable, two lions' paws chevron-ways argent.

So much then for the terms in blazon given to the lion and his parts: I proceed to the next reputed animal for honour, the unicorn and his proper terms in armories.

OF THE UNICORN.

So named from one horn which grows out of his forehead; he is of great esteem, as well for his virtue as strength. In his horn the naturalists place a powerful antidote against poison, and tell us that the wild beasts seek to drink in the waters after the unicorn has stirred them with his horn; he is remarkable for his strength, but more for his great and haughty mind, who would rather die than be brought to subjection; for which see Job. 39th chap. Hopingius, de Jure Insignium, cap. 5, says, "Monoceros Unicornis a recentioribus nominatur, nusquam vivus captur;
"ita quaque miles mortem contemnens nunquam potest in servitutem cogi; est
"hieroglyphicam militis, & rei militis." Upon these considerations and others, the unicorn is frequently represented in devices and armories, especially by our nation, as a supporter of the sovereign ensign, to show its unconquered and indedent sovereignty; and, as being part of the achievement of Scotland, has been grantced by our kings to some of their well-deserving subjects, as an additament of ho-bour to their armorial bearings; and by others assumed upon the account of its noble qualities.

The postures of the unicorn in arms are much the same with those of the lion, as, to be erected, passant, and sejant; when the unicorn is erected, the English say, salient; the French, effrayé; and the Latins, insilens or erectus.

Hay Earl of Kinnoch, for a coat of augmentation, has an unicorn salient argent, within a bordure or, charged with eight half thistles, and as many half roses, gules, conjoined, pale-ways in the first quarter before his paternal coat; of which before.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

Ker of Samuelston, an old family with us, now extinct, carried argent, an unicorn salient sablé, horned or. Pont's Manuscript.

The other considerable families of the name of Ker carry unicorns' heads; of which before.

When the lion, unicorn, and other animals are carried looking to the left side of the shield, they are then said to be contourné, as in the bearing of Gaelsen in Stira; gules, an unicorn contourné, argent; unguled, horned, and crowned or; as Sylvester Petra Sancta, "Argenteus monoceros venus levam incitaturn, cum ungulis, cornu, coronaque inauratis in punicea pammula." Many families in Germany carry the unicorn in their arms, as our author, who gives several examples; to which I refer the curious.

When the unicorn is represented passant, and lifting up his fore right foot, he is then said to be tripping, as in the arms of Musterton in England, gules, an unicorn tripping, argent, armed or. Plate XI. fig. 10.

Sylvester Petra Sancta takes notice of this blazon in his book, and says, "Argenteus monoceros gradiens, in muricata pammula; cum auro in ungulis & cornu, est Mustertomorum in Anglia."

The seal of arms of the town of Jedburgh in Teviotdale, azure, an unicorn tripping argent; unguled, maned, and horned, or. When the unicorn stands on his four feet, with his head down and his horn straight out, he is then said to be in defence; and in this posture he may be said to be feeding, as in the arms of Crairi in Rome, given us by Sylvester Petra Sancta, azure, on a green mount in base, an unicorn feeding, argent; and in chief a comet or.

They are carried also running, and sometimes more than two, as in the arms of Farington in England, sable, three unicorns in pale, courant argent, armed or. Art. Her.

When sitting, he is said to be seiant, and by the Latins asidens, as in the bearing of Harling in England, argent, an unicorn seiant, sable, armed or. Art. Her.

The unicorn seiant is so placed on the tops of several market-crosses in Scotland, as on that of Edinburgh, holding the banner of the kingdom, as fig. 11.

Unicorns' heads, couped or erased, are frequent in armories, as by the ancient name of Preston with us, assumed first from the barony of Preston in the shire of Edinburgh. There were several barons of this name who were summoned to Berwick when the controversy ran between the Bruce and the Baliol, as in Pynne's Collections of the Scots Barons, Nicol de Preston, William de Preston, tenuent le Roi du Comte de Edinb. p. 656.

In the reign of King Robert the Bruce, Edward Preston is witness in a charter of King Robert I. confirming a deed of Robert Blackburn to John Renton of Billie, which I have seen. John Preston, miles, is witness in a charter of King David the Bruce. Our historians give us an account of Sir Laurence Preston, who, with William Keith and Robert Gordon, defeated the English under the command of General Talbot, and took him prisoner. In the reign of that King there was a family of the name, designed of Gourton, which lands were afterwards called Preston, and afterwards the family was designed of that Ilk, and sometimes of Craigmiller, which was the principal seat of the family near Edinburgh. On the inner-gate of the castle of Craigmiller are their arms to be seen, cut on an old stone, within a shield coubé, three unicorns' heads couped, (in paintings, argent, three unicorns' heads couped sable) supported by two lions; and for crest, an unicorn's head issuing out of a coronet in place of a wreath: motto, Prasto ut Pretsem. Below on the stone is the year of God 1427.

Preston Lord Dingwall carried the same arms with Craigmiller; with this motto, Pour bien fort; so illuminated in Workman's Heraldry.

Sir Robert Preston of that Ilk, argent, three unicorn's heads erased sable; crest, an angel, proper: motto, Prasto ut prestem. New Register.

Preston of Whitehill, sometime designed of Cousland, descended of Andrew Preston, a second son of Sir Simon Preston of Craigmiller, carried the above arms of Preston of Craigmiller, with a brotherly difference. I have seen the seal of arms of Mr John Preston, a younger son of Whitehill, appended to a charter of his, of a tenement of land in Fisherton, to Elizabeth Preston, of the date 1546, in which he is designed Magister & Praeceptor capitalis capelli Domine Magdalena; on the seal were three unicorns' heads couped within a bordure ingrailed.

Preston of Formartin, argent, three unicorns' heads erased sable; which family ended in an heiress, married to one of the progenitors of Forbes of Tolquhon, who now quarter these arms with their own, as other families who have matched with heiresses of that name of old, as Stewart of Galsington, and Stewart of Dalswinton, accompany their fesse chequers with three unicorn's heads erased sable, for Preston. Several families in England carry unicorn's heads, as the name of Shelly, gules, three unicorn's heads couped argent.

OF THE HORSE.

The horse, for his commendable and useful qualities, long before the use of armories, was, with the Romans, a sign of honour, proper to those of the equestrian order; and from it came the titles of honour, eques, chevalier, and ridder with the Germans, for a Knight.

In arms, his posture is to be erected with his head in profile, as Sylvester Petra Sancta observes, p. 371, "Ut ad equum veniam generosum quidem, hadum tamen "ferum, is modo effrancis, & modo frenum patiens figuratur, unoque tantum "oculo intuens exprimitur semper, quemadmodum & leo; sed & quandoque "graditur, quandoque incedere aut procurrere videtur."

When the horse is erected, the English say salient; the French cabré or effrayé; the Latinis surrectus; and he is sometimes carried passant or courant, without bridle or saddle; and, when with them, he is said to be bridled, equipt, or furnished; being of such tinctures different from the colour of the horse.

The horse has been anciently borne in arms, as by Hengist, the founder of the Saxon race, who had a horse erect, which his name did signify. His successors continued the same, in the Saxon language, called phalon, which gave name to the countries of East, and West-Phalia, as Beckmanus in his Notitia Dignitatum Imp. p. 176. "Equum generositas commendat, & Witkindus Saxo, infracti animi prin-

"ceps, insigne ejus constanter circumvult, unde & Ostphalorum & Westphali"orum nomen enatum."

Westphalia, gules, a horse salient, argent. Many princes in Germany carry the horse salient, to show their descent from Saxony, as does the Duke of Savoy carry, in the second quarter of his achievement, gules, a horse cabré and courant, argent; for ancient Sax, parti, with modern Sax, barry of eight pieces or and sable, surmounted of a crancelin, (a crown) bend-ways sinople.

With us the name of Tory, as equivocally relative to the name, argent, a horse passant, proper, furnished gules; so said when a horse is bridled and saddled; and when with other furniture, as caparisons, he is said to be equipt. There was a family of this name designed of Tory (of that ilk), in the shire of Dumfries, who was forfeit in the reign of King James III. as in a charter of these lands granted by that King, to Thomas Carruthers, of the lands and church of Tory, and other lands, "que ad Georgium Tory de eodem, nostrum felenem & probitorem peritinerunt, ratione ejus forfuitur." (Haddington's Collections.)

The name of Trotter, as in Workman's Manuscript of Blazons, argent, a horse trotting, table; furnished, gules, on a mount in base, vert; and in chief, a star of the third. These of that name give other arms, of which afterwards, and carry a horse for their crest.

Horsburgh of that ilk, an ancient family in the shire of Tweeddale, azure, a horse-head couped argent; and of late, by marrying the heiress of Tait of Pirn, quarters the arms of that family with their own; being argent, a saltier ingrailed, and a chief gules; crest, a horse-head; motto, Egre de tramite recto. As in Plate of Achievements.

The name of Cassford, parted per fesse, gules and argent; on the first, a cross argent; and on the second, a horse-head couped sable. Workman's Manuscript.

The surname of Courser or Corser gives for arms relative to the name, argent, three coursers, (i.e. running horses) heads couped, sable; bridled of the first. Balfour's Manuscript.
And to show their nature, Mr John Corser, writer in Edinburgh, carries the same; and for crest, a pegasus; with the motto, Recto cursu.

The name of Marsh in England, gules, a horse-head couped argent. (Art. Her.)

When a horse's neck, shoulders, and fore. feet are seen, then he is blazoned a demi-horse, as before of the lion, and to be issuant or naissants.

I may here mention the sagittary, half man and half horse, drawing a bow to let fly an arrow; which some say King Stephen of England carried of gold, in a red field, for his arms; but others, with more reason, tell us, he carried, for arms, as his predecessors Kings of England, and assumed this sagittary only for his device, because his entry to the throne was when the sun was then in the celestial sign Sagittarius.

The Ars, (colin Martii Victor Cadebat) is the emblem of patience. Hopingius de jure Insignium, cap. 9, p. 612. "Asinus, hominis sapientis, laboriosi, frugalis, "omnisque boni, etiam in insignium areis hieroglyphicum est, ut in Scitis Ger-

"manorum manifestum est;" his posture is always passant, and from this beast and the horse cometh the mule.

The name of Askew in England, argent, a fesse between three asses passant, sable.

The name of Moyle there, as relative to the name, gules, a mule passant, argent.

OF THE BOAR AND HIS PARTS IN ARMORIES.

The Boar, say the naturalists and heralds, is a champion among other wild beasts, and encounters his enemy with a noble courage; and, in order to battle, he is said to whet and sharpen his tusks; Guillim says the same; he betokeneth a man of a bold spirit, skilful and politic in warlike feats, called in Latin, _aper_, _ab_ asperitate; by the French, _sanglier_; his posture in armories, is passant and rampant; when his tusks are of a different tincture from his body, they say then, he is _armed_ of such a tincture; the French say _defendu_; and when his eyes are sparkling and red, allumé; Monsieur Baron in his _L'Art Heraldique_, says, "Sanglier est passant "ou courant, quelquefois rampant, pour exprimer l'œuf de ses broches, on dit "defendu, et celui de ses yeux, allumé."

The ancient surname of Baird carried gules, a boar passant, or, as relative to the name. In the reign of Alexander III. Robert, son of Waldemar de Biggar, grants a charter to Richard Baird of Meikle and Little-Kyp. (Dalrymple's Collections, p. 397.) There is a charter of King Robert I. (Haddington's Collections) of the barony of Cambusnethan to Robert Baird. Baird of Carnwath, with other three or four barons of that name, being convicted of a conspiracy against King Robert the Bruce, in the Parliament held at Perth, were forfeited and put to death therefore.

Baird of Auchmedden, in the shire of Banff, now the principal family of the name, who has been, for several generations, appointed, by our Kings, principal Sheriffs of that shire, till of late, carries gules, a boar passant, or; crest, a griffin's head erased, proper: motto, Dominus fecit; so matriculated by Sir John Baird, Knight, in our New Register; and sometimes for motto, _Vi & Virtute_, as in Plate of Achievements.

Sir John Baird of Newbyth, descended of a younger son of Auchmedden, _gules_, a _sanglier passant_, or; and for difference, a canton _ermine_, charged with a sword pale-ways, proper; crest, a boar's head erased _or_; motto, _Vi & Virtute_. See Plate of Achievements.

His brother, Sir Robert Baird of Saughtonhall, being both Knights Baronets, carries the same, with a crescent surmounting the sword for his difference; _ibid_. And as baronets, they may carry the badge of that dignity, either by way of canton or escutcheon, as others of that degree.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

Which Sir John Baird of Newbyth, sometime one of the Senators of the College of Justice, was son and heir of Mr James Baird, a younger son of Baird of Auchmedden, who, as an Advocate and one of the Commissaries of Edinburgh, married Bathia, a daughter of Dempster of Pitliver, by whom he had the above Sir John and Sir Robert. Which Sir John of Newbyth married Margaret, daughter to William Hay of Linplom, second son to James Lord Yester, and brother to John, first Earl of Tweeddale. By her he had the present Sir William Baird of Newbyth, who married first Helen, daughter to Sir John Gilmour of Craigmillar, sometime President of the Session; by whom he hath John, married to Janet, daughter of Sir David Dalrymple, Advocate. Secondly, Sir William married Margaret, daughter to the Lord Sinclair.

The boar's head, with all nations, is very much used as an armorial figure; and especially in Scotland, by many ancient families in different shires through the kingdom.

I shall begin with the ancient families, in the shire of Berwick, of the surnames of Gordon, Nisbet, Swinton, Redpath, and Dunse, so named by their baronies, which lie contiguous in that shire, from which their different surnames were taken; and who all carry three boars' heads of different tinctures; by which it seems that the tradition is probable that they were originally of one stock and gens, and afterwards became the heads of families of different surnames; their antiquity appears in the charters of our ancient Kings, Edgar, Alexander, and David, the sons of King Malcolm Canmore, to the church of Durham, and abbacy of Coldingham, where they are not only witnesses, but, by their own deeds and charters, are donors to these churches, which are to be found in the Treasury of Durham, and other repositories and chartularies with us, of whom I shall speak a little separately, and of their armorial bearings.

Gordon of that Ilk, assure, three boars' heads couped or; the surname is from the lands which they possessed in the shire of Berwick, of which there were several eminent men. Edmond Hove, in his History of England, p. 163. says, Bertram de Gordon wounded to death Richard I. King of England, at the siege of the castle of Chalne in Aquitaine, in the year 1190. Ricardus de Gordon, by the registers of the abbacy of Kelso, about the year 1267, gives some lands in villa sua de Gordon to that abbacy; and there, Thomas de Gordon, jun. as another donor, is mentioned, with his daughter Alicia Gordon, wife to Adam de Gordon, a kinsman of the family, father and mother of another Adam Gordon, who confirms all these donations made to Kelso (which are to be seen in the chartulary of that abbacy) by Richard, Thomas, and Adam Gordon, his progenitors. He lived in the year 1308, and was a zealous asserter of the independency and freedom of his native country, and stood firm for King Robert the Bruce. In consideration of his good service, he got from that king the lordship of Strathbogie in Aberdeenshire, which was then in the crown, by the forfeiture of David de Strathbogie. He married Annabel, but whether she was the daughter of Strathbogie, as some say, I know not. His son and heir was Sir Alexander de Gordon, father of Sir John Gordon, who, by a charter of King Robert II. had all his lands erected into an entire barony of Strathbogie. He was succeeded by Sir Adam his son, slain at the battle of Homildon 1402, leaving issue by Elizabeth his wife, daughter to the Lord Keith, only a daughter, Elizabeth, his heir. She was married to Sir Alexander Seaton, second son to Sir William Seaton of that Ilk, to whom Robert Duke of Albany, in the third year of his government, gives a charter of confirmation of the lands and baronies of Gordon and Hambly in the shire of Berwick, and of Strathbogie and other lands in the shire of Aberdeen. She bore to him Alexander Seaton, who succeeded, and William Seaton, the first of the Seatons of Meldrum. Of whom before.

Which Alexander Seaton, by some designed Lord Gordon, carried, for arms, quarterly, first and fourth Seaton, second and third Gordon, as before, still keeping the surname of Seaton. He married three wives: First, Honora Keith, daughter and heiress of Robert Keith, grandson of Sir William Keith, Marischal of Scotland, and his wife Honora, heiress of the Lord Fraser, but with her had no issue; notwithstanding, the family of Gordon has been in use to marshal the arms of Fraser with their own, as I have observed elsewhere in my Essay of the Ancient and Modern Use of Armories, at the title of Feudal Arms: Secondly, Alexander married Giles Hay, daughter and heiress of John Hay, Baron of Tullibody, Touch and Enzie; by whom he had Sir Alexander Seaton, first of the family of Touch in Stirlingshire, of whom before: And for his third wife, he had Margaret, daughter of William Lord Crichton, Chancellor of Scotland, and by her had George his successor. He, for his special service performed to King James II. in his minority, was, by that King, in the year 1449, created Earl of Huntly; and for the notable defeat this earl gave to my Lord Crawford, then in rebellion at Brecchlin, on the 15th of May 1433, he got in reward from King James II. the sheriffship of Inverness, with divers other manors and lordships, as that of Badenoch, for which the family has been in use to place in a quarter of their arms those of the lordship of Badenoch.

George succeeded his father, and was second Earl of Huntly: He assumed the surname of Gordon, and placed the arms of that name in the first quarter, and those of Seaton in the third quarter; as by the following blazon:

George, the sixth Earl of Huntly, in a lineal descent, was, by the favour of King James VI. advanced to the dignity of Marquis of Huntly; and his great-grandson, George Marquis of Huntly, was, by King Charles II. honoured with the dignity and title of Duke of Gordon, the 1st of November 1684, and was, by King James VII. made one of the Knights of the most ancient Order of the Thistle. He married Elizabeth Howard, daughter of Henry Duke of Norfolk, by whom he had Alexander the present Duke of Gordon. The achievement of the family is, quarterly, first Gordon, azure, three boars' heads couped or; second or, three lions' heads erased gules, langued azure, as Lord of Badenoch; third the paternal coat of Seaton, as descended of the family; fourth azure, three cinquefoils argent, for Fraser: Which arms, in the late duke's time, were surrounded with the collar of the most ancient Order of the Thistle, timbred with crown, helmet, and valets, suitable to his Grace's quality; crest, a buck's head couped, proper, attired or; motto, Byland; supporters, two deer-hounds, proper, collared gules, and charged with three buckles or.

The honourable branches of this family are Gordon Earl of Aboyne. The first of this House was Charles Gordon, a younger son of George, second Marquis of Huntly, by his lady, Anne Campbell, daughter of Archibald Earl of Argyle; who, for his loyalty, was, by King Charles II. dignified with the title of Earl of Aboyne, 10th of September 1661. He died 1680, leaving issue, by Elizabeth, his wife, daughter of John Earl of Strathmore, Charles, his successor; who married Elizabeth, daughter of Patrick Earl of Strathmore, his cousin-german: And their son is the present Charles Earl of Aboyne, whose achievement is, azure, a chevron between three boars' heads couped, within a double tressure, flowered with flower-de-luces within, and adorned with crescents without or, for Seaton; crest, a demi-lion rampant azure; supporters, two men armed at all parts, holding each a halberd in his hand, proper: motto, Stant eetera tigaro.

The Right Honourable George Gordon Earl of Aberdeen, Viscount of Forfar, Lord Haddo, &c. descended of Gordon, an ancient family of that name in Aberdeenshire. He was dignified with the above titles of honour, 30th of November 1682; his arms, azure, three boars' heads couped, within a double tressure, flowered and counter-flowered with thistles, roses, and flower-de-luces or; crest, two arms from the shoulder naked, holding a bow, proper, to let an arrow fly: motto, Fortuna sequatur; supported on the dexter by a man representing one of the Senators of the College of Justice in robes, proper, and, on the sinister, by a Minister of State, in his robes also. He was President of the College of Justice, and thereafter High Chancellor of Scotland.

Gordon of Abergedie, descended of the Earl of Huntly, carried that Earl's arms; quartered with a mullet for difference, by Mr Pont's Blazons; but, by our New Register, all within a bordure quartered, argent and gules.

Robert Gordon of Pitlurg, the paternal coat of Gordon, within a bordure or; crest, a dove, proper: motto, I hope. Ibid.

James Gordon of Rothiemay, azure, a saltier between three boars' heads couped or. Ibid.
Gordon of Glenbucket, descended of Rothiemay, azure, a cheveron between three boars' heads erased or, all within a bordure counter-componed of the second and first; crest, a boar's head couped and erecte, surrounded with an adder, disposed orie-ways: motto, Victrix patientia. Ibid.

Sir William Gordon of Lesmoir, Baronet, azure, a fesse chequy argent, and of the first, between three boars' heads erased or; crest, a hart's head couped, proper; supported on the Dexter by a naked man, and on the sinister by a Griffin, proper: motto, Bydand. Lyon Register. And there, George Gordon of Rothiemay, whose grandfather was a son of the family of Lesmoir, the same with Lesmoir, all within a bordure nebuly or; crest, issuing out of the wreath a man presenting a gun, all proper: motto, Vpl pax vel bellum.

Sir John Gordon of Park, azure, a dexter hand vambraced, grasping a sword erected in pale, proper, hilted and pommelled or; betwixt three boars' heads couped of the third; langued gules; crest, a sinister gauntlet, proper: motto, Sic tutus. Ibid.

Sir Adam Gordon of Dalpholly, descended of Huntly, carries the quartered coat of Huntly, now Duke of Gordon, and has the boars' heads crowned argent, all within a bordure nebuly gules; crest, a dexter hand issuing from a heart, holding a flaming sword, proper: motto, With heart and hand. Ibid.

George Gordon of Edinglassie, second brother to Gordon of Park, azure, a cross moline, between three boars' heads erased or; crest, a boar's head erased, holding in his mouth a sword, proper: motto, Aut morts aut vita Deus. Ibid.

Mr Patrick Gordon of Glastirim, descended of a second son of the family of Huntly, quarterly, first and fourth azure, a cinquefoil argent, betwixt three boars' heads couped or; second and third Seaton; crest, a lion's head erased, and langued, proper: motto, Divisa conjunx. Ibid.

Captain Patrick Gordon of Tauchie, azure, a sheaf of arrows in the centre between three boars' heads couped or; motto, Ever faithful. Ibid.

William Gordon of Newark, azure, a billet argent in the centre betwixt three boars' heads couped or; crest, a crescent argent: motto, Gradatim plena. Ibid.

John Gordon of Knockspeck, azure, a pheon betwixt three boars' heads erased or; crest, a stag's head, proper, attired or: motto, Dum vigilo tutus. Ibid.

George Gordon of Badenscoth, descended of Lesmoir, bears as Lesmoir, within a bordure indented or; crest, a hart's head cabossed, proper: motto, Still bydand. Ibid.

John Gordon of Auchanassic, whose grandfather was a second son of the family of Lesmoir, azure, a fesse chequy argent, and, of the first, between three boars' heads erased in chief, and as many mullets in base or; crest, a hart's head cabossed, proper: motto, Bydand. Ibid.

Alexander Gordon of Birkenburn, descended of Lesmoir, the first cadet of that family, carries as Lesmoir, within a bordure argent; crest, a hart's head couped, proper, charged with a crescent argent: motto, Bydand. Ibid.

James Gordon of Terpersy, descended of Lesmoir, azure, a lion passant gardant argent, betwixt three boars' heads erased or; crest, a hart standing at a gage, proper: motto, Non fraude sed laude. Ibid.

John Gordon of Letterfury, descended of a fourth son of the family of Huntly, the quartered arms of Huntly, all within a bordure indented argent; crest, a stag at a gage, proper: motto, Dum sisto vigilo. Ibid.

Patrick Gordon of Nethermuir, descended of the family of Haddo, now Earl of Aberdeen, azure, three boars' heads couped or, within a bordure parted per fesse, argent and or; crest, a dexter hand issuing out of a cloud, and throwing a dart, all proper: motto, Majores sequor. Ibid. See Plate of Achievements.

Gordon of Dauch, azure, three boars' heads couped or, a pillar in the centre, with the letter Tau, argent. Ibid.

Mr Robert Gordon, brother to Dauch, bears the same, with a crescent for difference. Ibid.

John Gordon of Avachie, azure, on a cheveron, between three boars' heads couped or, a hand grasping a sheaf of arrows, proper: motto, Byd and together. Ibid.
Gordon of Craig, an old family, of which, in the year 1672, Francis Gordon of Craig had his arms recorded in the Lyon Register thus, azure, three boars' heads erased or; and, in the centre, a shield of pretence of the first, charged with as many cross pates of the second, within a bordure argent, for Barclay of Towie; crest, a boar's head as the former: motto, Byde.

Gordon of Cocklarochie, descended of Craig, carried the arms of Gordon, with a suitable difference, of which family George Gordon of Cocklarochie, by his wife Grissel, a daughter of Seaton of Pitmedden, had two sons; the eldest, Alexander Gordon of Auchintout, sometime one of the Senators of the College of Justice, whose eldest son and heir is Major-General Alexander Gordon of Auchintout: Cocklarochie's second son is James Gordon of Ardmeil, who married one of the co-heiresses of Meldrum of Leathers, and has issue; carries, quarterly, first and fourth azure, three boars' heads erased or, within a bordure of the last, charged with eight crescents gules, as his paternal coat, second and third azure, a demi-otter issuing out of a bar waved sable, for Meldrum; crest, a boar's head erased or: motto, Byde. As in the Lyon Register and Plate of Achievements.

Gordon Viscount of Kenmure, a principal family of the name in the south-west of Scotland, in the shire of Galloway, originally from Gordon in the shire of Berwick, from whence the name. I have seen a charter of King Robert the I. Adam de Gordon, villii, and to his son William and his heirs, of the lands of Stitche; in the 12th year of his reign, confirming a former charter of Thomas Randolph Earl of Murray, of these lands of Stitchel, to the above Adam and his son William. Sir James Dalrymple, in his Scots Collections, page 415, tells that he has seen a writ of William de Gordon, Seignior de Stitchel, of the date 1337. One of the family of Gordon of Stitchel got the lands of Lochinvar in Galloway, and from these, for a long time, were designed Gordons of Lochinvar. In the reign of King James III. John Gordon of Lochinvar got several charters of his lands from that King, and from King James the IV. also, as in our public registers. He was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir Alexander Gordon of Lochinvar, who was killed at the battle of Flodden, without issue; and he was succeeded by his brother Sir Robert, whose son and successor, James, was killed at the battle of Pinkie, 15th September 1547, leaving issue his son and successor Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar, who married Elizabeth, a daughter of John Lord Herries; by her he had Sir Robert his successor; and John Gordon of Muirfod, afterwards designed of Penningham. Sir Robert married a daughter of William Earl of Gowrie, and by her he had Sir John his successor, whose arms are illuminated on the House of Falkland, 1624. And in our old books of blazon, as that of Mr Pont's, azure, a bend between three boars' heads couped or.

Which Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar, eldest son of Sir Robert Gordon of Lochinvar, was by King Charles the I. created Viscount of Kenmure, and Lord Lochinvar, 8th of May 1633. He was succeeded in these honours by his son John, second Viscount, but he dying without issue, the title came to John Gordon his cousin-german, who dying unmarried, Robert his brother was heir to him; and he dying also without issue, 1663, the estate and honours devolved to Alexander Gordon of Penningham, the next heir-male, father of William late Viscount of Kenmure, who carried for his achievement, azure, three boars' heads erased or, armed and langued gules, supported by two savages, wreathed about the head and middle with laurel, holding batons in their hands, all proper; and for crest, a demi-savage in the same dress: motto, Dread God. The cadets of this family are,

Gordon of Craiglaw, who carries the same with Lochinvar, as before, with the addition of a label of three points in chief argent. The first of this family was William Gordon, son of John Gordon of Lochinvar, who purchased the lands of Craighlaw from Adam Muir proprietor thereof, in the year 1498; and, in the year 1503, he gave them to his son William, whom he begot on his lady Elizabeth Lindsay, as by the charter which I have seen in the hands of Craiglaw. This William Gordon of Craiglaw married Janet, daughter of Baillie of Lamington; and their son and successor, John Gordon of Craiglaw, married a daughter of Pringle of Galashielis, and from them is lineally descended the present James Gordon of Craiglaw.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

Roger Gordon of Troquhan, descended of a second son of Sir John Gordon of Stitchel, after designed of Lochinvar, and his lady, a daughter of Dougal Maclellan of Troquhan, from whom they had the lands of Troquhan, azuré, a bend, betwixt three boar's heads couped or, all within a bordure of the same; crest, a savage-head erased, proper: motto, Fear God. Lyon Register.

Gordon of Earlston, another branch of the family of Lochinvar; the eldest seal of arms which I have seen of this family had only three boars' heads, with their necks pendant and erased, as in the Plate of Achievements, and the legend round the shield, Sigillum baronis barontie de Earlston; but since the year 1601, the arms of the family are matriculated in the Lyon Register, azuré, a besant or, betwixt three boars' heads erased of the second; and, for crest, a dexter hand issuing out of a wreath, grasping a shibble, proper: motto, Dread God. This family was first designed of Airds; Alexander Gordon of Airds married Margaret, eldest daughter of John Sinclair of Earlston, and his wife Janet, daughter to George Gordon of Troquhan; by which marriage his issue got the lands of Earlston, which the Sinclairs of Earlston, descended of a younger son of Sir John Sinclair of Herdmanston, purchased from Patrick Hepburn Lord Hailes, about the year 1472, as appears by the evidents in the hands of the present Earlston.

John succeeded his father Alexander; he married Elizabeth, heiress of John Gordon of Black, whose son was John, and he again was succeeded by his son Alexander Gordon of Earlston, who was a Member of Parliament for the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright; he died in the year 1643, leaving issue, by his wife Elizabeth, daughter to John Gordon of Mūrfad, after Viscount Kenmure. His eldest son and successor, William Gordon of Earlston, married Mary, daughter of Sir John Hope of Craigall, Lord of Session, and his lady, a daughter of Sir Archibald Murray of Blackbarony. He died in the year 1679, leaving behind him several children, Alexander, his eldest son who succeeded, and his second son Sir William Gordon of Aiton, a Lieutenant-Colonel in the army, who was made a Knight Baronet, by letters patent, of the date 15th of July 1726; which dignity was to pass to the heirs-male of his own body; and which failing, to Alexander Gordon of Earlston, his elder brother; he married Mary, the eldest of the daughters and co-heirs of Sir George Campbell of Cessnock: but dying without issue in the year 1719, the dignity of Baronet came to his brother, Sir Alexander, and his heirs, as by the patent abovementioned; which Sir Alexander Gordon, now of Earlston, in the year 1676, married, first, Janet, daughter to Sir Thomas Hamilton, and his lady, Ann, daughter and heir of Sir John Hamilton of Preston, with whom he had four sons and two daughters; and secondly, he married Marion, second daughter to Alexander Gordon Viscount of Kenmure, by whom he has also issue. Thomas, the eldest son of the first marriage, and apparent heir of Earlston, married Ann Boick, daughter, and heir of William Boick, Merchant in Edinburgh, with whom he has issue.

Nathaniel Gordon of Carleton, son of David Gordon, a younger son of John Gordon of Earlston, carries the abovementioned arms of Earlston with a suitable difference.

William Gordon of Sherm, descended of the family of Lochinvar, azuré, a bend betwixt three boar's heads erased, or; crest, a demi-savage holding in his right hand a batton erect on his shoulder, and in his left, an ear of wheat, proper: motto, Tam pace quam praedio. Ibid.

William Gordon of Dengeuch, descended of Lochinvar, azuré, a bend inegrailéd betwixt three boar's heads erased or; crest, an hand holding a batton erect, proper: motto, Manea non fugio. Ibid.

John Gordon of Cardines, descended of Gordon of Lochinvar, azuré, a bend betwixt three boar's heads couped or; his only daughter and heir, Elizabeth Gordon, was married to Mr William Stewart, third son to James Earl of Galloway, and his lady Nicolas Grierson, a daughter of Lag; with his wife he got the estate of Castle-Stewart, being grand-daughter to Colonel William Stewart of Castle-Stewart, another branch of the family of Galloway, and with her he had a son and daughter; the son William married a daughter of Sir William Maxwell of Monreith; the daughter, Nicolas Stewart, married Colonel William Maxwell of Cardiness. Mr William Stewart of Castle-Stewart, as a son of the Earl of Galloway abovementiond, carries the arms of the family, and, for difference, charges the bend with a boar's head couped or, for his difference, on account of his wife, a daughter of Gordon of Cardiness; with the crest and motto of the family of Galloway. For which see Plate of Achievements.

These are the branches or cadets of the families of Gordon, whose arms I meet with in our records; and, as for these descended of Sutherland, I have mentioned them before. So that I proceed to other principal families in the shire of Berwick.

Nisbet of that Ilk, argent, three boars' heads erased sable; crest, a boar passant of the last: motto, I byde it; as in Plate of Achievements.

The surname is local (as all our ancient ones) from their lands of Nisbet in the shire of Berwick, which were of an ancient denomination; for, in the donation of King Edgar, the son of Malcolm Canmore, (in whose reign surnames came first to be hereditary) to the Monks of Dunfermline, to pray for the soul of his father, and for the health of his own, among other lands, he gives those of Nisbet, at least the patronage of that church called East-Nisbet, (of late Elmbank) and the teinds of Nisbet (afterwards called West-Nisbet) where the castle of Nisbet stood, memorable in our histories for the fatal overthrow the English gave, by the assistance of the then rebel the Earl of March, to the flower of the youth of the Lothians.

What I shall say of this ancient and honourable family, in general, is not without documents, which are to be seen among the records of Durham, priory of Coldingham, abbacy of Kelso, and other chartularies; but, from the charter-chest of the family, which, I suppose, is in the custody of the present possessors of these lands, I cannot vouch any thing, having never had access thereto.

In the reign of King David the I. Philip de Nestbyth is a witness to that king's deed which he made to the religious at Coldingham, for prayers to be said for the health of his soul.

In the reign of King Malcolm, Patrick Earl, one of the progenitors of the Earls of March and Dunbar, being designed in his charter, Patriicus Comes, filius Waldeoi Comitis, of the lands of Edrom, cum ejus capella & suis pertinentiis, qua duicitur ad villam de Nisbet, to the Monks of Durham, to pray for the souls of King Malcolm, his sons, Edgar, Alexander, and David, kings of Scotland, and for the soul of Earl Henry, and for the health of King Malcolm, as the custom then was; in which charter many witnesses are named, amongst whom are Willielmus de Nestbyth and Almarus de Swynteno: The same charter is long afterwards confirmed by a charter of King Robert the I., and they are fully narrated, which may be seen in the Collections of the Earl of Haddington in the Lawyers' Library.

Philip de Nisbet is mentioned in the Bond of Submission given by the Barons of Scotland to King Edward the I. of England, in the year 1296. Pryme's History, page 654, and there James and John Nisbets.

King Robert the Bruce grants a charter to Adam Nisbet of that Ilk of the lands of Knocklesies, faciendo regi servitium unius militiae in communi exercitu. This Adam, or another Adam Nisbet of that Ilk, his successor, flourished in the reign of David the II. and made a very good figure in the southern parts, the borders of the kingdom; he is one of the barons mentioned in that deed, whereby Alexander Lindsay of Ormiston makes over his estate to Johanna his daughter, married to Alexander Cockburn, who were the predecessors of the present Adam Cockburn of Ormiston. Adam Nisbet of that Ilk was succeeded by Philip Nisbet, whom I find designed de eodem, in a charter of George de Dunbar Earl of March, to Henry de Ogoul, of the lands of Popille in East-Lothian, of the date 1373, and he again was succeeded by his son Adam, whom I find designed of West-Nisbet in a charter of these lands in the year 1423: It seems it was about that time when East-Nisbet went off with a daughter of the family that was married to Chirnside of that Ilk. The family was afterwards sometimes designed of West-Nisbet, and sometimes of that Ilk; for his grandson and successor is designed Nisbet de eodem, in a charter which he gets from King James the IV. of the lands of Brighamsheil, to himself and his wife, Helen Rutherford, in the year 1565; His successor was Alexander Nisbet of that Ilk; for John Nisbet of Dalziel gives a charter to George Nisbet, son of Alexander Nisbet of that Ilk, of half of the barony of Dalziel, 1543, as in the Public Register.

Which George succeeded his father Alexander; he gives a charter (wherein he is designed de eodem) to Elizabeth Cranston, daughter of Cuthbert Cranston of Mains, of the lands of Mungo's-Walls, West-Mlin of West-Nisbet, and lands of Otterburn in Berwickshire, anno 1551. He was grandfather of Philip Nisbet of that Ilk, who married a daughter of Haldane of Glenelges; with her he had Sir Alexander, who succeeded Philip Nisbet, who lived in England; of him are descended Thomas and Philip Nisbets, eminent merchants in London; and, for his third son Thomas, who married Agnes Purves, father and mother of Mr. Philip Nisbet of Ladykirk, an eminent man for his learning and loyalty, grandfather of Margaret Nisbet, married to John Veitch of Dawick, chief of his name, of whom afterwards.

Which Sir Alexander Nisbet of that Ilk, who demolished the castle of Nisbet, and built the house of Nisbet, was more signally conspicuous for his bright parts, and dutiful loyalty to his Sovereign King Charles the 1. He was principal Sheriff of the shire of Berwick during the peaceable time of that King's reign; he strenuously opposed the Covenanters; but they prevailing, he and his sons were forced to leave the country, and join with the King's army, where they served in honourable posts with valour and untainted loyalty, to the loss of their persons and estate: His lady was Katharine Swinton, only daughter of Swinton of that Ilk, and his first lady Katharine Hay, daughter of William Lord Yester; she bore to him Philip, Alexander, Robert, John, and Adam.

The eldest son, Sir Philip, was on his travels abroad, who, hearing of his sovereign's troubles, came to England, and offered his service to his Majesty, who knighted him, and gave him the command of a regiment, and was Lieutenant-Governor of Newark upon Trent, when the Scots Covenanters besieged it ineffectually: He gave many singular proofs of his conduct and valour in the service of his king in England, till the affairs drew him to Scotland to join with the Marquis of Montrose, and continued with him till the battle of Philiphaugh, where, being apprehended, he was no sooner known but an order was sent from the Committee of Estates for his commitment to Glasgow; and there he was tried for being in arms with Montrose, which they easily found him guilty of, and gave sentence to lose his head; which judgment was execute upon him at Glasgow, in company with Alexander Ogilvie, eldest son of Sir John Ogilvie of Innerquhary, a youth scarce twenty years, both unmarried, upon the 28th of October 1646; as in the History of these times, by Dr George Wishart, Bishop of Edinburgh, who says, that the Covenanters beheaded their three stout gallant gentlemen, Sir William Rollock, Alexander Ogilvie, and Sir Philip Nisbet, of an ancient family, and chief of it, next his father, who had done honourable services in the King's army in England, and had the command of a regiment there.

Alexander and Robert, both Captains, were killed in the field following Montrose. Mr. John, the fourth son, married and died in England, leaving a daughter who was married to Mr Brown in Chirnside, a brother of Brown of Blackburn.

Adam, the youngest son of Sir Alexander Nisbet of that Ilk, married Janet Aikenhead, grandchild to David Aikenhead, Provost of Edinburgh, father and mother of the author of this System of Heraldry, who is the only male representative of the ancient and honourable family of Nisbet.

There were of old several good families of the name, branched from the house of Nisbet, now extinct, as Nisbet of Paxton, Nisbet of Spittle, Nisbet of Swine-wood in the shire of Berwick, and Nisbet of Dalziel in the shire of Lanark, which flourished from the reign of King David the II. to the reign of King Charles the II. from whom were descended the Nisbets, who were magistrates and eminent merchants in Glasgow.

There was also another family of the name in the shire of Renfrew, stiled Nisbet of Johnston, which, in the time of King James the I. went of with an heiress married to a son of Wallace of Ellerslie, who thereupon quartered the coat of Nisbet with that of Wallace, which, as I am informed, are to be seen engraven on the house of Johnston.
The most eminent families of the name, now standing, are Nisbet of Dean, Nisbet of Craigintinnie, and Nisbet of Dirleton, being all come of three sons of one Harry Nisbet, merchant in Edinburgh, descended from Nisbet of that Ilk.

The present Sir John Nisbet of Dean, Baronet, lineally descended of the eldest son James, carries argent, a cheveron guules, between three boar's heads erased sable; crest, a boar's head sable: motto, I byde it. The family has been in use to carry their arms supported on the right side by a savage wreathed about the head and middle, all proper, holding a button on his shoulder, and, on the left, by a greyhound, proper; which are to be seen cut on the frontispiece of their aisle of the West-church, and in Plate of Achievements.

Alexander Nisbet of Craigintinnie, descended of the second son William, carried the same as Dean, but charged the cheveron with three cinquefoils argent.

Sir John Nisbet of Dirleton, a famous Lawyer, was one of the Senators of the College of Justice, and Advocate to his Majesty King Charles II. from the year 1663 to the year 1677: His father was Sir Patrick Nisbet, also one of the Lords of Session, styled Lord Eastbank, descended of the third son. Dirleton carried argent on a cheveron gules, betwixt three boars' heads erased sable, as many cinquefoils of the first; the cheveron ensign'd on the top with a thistle, proper; crest, a hand holding a pair of balances; with the motto, Discite justitiarn; which arms are now carried by William Nisbet of Dirleton, eldest son of the above-mentioned Alexander Nisbet of Craigintinnie, as heir of tailzie to Sir John Nisbet. See Plate of Achievements.

Nisbet of Greenholm, a family of a good old standing in the shire of Ayr, descended of Nisbet of that Ilk, carries argent, three boars' heads erased within a bordure sable; crest, a boar's head as the former; with this motto, His foribus armis, as in Plate of Achievements. Of this family is Nisbet of Carphil, and Mr Alexander Nisbet, Chirurgeon in Edinburgh, who carries argent, three boars' heads erased sable, within a bordure invected gules, for his difference; crest and motto, as Greenholm. Plate of Achievements.

The other principal and ancient family in Berwickshire, is Swinton of that Ilk, who carries sable, a cheveron or between three boars' heads erased argent; crest, a boar chained to a tree: motto, Jespere.

The curious Mr James Anderson, in his Elaborate Historical Essay of the Independence of the Crown of Scotland, page 54, tells us, that, amongst the many charters of Scots families that he did see in the chartulary of Durham, there were two original charters granted by King David, commonly called St David, to the predecessor of Swinton, wherein he is termed Miles, and was to hold his lands as freely as any of the king's barons. I have shown, a little before, that Alenus de Swinton is a witness with Williamus de Nesbyth, in a charter of Patricius Gomez, in the reign of King William the Lion: Of this family were many brave men, mentioned by our historians. The family is now represented by Sir John Swinton of that Ilk, Baronet, who of late has added to his arms, for supporters, two swine, as relative to the name, standing on a compartment, wherein are these words, Je pense, as in Plate of Achievements.

Though this was a considerable and honourable family, who have had intermarriages with very eminent families in the kingdom, they have few or no cadets whose arms I meet with in our records, save those of Robert Swinton, designed, in our New Registers, late Factor to the Marquis of Montrose, who carries sable, a cheveron or between three boars' heads erased argent, within a bordure indented of the second; crest, an ear of wheat, proper: motto, Dum sedulo prospera.

Redpath of that Ilk, another ancient family in the Merse, argent, a cheveron ingrailed between three boars' heads erased gules; as in Sir James Balfour's and Pont's MSS. This family is now extinct.

Redpath of Angelraw is the only family of the name in that shire who carries the foxtail arms.

Dunse of that Ilk, another ajeanet family there, sable, a 'cheveron or betwixt three boars' heads of the last, as in Mr Thomas Crawford's MS. Of which family was the famous Joannes Duns Scotus.

Haitlie of Mellerstain, another old family in the Merse, now extinct, carried or on a bend azure, three boars' heads erased of the first, so illuminated in the house of Falahall, and blazoned in Pont's MS.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

French of Thornydykes in the Merse, which lies near to the lands of Gordon, carried almost the same arms with them, viz. azure, a chevron between three boars' heads erased or. I have seen a principal charter of George Dunbar Earl of March, Lord Annandale, granted to Robert French of Thornydykes, upon his resignation of these lands in the hands of that Earl, for a new charter to himself and his wife, Elizabeth French, and to their heirs. Their son Adam French gets a new charter to himself and his spouse, Janet Rule, and their heirs, of the lands of Thornydykes, in the reign of Robert the III.; and King James the I. grants a charter of Confirmation of these rights, 1433, and the same year Robert French is served heir to his father Adam; which evidences are in the custody of David French of Frenchland, lineal representor of French of Thornydykes, who carries the same arms.

There are other families in the Merse, of a good old standing, of the surname of Trotter, some of whom carry a crescent and stars, and others, boars' heads, as Trotter of Prentanan and Quickwood, an old family of the name, who, by their ancient seals and paintings, carried argent, a crescent gules, and, on a chief azure, three stars of the first; and for crest, a horse trotting, proper, as relative to the name; with the motto, Festina leuete. Of whom is descended Mr Alexander Trotter, Minister at Eldrom in the Merse. See Plate of Achievements.

In our New Register I find Henry Trotter of Mortonhall, heritor also of the barony of Charterhall, whereof Fogohill and Fogomill are parts and pendicles, having in the late Lyon's time taken out his arms, on the 29th of June 1676, which are now thus; quarterly, first and fourth argent, a fesse gules, between three stars in chief sable, and a crescent in base azure, as his paternal coat for Trotter of Mortonhall: But I think they should have said, for Trotter of Prentanan and Quickwood, being the same with theirs, as before, second and third argent, a chevron gules, between three boars' heads couped sable, for Trotter of Charterhall; crest, a man holding a horse, proper, furnished gules: motto, In promptu. In the same Register we have the arms of Mr George Trotter of Charterhall in the Merse, argent, a chevron gules, between three boars' heads sable, langued and armed of the second, registrate 1669, and the chevron is charged with a mullet. William Trotter, representor of the family of Catchelraw, argent, a chevron gules, between three boars' heads couped sable; crest, a horse passant or trotting. L. R.

The name of Hog has been anciently in the Merse, and carried argent, three boars' heads erased azure, armed or; as in Pont's MS. and in the New Register.

Sir Roger Hog of Harcarne, who was one of the Senators of the College of Justice, carries the same; and for crest, an oak tree, proper: motto, Dat gloria vires.

The name of Rochead there, argent, on a fesse azure, a boar's head erased, between two mullets of the field; the same is carried by Rochead of Craigleith; and for crest, a man's head couped in profile, proper: motto, Fide & virtute. N. R. And there, Rochead of Whitsomhill argent, a savage-head erased, distilling drops of blood, proper, between three combs azure; crest, a savage-arm erect, proper: motto, Pro patria.

In many other shires of the kingdom there are other ancient and honourable families who have boars' heads for their armorial figures, which betoken no descent nor dependence one upon another, as the Elphinstones, Abercrombies and others, of whom before: I shall mention here those of the surnames of Cochran, Rollo and Lockhart.

The most eminent family of the name of Cochran is that of the Earl of Dun-donald's, whose achievement is, argent, a chevron gules, between three boars' heads erased azure; crest, a horse passant argent; with the motto, Virtute & labore; supported by two greyhounds, proper, collared and leashed gules. This family is of good antiquity in the shire of Renfrew, where the barony of Cochran lies, from which is the surname.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

In the reign of Alexander the III. Waldemus de Coveran, or Cochran, was a witness to the charter which Dungallus, filius Swayne gave to Walter Stewart Earl of Monteith, of the lands of Skipness in Argyleshire, in the year 1262, (Dalrymple's Collections and Crawford's History of Renfrew) William de Cochran is mentioned by Prymne, in his History, as one of the Scots barons that gave allegiance to King Edward the I. of England. In the reign of David the II. flourished Gosline de Cochran, father of William de Cochran of that Ilk; and from him (as in Mr Crawford's Peerage) was lineally descended William Cochran of that Ilk, who obtained a charter of confirmation from Queen Mary of the lands of Cochran, in the year 1576. He had with his wife, Margaret, daughter of Robert Montgomery of Skelmorly, only a daughter, Elizabeth Cochran, his sole heir, to whom he entailed his whole estate, and to the heirs of her body; and, for want of issue, to several others, upon condition they should bear the name and arms of the family: Which Elizabeth took to husband Alexander Blair, a younger son of John Blair of that Ilk, and to him she bore seven sons and two daughters: The eldest, Sir John, died, having no issue with his lady, Madam Buttlor, one of the daughters of Ormond. To him succeeded his brother, Sir William Cochran of Cowden, who, for his singular parts and loyalty to King Charles the I. was advanced to the dignity of a Lord of Parliament, by the title of Lord Cochran of Cowden, in the year 1647; and, upon the Restoration of King Charles the II. as an additional mark of his Majesty's esteem of his good services, he was advanced to the dignity of Earl of Dundonald, 1669, and was one of the Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury. He had to his lady Euphame, daughter of Sir William Scott of Ardross; she had to him two sons and a daughter, William Lord Cochran and Sir John of Ochiltree.

Which William Lord Cochran died in his father's lifetime, leaving issue by the Lady Katharine his wife, daughter of John Earl of Cassillis, John, his successor, William Cochran of Kilmarnock, and Alexander Cochran of Bonshaw. John succeeded his grandfather in the earldom of Dundonald; he married Lady Susanna, daughter of William Duke of Hamilton, and by her he had two sons, William Earl of Dundonald, who died without issue, and was succeeded by his brother John, the present Earl of Dundonald, who married Anne, daughter of Charles Earl of Dunmore, by whom he has William Lord Cochran, and three daughters; he carries the above achievement.

The arms of the surname of Cochran, which I find matriculated in the New Register, are these:

Sir John Cochran of Ochiltree, a son of the first Earl of Dundonald, argent, a chevron gules, between three boars' heads erased azure, within a bordure of the second; crest a horse pasant argent: motto, Virtute & labore.

John Cochran of Waterside, a younger son of Ochiltree, carries as his father, with a crescent in chief for difference.

Alexander Cochran of Balbarchan, argent, a boar's head erased, and, in chief, three mullets disposed chevron-ways azure; crest, a spear-head and garb crossing other saltier-ways, proper: motto, Armis & industria.

Mr William Cochran of Rochsoles, descended of a second brother of Balbarchan, argent, a boar's head erased, and, in chief, a crescent betwixt two mullets disposed chevron-ways azure.

Mr Walter Cochran of Drumbreck, ermine, on a chief gules, a stag's head erased or, betwixt two mullets argent; crest, a stag standing at a gaze, proper, attired gules: motto, Vigilanti salus.

William Cochran, second son to Walter Cochran of Drumbreck, sometime Bailie of Aberdeen, the same with his father, within a bordure gules; crest, a hand holding a man's heart, proper: motto, Concordia vincit.

Cochran of Pitfarr, ermine, on a chief gules, a boar's head erased betwixt two mullets argent. Pont's MS.

Rollo of Duncrub, argent, a chevron azure, between three boars' heads erased sable. Other books give them azure, as now carried. As for the antiquity of the family, John Rollo got a grant of the lands of Duncrub, and other lands, from David Earl of Strathern, with the consent of King Robert his father, of the date 13th February 1380. From the lands of Duncrub the family was designed; and these lands, with others, were erected into a free barony by King James IV. in favour of William Rollo of Duncrub, as the charter bears, of the date 26th October 1512. From this William was lineally descended Sir Andrew Rollo of Duncrub, who was knighted by King James the VI. and afterwards was by King Charles the I. raised to the dignity of Lord Rollo of Duncrub, in the year 1651. From whom is descended the present Robert Lord Rollo. Their achievements are, or, a chevron, betwixt three boars' heads erased azure, supported by two stags, proper; crest, a stag's head couped, proper: motto, La fortune paze par raus.

Robert Rollo of Powhouse, whose predecessor was a brother of Duncrub, or, a chevron between three boars' heads erased azure, all within a bordure ingrailed of the second; crest, a boar passant, proper: motto, Valore & fortuna. New Register.

The surname of Lockhart carries boars' heads. Simon Locard lived in the reign of Malcolm the IV. as in the Chartulary of Kelso, to which he was a benefactor. There is also a charter of confirmation of Simon Lockard, the son of Malcolm Locard, super Ecclesiæ de Simondston, i.e. Symington in the shire of Lanark, so called from the foresaid Simon Lockard, now writ Lockhart. For more particulars of the antiquity of the name see Sir James Dalrymple's Collections, page 415.

The principal stem of this name was designed of Lee, because the lands of Symington and Craig-Lockhart did anciently belong to the family of Lee, as the abovementioned author says, who tells us, That from Sir Simon Lockard of Lee, Dominus ejusdem, in the reign of David Bruce, was descended Sir James Lockhart of Lee, one of the Lords of the Session in the reign of King Charles the I. and by King Charles the II. restored to that office, and promoted to be Justice-Clerk. He had five sons; Sir James, the eldest, a colonel; Robert, a captain, who died in the Civil Wars; Sir William, a great statesmen and general, of great esteem in France and England, succeeded his father in his estate and office as Justice-Clerk; of whom is the present Lockhart of Lee: The fourth son, Sir George Lockhart, a learned lawyer, and eloquent pleader, was Lord President of the Session; he purchased the barony of Carnwath, which is enjoyed by his son George Lockhart of Carnwath, who married Lady Euphame Montgomery, second daughter of Alexander Earl of Eglington, and by her has issue. Sir James Lockhart, the youngest son, was by King Charles II. made a Lord of the Session, by the designation of Castlehilk; his estate is come to his daughter married to Sir John Sinclair, eldest son of Sir Robert Sinclair of Stevenston, Baronet, who has issue with her.

The family, it seems, of old, carried azure, three boars' heads erased, within a bordure ingrailed or; as in Balfour and Pont's MSS. One of the heads of this family is said by some to have accompanied Good Sir James Douglas, with King Robert the Bruce's heart, to Jerusalem. The family have since altered their arms, either to perpetuate the same story, or to make their arms more univocal to the name; thus, argent, a man's heart, proper, within a padlock sable, and, on a chief azure, three boars' heads erased argent; crest, a boar's head: motto, Corda serata pando; some read fero.

Lockhart of Cleghorn carries azure, three boars' heads erased argent; crest, a boar's head erased as the former: motto, Sine labe fides. L. R. This is another ancient family of the name of Lockhart. Allan Lockhart of Cleghorn is a witness in the charters of King James the II. I have seen a charter of King James the IV. granted by that king to Sir Stephen Lockhart of Cleghorn, of the lands of Cleghorn, quæ prius pertinenter ad predecessores. His son was Allan Lockhart, father of Alexander, who was infeft in the barony of Cleghorn, and the lands of Grugfoot, 1533; and his son Allan was seised in these lands, 1582, of whom is lineally descended the present Allan Lockhart.

Robert Lockhart of Birkhill carries argent, on a bend, betwixt three boars' heads erased azure, a man's heart, proper, within a fetter-lock or; crest, a boar's head erased as the former: motto, Feroci fortior. Ibid.

Walter Lockhart of Kirkton places the heart and padlock on a chevron; and, for crest, a dexter hand holding a boar's head erased, proper: motto, Feroci fortior. Ibid.

The surname of Urquhart carries boars' heads; as Urquhart of Cromarty, or. three boar's heads erased gules. Pont's MS. The chief of this name (says Sir George Mackenzie, in his Genealogical Manuscript of the Nobility and Gentry) was Urquhart of Cromarty. The first of the family was a brother of Ochonacher, who slew the bear, predecessor of the Lord Forbes, and, having in keeping the castle of Urquhart, took his surname from that place.

Urquhart of Craigston, descended of Cromarty, carries the same with Cromarty, with the addition of a crescent, for a brotherly difference. Pont's Manuscript.

Alexander Urquhart of Newhall, Esq. whose grandfather was a second son of Cromarty, carries or, three boar's heads erased gules, within a bordure quartered sable, and of the second; crest, a boar's head couped as the former; motto, Per actum intente. N. R. Plate of Achievements.

Adam Urquhart of Meldrum carries quarterly, first and fourth Meldrum, second and third Seaton, as before carried by Seaton's of Meldrum, and still by their male representatives; and has nothing of Urquhart but a boar's head erased or, for crest; with the motto of Meldrum, Per mare & terras. L. R.

These of the name of Cruikshanks, as George Cruikshanks of Berryhill, carry or, three boar's heads couped, sable, langued and armed or. New Register. The name of Whitehead carries or, on a fesse between three boar's heads erased azure; as many cinquefoils argent. Pont's MS.

Whitlaw of that Ilk carries sable, a chevron or, between three boar's heads couped argent. (Pont's MS.) Some of this name are to be met with in Mr Pryne's Collections, swearing fealty to King Edward the I. of England. In the reign of King James III. there was one Archibald Whitlaw, an eminent churchman, being a son of Whitlaw of that Ilk, who was Secretary of State to that King. In the reign of King James IV. Whitlaw of that Ilk married Elizabeth Fenton, daughter and heiress of John Fenton of that Ilk, (of the arms of Fenton before) by whom he had a son, Patrick Whitlaw of that Ilk, from whom was descended Richard Whitlaw of that Ilk, who married Jean Blackburn, daughter of —— Blackburn, Merchant in Edinburgh, and his wife —— Nisbet, sister of Sir John Nisbet of Dirleton; and with her he had only a daughter, Jean Whitlaw, his heiress, who married Walter Burnside, who, in right of his wife, possesses the lands of Whitlaw, and makes use of the arms, as in Plate of Achievements.

The ancient family of Mow* in Teviotdale carried a boar's head. It was sometime a numerous family; for, by old records which I have seen, there have been hostages given out of this family, all of the name of Mow, to the English, for keeping the peace between the Borders of Scotland and England. There is a contract betwixt the abbot of Kelso and the laird of Mow, in the Register of Kelso, an abstract of which is in the hands of Ridel of that Ilk, where his predecessor Sir Robert Ridel of that Ilk is cautions for Mow of that Ilk, anno 1270. This family continued in the possession of the barony of Mow till the time of King Charles the I. that one of the name of Bell purchased it, and called it Belford.

The last laird of Mow of that Ilk, a great sufferer for King Charles the I. married a sister of Sir Alexander Nisbet of that Ilk; their son was Alexander, designed of Mains in the shire of Berwick, and is recorded in the Lyon Register, representor of Mow of that Ilk. He bears azure, a boar's head erased argent, armed gules, betwixt three mullets of the second; crest, a phoenix rising out of the flames; motto, Post funera fiemus. His grandson John Mow is the present laird of Mains.

Brown of Blackburn in the shire of Berwick, an old family there, carried sable; a dagger in bend, proper; and in chief, a boar's head erased, argent; crest, a vine tree, proper; motto, Premium virtutis bonus. L. R.

The name of Downie carries azure, a fesse inlay'd between three boar's heads erased or. Workman's MS.

Pitblado of that Ilk carries vert; a boar's head erased, argent. Ibid.

* It appears from an Act of Sedentum of the Court of Session of 11th August 1789, that Mr William Mow, W. S. and his brother Mr John Mow of Mains, obtained authority, upon application to their Lordships, to alter the spelling of their surname from Mow to Molle; which last it appeared, from ancient family documents, had been the original mode of spelling it. E.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

Vernor of Auchintinnie, argent, a fesse between three boar's heads couped, sable. Pont's MS.

Boar's heads, with their necks, are now represented fesse-ways, as by their figures in the Plates; but, by our old paintings and carvings, they were given with necks hanging down, couped or erased, as these in the old bearing of Gordon of Earlston, in Plate of Achievements. Sometimes they are placed pale-ways, that is, erect, as in the bearing of the Right Hon. Booth Earl of Warrington in England, who carries argent; three boar's heads erased and erected sable.

Cochran of Balbachly, an old family of the name. I have mentioned him Balbarchan as above; and I here repeat his new arms and the old ones used by the family. Their achievement, as it now stands in the Lyon Register, is argent, a boar's head erased, and in chief, three mullets disposed chevron-ways, azure; and, for crest, a spear-head and garb crossing other saltier-ways: motto, Armis & industria. But I have seen the armorial seal of the family appended to a writ in the year 1614, whereupon was a formal shield charged with a boar's head erased, and, in chief, three mullets fesse-ways.

The first of this family had the lands of Balbachly given him by King Robert Bruce, for services done to that Prince; and upon record is John Cochran of Barbachlaw, grandson to John of Cochran, who was infeft in these lands, as heir to John his grandfather, by virtue of a precept dated the 20th of October 1472. The grandfather, John of Cochran, must have lived either in the reign of King David the II. or of Robert the II. and has been either son or grandson to the person who first got the lands from King Robert Bruce.

The above John Cochran, designed of Balbachly, was succeeded by his son George, who was infeft in the lands of Balbachly, as heir to his father, in the year 1506; and the succession of the family was continued, as by charters and returns to be seen in the charter-crest of the family, too long here to be narrated; and I shall here only mention James Cochran, who was infeft in the barony of Balbachly, as heir to his father, 1614, a man of bright parts, who was constituted Sheriff-Principal of the sheriffdom of Linlithgow, by commission under the Great Seal in the year 1622, and was, for his loyalty, continued in the same office by King Charles I. He was succeeded by his grandson, Alexander, in the barony of Balbachly; and he was succeeded by his son Alexander, father of the present Alexander Cochran of Balbachly.

OF THE BEAR.

The Bear, a cruel and fierce beast, by the Latins called Ursus, ab urges, ob se rosiam impetusque ita appellatum, (Hopingius de Jure Insignium,) is frequent in arms, upon the account, as some say, that the first assumers of that creature for an armorial figure represented a military man, or one that had overcome a cruel and vicious enemy, and sometimes upon account that its name is relative to that of the bearer's. Its posture in arms is ordinarily erect on his hinder feet; and as the above-named author speaks of it, "Pedes ursi fortissimi sunt, quibus & rectus " incedit more hominum, & victa animalia concutac. For which the French say, en pied, and is always muzzled, as in the arms of Blanchart in France, d'or à l'ours en pied de sable, à la tete d'argent; i.e, or; a bear erect, sable; muzzled argent. Plate XI. fig. 11.

Several counties in Switzerland carry bears, as equivocally relative to their name: The Canton of Berne, gules, on a bend or, a bear sable. The Canton of Appenzel, or, a bear erect sable. The abbey of St Gall in Switzerland, argent, a bear erect, and contourné sable. This abbey, says Favin in his Theatre of Honour, was founded in memory of St Gall, a Scotsman, who taught there the Christian religion to the inhabitants, and who is still the Patron Saint of that country.

The Ursini in Venice carry azure, two bears erect affronté or; the Bernei in Westphalia, argent, a bear passant sable contourné and collared argent; as relative to the name.

The head of this beast is more frequent with us than the whole body, which, as I have said of the heads of other beasts, so of this, that the head supposes the whole body in armories, and is either erased or couped, and always muzzled.
The surname of Forbes with us bears azure; three bears' heads, couped argent, muzzled gules. These of this name are said, by our historians, to be originally from one Ochonach, who came from Ireland, and, for killing a wild bear, took the name Forbar, now pronounced Forbes. Skene, in his Treatise de Verborum Significatione, at the title Librum Tenementium, tells us, that Duncan Forbes got from King Alexander (but tells us not which of the Alexanders) a charter of the lands and heritage of Forbar in Aberdeenshire. And Mr Crawford, in his Peerage, says, by an original charter in the custody of the Lord Forbes, Fergus, the son of John, got the lands of Forbes from King Alexander II. from whence the surname. The next to be met with of this family was Alexander Forbes, Governor of the Castle of Urquhart in Murray; he defended it bravely for a long time against Edward I. of England, who at last took it, and put all within it to the sword; but the Governor's lady, says Hector Bocce, being with child, escaped to Ireland, and there brought forth a son called Alexander, who was the chief and raiser of the name again, and who came to Scotland, in the reign of Robert the Bruce, to seek his father's heritage, but could not get it, being before given to others for their good services; but in lieu of it he got other lands. This Alexander Forbes of that ilk was killed at the battle of Dunlip, fighting for the interest of King David Bruce against Edward Balliol.

The next of the family I have met with is Joannes Forbes de Codem, miles, witness in a charter which I have seen, (now peues Comitem de Morton) of Isabel Countess of Marr, of the lands of Bonjedworth, to Thomas Douglas, son of John, and her beloved sister Margaret, of the date the 10th of November 1404. Which Sir John Forbes married a daughter of Kenneth of Dunnure, by whom he had three sons, Alexander Forbes his successor, William the ancestor of Pitsligo, and John the founder of the family of Tolquhoun.

Which Alexander was father of James who was knighted by King James III. and was the first Lord Forbes. He had two sons by a daughter of William Earl Marischal, William his successor, and Patrick the first of the family of Corse. William, second Lord Forbes, married Christian Gordon, a daughter of the Earl of Huntly; and with her he had four sons, Alexander, Arthur, and John, all three successively Lords, and Duncan, ancestor of the Forbesses of Corsindae, the first two died without issue, and John became Lord Forbes, to whom King James IV. gives a charter of confirmation of the barony of King-Edwards, wherein that King tells, that these lands "fuerunt quondam Alexandri Forbes militis, pravvi & predecessoris dicti Johannis Domini Forbes, per hereditarium infeodationem, chartam & sasianam, dicto quondam Alexandro, per quondam Johanne Stewart Comitem Buchanica, & barone de Kinedward, desuper consecfem cum confirmatione progenitoris nostri Jacobi Regis primi, super magnu sigillo," for which see Haddington's Collections, p. 389. Of whom is descended the present Lord Forbes, who carries azure, three bears' heads couped argent, muzzled gules, supported by two greyhounds argent, collared gules; crest, a stag's head attired, proper: motto, Grace me guide.

The armorial bearings of the cadets of this family which I have met with in our ancient and modern books are these:

Forbes Lord Pitsligo carries quarterly, first and fourth Forbes, with a crescent for difference; second and third azure, three cinquefoils argent, for Frazer; supporters, two bears, proper; crest, a falcon, proper: motto, Altius ibunt qui ad summam nitantur. And at other times, for a crest, a hand holding a sword, proper; with the motto, Ne cingid nec tenera.

The first of this family was Sir William Forbes, second brother to Sir Alexander Forbes of that ilk. In the reign of King James I. he married Margaret Fraser, only daughter of Sir William Fraser of Philorth, and got with her these lands, for which the family quarters the Fraser's arms with their own; and the family was afterwards dignified with the title of Lord Pitsligo by King Charles I. the 24th of June 1633, in the person of Sir Alexander Forbes; of him is linearly descended Alexander the present Lord Pitsligo.

Forbes of Corsindae, descended of Duncan Forbes, fourth son of William Lord Forbes, carried the Forbes's arms, with a crescent for difference; and for crest, a bear's head; with the motto, Spe expecto. Pont's MS.
FORBES of Corse, the first of which branch was Patrick, second son of James, first Lord Forbes, and his lady, a daughter of William Earl Marischal, carried azure, a cross couped or, (Pont makes the cross a patee one, fitted) between three bears' heads couped argent, muzzled gules; and for crest, a wreath or crown of thorns; with the motto, Rosis coronat spina. N. R.

Sir John Forbes of Monymusk, Bart. descended of the Forbeses of Carsindae, carries azure, on a chevron between three bears' heads couped argent, muzzled gules, a man's heart, proper, with wings or: motto, Spe exspecto. New Register.

Sir Alexander Forbes of Tolquhon carries, quarterly, first and fourth Forbes, second and third argent, three unicorns' heads erased sable, for marrying Marjory, the heiress of Sir Henry Preston of Formartin; supported by two greyhounds, proper, collared gules; crest, a stag's head attired with ten tythes, proper: motto, Salus per Christum. Ibid.

Sir John Forbes of Waterton bears, quarterly, as Tolquhon, and, by way of surtouit, an escutcheon argent, charged with a sword and key saltier-ways gules, as Constable of Aberdeen, by succeeding to the lands of Cairnmuch, and in which office he was established by Act of Parliament; crest, an eagle displayed sable: motto, Virtuti inimica quies. Ibid.

Forbes of Culloden, descended of Tolquhon, bears azure, on a chevron betwixt three bears' heads couped argent, muzzled gules, as many unicorns' heads erased sable; crest, an eagle displayed or: motto, Salus per Christum. Ibid.

Sir Alexander Forbes of Foveran, Bart. descended of Tolquhon, carries the quartered arms of Tolquhon; and, in the centre of the arms of Forbes, a cross patee argent, for difference; crest, a cross patee argent: motto, Salus per Christum.

See Plate of Achievements.

Thomas Forbes of Auchreddy, descended of Tolquhon, carries the quartered arms of Tolquhon, all within a bordure chequy, argent and gules; crest, a small sword bend-ways, proper: motto, Scienter uxor. Ibid.

Alexander Forbes of Savock, second son of Forbes of Craigie, who was a second son of the family of Tolquhon, carries the quartered arms of Tolquhon; and, for difference, a crescent surmounted of another. Ibid.

Forbes of Ballogie, descended of the family of Tolquhon, parted per fesse, azure and argent, on the first Forbes, and on the second Preston; crest, a sheaf of arrows, proper; with the motto, Concordia praece. Ibid.

John Forbes of Ballluig, a cadet of Monymusk, azure, a chevron between three bears' heads couped argent, muzzled gules, a man's heart, proper, between two skeins, or daggers, of the first, pommelled or; crest, a skein piercing a man's heart, proper: motto, Non deest spes. Ibid.

Arthur Forbes of Riras, descended of Btsglodge, quarterly, first and fourth or, a lion rampant gules, for Wemyss of Rires; second and third Forbes; crest, a greyhound passant, proper: motto, Dilectatio. Ibid.

Arthur Forbes of Eight, azure, a fesse chequy, argent and gules, between three bears' heads couped of the second, and muzzled of the third; crest, a sand-glass, proper: motto, Fugit hora. Ibid.

Robert Forbes of Robslaw, sometime Provost of Aberdeen, azure, a skin fesse argent, hilted and pommelled or, between three bears' heads couped of the second, and muzzled sable; crest, a dove, proper: motto, Virtute cresco. Ibid.

Forbes of Millbury, azure, a skein pale-ways, with a wolf's head couped or, on the point, between three bears' heads couped argent, muzzled gules; crest, a bear's head couped, as the former, within an orle of olive branches vert: motto, Virtute non ferocia. Ibid.

Forbes of Craigievar, in Aberdeenshire, azure, three bears' heads couped argent, muzzled sable; in the centre a cross patee fitted of the second; crest, a cock, proper: motto, Watch. Ibid. This family is descended of Forbes of Corse, as also the following:

Forbes Viscount of Granard, in Ireland, azure, three bears' heads couped argent, muzzled sable; crest, a bear passant argent, semé of gouttes de sangu, supported on the right by an unicorn or, powdered with ermine spots sable, and on the sinister by a dragon ermine: motto, Fud mentis incendium gloriae. Sir George Mackenzie.
Those also of the surname of Mackay carry bear-heads of the same tincture and field with the Forbeses, upon the account they derive their descent from one Alexander, a younger son of Ochonachar, the progenitor also of the Forbeses, who came from Ireland to Scotland about the end of the twelfth century.

The fourth in descent from the abovementioned Alexander, was Donald of Struthnauer, (as by the Manuscript of the Family) whose son and successor was Y More; from him began the surname of Mackay, (i. e. "his sons"), whose great-grandchild was Angus Mackay, father of Y, alias Odo Mackay: He was much in favour with King James IV, who gave to him the lands of Alexander Sutherland of Delred, as by a charter of the date 1499, (in rotulis "jacobi Quarti"). "Dedisse, " concessisse & confirmasse Odoni Mackay & hereditibus suis, terras de Farre, " Stratthie, Kyneve, Kynned, Gosespie, Dilrit, &c. que quidem terae fuerunt " quondam dicti Alexandri Sutherland hereditarie, & nunc nobis pertinent, & " in manibus nostris legitime devenerunt, ratione foris facture dicti Alexandri," &c. From this Odo was lineally descended Sir Donald Mackay of Farre, a valiant man, and of great honour: He, by a warrant of King Charles I. took over into Germany a regiment of 2000 men of his own name and followers, to the assistance of the King and Queen of Bohemia, in the year 1626; and thereafter he entered into the service of the King of Denmark against the Emperor: And after that war ended, he served with his own regiment under Gustavus, the King of Sweden, with singular valour and success. King Charles I. created him a Knight-Baronet, 28th of March 1627, and the year following, for his great merit, a Peer of Scotland, by the title of Lord Reay. He died in the year 1649, leaving issue by Barbara, his lady, a daughter of Kenneth Lord Kintail, afterwards Earl of Seaforth, James his successor, second Lord Rae, who married Barbara, sister to General Hugh Mackay, by whom he had Donald, master of Rae, who died before his father, leaving issue by his lady, a daughter of Sir George Monro of Culrain, George the present Lord Rae.

Their achievements, since the family was dignified, are azure, on a chevron or, accompanied with three bears' heads couped argent, muzzled gules, a roebuck's head erased, for the title of Rae, between two hands holding daggers, all proper; and for crest, a right hand holding up a dagger pale-ways, proper: motto, Manu fortis; supporters, two men in a military dress, holding muskets in sentry postures. See Plate of Achievements.

GALBRAITH of Giltryock, gules, three bears' heads erased argent, muzzled azure. Pont's MS. There was one Galbraith Governor of the Upper Castle of Dumbarton, in the reign of King James II.

GALBRAITH of Kilchrich, gules, three bears' heads erased argent, muzzled sable; illuminated in the House of Falkhali.

The name of Langham, in England, argent, three bears' heads erased sable, and muzzled or. Art. Her.

THE WOLF,

A RAVENOUS creature. Its posture in armories is ordinarily erect, and so said to be rampart, and sometimes passant or coucbanent; it is carried by many families, as relative to their names. The country of Biscay, bears argent, an oak tree vert, surmounted by two wolves passant gules. The tree is the ancient figure of Arragon, and the two wolves are in allusion to Lopez, the surname of the Lords of Biscay.

The Lupi in France carry azure, a wolf rampant or: The Wolfs in Francônia, sable, a wolf salient, and couronné argent.

With us the surname of Dümbeck carries argent, a dagger thrust into the back of a wolf passant sable. W. MS.

Heads of wolves are more frequent with us in arms, and have their necks hanging down, to distinguish them from the heads of other beasts.

Robertson of Struan carries gules, three wolves' heads erased argent, armed and langued azure; crest, a dexter hand holding up an imperial crown, proper: motto, Virtutiis gloria merces. N. R. The first of this family is said to be one Duncan,

OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.
Macdonald, who got the lands of Struan in Perthshire for killing of wolves. Robert, one of the heads of the family, apprehended one of the murderers of King James I. upon which account the family of Struan has since borne a wild man chained, lying under the escutcheon of their arms.

Alexander Robertson of Faskally, descended of Struan, carries as Struan, within a bordure ingrailed argent; crest, a phoenix issuing out of a flame of fire, proper: motto, Post funera virtus. Ibid.

Gilbert Robertson of Muirton, descended of the family of Struan, bears gules, three crescents interlaced or, between three wolves' heads, as before, all within a bordure argent, charged with eight mullets of the first; crest, a dexter hand issuing out of a cloud, holding a garb, proper: motto, Perseveranti dabitur. Ibid.

Mr James Robertson of Newbigging, descended of Struan, carries as Struan, within a bordure ingrailed argent; crest, a hand, proper, charged with a crescent argent, and holding up an imperial crown or: motto, Virtutis gloria merces. Ibid.

John Robertson, Writer in Edinburgh, and portioner of Tranent, parted per chevron, gules and argent, three wolves' heads erased, two in chief, and one in base, counter-charged of the same, armed and langued azure; crest, a dexter hand holding a crescent, proper: motto, Queaque florentia micat. Ibid.

Skene of that Ilk, in Aberdeenshire, carries gules, three ducres, or, skins, paleways in fesse argent, hilted and pommelled or, supported of as many wolves' heads as three; crest, a dexter arm from the shoulder, issuing out of a cloud, holding forth in the hand a triumphant crown or garland, proper: motto, Virtutis regia merces; supported on the dexter by a Highlandman in his proper garb, holding a skein in his right hand, in a guarding posture, and supported on the sinister by another in a servile habit, his target on the left arm, and the dalrach by the right side, all proper. New Register.

The first of this family is said to have been of the family of Macdonald, who killed, with a skein, a wolf in presence of one of our kings, from whence he took his surname Skene, and called his lands in Aberdeenshire after his name. John le Sken was one of the Arbitrators at Berwicke, between the Bruce and the Baliol, as in Pynne's History.

I have seen a principal charter granted by King Robert the Bruce, the 12th year of his reign, Roberto de Sken dilecto & fidei nostro, pro honamio & servitui suo, of the lands of Skene, with the loch and fishing thereof, and erected them into a free barony.

John Skene of Halyards, descended of Skene of that Ilk, carries as Skene of that Ilk, with a crescent for difference; crest, a dexter hand, proper, holding a dagger as the former: motto, Virtutis regia merces. N. R.

George Skene of Easter-Fintray bears the same with Skene of that Ilk, with the addition of a chevron argent; crest, a dexter hand holding a garland, proper: motto, Gratia a Deo data. L. R.

Mr Alexander Skene of Newtile, parted per chevron, argent and gules, three skeins surmounted as before, with as many wolves' heads, and counter-changed; crest, a hand holding a laurel crown: motto, Sors mihi grata cadet. Ibid.

Robert Skene of Ramore, descended of a second brother of the House of Skene, bears Skene, within a bordure invercedargent; crest, a birch tree, environed with stalks of oats, all growing out of a mount, proper: motto, Sub montibus altis.

Alexander Skene of Dyce, descended of Skene of that Ilk, carries Skene, within a bordure ingrailed argent; crest, a garb, proper: motto, Assiduitate. Lyon Register.

Donald Baine of Tulloch carries azure, a wolf's head erased or, armed and langued gules; crest, a dexter hand grasping a dirk or: motto, Et Marte & arte. New Register.

Mr John Baine of Pitcairlie, descended of Tulloch, bears as Tulloch, within a bordure counter-componed, azure and or; with crest and motto the same. Ibid.

McQueen bears argent, three wolves' heads couped table. Og. MS.

The name of Middleton, in England, bears argent, on a bend vert, three wolves' heads erased of the field. Art. Her.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

OF THE FOX.

The fox is used in armories for his wit, and as relative to the name of the bearer. The name of Fox, in England, bears or, three foxes' heads erased gules. The name of Wylke with us, carries azure, a bend between a fox courant in chief, and two mullets in base argent. Lyon Register.

The name of Top with us, signifying the same with Fox in England, carries argent, three foxes' heads couped gules. Pont's MS.

Mr John Top, by order of King Robert the Bruce, got from Sir Alexander Seaton of that Ilk, Governor and Feuar of the town of Berwick, nineteen pounds six shillings and eight pence, for relieving his children, captives in England, as by an article in Sir Alexander Seaton his accounts in the Borough Rolls of Exchequer, in the year 1325.

The name of Scherez with us, of which there was a family designed of Muiton, and another family of Kempack in Fife, and of Kilwhiss, there; of the last mentioned family was William Schepez Archbishop of St Andrew's: Which families carried arms relative to the name, sable, three civet-cats passant in pale argent.

Let these instances of carrying such creatures be sufficient, since they have no other proper terms in blazon than those already given; and I proceed to others, which have terms peculiar to themselves.

OF THE DOG.

Of which there are two sorts, household-dogs and hunting-dogs: For examples of the first, I shall mention those in the fourth quarter of the achievement of the Count of Weisenwolf in Germany, who carries gules, two mastiff dogs salient adossé argent, and collared or; which Imhoff gives us thus, In quarta area, rubes; duas molosos argentaeos, aversos, & nullis colligatos salientes. The town of Dam in Flanders has a dog in its arms, as relative to its old name, Hunter Dam, i. e. Dog's Sluice.

The dog is often used in devices, as the emblem of vigilance and fidelity, for which they are also carried in arms; but the dogs of chace are more frequent than the former, and are looked upon as more honourable, in showing their owners to be noble, and to have a right to hunting: Their postures in armories are either passant, courant, or salient; and for the most part, they have collars about their necks, for which the French say accollée, and we, collared.

Hunter of Hunterston, carries vert, three dogs of chase argent, 2 and 1, collared or, on a chief of the second, three hunting-horns of the first, stringed gules. Pont's MS. And there, Hunter of Ballagan carries argent, three hunting-horns vert, stringed gules.

As for the antiquity of the name, Gulielmus Venator, which I take for Hunter, is a witness in a charter of erection of the Bishopric of Glasgow, by David I. when he was Prince of Cumberland. In a charter of King Alexander II. of the lands of Manners, to William Baddeby, upon the resignation of Nicol Corbet, of those lands and others, the lands of Norman Hunter are exempted, as the charter bears, "Quas Nicolaus Corbat nobis reddidit, excepta terra quondam Normani "Venatoris, quam Malcolmus, frater regis Willielmi, ei dedid." For which see Had. Collect.

John Clayhills of Inner-Gowrie, sometime Bâile of Dundee, bears parted per bend, sanguine and vert, two greyhounds courant bend-ways argent. N. R.

Alexander Unney of that Ilk, representor of an ancient family in the shire of Aberdeen, carries gules, two greyhounds counter-salient argent, the dexter surmounted of the sinister salier-ways, collared of the field, and, in the chief point, a stag's head couped, attired with ten tynes, all betwixt three flower-de-luces, two in chief, and one in base or; crest, a flower-de-luce gules; supporters, two savages, proper, wreathed about the head and middle with laurel vert, holding in their hands clubs, proper: motto, All my hoppe is in God. N. R.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

Robert Udny of Auchterallan, a second son of Udny of that Ilk, carries the same, without the supporters, with a crescent for difference. Ibid.

William Corsorphine, Portioner of Kingsbarns, carries vert, a greyhound salient between three hunting-horns argent. Ibid.

BEASTS OF THE GAME.

Such as stags, bucks, hartes, deers, hares, &c. are carried in arms, not only upon the account of their natural good qualities, but as signs of the bearer's jurisdiction and liberty of hunting in forests and parks; their postures in arms are either passant, tripping, standing at gaze, courant, springing, and couchant. Passant or tripping is, when they have their right fore-foot lifted up, and the other three, as it were, on the ground. Troop of that Ilk carries vert, three bucks passant argent, 2 and 1. This ancient family ended in an heiress, who was married to a younger son of Keith Earl Marischal.

When the horns of those creatures are of a different tincture from their bodies, they are then said to be attired, and the branches of their horns are called tyner; and, when their hoofs are of a different tincture, they are said to be unguled. The name of Parkhill carries argent, a stag tripping, proper, attired and unguled or. Mr Thomas Crawford's MS.

Strachan of Thornton in the Merns carries azure, a stag tripping or, attired and unguled gules. Ibid. See Plate of Achievements.

In the New Register, Sir James Strachan of Thornton, Minister at Keith in the North, carries or, an hart standing at a gaze azure, attired sable. Lyon Register.

Sir Alexander Strachan of Glenkindie, Knight, bears azure, a hart tripping or, attired and unguled gules; crest, a hart standing at a gaze as the former: motto, Non timeo sed caveo. Ibid. See Plate of Achievements.

There is a charter in the custody of Sir Alexander Strachan of Glenkindie for instructing the antiquity of his family, which I have seen, granted by Thomas Earl of Mar, to Adam Strachan and his wife, Margaret, the Earl's cousin, and to the children to be got by him on her, of the lands of Glenkenety, (now wrote Glenkindie) and a part of the lands of Glenbowel, then called Rumor; the charter wants a date; but, by the granter and witness, it appears to have been granted in the reign of King David II.

Standing at a gaze is said when these creatures stand with their four feet on the ground. The name of Jones, in England, carries sable, a stag standing at a gaze argent. Art. Her.

When they are represented lying down, they are said to be couchant or lodged.

The name of Hyslop carries argent, a stag, proper, lodged under a holly tree growing out of the base vert; and Archibald Hyslop, Stationer in Edinburgh, carries the same with a chief vert, charged with a book or, between two stars argent. New Register.

David Fairnie of Farlogie carries azure, a stag argent, lodged within a grove of trees vert, and, in chief, three stars of the second; crest, a greyhound courant, proper: motto, Qui sensis & vigilans. L. R.

The name of Tullideff carries azure, a hind couchant or, between two stars in chief, and a crescent in base argent. Pont's MS.

The name of Davidson carries azure on a fesse argent between three pheons or, a buck couchant gules. Workman's Manuscript, and in the New Register.

Sir William Davidson of Curriechill, Baronet, carries the same, and, in the dexter canton, the arms of Ulster, being argent, a sinister hand couped gules, as being a Baronet of England; crest, a youth from the middle holding in his right hand a man's heart, all proper: motto, Sapienter ci sincere:

Alexander Davidson of Cairnbrogie, Advocate, carries azure on a fesse couped argent, between three pheons or, a buck couchant gules, and attired sable. Ibid.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

Robert Davidson of Balgay, near Dundee, bears azure, on a fesse between three pheons argent, a stag courant gules, attired with ten tythes or; crest, a falcon's head couped, proper: motto, Viget in cinere virtus.

The name of Hartill, in England, bears argent, a hart lodged gules, on a green mount in base.

When deer, bucks, harts, &c. are running, they are said to be courant, or, in full course, as the surname of Rae bears argent, three roebucks in full course gules. The same is carried by Major Adam Rae; and, for crest, a buck standing at gaze, proper, motto, In onnia promptus. L. R.

When these beasts of game are erect on their hinder feet, they are said to be springing or salient.

The name of Strathallan carries azure, a hart springing or. Og. MS.

The name of Gilstand in England, bears vert, a hart springing argent.

The heads of these creatures are carried couped, erased, and frequently trunked or cabossed, as some say, which is the same.

Ballenden of Auchinoule, bears gules, a buck's head couped between three cross croislets fitted or. Pont's MS.

Thomas Ballenden of Auchinoule, was Justice-Clerk and Director of the Chancery, anno 1544. Sir John, his son and heir, was also Justice-Clerk in the reign of Queen Mary and King James VI. His son again was Sir Lewis, who was one of the Senators of the College of Justice, father of Sir James, who married a sister of the first Earl of Roxburgh; by whom he had

Sir William Ballenden of Broughton, Treasurer-Depute in the reign of King Charles II. and by that King created Lord Ballenden, anno 1661; he carried gules, a hart's head couped between three cross croislets, all within a double treasure, counter-flowered with flower-de-luces or; supporters, two women in rich habits, representing peace and justice: motto, Sicut in atria.

William Lord Ballenden adopted John Ker, younger son of William Earl of Roxburgh, and settled his estate upon him; and, in the year 1672, upon the death of William Lord Ballenden, Mr John took upon him the name and arms, and succeeded to the estate and honours, and carried his coat of arms as is above blazoned; and he again is succeeded by his son, the present Lord Ballenden, who does the same.

As for the names of Ballenden and Bannantine, they seem to me to be one, though they have different bearings.

I am of opinion that the hart's head, carried by the Ballendens of Broughton, is the armorial figure used by the abbacy of Holyroodhouse, and the baronies belonging thereto, such as the Canongate and Broughton; and that figure, assumed by Ballenden, is upon account of the last barony which was in the possession of the family of Auchinoule, as soon as they became great, upon the Reformation.

The story about the rise of these arms of Holyroodhouse is thus;

King David I. commonly called the Saint, being a-hunting on Holyrood-day, near to Edinburgh, there appeared a hart or a stag with a cross betwixt his horns, which run at the king so furiously, and dismounted him from his horse, that he was in hazard of being killed, if one of his attendants, Sir Gregan Crawford, had not interposed: The pious king, taking this as a reproof for hunting on such a holyday, erected a church on the place, called Holyroodhouse, monasterium sacri crucis, in 1128, and the head of a stag, with a cross between his horns, became the badge of that abbacy and its baronies; as also the armorial figures of Sir Gregan Crawford, and all his descendants, who carry argent, a stag's head erased with a cross croislet between his attires gules, to perpetuate the happy event in Sir Gregan's delivering King David; so that he and his posterity laid aside their paternal bearing, gules, a fesse ermine, carried by another branch of the name, of which before.

Crawfurd of Kerse, as descended of Sir Gregan, carries argent, a stag's head erased gules; and Crawfurd of Drumsoy bears the same.

Crawfurd of Comlarg carries argent, a stag's head erased sable, attired or, distilling drops of blood; crest, a dexter hand issuing out of a cloud, grasping a hart by the horns, and bearing him to the ground, all proper; with the motto, Tintum te robore reddam. L. R.
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

The name of Cairncross, in old charters writ Carnea Cruix, of which there was a Bishop of Ross, and an Abbot of Holyroodhouse, and other barons of that name, carried the same arms with the abbacy of Holyroodhouse. As Andrew Cairncross of Cowmalsie, argent, a stag's head erased, and, between the attiring or horns, a cross eroslet fitché, surmounted on the top with a mullet gules: motto, Recte faciendo neminem timeo. N. R.

Patrick Cairncross of Balnashanen, azure, a stag's head erased argent, attired or, with a cross eroslet betwixt them; crest, a dagger erect, proper: motto, Certa mine parte. Ibid.

George Park of Fulfordles, descended of the family of Parkswells, carries or, a fesse chequy, gules and argent, between three bucks' heads cabossed, all within a bordure of the second: motto, Providentia me committo. New Register.

A Hannay of old, now writ HANNAY; the principal family of the name was Ahanny of Sorbie, an old family in Galloway, carried, as in Pont's MS. argent, three roebucks' heads couped azure, collared or, with a bell pendent thereat, gules. But on the frontispiece of a book of curious poems, printed in anno 1622, and written by Mr Patrick Hannay, grandson of Donald Hanning of Sorbie, arc his arms in taille-douce, with his picture, being argent, three roebucks' heads couped azure, with a mullet in the collar point, for his difference; his father being a younger son of Hanning of Sorbie, with a cross eroslet fitchéd, issuing out of a crescent sable; for crest and motto relative thereto, Per ardua ad alta.

The lands of Sorbie are now possessed by others; but the family is at present represented by Mr Robert Hannay of Kingsmuir in Fife, who carries the last blazon without the mullet, and the same crest, with this motto, Cresco & spero. As in Plate of Achievements.

There is another family of the name still in Galloway, descended of Sorbie, viz. HANNAY of Kirkdole: but with what difference he carries the arms of Sorbie I know not.

The name of Roger, sable, a stag's head erased argent, attired or, holding a mullet in his mouth of the last. Pont's MS.

Others of that name give or, a fesse wavy, between three bucks passant sable.

John Coutts, sometime Provost of Montrose, carries argent, a stag's head erased gules, and, between the attirings, a phoen azure, all within a bordure ingrailed of the second. N. R.

The name of Couden, gules, a chevron between three stag's heads erased argent. Pont's MS.

Porteous of Halkshaw, azure, three harts' (or stag's) heads couped argent, attired with ten tyes or. Ibid.

George Porteous of Craig-Lockhart, one of his Majesty's Herald-Painters, azure, a thistle between three bucks' heads erased or; crest, a turtledove with an olive branch in her beak, all proper: motto, I wait my time. Lyon Register.

Cabossed, cabossed, or cabosset, and trunkeed, are allowed for the heads of beasts which are represented full-faced, and show no part of their necks. The term cabossed is said to be from an old French word, cabcocle, which signifies the head; but the French use the word massacré, for a head cabossed, which, Menestrier says, is a term of hunting crept into heraldry; for the heads of stag's, harts, and other beasts of game, which are due to the huntsman, are called massacré. The Latins, for heads cabossed, say Capita or obverterentia, or obversum capit; and, by some, caput truncatum.

'The MACKENZIES carry azure, a deer's head cabossed or. The first of this honourable name was one Colin Fitzgerald, son to the Earl of Kildare, or Desmond, in Ireland, who signalized himself by his bravery for the Scots against the Danes, at the battle of Largs, in the year 1263; so that King Alexander II. took him into favour, and bestowed upon him the lands of Kintail in Ross-shire. His son was Kenneth, and again, his son Kenneth, father of Murdo, designed in the charters of King David Bruce, filius Kenneth; by the Highlanders, Mackenneth; and by those in the Lowlands, MacKenzie, as were all the descendants in the lineal and collateral lines of the family, and which were numerous in a short time.

Alexander Mackenzie of Kintail, in a lineal descent, head of the family, was killed at Flodden with King James IV. 9th of September 1513, leaving John his son and heir, father of Kenneth, who, by his wife Elizabeth, daughter of John Stewart Earl of Athol, had Colin, his son and successor, a firm loyalist for Queen Mary. His eldest son and successor was Kenneth, who, for his father's and his own merit, was honoured by King James VI. with the dignity and title of Lord Mackenzie of Kintail, 19th of November 1609. He had issue by his first wife, a daughter of Ross of Balnagown, Colin his successor, who died, leaving only daughters; and by his second wife, a daughter of Ogilvie of Powrie, George, thereafter Earl of Seaforth, who married a daughter of the Lord Forbes, by whom he had George, his successor, and Colin Mackenzie, father of the worthy Doctor George Mackenzie, author of the two volumes of Biogrophy of his learned countrymen.

From George Earl of Seaforth was lineally descended Kenneth Earl of Seaforth, who by King James VII. was chosen and invested one of the Knights Companions of the most ancient Order of the Thistle, 1657, and afterwards honoured with the title of Marquis of Seaforth; but the letters patent could not pass the seals here. He married Frances Herbert, daughter of William Marquis of Powis in England, by whom he had Kenneth his son, who succeeded to his estate and dignity 1701.

The achievement of the family is azure, a deer's head cabossed or; crest, a mountain in flames, proper; supporters, two savages wreathed about the head and middle with laurel, with clubs erect in their hands, and fire issuing out of the top of them, all proper; and for motto, Luceo non uro.

From this noble family are branched many honourable families of the name of Mackenzie; these I shall here only mention whose arms I have met with on record.

GEORGE MACKENZIE Earl of Cromarty, Viscount of Tvat, Lord M'Leod and Castlehaven, lineally descended from Sir Roderick Mackenzie, a second son of Sir Colin Mackenzie of Kintail, one of the progenitors of the Earl of Seaforth, carried, quarterly, first or, a rock in flames, proper, for M'Leod; second azure, a buck's head cabossed or, for Mackenzie; third gules, three legs of a man armed, proper, conjoined in the centre at the upper part of the thighs, flexed in triangle, garnished and spurred or, formerly belonging to the M'Leod's, as old possessors of the Isle of Man; fourth argent, on a pale sable, an imperial crown within a double treasure, flowered and counter-flowered with flower-de-luces gules, for Erskine of Inverail, as a coat of alliance; supporters, two savages wreathed about the middle with laurel, holding buttons over their shoulders, proper; crest, the sun in his splendour; motto, Luceo non uro.

The renowned Sir GEORGE MACKENZIE of Rosehaugh, Knight, Advocate to their Majesties Charles II. and James VII. son of Simon Mackenzie of Lochlyne, brother to George, second Earl of Seaforth, bears azure, a deer's head cabossed or, within two laurel branches disposed orle-ways of the last; crest, an eagle rising from a rock, proper: motto, Firma & ardua. L. R.

SIR RODERICK MACKENZIE of Findon, son of Mr Alexander Mackenzie of Kilcoy, brother to the Lord Mackenzie of Kintail, progenitor of the Earls of Seaforth, bears Mackenzie, within a bordure or, charged with eight crescents azure; crest, a crescent argent: motto, Crescitque virtute. L. R.

COLIN MACKENZIE of Redcastle, whose great-grandfather was Roderick Mackenzie of that Ilk, predecessor to the Earl of Seaforth, bears Mackenzie, within a bordure chequé, or and azure; crest, a man's heart in flames, within two palm branches, disposed orle-ways, all proper: motto, Ferendum & sperandum. Ibid.

SIR ALFRED MACKENZIE of Coull, Baronet, descended of Seaforth; the first of which family married the daughter and heiress of Chisholm of Comar. He carries, quarterly, first and fourth Mackenzie; second and third gules, a boar's head couped argent, for Chisholm; crest, a boar's erected or, between the attirings of a stag fixed to the scalp sable: motto, Pulchrior ex arduis. N. R.

Mr John Mackenzie of Delvin, one of the principal Clerks of the Session, third lawful son to Sir Kenneth Mackenzie of Coull, bears his father's quartered arms, within a bordure nebule argent; crest, a man's arm issuing from the torse near the shoulder, and holding a dart, all proper: motto, Recte ad ardua. Lyon Register.
KENNETH MACKENZIE of Suddy, descended of Seaforth, carries Mackenzie, with-in a bordure embattled or; crest, a dexter hand grasping a sword in bend, proper: motto, Sic tur ad astra. Ibid.

The surname of THOMSON carries argent, a stag’s head cabossed gules, attired or, and, on a chief azure, a cross croiset lachet of the third, between two spur-rowels of the first. Pont’s MS.

The name of DINGWALL carries azure, a buck’s head cabossed or, between three spur-rowels argent. Pont’s MS.

The horns or attires of beasts are frequently borne in arms; Sylvester Petra Sancta, treating of them, says, “Cornua autem, spolia venatorum, non postrema, “ & qui idem in virorum nobilium tesseras gentilissimi immigrarunt;” of which he gives us several examples borne by noble families in the empire, as those of VIT-TEMBERI, or, three attires of a hart in fesse sable; thus blazoned in French upon the margin of his book, d’or à trois perches de cerf, mises en faces de sable.

The surname of BOYLE, with us, bears or, three harts’ horns gules, sinate fesswys, 2 and 1. The principal family of the name is Boyle of Kelburn, of an old standing in the sheriffdom of Ayr. In the reign of Alexander the III. they possessed the lands of Kelburn; for, in writs about that time, mention is made of Ricardus Boyle, Deus-nus de Caulburn, i.e. Kelburn: as in an acquittance from Walterus Cammin, Dominus de Rogallan, i.e. Rowallan: And, in the charter-chest of my Lord Glasgow, there is a charter of Hugo Boyle, in anno 1399, whereby he makes a mortification to the monks of Paisley for the welfare of his soul.

This family continued down in a direct line till the reign of King Charles I. that John Boyle of Kelburn, having no male-issue, married his only daughter and heiress, Gissel Boyle, to David Boyle of Halkshill, a cadet of his own family, his great-grandfather being a brother of it; whose grandchild, David Boyle of Kelburn, in the year 1600, was created Lord Boyle, and, afterwards, in the year 1703, Earl of Glasgow, Viscount of Kelburn, Lord Boyle of Stewarton. He carries, quarterly, first and fourth or, an eagle displayed gules, as a coat of augmentation, upon his creation as Earl, being formerly the crest of the family; second and third, parted per bend crenellé, argent and gules, for the surname of Boyle in England, as a coat of affections with the Boyles in England; and, over all, by way of surtout, an escutcheon or, three harts’ horns gules, 2 and 1, the paternal coat of Boyle of Kelburn; which arms are supported on the dexter by a savage, proper, and on the sinister by a lion rampant, parted per bend crenellé, argent and gules: crest, an eagle, with two heads and necks displayed, parted per pale crenellé, or and gules: motto, Dominus providet.

The name of Cocks, in England, carries argent, a chevron between three attires of stags fixed to the escallops aure.

Having treated of beasts of the game with horns, I shall proceed to others without horns, carried in arms with us and other countries.

The-hore is carried in arms by an old family with us, of the name of CLELAND of that Ilk, in the county of Lanark; it is said they were hereditary foresters to the old Earls of Douglas, which gave rise to their arms. After the death of Alexander III. James Cleland of Cleland joined with William Wallace against the English, for the relief of his country, as in Mr Blair’s History of Wallace. He afterwards stood firm in his loyalty for King Robert the Bruce; and, for his good service, that King gave to him several lands lying within the barony of Calder in West-Lothian. From him was descended William Cleland of that Ilk, who, in the reign of King James III. married Jean, daughter of William Lord Somerville, (as in the Manuscript of that Family). From them branched Cleland of Faskine, Cleland of Monkland, and Cleland of Cartness; which family ended of late in an heiress, married to Sir William Weir of Blackwood.

ALEXANDER CLELAND of that Ilk, with his cousin William Cleland of Faskine, were both killed fighting valiantly for their king in the fatal battle of Flodden, 1513. I have seen the seal of arms of this Alexander appended to a charter, of the date 1498, upon which was an arm salient, with a hunting-horn about his neck. James Cleland of that Ilk, an eminent man in the time of King James V. whom he frequently attended at hunting, as in the abovementioned Manuscript, married a daughter of Hepburn of Bonnyton, descended of the Earl of Bothwell, by whom he had his son and successor.

Alexander Cleland of that ilk, eminent for his loyalty in behalf of Queen Mary. He married Margaret, a daughter of Hamilton of Hags, by whom he had William his son and successor, who married the sister of Walter Stewart, the first Lord Blantyre; their eldest son, Alexander, married the sister of John Hamilton, first Lord Bargeny. Their son and heir sold the lands of Cleland to a cousin of his own name. Major William Cleland, one of the Commissioners of the Customs in Scotland, great-grandson of the last-mentioned Alexander Cleland of that ilk, carries the principal arms of the family, as a tessera of his blood and primogeniture, viz. azure, a hare salient argent, with a hunting-horn vert, hanging about its neck, garnished saltire or. crest, a falcon standing upon a left-hand glove, proper: motto, Non sibi; at other times, For sport, supported by two greyhounds, as in the Lyon Register and Plate of Achievements.

Cleland of Faskine carries as above, with the addition of a chief argent, charged with a sword fesseways azure, hilted and pommelled or. Lyon Register.

The name of Stronachladdie in England carries argent, three cones sable, 2 and 1.

The otter lives both in land and water, and is frequently carried issuing out of fesses or bars waved, which represent rivers as before observed; and this creature by some heralds is said to represent a shifty warrior.

The surname of Meldrum carries argent, a demi-otter issuing out of a bar waved sable; of which before, quartered with Seaton of Meldrum, for which see Plate of Achievements.

We meet with several of this name in the charters of King William. Alexander de Melghrum, i.e. Meldrum, is witness in the resignation of the lands of Beithward, by John de Strathbern, 1278; and, in anno 1299, William Lord Meldrum is one of those employed to treat about King David's redemption. (Abercromby's Hist. Vol. II. p. 115.) Williamus Dominus de Meldrum is mentioned in a regluation at the instance of the abbot of Aberbrothick; and another, Archibald Meldrum de Classy, is one of the assizers in the perambulation between Easter and Wester-Kinghorns, in the year 1547. For which see Haddington's Collections.

Mr George Meldrum of Crombie carries quarterly, first and fourth argent, a demi-otter issuing out of a bar waved sable, for Meldrum; second and third argent, three unicorns' heads couped sable, for Preston; all within a bordure of the last; crest, a dexter-hand holding a book: motto, Mens immota manet. New Register.

Lithgow of Drygrange in Teviotdale carries argent, a demi-otter sable, issuing out of a loch in base, proper.

William Lithgow, son and heir to David Lithgow of Drygrange, gets a new charter from the abbot and convent of Melrose, of the lands of Drygrange, for his special service in resisting, to the hazard of his life, depredators and robbers of the dominion of Melrose, as the charter bears, (which I have seen in the custody of Drygrange) of the date 18th of January 1539; which charter is confirmed by King James V. the same year; and from which William is lineally descended the present Lithgow of Drygrange.

The name of Otterburn carry otters' heads, relative to the name. I have met with one Allan Otterburn, Secretary to Murdoch Duke of Albany, so designed in a charter of that Duke's. And in a charter of King James II. Nicolas Otterburn is designed, Clericus Rotulorum Regni nostri.

Otterburn of Redhall, argent, goutté de sable, a chevron between three otters' heads couped of the last, and, on a chief azure, a crescent or. Pont's MS.

Fullarton of that ilk, in the shire of Ayr, carries argent, three otters' heads erased gules; crest, a camel's head, with the motto, Lux in tenebris. Supporters, two savages wreathed about the head and middle with laurel, all proper, holding in their hands branches of laurel.

This is a family of an old standing, as by several ancient charters which I have seen. Sir Adam Fullarton of that ilk, son of Reginald Fullarton of the same, obtains a new charter of the lands of Fullarton and others, from James, High
OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

Steward of Scotland, in the year 1240, which is narrated and confirmed afterwards by a charter of King Robert II. first year of his reign, which contains these words, "Noveritis nos charta nostra confirmasse Adamo de Fullarton, illas donationes & concessiones quas Jacobus senescallus Scotice, recolendae memoriae, "avus noster, fecit Adamo de Fullarton militi, filio Alani de Fullarton, de terra "de Fullarton, de terra de Sheultoun de terra de Gailes," &c.

This Sir Adam is frequently to be met with as a witness in that King's charters, designed Dominus Adamus de Fullarton, Dominus de Corsbie, upon the account that he had a charter of the last-mentioned lands of Corsbie from King Robert II. and his son and successor was Rankin Fullarton de codem. From him is descended William Fullarton of that Ilk, who carries the abovementioned arms, as in Plate of Achievements.

FULLARTON of Dreghorn, as a second son of Fullarton of that Ilk, carries the foresaid arms, with a crescent for difference. L. R.

FULLARTON of Kinnaber, argent, on a fesse between three otters' heads erased gules, two mullets of the first: with the motto, Mibi terraque lacusque. Ibid.

There is another ancient family of the name of FULLARTON, designed after the same, in the shire of Forfar, whose arms are in Workman's MS. argent, on a chevron, accompanied with three otters' heads couped gules, 2 and 1, a crescent between three stars of the first.

There is a charter, in the Earl of Haddington's Collections, of King Robert the Bruce, the 21st year of his reign, to Galfredus Fullarton, of the lands of Fullarton, and to his wife Agnes, and the heirs of her body, as the King's Fowler; in which office he and his successors were obliged to serve the king's house with wild fowl, when the king and his successors shall come to Forfar, where Fullarton was to be entertained with a servant and two horses. I add here a few words of the charter, "Servingo nobis & heredibus nostris, infra Vicecomitatum de Forfar, officio au "cups, &c. omnes acaet et volucres quas capere potuerunt et habeant, in domo "regis mensam, pro se ipso et uno serviente suo, et uno garone."

The elephant is commended for its good qualities, and as the emblem of wit, docility, and meekness; and sometimes it is to be met with in armories, and with us as a supporter of the arms of the Lord Oliphant, relative to the name.

The name of ELFINGSTON or ELFINSTON, in England, bears gules, an elephant passant argent, tuisked or. Morgan's Her.

JOHN FOUNTAIN of Melton, in Yorkshire, Esq. bears or, a fesse gules between three elephants' heads erased sable.

The elephant's proboscide as an armorial figure, flexed and reflexed in form of an S, is to be seen in the English herald-books; and there the camel also for his indefatigable perseverance, and sometimes as relative to the name of the bearer, as by the surname of Camel, in England, azure, a camel passant argent. Morgan's Heraldry.

The bull and the ox are emblems of labour and agriculture, and the cow of fertility; besides these qualities, they are carried as relative to the name of the bearers; their postures are ordinarily passant, but the bull often effrayed, i.e. erected or salient. When their horns or hoofs are of different tinctures from their bodies, they are then said to be unguled and horned of such tinctures. The bull is sometimes represented with a collar about his neck, with bells, for which he is said to be collared and belled; and, by the French, acolé and clariné.

The name of BEVILLE in England, carries ermine, a bull passant gules, horned and unguled or; and the BOFFINI in the Dauphinate carry the same, as equivocally relative to their name. So are the arms of the EPISCOPAL SEE of OXFORD, sable, a bar between three busts of Queens, arayed and vailed argent, and crowned or, in chief, and, in base, an ox of the second passing over a ford, proper, armed and unguled or.

The heads of bulls are frequent in arms, and, as other heads, of which before, represent the whole creature.

The name of TURNBULL carried argent, a bull's head erased sable; of late, three of them disposed 2 and 1. The first of the name with us is said to be a strong man of the name of Ruel, who turned a wild bull by the head which violently ran against King Robert Bruce in Stirling Park, for which he got from that king the.
lands of Bedrule, and the name of Turnbull. Edward Howes, in his History of England, page 237, mentions this man in the minority of King David Bruce, at the battle of Halidonhill: His words are, "A certain stout champion of great stature, who, for a fact by him done, was called Turnbull, advanced before the Scots army, and a great mastive dog with him, and challenged any of the English army to fight with him a combat; one Sir Robert Venal, a Norfolk man, by the King of England's leave, took him up, fought, and killed him, and his dog too." This gentleman's son, it seems, Sir James Turnbull, with Sir John Hali- burton, were killed near Nisbet-Muir in the Merse, in an engagement with the English, in anno 1355. For which see Abercromby's History, vol. 2. page 108.

I have seen the armorial seal of Turnbll of Minto, appended to a charter of his, 1455, (penes Comitem de Home) which had only one bull's head, and that cabossed. Of late these of this name multiply the heads to three.

John Turnbull of Stickcathran, descended of the family of Bedrule, carries argent, three bulls' heads erased sable, armed vert, within a bordure indented of the second; crest, a bull's head erased: motto, Audacent fortuna. New Register.

John Turnbull of Know, descended of the family of Minto, carries argent, an ear of rye vert, between three bull's heads erased sable, armed of the second; crest, a bull's head cabossed sable, armed vert: motto, Courage. L. R.

The name of Bullen, in England, carries argent, a chevron azur between three bulls' heads cabossed sable. These arms were carried by Thomas Bullen, grandson of Galfredus Bullen, Lord Mayor of London, in anno 1458, father of Anna Bullen, Marchioness of Pembroke, who was Queen to Henry VIII. of England, 1533, to whom she bare Queen Elizabeth. Thomas Bullen was dignified with the title of Earl of Wiltshire, and Viscount of Rochford, who, with his son and daughter the Queen, were all beheaded the 19th of May 1536.

The name of Stark, with us, has its rise from just such another action as that of Turnbull's, but later; by saving King James IV. from a bull in the forest of Cumbernauld, by one of the name of Muirhead, who, for his strength, was called Stark; and, to show his descent from Muirhead, he carries the armorial figures of Muirhead, with a bull's head, viz. azur, a chevron between three acorns in chief or, for Muirhead, and a bull's head cabased in base of the second. The same is carried by John Stark of Killermont; and, for crest, a bull's head erased argent, distilling drops of blood, proper: motto, Fortior is fortia facta. N. R.

The name of Bull, with us, carries or, three bulls' heads cabossed gules. The first of this name in Scotland, was one William Bullock, an Englishman, who was Governor of Coupaur in the reign of Edward III. and was persuaded by Sir William Douglas to give up that place; which he not only did, but with the whole garrison came over to the Bruce's interest, and was very assistant in taking the castle of Edinburgh from the English, as our historians say.

The canton of Uri, in Switzerland, which signifies a wild bull, carries or, the head of a bull cabosed with a ring through its nose gules, as Favin.

As for coer, the Canton of Berne, in Switzerland, carries for its ensign 'or, two cows gules, in pale, horned, collared, belled, and unguled azure; as the French say; 'Dor à deux vaches de gueules accornées, accollées, clarinées, & anglées d'azur. Orensfinse, a writer, in his book Fou d'Armoric, says, these arms do represent their large and fertile pastures; others say that they are relative to the name of the ancient Lords of that country, called Vacceens.

The name of Cabes de Vaca in Spain, carries cows' heads relative to the name. The first of this family, says Favin, in his Theatre of Honour, was one Martin, a great master of Cows in Spain, who conducted the Christian army that was marching through the mountains against the Moors, by whose good conduct the Christians fell upon them, and routed them entirely in the plains of Tolosa; for which good service, Alphonso King of Leon nobilitated Martin, and gave him the name of Cabes de Vaca; and, for arms, chequé gules and or, within a bordure azure, charged with six cows' heads argent; which Favin blazons, Eschequéte de gueules et d'or, de sept pièces (here he numbers the panes, of the chequé as I observed before) à la bordure d'azur, chargée de six têtes de vaches d'argent.

OF FOUR-FOOTED BEASTS.

There is an ancient family with us in the shire of Tweeddale, of the surname of VACH, pronounced now VIECH, designed of Dawick, the chief of the name. They of old, as by their seals, carried only one cow’s head erased, to show the significance of the name; but, by the modern custom, they are now multiplied to the number 3, 2, and 1.

It is said that one of this family was very much assistant to King Robert the Bruce in his extremities, by bringing into his camp a herd of cows from the enemy, for which he was called Vach. However serviceable he was to his king, I rather think that these arms are carried, as speaking to the name Vach, or vacca a cow.

I have seen a charter of Archibald Earl of Douglas, of the land of North-Sinton, which he grants diteo armigero nostro Barnabe le Vach de Dawyk, anno 1427.

Paul Vach of Dawick resigns the lands of Dawick in favours of his son William, in the year 1462; and, in the year 1492, Alexander Vach, son of William, is infief in the lands of Dawick. Anno 1536, William Vach of Dawick resigns his lands with these of North-Sinton, in favours of his son and apparent heir, James Vach. Which evidences are in the custody of Robert Vechte, the lineal representor of the family, son of John Vechte of Dawick, Presenter of Signatures in his Majesty’s Exchequer, and his wife, Margaret Nisbet, of the family of Nisbet of that Ilk. He carries argent, three cows’ heads erased sable; and, for crest, another of the same affronté; with the motto, Fumam extendimus factis. L. R. and Plate of Achievements.

Sheep, the emblem of meekness and sign of fertility, are carried in arms upon such account, and also as relative to the name of the bearer.

Schaaffhausen, one of the Cantons of Switzerland, carries or, a ram salient sable, armed or. Schaaff, in Germany, signifies a sheep.

The name of Winram, with us, gules, a ram passant argent. The principal family of the name was designed from the Ram-stone of Ratho, and after of Woolstone, whose heiress was married to Allan Lockhart of Cleghorn.

Winram of Curriehill, and Winram of Libberton, were younger sons of Woolstone, and carried the foresaid arms with suitable differences.

James Winram of Eyemouth is representor of the Winrams of Libberton.

The name of Lamb bears relative to their name, azure, three holy lambs, 2 and 1, carrying a staff and flag argent over their shoulders. These of that name, in England, bear gules, three holy lambs with banner-rolls over their shoulders argent, charged with a cross of the first, being the cross of England.

Robert Lamb of Duncan, on his seal of arms appended to a charter of his to Alexander Lord Home, Great Chamberlain of Scotland, in the year 1492, had three pilgrims’ staves.

Mr John Lamhie of Dunkenny, in our New Register of arms, carries azure, three crosiers pale-ways in fesse or, a saltier couped in base argent; crest, a hand holding a crosier, proper; motto, Per varios casus.

The town of St Johnston, alias Peth, has for arms an eagle displayed with two heads or, surmounted on the breast with an ezeutechon gules, charged with the holy lamb passant regardant carrying the banner of St Andrew within a double treisure, flowered and counter-flowered argent.

The arms of the country of Gothland, quartered in the Achievement of the Kings of Denmark, are, gules, the paschal-lamb carrying a guidon or bannerole argent, marked with a cross gules.

Sir Robert Jason of Broad-Sommerford, in Wiltshire, Baronet, bears azure, a tushon d’or within a treisure of Scotland of the last, that is, Jason’s GoldenFleece, relative to his name.

Rams’ heads are also used in arms, either couped, erased, or cabossed.

Sir John Besdun of Steeple-Bumsted, Baronet, bears argent, a chevron sable between three rams’ heads couped azure.

What is said of the sheep may be also said of the goat, and of its posture and parts in arms. The name of Bager in England, carries gules, a goat passant argent; and the name of Gotley there, ermine, a goat’s head erased and horned or, as relative to the name.
REPTILIA, OR CREEPING THINGS.

There are many other beasts used in arms, which for brevity's sake I pass over, especially seeing they have no other terms of blazon than those I have already mentioned in the former examples: I shall, therefore, end here with four-footed beasts, only mentioning one of a monstrous form, carried with us; its body is like a wolf, having four feet with long toes, and a tail; it is headed like a man, called in our books a warwolff, carried by Dickenson of Winkleston, azure, a warwolf passant, and three stars in chief argent: so blazoned by Mr Thomas Crawfurd, and illuminated in several books; which are also to be seen cut upon a stone above an old entry of a house in the Cowgate in Edinburgh, above the foot of Libberton's wynd, which belonged formerly to the name of Dickison, which name seems to be from the Dicksons by the stars which they carry.

REPTILIA; OR CREEPING THINGS.

These are in arms too, and have some peculiar terms in the science. Toads and frogs, when represented sitting in water, holding up their heads without motion, which some call in that posture, the lording of frogs, their heads appearing above the water like helmets; and, when in this posture in blazon, they are said to be erceded, as in the arms of Botreaux in England, argent, three toads erect sable. Nicol Upton, an English writer about the year 1428, speaking of the Lord Botreaux's arms, says, "Quae quidem arma olim portaverunt reges Francorum"; and others following him since, have asserted that the Kings of France, of old, carried three toads. Menestrier, in his chapter of the Rise and Antiquity of the Flower-de-luces of France, has sufficiently refuted that story of the toads.

Tortoise, an enemy to vipers, and for the delicacy of its flesh, and beauty of its shell, is carried in arms.

The name of Gowdie in England, carries vert, a tortoise passant argent; and Cowpent there, azure, a tortoise erected or.

Snails are also carried by the name of Shelly in England, sable, a fesse between three house-snails argent.

With us, the name of Barton, carries gules, three house-snails or. Pont's Manuscript.

One of this name, Andrew Barton, commander of the Scots fleet, fought the English in the year 1511. In the New Register of Arms, Robert Barton, Writer in Edinburgh, carries only argent, an anchor in pale azure, placed in the sea, proper, between two mullets of the second, all within a bordure argent; crest, a raven rising sable: motto, His securitas.

The name of Studman with us argent, a fesse vert, between three house-snails azure.

Serpents are waved when they move forward, and then in blazon are said to be gliding; the French ondyante, and the Latin, undans: But when the serpent casts itself into a knot, it is said to be nuved.

Sleaeh of Sleith-Houses carries or, three piles issuing from the chief sable, and in base two serpents gliding fesse-ways in pale, proper. Workman's Manuscript.

The name of Ducat bears argent, three serpents gliding fesse-ways in pale azure. Ibid.

The name of Nathailey, in England, gules, an adder nuved or. Art. Heraldry.

The Principality of Milan in Italy, argent, a demi-infant gules, issuing out of the mouth of a serpent gliding pale-ways azure, crowned or. Sylvester Petra Sancta blazons these arms thus, "Bon scutaria in modum pali, sinuosa & cyanea, in aureoq & redinita, cum puerio emergente puniceo ex ore illius in parrula argento illuso." There are several stories about the rise of this odd figure: It is told, that there was a giant called Vox, very troublesome in Italy, who boasted he was come of Alexander the Great, and carried on the top of his helmet this figure for crest. Otho, Prince of Milan, overcame and killed him; and, in sign of his victory, took Volux's crest, a serpent vomiting a child, for his armorial bearing, as the custom was of old for victors to do, and transmitted the same to his posterity the Dukes of Milan. But Menestrier will have those to be speaking arms to the name of an ancient family, Anglere, which comes from anguis a serpent, upon account that a branch of the family of Angure were Princes of Milan of old, which have been, and still continue the arms of Milan. Monsieur Louis of France, Duke of Orleans, who married the daughter and sole heir of Galeazzo Duke of Milan, carried, quarterly, first and fourth Orleans, azure, semé of flower-de-luces or, in chief a label of three points argent; second and third the arms of Milan as above blazoned; which were also used by other princes, who had, or pretended right to the Dutchy of Milan.
REPTILIA, OR CREEPING THINGS.

Philip of Spain, who married Queen Mary of England, marshalled the arms of Milan, as before blazoned, with his own, as on his seal of arms given us by Urcus.

The dragon has been used as an ensign both by the Roman and German Emperors. Sir Richard Baker, in his History of England, says, Utur Pendragon, King of the Britons, had pourtrayed on his ensign a dragon with a golden head.

The Kings of Denmark have been used to marshal in their achievement the arms of the Dutchy of Sleswick, gules, a dragon crowned or, ever since Christian, the first of that name, King of Denmark, united the Dutchy of Sleswick to Denmark, about the year 1448.

The name of Kilgour, argent, a dragon with wings displayed, within a bordure inwardly circular sable, charged with three crescents of the first. Mackenzie's Heraldry.

The name of Drake, in England, argent, a serpent with wings, (called by the English a wivereden) displayed and tail-nuved gules; as in Carter's Analysis of Honour. And Humphrey Blake, Esq. there, one of the Commissioners of the Customs in Scotland, carries the same creature; and for crest, a demi-wivereden issuing out of the wreath. As in Plate of Achievements.

To put an end to this chapter, I shall only here mention the hedgehog, or urchin, said to be the emblem of frugality.

The name of Herries carries argent, three urchins sable, carried by the Lord Herries, chief of the name; supported by two savages, proper, holding clubs in their hands; crest, a buck's head or, attired with ten tynes argent; and for motto, Dominus dedit.

The first of this family is said to be descended of a younger son of the House of Vendome in France, who carried in their arms porcupines; and the urchins being the diminutives of the porcupine, have been carried by the family of Herries, which has been of a good old standing in Scotland; for in the Register of Kelso, Nigellus de Hereze is witness in a charter of King William; and long after, John de Herries, miles, is a witness in a charter of King David II. And in a charter of King Robert III. in the first year of his reign, to John Tailer of Hairleigh, John Herries, miles, is witness: This Sir John got the lands of Terreagles in that king's reign, and the family was dignified with the title of Lord Herries by King James IV. in the person of Sir Herbert Herries. His son was Andrew Lord Herries, who was killed at Flodden; and he was succeeded by his son William Lord Herries, who left three daughters, his co-heirs, in the year 1543: The eldest of them was married to Sir John Maxwell, a younger son of the Lord Maxwell, who, in her right, became Lord Herries; he quartered the arms of Herries, as before, blazoned with his paternal arms, argent, a saltier sable, and in chief a label of three points gules; with the supporters, crest and motto of Herries Lord Herries, as before: At last their successor, Maxwell Lord Herries, as heir-male, succeeded to the family of the Lord Maxwell Earl of Nithsdale; and so the dignities of the Lord Herries being lesser, were swallowed up by the greater. The Earl of Nithsdale carries the urchin in his arms, of which before.

Herries of Mabie, in Galloway, carries argent, three urchins sable, 2 and 1, and have been in use to adorn their arms with the crest and motto of their chief the Lord Herries.

Those of this family are descended in a direct line from Robert Herries, youngest son to Sir Herbert Herries of Terreagles, (who died the 4th of June 1442) and Margaret Douglas, daughter to the Earl of Douglas, called the Black Douglas. The present John Herries of Mabie, as the linear male representative of the family, carries the above arms. As in Plate of Achievements.
OF FOWLS AND BIRDS.

In page 61, I omitted a standing family of the name of Gifford, which I here mention, viz. Gifford of Wethersta in the Island of Zetland, now represented by Thomas Gifford of Busta there, as heir-male lineally descended of the family of Wethersta, 200 years standing in that island. The abovementioned Thomas Gifford of Busta carries the arms of the family of Wethersta, as representor thereof, being gules, three bars ermine, within a bordure or; crest, a hart's head, proper; with the motto, Spare when you have sought. Recorded in the Lyon Register.

CHAP. V.

OF FOWLS AND BIRDS.

I begin with the eagle, which is said by our ancient heralds and others to be the Queen of Birds, as the Lion is said to be the King of Beasts; they are both frequent in arms all Europe over. Josephus de Bello Jud. cap. 5. speaking of the Roman Eagle, says, "Aquila legioni apud Romanos præst, regina omnium avium, & cadem valentissima, unde etiam imperii signum ipsis est, & velut omen victorie in quosunque eat." The black eagle is said to be the bravest bird, the emblem of magnanimity and fortitude of mind; and of such a colour was the eagle of the Roman Emperors, now used by the Germans, because the colour black is the strongest colour, and appears at greatest distance. Sylvester Petra Sancta says, "Cur Imperii Aquila sit Jurva? quia hic est aquile genusius color, & quia ideum color censerii potest colorum omnium potentissimus." Yet, to speak as a herald, whatever colour the eagle be of, it does not lessen the honour of the bearer, for the Roman Emperors carried the eagle in different colours. Caius Marius carried the eagle white, to show his victory. Pompey had it white also, in a blue field; and Julius Caesar had it of gold, in a red field, to represent his eminency; and Octavius, after he had overcome his enemies, and given peace to the world, reassumed the black, eagle in a gold field, and it is continued in these tinctures with the German Emperors. And, which is most to be taken notice of, the eagle appears with two heads, which seems to be contrary to nature, for the rule, in armories is, that every creature ought to be placed in its natural form, if there be no special reason for doing otherwise.

There are various opinions, both of antiquaries and heralds, about the time and reason, when and why the Imperial Eagle came to be represented with two heads. Some assert that it was so used by the Roman Emperors, and bring in, for proof, the pillar of Trajanus, on which was engraved a soldier with a shield, charged with an eagle with two heads, which Justus Lipsius testifies. To this others answer, that it could not be the Imperial Eagle, which no soldier durst presume to carry; and tell us, that it was only a sign or token of the union of two legions in one, or of one legion under the command of two generals.

Some again say, the Germans were the first that carried an eagle with two heads, from the defect they gave to Varus, when they took the two standards of two legions commanded by him; but this is not supported by any proof.

Others more probably tell us, that it is not one eagle with two heads, but two eagles, the one laid above the other, and their heads separate looking different ways, which represent the two heads of the empire after it was divided into East and West, as Cuspidion, "Non enim bieeps est aquila, ut imperitum vulgus credit, sed duas simul, quorum altera alteram expansis alas obietit: And Beckmannus, in his Notitia Dignitatum Imperii, page 179, is of the same opinion, as was also the great Bellarmine, in his Book of the Translation of the Empire.

Our latest writers are of opinion, that the Emperors of the East, long after the division of the empire, were the first that carried the eagle with two heads, upon the account that there were often two emperors together on the throne, who had their effigies together on one side of their seals and coins, but on the other side they thought not fit to have two shields with one and the same figure, but one shield, in which they placed the two eagles, one above the other, with their heads separate; and which practice was afterwards imitated by the Emperors of the Western Empire, upon the decay of the Eastern, especially by Sigismund, who joined both the eagles together, with their heads separate, to show the sovereignty of the two empires enjoined in his person; which practice was continued by his successors: And this is the most feasible reason for the Imperial Eagle with two heads, which heralds have always been in use to blazon, a double eagle displayed, when its wings are expanded, and its breast fully seen.

Menestrier, in his Aeuvre Methodique des Armories, blazon the arms of the empire thus, d'or à l'aigle éployé à deux têtes, becqué, lampassée, membres & diadémé de gueules, chargée en cœur de l'escuison des armes de sa famille.

When eagles or other birds of prey have their beaks, legs and talons, of different colour from their bodies, they are then said to be beaked, membred, and armed, of such tinctures; and the French say, bequé, membré; and the Latins rostratus, cruriatus, & armatus.

The two heads of the Imperial Eagle are surrounded with an annulet or circle gules, for which it is said to be diadémé; which is peculiar to the Imperial Eagle, and a more sovereign sign than to be crowned as the eagles of other princes are. Thus, Sylvester Petra Sancta, cap. 57, "De aquila tesseraria, diadema illi ex "vita seu lasciniola coloris punicei circumponitur regulariter, aquile alie corona "ordinaria solent redimiri; illa peculiariter etiam Gallice a facialis diadema nuncupatur; aquile vero alie dicuntur in co idiomate coronae." So that diadé-"mate is a peculiar mark of dignity of the Imperial Eagle; but other princes' eagles may be crowned with open or close crowns, and said to be couronné, and not diadémé.

The imperial ensign of the Roman Empire is blazoned or, a double eagle with two heads displayed sable, diadémé, beaked, membred, and armed gules. Sylvester Petra Sancta blazons them thus, "Aquila & biceps & furva, ostro diade-"mata rostrata & cruriata, in purnam auro conspersa, tesser a est semper augusta "Romani Imperii," fig. 12. Plate X. Yet Charles the Great of France, and the successors of his body, as Emperors of Germany, carried the Imperial Eagle of a different tincture, and in a field of another colour; as Marcus Gilbertus Dzwurren-"nius tells us, azure, an eagle with two heads displayed or, diadémé, beaked, membred, and armed gules, with the escutcheon of France on its breast; but when the German Emperors came in, after the extinction of the French Emperors, they carried the arms of the empire, as before, with the escutcheon of the proper arms of the families they came from, as do now those of the House of Austria.

The Imperial Eagle on seals, coins and paintings, has been sometimes represented, not in a shield, but by way of a supporter, having on its breast the shield of arms of the family of the present emperor, and its two heads always diadémé; and above them in the middle is placed an imperial crown with pendants, and the eagle's right foot holds a sword, and the left a sceptre pale-ways, proper.

The eagle with two heads is not only frequent in the arms of the Germans, but in those of other nations; and with us, Maxwell Earl of Nithsdale, argent, an eagle with two heads displayed sable, beaked, membred, and armed gules; of which before, Chap. 16.

The Macdonalds Lords of the Isles, carried, as in our old books, or, a double eagle displayed gules, surmounted of a lymphad sable, and, in the dexter chief point, a right hand couped gules; supporters, two bears, with arrows sticking in their bodies, all proper; crest, a raven sable, standing on a rock azure; so illustrated in W. MS. Other books give the eagle with one head.

Donald Macdonald of Moydart, Captain of Clan-Ranald, carries quarterly, first argent, a lion rampant gules, armed or; second or, a dexter hand couped in fesse, holding a cross croisetted fitchetted gules; third or, a lymphad or a galley with her oars saltier-ways; and in base a salmon nuitant in a sea vert; fourth argent, an oak tree vert, surmounted of an eagle or; crest, a castle, proper: motto, My hope is constant in thee. L. R.

The Donaldsons, being Macdonalds, originally carry the figures of Macdonald, viz. or, a double eagle with wings displayed, surmounted by a galley or lymphad sable, armed or langued gules; in the dexter chief canton a left hand cupped of the last, by Alexander Donaldson of Hilton, with a mullet for his difference; in the Lyon Register, anno 1668.
The name of Aitchison carries argent, an eagle with two heads displayed sable, on a chief vert, two mullets or. The chief family of this name was Acheson of Gosford.

Aitchison of Sydserf, argent, an eagle with two heads displayed sable, on a chief vert, two spur-rowels or, within a bordure inveced of the second. New Register.

Captain John Aitchison in Pittenweem carries the same as above, with a cross staff in chief betwixt two spur-rowels; crest, an astrolabe, proper; motto, Observe. Ibid. Sir Archibald Aitchison, Bart. the foresaid principal bearing, with the badge of Nova Scotia; crest, a cock standing on a trumpet: motto, Vigilantibus. MacKenzie's MS.

Dunlop of that Ilk carries argent, an eagle with two heads displayed gules.

James Dunlop of Garnkirk, descended of Dunlop of that Ilk, carries the same, with a mullet for difference; crest, a rose, proper: motto, E spirits. Lyon Register.

James Dunlop of Househill, whose father Thomas was a fourth son of Dunlop of that Ilk, carries Dunlop, with a martlet for difference; crest, a hand holding a sword, proper: motto, Merito. Ibid.

When the eagle has but one head, and displayed, the French use not the word éployé, supposing that posture, when the wings are expanded, to be as natural to the eagle in armories as the term rampant to the lion; but the term éployé they give to the eagle with two heads, as Monsieur Baron, in his L'Art Héraldique, blazons the arms of the family of Coulen in France, De gules, à l'aigle d'argent, couronnée, becée, langue, & membrée d'azure marqueté de sable. We say gules, an eagle displayed argent, crowned, beaked, langued and membred azure, and decked sable.

Decked or marqueté is said of an eagle and other birds, when their feathers are trimmed at the edges with a small line or purpel of another tinture.

An eagle displayed with one head is the armorial figure of the surname of Carnegie. The principal family of the name was designed of Carnegie, from which lands is the surname; or, an eagle displayed azure. Plate XI. fig. 13.

John de Carnegie got a charter of confirmation of the lands of Carnegie, in the barony of Panmure, from King David II. (Hadh. Col. p. 574.) John Carnegie of that Ilk, and Walter Carnegie are, with others, perambulators in the perambulation betwixt the Bishop of Brechin and John Cullis, before Walter Ogilvie of Beauport, Sheriff-depute of Angus, anno 1450.

The family of Carnegie of that Ilk became extinct; and the next principal family of the name was Carnegie of Kinnaird. The first of it was Duthacus, a descendant of Carnegie of that Ilk, who got a charter from Robert Duke of Albany, Governor of Scotland, of half of the lands of Kinnaird, and the superiority, que fuerunt dilectae nostra Mariette de Kinnaird, & quiu regnavit, anno 1409. (Hadh. Col. p. 116.) Of him was lineally descended Sir Robert Carnegie of Kinnaird; he and his predecessors are said to have been cup-bearers to our Kings, for which they were in use to carry a cup of gold on the breast of their eagle, to show their office. This Sir Robert was sent ambassador to France by the Earl of Arran, Duke of Châtellerault, Governor of Scotland; and his grandson, Sir David Carnegie of Kinnaird, was made, in the year 1505, one of the Senators of the College of Justice. By Euphame his wife, daughter of Sir David Wemyss of that Ilk, he had David his son and successor, and other sons; which David was made also one of the Senators of the College of Justice, by King James VI. and afterwards by that King was made a Lord of Parliament, by the title of Lord Carnegie, anno 1616; and again honoured by the title of Earl of Southesk, the 22d of June 1633, by King Charles I. He had issue by a daughter of Lindsay of Edzel, his eldest son David Lord Carnegie, who died long before his father, leaving only two daughters. His second son James succeeded his father, and was second Earl of Southesk; and he was succeeded by his son Robert the third Earl, father of Charles, the fourth Earl, who married Mary, a daughter of Charles Earl of Lauderdale, by whom he had only James, the fifth Earl of Southesk.
The achievement of this noble family is or, an eagle displayed azure, beaked, membred, and armed gyules; supporters, two greyhounds, proper, collared gyules; crest, a hand holding a thunderbolt winged or; with the motto, Dread God.

The next honourable branch of that family is that of Northesk; the first of which was Sir John Carnegie, brother to David, first Earl of Southesk, who was created Earl of Ettrick the first of November 1647, by King Charles I. whose blazon was then, which I have seen, illuminated thus: or, an eagle displayed azure, beaked, armed, and membred scalable, within a bordure gyules, supported by two leopards, and a demi-one for crest; with the motto, Tache sans tache. He married a daughter of Haliburton of Piteur. His son and successor Earl David, not fancying his father's titles of honour, got new ones from King Charles II. anno 1662, to be stiled Lord Rosehill and Earl of Northesk. He also altered his arms thus, quarterly, first and fourth Carnegie; second and third argent, a pale gyules, for the title of Northesk, as I suppose; supporters, crest and motto, as before. He married a daughter of Patrick Earl of Panmure, by whom he had four sons and one daughter; the eldest son and successor David, father of David the present Earl of Northesk.

Alexander Carnegie of Kinfauns, a second son of David Earl of Northesk, carries quarterly, first and fourth quarters quartered, being the same with Northesk; and, for difference, within a bordure of Panmure, viz. parted per pale gyules and argent, charged with eight escalops counter-changed of the same; second and third quarters, parted per fesse, argent and scalable, on a chevron counter-changed, between three torteauxes, and in base of the first, a fleur-de-luce of the third, for having married Mrs Anne Blair, eldest daughter and heir to Sir William Blair of Kinfauns. Bart. supported on the right by a leopard spotted, proper, collared argent, charged with three torteauxes gyules, and on the left by a greyhound, proper, collared gyules, charged with escalops argent; crest, a leopard from the shoulders, with a collar argent, charged with torteaux and escalops alternately gyules. L. R.

Sir David Carnegie of Pittarrow, Bart. descended of Sir Alexander Carnegie, fourth son of David, first Earl of Southesk, and his lady a daughter of Sir David Lindsay of Edzel, bears parted per pale, or and argent, an eagle displayed azure, armed and beaked gyules; crest, a demi-eagle displayed of the same: motto, Video alta sequeaque.

James Carnegie of Craigo, descended of Carnegie of Cookston, bears or, an eagle displayed azure, armed and membred gyules, surmounted on the breast with a cup of the first; crest, a star proper: motto, Alis aspicient astra.

Robert Carnegie of Newgate, or, an eagle displayed azure, and, in chief, a buckle between two annulets of the second; crest, two dexter hands gauntleted, issuing out of a cloud, conjoined and supporting a flaming heart, proper: motto, Armis & animis. L. R.

William Carnegie, eldest son to Robert Carnegie of Leuchlands, or, an eagle displayed azure, holding in his dexter talon a rose slipped in pale, proper. Ibid.

The surname of Ramsay carries an eagle displayed scalable, in a field argent, upon account, as some say, that they are originally from Germany. As for the antiquity of the name, Simundus de Ramsay is a witness in a charter of one Thurstain, in the reign of King David I. and William de Ramsay is frequently to be found in the charters of King William the Lion. Dalrymple's Collect. p. 421.

The principal family of the name is that of Dalhousie, in the shire of Edinburgh, of which were the valiant Sir Alexander Ramsay of Dalhousie, and Sir William Ramsay of Dalhousie, both eminent patriots for their country in the time of King Robert and King David Braces.

Archibald Earl of Douglas, Lord of Galloway and Annandale, grants a charter in the year 1414, dilecto familiaris nostro Michaeli de Ramsay; amongst the witnesses is Gilbertus de Ramsay de Dalhousie, from whom was descended Sir George Ramsay of Dalhousie, who was created a Lord of Parliament by King James VI. anno 1618, and his son William Lord Ramsay was created Earl of Dalhousie by King Charles I. the 19th of June 1633, of whom is descended the present William Earl of Dalhousie, who carries argent, an eagle displayed scalable, beaked and membred gyules, supported with two griffins with wings displayed, proper; crest, an unicorn's head couped argent, horned and maned or: motto, Ora & labora; and at other times Nil time.

Ramsay of Russel, who, it seems, married a daughter of Russel of that Ilk, carried, quarterly, first and fourth Ramsay, second and third argent, a chevron gules, between three powsers haurient, sable, for Russel. W. and Pont's MS.

Ramsay of Colluthie, quarterly, first and fourth Ramsay; second and third azure, a boat's head erased between three muscles or. Pont's MS.

William Ramsay of Colluthie was by King David II. (says Sir James Balfour) invested with the caridom of Fife, by the cinature of the belt and sword, as the custom then was, but he dying without heirs-male of his body, that caridom returned to the Crown, and Colluthie to his other heirs.

Ramsay of Balmain in the Meris carried the arms of Ramsay, with a rose on the breast of the eagle. (H. M.) He was descended of John Ramsay that was created Earl of Bothwell by King James III. who being forfeited, his successors retained the designation of Balmain. Dalr. Col.

Sir John Ramsay of Whitehill, Bart. descended of a second son of Ramsay of Cockpenn, a second son of Dalhousie, the arms of Dalhousie within a bordure sable, charged with eight roses of the first; crest, an unicorn's head erased argent, charged with a rose gules: motto, Semper victor. N. R.

Sir Andrew Ramsay of Waughton, Bart. eldest lawful son of Sir Andrew Ramsay of Abbotshill, sometime one of the Senators of the College of Justice, and of his Majesty's Privy Council, and often Provost of Edinburgh, quarterly, first and fourth argent, an eagle displayed sable, and a chief gules, for Ramsay; second and third grand quarter quartered, first and fourth gules, on a chevron argent, a rose between two lions rampant of the field; second and third argent, three martlets, 2 and 1 gules, the arms of Hepburn of Waughton, whose heiress he married; crest, an eagle displayed as the former: motto, Probando & approbando. L. R.

George Ramsay of Edington, whose father was a son of the Earl of Dalhousie, carries Ramsay within a bordure gules, and Dalhousie's crest charged with a crescent; with the motto, Dum varior. Idem. L. R.

Mr Hugh Ramsay, Provost of Methven, carries Ramsay within an orle of eight martlets azure; crest, a star of six rays issuing out of a crescent argent: motto, Superna sequor. Ibid.

Charles Aloisius Ramsay, by origiu a Scot, living in France, son to Peter Daniel Ramsay, and Sarah Nisbet his spouse; (and which Daniel was eldest lawful son, procreate between John Ramsay, descended of the family of Banff, and Katharine Morison,) carries Ramsay, the eagle charged on the breast with a thistle; crest, an eagle rising regardant sable, armed and membred or: motto, Miccro & respicio. Ibid.

Bickerton of that Ilk carries argent, an eagle displayed gules, beaked and membred sable. Workman's MS.

Sir Walter Bickerton of Luffness carried the same; he died in the reign of King David the Bruce, and left behind him three daughters. John Gourlay married one of them, and got with her the lands of Kincraig in Fife.

Some of the Gourlays carry or, an eagle with wings displayed sable, surmountèd with a bend of the second, charged with crescents gules. (Mackenzie's Heraldry and Pont's MS.) Others of the name carry argent, three martlets sable.

As for the antiquity of the name, Edmond Howes in his History of England, p. 153, says, the first of the name of Gourlay came to Scotland with William the Lion after his captivity. I find one Ingelramus de Gourlay mentioned in that King's charter, in a Retour of the Chancellory, and narrated in a charter of King Robert I. where mention is made of William de Gourlay; and the same King gives a charter to John de Lindsay of the lands of Rutherford and Maxton, which belonged to Eda Gourlay. Haddington's Collections.

Sir Thomas Gourlay of Kincraig, sable, an eagle displayed argent, armed and beaked gules; and, for crest, such another eagle issuing out of the torce: motto, Profunda cernit. N. R.

Panther, sometime of Pitmedden, or, an eagle displayed sable. Mackenzie's Heraldry. Others of the name, as Panther of Newmains, carry argent on a fesse azure, between two spur-rowels in chief gules, and a rose in base of the last, three garbs or. Pont's MS.

The name of Lanton, gules, an eagle displayed argent, on a chief of the last, three roses of the first. Ibid.

The name of Spittle, argent, an eagle displayed sable, membrand and armed gules, between three crescents of the last. Ibid.

Spittle of Leuchat, argent, an eagle displayed sable, and three crescents in chief gules. Crawford's MS.

Reid of Colliton, argent, an eagle displayed sable, membrand and armed or, and, on his breast, an escutcheon gules, relative to the name. Pont's and Workman's MSS. But Pont says, Reid of Pitfoddels carried quarterly, first and fourth argent, a chevron azure between three mullets in chief, and a cross croiset fitché in base gules; second and third, the arms of Stewart, or, a fesse chequy azure and argent. The same in our New Register is carried by Mr Robert Reid of Binnies, descended of the family of Pitfoddels; and, for crest, a hand issuing from a cloud holding a book expanded, proper: motto, Pro virtute.

The surname of Lanton, or, an eagle displayed azure. Bal. MS.

The surname of Eaglesham, argent, a chevron gules, between three eagles within a bordure sable. Mr Thomas Crawford's MS.

The eagle is sometimes borne in arms of divers tinctures, after the form of partition lines, as also lozenge and chequy. The kingdom of Moravia, of old, though now but a marquisate, carried azure, an eagle displayed chequy or and gules, beaked and membrand of the last.

When there are more eagles than three in one field, they are termed eaglets, i.e. young eagles, except there be an interposition of one or other of the ordinaries betwixt them, as before we told of the lion.

Sir James Ballour, in his blazons, gives us the name of Paterson sable, on a cross cantonned with four lions' heads erased argent, five eaglets displayed of the first.

When the eagle or eaglets are represented in arms displayed without beaks and feet, they are then called alerions, and, by the Latins, Aquilia mutilla, boc est, rastris & cruribus exuti; they are said to be carried as marks of voyages beyond seas, and of wounded soldiers.

The Dukes of Lorraine carry or on a bend gules, three alerions argent. The occasion of this bearing is commonly storied, that Godfrey of Boulogne, having for a long time laid a close siege to Jerusalem, one standing by him, perceiving three birds on a tower, told him, that it was as impossible for him to take the tower, as to kill these three birds with one arrow; upon which Godfrey drew an arrow, and with it he killed the three birds at once: Upon which he took the foresaid arms for his Dukedom; with the motto, Deferint victus caussae Deus. But Menestrier will have these arms to be speaking ones, by making alerion the anagram of Lorraine.

The proper posture of the eagle, as I said before, is to be displayed, but sometimes the eagle is carried in arms standing, with its wings close; then it is said to be perching; and, when the wings are somewhat lifted up, rising; by the French, essorant. Monsieur Baron gives the arms of the family of Moreston in France thus, d'azur à la tour d'argent, maînonnée de sable, & surmontée d'une aigle essorante d'or, i.e. azure, a tower argent, massoned sable, and surmounted of an eagle rising or.

The name of Child in England, gules, a chevron ermine between three eagles perching or.

Demi-eagles are either issuant or naissant, of which terms before; and their parts, as heads and legs, &c. are either couped or erased.

Sir Robert Monro of Foulis, Baronet, chief of the name, carries or, an eagle's head erased gules; crest, an eagle perching; supporters, two eagles, all proper: motto, Dread God. L.R.

The first of the name, by the manuscript of the family, was Donald, a son of Oceann Ro's, a nobleman in the county of Derry, upon the water of Ro in Ireland, who came to Scotland, with some forces, to the assistance of King Malcolm II. against the Danes; the king, for his good service, gave him the lands of East-Ding-well, which he called Ferrin-Donald, i.e. Donald's Lands; and he was called Donald a Buro, in respect of his father's residence on the water of Ro in Ireland; and thereafter, by the change of the letter B. into M. his descendants were called Monros. They got also other lands in Scotland which they called Foulis, from a place in Ireland of that name, called Loch-Feul. I am of opinion that their armorial figures are relative to their designation, Foulis.

By the history of the family and other documents, the Monros, Barons of Foulis, have been of a long standing in the shire of Ross; (I cannot here give a complete deduction of the family and its branches, not having room to complete this treatise). George Monro of Foulis, the eighth in a lineal descent from the above Donald, got a charter from William Earl of Sutherland, in the reign of King Alexander II. " *Clarissimo et fidelissimo consanguineo Georgio Munro de " Foulis."

From this George was lineally descended Robert, counted the eighteenth Baron of Foulis in the history of the family, a man of singular valour and loyalty; who, hearing, in the year 1562, that Queen Mary was in some difficulty by the Gordons at Inverness, he, with other Highland clans and their followers, came to her Majesty's relief: So that Buchanan in his History, says, " Audito principis periculo, magna ipsorum Scotorum multitudo, partim excita, partim sponte sua, affuit; imprimis Frazerii et Monroui, hominum fortissimorum in illis gentibus familie."

His grandchild and successor, Robert, was a Colonel under Gustavus, King of Sweden; he was killed in Germany, anno 1633, leaving behind him only one daughter; and he was succeeded in his fortune by his brother Hector, another Colonel in the German service, who was made a Knight-Baronet in the year 1634. His son was Hector Monro of Foulis, who died without issue, and was succeeded by his nearest heir-male, Sir Robert Monro, who married Janet, daughter of Colonel Sir Hector Monro of Foulis; and their son and successor was Sir John, father of the present Sir Robert Monro, Baronet, of Foulis, whose eldest son is Colonel Robert, now Member of Parliament.

The cadets of this family were very numerous, and have been eminent in military posts.

Alexander Monro of Bearcroft's, or, an eagle's head erased gules, holding in her beak a laurel branch vert; crest, an eagle perching or: motto, Non inferiora. N. R.

Mr George Monro of Pitundie carries the same; and, for crest, an eagle looking to the sun, proper: motto, Celestia segnor. Ibid.

The Griffin.

A chimerical creature, half an eagle and half a lion, with large ears, frequent in arms, especially with the Germans. Those who have been, or are vassals and dependents, and carry a lion for their proper arms, whose over-lords and patrons carried eagles, do frequently carry this creature as composed of both. Some say the griffin is the symbol of ecclesiastical and civil authority joined together; the first shown by the fore part of the eagle, and the civil power by the hinder part of the lion.

Others say the griffin, by its fore parts, represents wisdom joined to fortitude, which should follow wisdom, as Chassaneus; " Gryphus significat sapientiam junctum gendam fortitudini, sed sapientiam debere praerit, fortitudinem sequi." Its proper posture in armories is to be rampant or salient, and then sometimes said to be sejant, by the English, that is, as if he were ready to flee.

Those of the name of Lawdier, of Lauder, or Laughter, which is differently wrote, according to the customs of ancient times, and the different apprehensions of the writers, for the name is local from the town and lands of Lauder, i.e. lower than the hills that surround it, of which they have been ancient possessors, carried griiffin for their armorial figure, and were designed Launders of that Ilk, or of Lauder-Tower.

One of this family accompanied David Earl of Huntingdon, brother of King William the Lion, to the Holy War; to perpetuate which, some of his descendants made the griiffin to hold a sword by his fore foot, supporting a Saracen's head, proper; of whom was descended Allan Lauder, who gets a charter of the lands of Whitslade and Moristone in the shire of Berwick, from Robert Earl of Strathern, with the consent of John his eldest son and heir, both afterwards kings, by the names of Robert II. and III. This Allan Lauder was afterwards designed of Hatton, as in a charter granted by King Robert II. of the lands of Ratho, in the shire of Mid-Lothian, anno regni 7mo. of whom were descended the Launders of Hatton, who carried argent, a griiffin salient sable, beaked and membred gules, holding a sword with its fore foot, supporting a Saracen's head, proper; crest, a tower with a demi-griiffin issuing out of the top of it: motto Strike alike.

This family ended in an heir-female, in the reign of King Charles II. who was married to Mr Charles Maitland, brother-german to the Duke of Lauderdale. He was afterwards Earl of Lauderdale, grandfather to the present Earl of Lauderdale.

Lauder of Bass, originally from Lauder of that Ilk, carried gules, a lion rampant argent, within a double pressure flowered and counter-flowered with flower-de-luces or; crest, a solon-goose sitting on a rock, proper: motto, Sub umbra altaum tuo-rum. Pont's and Workman's Manuscripts, where these arms are supported with two lions.

Robert Lauder gets a charter from William de Lamberton, Bishop of St Andrews, of the half of the Isle of Bass, resedendo unam libram cerae nominem Alba fir-mac, which is confirmed by the charter of John Forfar, Prior of St Andrews, of the date the 4th of June 1316.

In a charter of Richard Edgar to Robert Edgar of Wedderlie, amongst the witnesses are, Johannes Haliburton Dominus de Dirleton, and Robertus Lawider Dominus de la Bass, in the year 1384.

Sir Robert Lauder, upon his resignation of the lands of Balgone and Bass, and Edrington in the shire of Berwick, gets a new charter of these lands from King James I. This family is now extinct.

The only principal family of the name now standing is that of Sir John Lauder of Fountainhall, in East-Lothian, Baronet, and one of the Senators of the College of Justice, who carries gules, a griiffin rampant within a bordure argent; crest, a tower argent, masoned sable, with the portcullis down, on the top of the embattlement, a man in a watching posture: motto, Turris prudentia custos; supporters, two lions rampant argent, standing on a compartment, on which are these words, Ut migraturas habit? as in Plate of Achievements. So recorded in the Lyon Register, as descended of Lauder of that Ilk, the above arms being conform to those of his progenitors, cut upon grave-stones of old dates, which are preserved by the said Sir John, who is linearly descended of Andrew Lauder, a son of Robert Lauder of that Ilk, or Lauder-Tower, and his wife, Elizabeth Ballendene, dughter to Ballenden of Lasswade, by whom he had three sons; the two eldest were cut off, with many of their relations, in a plea, by the Homes and Cranstons, in the minority of King James VI. but the youngest surviving son, Andrew, retired to his mother's friends. He married Janet, daughter of David Ramsay of Polton, descended of the family of Dalhouse; of them was descended Sir John Lauder of Newington, Baronet, whose eldest son is the above mentioned Sir John Lauder of Fountainhall.

Forsyth of that Ilk carries argent, a cheveron ingrailld gules, between three griifins rampant azurc, armed, membred sable, and crowned or. Workman's Manuscript.

For the antiquity of the name, there is a charter in the Earl of Haddington's Collections, page 67, granted by King Robert the Bruce, Osberto filio Roberti de Forsyth, servienti nostro, of an hundred solidates terrae in tenemento de Salekill, in the sheriffdom of Stirling.

Forsyth of Nydie, argent, a cheveron ingrailld gules, between three griifins rampant erect, membred and armed gules. Pont's MS. The same arms are given by the Lyon in the New Register, to Mr James Forsyth of Tailkerton, sometime Minister of Stirling, descended of the family of Dykes, commonly designed of Halliell; and, for crest, a demi-griffin vire; with the motto, Instaurator ruinae.

The griffin has been, of old, frequent in the arms of many families in England. Sandford, in his Genealogical History, tells us, that he has seen the armorial seal of Richard Riparius, or Rivers, Earl of Devon, and of the Isle of Wight, who died in the year 1622, gules, a griffin segreant or.

GRiffin Lord Griff, in England, as relative to his name, talbe, a griffin segreant argent.

Finch Earl of Winchelsea, argent, a chevron between three griffins passant table.

OF THE HAWK, FALCON, AND OTHER BIRDS.

These of old have adorned the ensigns and other regalia of the ancients, and are frequent in the armorial bearings of noble families. Some writers are of the opinion, that they are more excellent in arms than four-footed beasts, because they participate more of the most noble elements, air and fire, than water and earth, as Aldrovandus in his Treatise of Arms, " Præstantiora sunt in insignibus volatilìa " ipsis quadrupedibus, nam aves aerem, magis & ignem, quæ elementorum excel- " lentissima sunt, quan aquam & terram participant." But, as it is observed be- fore, the dignity of armorial figures is not drawn from the nature of the creature, but from the high dignity of the giver of arms, and the quality of the bearers. " Accipiter nonem est (says Hopingius) ab accipiendi avibus, & aucupio;" and Sylvester Petra Sancta, " Marti dicatus, utpote pugnax, & predae avidus."

The hawk or falcon is carried by many eminent families in Germany, as by the Falkensteini, (as Hopingius) tres albos falcones in campo caeruleo, i. e. azure, three falcons argent.

With us the surname of Falconer, of old, carried for arms, gules, three hawk- lures or. (Workman’s MS.) Afterwards Falconer of Halkerton, the chief of the name, altered them to or, a falcon’s head, proper, issuing out of a man’s heart gules, between three stars azure, upon the account that one of the family married a daughter of Douglas Earl of Angus, the heart and star being the armorial figures of Douglas.

But now the family of Halkerton carries azure, a falcon displayed between three stars argent, and, on his breast, a man’s heart gules. These arms are so illuminated on the House of Falahall, with the other barons of Parliament 1604; crest, an angel in a praying posture or, within an orle of laurel, proper; supporters, two falcons, proper: motto, Vive ut vivas.

The first to meet with on record, of this family and name, was Ranulph, son of Walter de Lenorps, falconer to King William, as by that king’s charter of lands in the shire of Merns, Ranulpho Falconario nostro filio Walteri de Lenorps; which lands were called Halkerton, from his office; and the arms, ancient and modern, are relative thereto: From whom is descended David the present Lord Halkerton, whose grandfather, Sir Alexander Falconer of Halkerton, was the first of the fa- mily that was dignified with the title of Lord Halkerton, the 29th of July 1647, and upon the Restoration of King Charles II. he was one of the Senators of the College of Justice.

I have seen the seal of one Robert Falconer of Bellandro, appended to a charter of his granted by him to Kait of Halgreen, of the date the 10th of May 1611, whereupon was a fesse between three hawks in chief and a lute in base.

Sir David Falconer of Newton, sometime President of the Session, or, a falcon’s head crowned with an open crown, issuing out of a man’s heart, all proper, be- tween three stars azure; crest, a falcon perching, between two branches of laurel vert: motto, Armis potentissimae aquam. N. R.

This Sir David was a younger son of Sir David Falconer of Glenfarquhar, who was a younger brother of the first Lord Halkerton.

Sir John Falconer of Balmakellie, Master of the Mint in the reign of King Charles II. who was also a younger brother of the first Lord Halkerton, or, a fal-con's head issuing out of a heart, all proper, between three stars _azure_, and, on a chief _gules_, as many besants of the first; crest, a falcon rising, proper: _motto_, _Fortiter sed apte_.

His son, Robert Falconer, Merchant in London, carries the same, with the _motto_, _Vi & Industria_. N. R.

Sir James Falconer of Phesdo, one of the Senators of the College of Justice, _or_, a falcon's head issuing out of a man's heart, proper, between three stars _azure_, all within a bordure of the last, charged with eight plates; crest, a falcon hooded: _motto_, _Paratus ad atbera_. Ibid.

His progenitor was Archibald Falconer, second son of Sir Alexander Falconer of Halkerton, and his wife Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Glenbervie, immediate ancestor of the present Duke of Douglas; as in Mr Crawford's Peerage of Scotland.

The name of Weel, _sable_, a goshawk _argent_, perching upon a stock of timber of the last, armed, jessed, and belled _or_.

The name of Blackhall, _gules_, a hand issuing out of the sinister flank, and thereupon a falcon perching, and hooded _or_, and, on a chief _argent_, three mullets _azure_. Pont's MS.

The name of Denkyn, _gules_, a goshawk _or_, standing on the back of a hare _argent_. W. and Pont's MS.

Not to insist further on this bird, it is carried in the same postures with the eagle, and hath the same terms; but when it hath a hood, bells, viroses and leishes at its feet, in blazon, it is said to be _hooded, belted, jessed, and leished_; for which the French say, _chapronné, grillé_, and _lié_.

The _raven_ or _corbie_ is a bird of prey; called _raven_, says Guillim, for its rapine, and was the ensign of the Danes when they invaded England.

The surname of Corbet with us, and in England, carry _or_, a corbie, (or _raven_) proper.

Sir James Balfour, in his Book of Blazons, says, Corbet of that Ilk of old carried _or_, two ravens _sable_, within a bordure ingrailed _gules_.

John Brampton, in his Chronicle of England, mentions this surname, with those that came to England with William the Conqueror, which is probable; for arms in that age were for the most part canting, and some of that name are very early to be found in charters with us. Robert Corbet is witness in the instrument or inquisition, made by David Prince of Cumberland, of the lands belonging to the church of Glasgow; and is also a witness in other deeds of that prince, when King of Scotland, commonly named Saint David: And by the Chartulary of Kelso, Walter de Corbet is mentioned as a donor of the church of Mackenstoff to the abbacy of Kelso, of which lands those of this name seem to have been proprietors, as also of others, being a considerable family; for Avicia de Corbet was wife to Richard Morville High Constable of Scotland, who died 1191. (Chronicon Mels.) And in the charters of King Alexander II. Nicolaus Corbet is frequently to be met with as a witness.

The Corbets also possessed the lands of Arboll in the shire of Ross. Colonel Walter Corbet, in the Scots regiment of Foot Guards, is the heir-nmale of that family. Dalr. page 337.

There are some landed men of the name in the shires of Lanark and Dumfries; and in England, Sir John Corbet of Stoke, in Shropshire, Baronet, _or_, a corbie, proper. And, in our New Register of Arms, Mr Hugh Corbet of Hardgray, _argent_, a _raven_ _sable_.

Walter Corbet of Towcross, _argent_, a _raven_ _sable_, between three mullets _gules_.

Murdoch of Cumlodden, _argent_, two ravens hanging pale-ways _sable_, with an arrow through both their heads fesse-ways, proper; crest, a _raven_ rising _sable_, having an arrow thrust through her breast _gules_, headed and feathered _argent_: _motto_, _Omnia pro bono_. L. R. and Plate of Achievements.

The Corvini in Rome, _or_, a corbie _volant_ _sable_, given thus by Sylvester Petra Sancta, _Corvus ater in aureo quidem semis interculos_: And the Corver_e in Spain, _or_, five ravens _volant_ in saltier _sable_, _i. e._ 2, 1 and 2.
OF FOWLS AND BIRDS.

Crows are likewise to be found in armories, as relative to the names of the bearers; as those of the name of CRaW, of whom before; and CRAWFURD of Cloverhill carries crows, as additional figures to explain his name.

The cock, the emblem of watchfulness, and herald of the approaching day, frequent in arms and devices; and for its nature and royalty is ensignied with a diagonal singular for its value, and mirth after victory. Heralds are not wanting to make him represent a complete soldier, in courage and armour, cap-a-pie, making his comb to stand for a helmet, his collars for a busk, his hooked bill for a falcon or cutlas, and his legs armed with spurs. When those are of a different tincture from his body, in blazon, he is said to be crestèd and barbed, (by some English, matted or joloped) the French, creté et barbelé; and the Latin, crista-tus & borbulatur; and for his bill, legs and spurs, he is said to be armed.

The surname of Cock, in Scotland and England, carries cocks, relative to the name, argent, a cock gules, on a chief azure, a crescent between two stars of the first. W. and P. MS.

Others of the name, argent, a chevron azure, between three mullets in chief, and a cock in base.

COCKBURN of that Ilk, an ancient family in the shire of Berwick, argent, three cocks gules.

ALEXANDER COCKBURN of that Ilk, chief of the name, in the reign of Robert the Bruce, it seems had two wives; the first bore him a son, who was lord of Ormiston, of whom immediately; and for his second wife, he had the daughter and heir of the Lord Weapon, and with her got the lands of Lanton and Cariddin, upon which he gets a charter of confirmation of these lands from King David Bruce; after which the family was designed of Lanton, and by his office (in King Robert II.'s reign) Custos Magni Sigilli; and, by that king, Alexander Cockburn de Lanton was made Ostiarius Parlamenti; which office continued in his successors, and afterwards was annexed to the barony of Lanton, by a charter of King James IV. 20th of February 1504. Had. Collect. page 364.

Upon a resignation of WILLIAM COCKBURN of Lanton, in that king's hands, in favour of his son and apparent heir Alexander Cockburn, of whom is linearly descended the present Sir Alexander Cockburn of Lanton, Baronet, who, as his progenitors, since they married with the Weapons, carries, quarterly, first and fourth argent, three cocks gules, for Cockburn; second and third gules, six muscles or, 3, 2 and r, for Weapon; supporters, two lions gules; crest, a cock crowing; motto, descendit cantu.

COCKBURN of Ormiston in East-Lothian, argent, a fesse chevèt azuré, and of the first, between three cocks gules; crest, a cock of the same: motto, In dubius con-stant. (N. R.) In our old books there are, for supporters, two lions gules. The family is descended from John Cockburn, the eldest son of Sir Alexander Cockburn of that Ilk, by his first wife, as appears by these evidents; an indenture or contract past betwixt Alexander de Lindsay Dominus de Ormiston, and Alexander Cockburn eujdenem, "super matrimonio inter Johannem filium Alexandri Cockburn " predicti, de prima uxore sua genitum, & Ioannetam filiam & hæredem predicti, " Alexandri de Lindsay;" for which the said Alexander Lindsay alienates and disposeth to them, and the heirs-male or female procreate betwixt them, the lands of Ormiston, with the principal house and mill, which were confirmed by a charter of King David Bruce; for which the family of Cockburn of Ormiston carries the fesse chevèté, as corn of the Lindsay's. This John Cockburn of Ormiston, or his sons, were constables of Haddington, which office was hereditary for a long time in the family.

PATRICK COCKBURN of Ormiston, kept out the Castle of Dalkeith; for King James II. against the Earl of Douglas, then a rebel. King James IV. grants a charter of the lands of Ormiston, anno 1508, upon John Cockburn, elder of Ormiston, his resignation, in favour of his son John Cockburn, younger of Ormiston, and his spouse Margaret Hepburn, of whom is linearly descended the present ADAM COCKBURN of Ormiston, one of the Senators of the College of Justice; and his Lordship was made Justice-Clerk an hundred years after one of his progenitors had been in the same honourable post.
OF FOWLS AND BIRDS.

The other families of the name of Cockburn whom I find with their arms in our records ancient and modern, are these:

Sir John Cockburn of Torry was a judge in the perambulation of the lands of Pitferran, in the year 1237, to which his seal of arms was appended, having three cocks.

Cockburn of Henderland carries argent, a mullet azure, between three cocks gules. Balfour and Pont's Manuscripts.

Cockburn of Clerkington, argent, a crescent azure, between three cocks gules, supported by a stork on the dexter, and a lion on the sinister gules: motto, F eradventure.

Cockburn of Newhall, argent, a masque azure, between three cocks gules. Ibid.

Lieutenant William Cockburn of Stonyflat, representative of the family of Skirling, carries the same; and, for crest, a dexter arm holding a broken lance in bend, proper: motto, Press through. L. R.

George Cockburn, third son to the deceased George Cockburn of Ormiston, carries as his father, with a mullet for difference.

Sir James Cockburn of Ryslaw, descended of Lanton, carries the quartered arms of that family, with a man's heart gules in the centre. Ibid.

Cockburn of Chouslie, a cadet of Lanton, the quartered coat of that family; and, for difference, the paternal coat within a bordure azure.

Peacham, an Englishman, in his Practice of Heraldry, tells us, that the ancient family of the name of Crow, in Suffolk, carried for arms, gules, a chevron between three cocks crowing argent, as equivocally relative by their crowing, and to the name Crow. So, by this instance, I fancy that the last part of the cock's crow ending in laa, or law, shows the signification of the surname of Law; since they bear cocks.

Law of Lawbridge, in Galloway, the principal family of the name, though now extinct, carried argent, a bend and cock in chief gules; and, for crest, a cock crowing: motto, Sat amico si mibi felix.

The next to the family was Law of Bogness, of which family I have seen a charter of Robert Law of Bogness, wherein he is described second son of Robert Law of Lawbridge; in the year 1398, whereby he is infeft in Bogness, Nether-Linkwood, Glassgreen, and Kingousie, within the sheriffdom of Elgin, (pens Law of Netherourd.)

From him in a lineal descent was Mr James Law of Bogis, Keeper of the Signet, in the reign of King Charles I. who, in the year 1627, was by that king made conjunct clerk, with Mr James Primrose, to the commission of erection of teinds; he made a great collection of the old charters and evidences of the baronies of this kingdom, which are now in the hands of Mr John Law of Netherourd, his grandson, and the only representative of Law of Lawbridge.

Law of Burntwood, ermine, a bend betwixt two cocks gules.

Law of Newton, descended of Burntwood, ermine, a bend raguled between two cocks gules. Pont's MS.

Mr James Law of Burton, so designed in our New Registers, which may be the same with Burntwood in our old, carries as Burntwood; and, for crest, an unicorn's head, proper: motto, Nec obscura nec una.

Robert Law of Cameron, ermine, a bend between two cocks within a bordure ingralled gules. N. R.

Robert Law, Bailie of Anstruther, ermine, a bend betwixt a cock in chief, and two mullets in base gules. Ibid.

Walter Law of Easter-Kinevie, second brother to Major John Law of Burnton, carries Burton's arms within a bordure gules, with the crest and motto. Ibid.

Aitken of Aitken side, argent, a chevron azure, between two cocks in chief, and a buckle in base gules. Pont's MS.

Ogle of Poppil, in East-Lothian, or, a fesse azure, between two cocks of the first, armed, crested, and jellopped gules. Ibid. Some books make the fesse a bend, and the cocks, pheasants.
The County of Hennetburg in Franconia, has for its armorial figures, relative to the name, or, a black hen standing on a green hill, quartered in the achievement of the Elector of Saxony, thus blazoned by Imhoff, " In aurea parmula nigrum " gallinam viridi collicula insistentem, exhibit Henburgensis comitatus."

The peacock, a vain proud bird, for which some English say, that this bird sheweth the bearer to be an admirer of himself; from which the saying, Laudare pavone superbiae: But in armories, as I observed before, such creatures are to be understood to be carried for their best qualities, as upon the account of its beauty, and as relative to the name of the bearer. When his fan (or tail) is displayed, he is said to be in his pride. The surname of Peacock with us, carries argent, three peacocks in their pride, proper, between as many stars gules. Pont's MS.

There was of this name in England, one Reginald Peacock, Bishop of Chichester, a secular doctor of divinity, who translated the Holy Scripture into English, anno 1547, and wrote several books against the Romish Church: being challenged and threatened with persecution, he recanted, as Mr. Howes, in his History of England, says, p. 402, who tells us of another of that name, Sir Stephen Peacock, who was Mayor of London 1533; they carried peacocks for their armorial figures.

The French use the term rouant, when the peacock's tail is displayed, as in the blazon of the arms of Saint Paul in France, d'azur, au paon rouant d'or. Sylvester Petra Sancta blazon these arms thus, Aureus pavo cum occultata cauda, in orbem explicata, intra scuti areolam exuencam.

When the feathers of this bird are down, or close, in blazon, he is said to be close, as in the arms of Francis Smith, Baron Carrington of Wotton in Warwickshire, argent a cross gules, between four peacocks close auerre.

The parrot's proper colour is green, and ordinarily has a collar about its neck, with red feet. Sylvester Petra Sancta, in his Treatise, p. 441, says, "Pittacus avis argutula, atque etiam humanitatis garriens, cum plumularum saurum prasino, aureaque numella & rostro, cruribusque puniciss." It is frequent in arms, and especially, as Menestrier observes, in the old families in Switzerland, occasioned by two great factions there in the year 1262, which were distinguished by their ensigns, the one having a red standard with a white star, and the other a white standard with a green parrot; and the families that were concerned in these facts carried in their arms either stars or parrots, which they have transmitted to their descendants.

Parrots of old were called papingoes with us, and were carried by the ancient family of the name of Pepdie, as speaking to the name.

Eustachius Pepdie is witness in a charter of King Malcolm IV. and Stephanus Pepdie, with Alunus de Swinton and Williamus de Nibet, are witnesses in the charter of Patricius Comes, filius Waldemi Comitis, to the monks of Durham, in the reign of King William.

Of this name there was a considerable family in East Lothian, Pepdie of Dunclase, who carried argent, three papingoes or parrots vert, which ended in an heir-female, who was married to Home of that ilk; for which the families descended of Home have been in use to quarter these arms with their own, of whom before.

The name of Fairfoul, as relative to the name, carry also papingoes or parrots.

Walter Fairfoul of Wester-Lathal, argent, three parrots proper, all within a bordure gules; crest, a parrot: motto, Logendo placent. N. R.

The name of Peelles with us, argent, a cheveron ingrainet sabie, between three papingoes vert, membred gules. Pont's MS.

Lumley Earl of Scarborough, argent, a fesse gules, between three parrots, proper, each gorged with a collar of the second.

The surname of this family is from Lumley, on the bank of the river Were, in the Bishopric of Durham; and the family derives their descent from Lilph, a person of great account in the time of King Edward the Confessor. From him was said to be descended Thomas de Lumley, who was made Governor of Scarborough Castle by King Henry VI. and by Edward IV. was made Lord Lumley, by summons to Parliament, by reason he married that King's natural daughter; which title of Lord Lumley continued in the family till the reign of King James I. of Great Britain; which title, becoming extinct through defect of male-issue, was...
OF FOWLS AND BIRDS.

again revived by King Charles II. in the person of Richard, Baron and Viscount Lumley of Lumley, and Earl of Scarborough.

The swan, a bird of great beauty and strength, is frequently carried in arms; it is said to be the symbol of a learned man, and of one that knows best how to contain the world, and to die with resolution. It is likewise carried as relative to the names of its bearers.

The Swanbergi in Germany carry gules, a swan argent, beaked and membred or. The family of Paravasinii in the country of Grisons, gules, a goose argent, being not unlike a swan, as the name points at, Por avis cygna, equivocally clenching to the name of the family Paravasini; as Menestrier.

With us the name of Loch bears azure, a saltier ingralled between three swans naiant in lochs, proper; two in the flanks, and one in base, proper.

James Loch of Driflaw, a saltier ingralled sable, between two swans naiant in lochs, proper, in the flanks; crest, a swan devouring a perch, proper: motto, Assiduitate, non desidia. N. R.

The swan is sometimes collared, and, as heralds say, gorged about the neck with an open crown, with a chain thereto affixed; and when so, some English heralds call it a cygnet royal, as in the blazon of Sir Charles Pittfield of Hoxton in Middlesex, azure, a bend ingralled argent, between two cygnets royal, proper. Art. Her.

The ensign of the country of Stormaria, whose capital city is Hamburgh, gules, a swan argent, gorged with a crown or; the French say, De gueules, au cigne d'argent, accolé d'une couronne d'or. And Urcus blazons them thus, Cygnus argenteus, aurea circita collum corona, in solo rubro, which are quartered in the achievement of the Kings of Denmark, for the country of Stormarie.

Ducks or Cannets; the first is said to be carried by the name of Meek, argent, a duck proper; and on a chief dancetté gules, a sanglier's head couped or, between two crescents argent. Pont's MS.

Alexander Michieson, now of Hill, eldest lawful son and heir to the deceast Patrick Michieson of Hill, argent, a duck proper, on a chief dancetté gules, a boat's head couped, proper, between two crescents or; crest, a decrescent, proper: motto, Ut impliear. N. R. And Patrick Meek of Leidassie carries the same arms as above, without any difference in the same Register; the crest being an increscent and decrescent affronté: motto, Junger ut impliear.

When ducks are represented without beaks or feet, they are called by Favin, martlets; but Menestrier calls them cannets; for, says he, "sount des cannets, sans "bee & sans pieds, comme les alerions & les martlets," i.e. cannets are ducks, without beaks and feet, as alerions and martlets, and are distinguished from both, thus, alerions, of which before, are always displayed and full faced; whereas cannets have their heads in profile, as the martlets, and only differ from martlets in having longer necks, and more curvating than these of the martlets. Monsieur Baron gives for an instance in carrying of them in the armorial bearing of the family of Cannet in France, D'argent a sept cannettes de sable, 3 3 and 1.

The martlet may be said to be an armorial bird, because frequent in armories all Europe over, by the Latins called merula; it is counted one of the birds of passage, that goes and comes to countries at certain seasons of the year, as the green plover and dotterel, and others with us, &c. which import expeditions and voyages beyond seas, of old carried by them who went to the Holy Land to fight against the Saracens and Turks. Heralds say, that the want of beaks and feet denotes wounds and strokes which the maimed and lame have received in such expeditions and voyages. The English give them legs but very short, Pl. II. fig. 14. and tell us that they cannot go or rise from the ground for flight as other birds, and so make their resting places and nests on rocks and castles, from which they easily take their flight; and tell us, the martlet is an agreeable mark of difference for younger sons, to put them in mind to trust to the wings of virtue and merit, and not to their legs, having no land of their own to set their feet upon. But I am not to speak of them here as differenceing figures, but as principal charges, distinguishing principal families from one another.
OF FOWLS AND BIRDS.

M'Gill Viscount of Oxenford, Lord M'Gill and Cousland, gules, three martlets or; crest, a phoenix in flames, proper, supported on the dexter by a horse at liberty argent, gorged with a Viscount's coronet, with a chain thereto affixed, maned and hoofed or; and, on the sinister, by a bull sable, collared and chained as the former: motto, Sine fine, relative to the crest.

Sir Robert Siddal, in his History of Fife, says, he has met with one Mauritius M'Gill, witness in a charter of mortification by Malewivinus Comes, to the monks of Aberbrothick, which charter is confirmed by King Alexander.

Mr James M'Gill, descended of a goodly old family in Galloway, had two sons, Mr James M'Gill, Clerk-Register in the reigns of Queen Mary and King James VI. He acquired the lands of Rankeillor-Nether, in Fife, from which he and his posterity were, and are at present designed. Mr James's second son was David M'Gill of Cranston-Riddell, Advocate to King James VI. from the year 1582 to 1596, in which office he died.

His son and heir was David M'Gill of Cranston-Riddell, father of Sir James M'Gill, one of the Senators of the College of Justice, father of Sir Robert M'Gill, who was created Viscount of Oxenford by King Charles II. by letters patent, 19th of April 1651. He had with his wife, a daughter of Livingston of Kilisyth, Robert his son and heir, who married a daughter of George Earl of Linlithgow, by whom he had a son, George, Master of Oxenford, who died before his father, and two daughters, Christian and Margaret; Christian succeeded her father as Viscountess of Oxenford; she married William Maitland, Esq. son of Charles Earl of Lauderdale, by whom he has a son to succeed his mother in the fortune and honours.

Mr David M'Gill of Rankeillor, gules, three martlets argent; and, for crest, another of the same: motto, In Domino confido. N. R.

Mr James M'Gill of Rangally, a younger son of Rankeillor, carries the same within a bordure ingralled argent. Ibid.

Mr Arthur M'Gill carries the same, as descended of Rankeillor, within a bordure indented gules.

James M'Gill of Ballynestor in Ireland, descended of the family of Oxenford, bears the arms of Oxenford; with the motto and crest; and, for difference, a bordure argent. Ibid.

The surname of Cargill, sometime of Orchardton, carries the same with M'Gill gules, three martlets within a bordure or.

The name of Houston carries martlets. The principal family is Houston of that Ilk, an ancient family in the shire of Linlithgow, or, a chevron échiqué sable and argent, between three martlets of the second; by some paintings they have, for supporters, two hounds; and, for crest, a sable glass: motto, In time. For the antiquity of the family, they say, that one Hugh de Pudevision, who got some lands in Stragill, in the reign of King Malcolm IV. which he called after his name, Hugh's Town; and which became the surname of his descendants and family. In Pynne's History of Edward I. of England, 1298, Finlaus de Houston is mentioned, of whom is descended Sir John Houston of that Ilk, Baronet.

Carns of that Ilk carries gules, three martlets or. Ballan's Manuscript.

Mr Archibald Carns of Pilmore, gules, three martlets argent with a flower-de-luce in the centre; crest, a cinquefoil, proper: motto, Effloresco, as in the Lyon Register.

Glen of that Ilk, argent, three martlets sable. Pont's MS.

Glen of Bar in the shire of Renfrew, argent, a fesse gules, between three martlets sable.

As for the antiquity of the name, I have met with one William Glen, Arriniger, witness to the donation of the fishing in Crocket-shot, by Robert Lord Lyle, to the Monks of Paisley, 1457.

His son James Glen obtained a grant from Robert, abbot of Paisley, and of the lands of Bar and others, anno 1526; and his son James obtained a confirmation of them, anno 1544, who was forfeited for adhering to Queen Mary in the year 1568, and was restored 1573. His family ended in an heir-female.

Nornell of that Ilk, sable, on a bend argent, three martlets of the first. Workman's MS.
OF FOWLS AND BIRDS.

Norvel of Gargunnock, argent, three martlets in bend between two cottises sable. Pont's MS.

Others of the name bear sable, on a bend argent between two cottises of the second, three martlets of the first.

The name of CREIGH, or, two bars sable, between six martlets azure, 2, 2, and 1. Pont's MS.

The name of BARON, argent, a chevron between three martlets sable. And BARON of Kinnaird, or, a chevron sable, between three martlets gules, within a double treble counter-flowered of the last. Ibid.

The two famed and learned Doctors, JOHN and ROBERT BARONS, were of the family of Kinnaird in Fife.

There was a family of the name of BARON (in the Dukedom of Florence) from Scotland; the first of them accompanied William, brother to Achais, to assist Charlemagne in his wars, who settled in Italy: His family continued for a long time, and failed at last, much regretted by a Florentine author, Ugolinus Verinius de Reparatione Florentiae, lib. 3, who gives these verses:

Clara potensque diu, sed nunc est nulla BARONUM
Extra progenies, extremis etque orta Britanniae.

The name of BYRES, azure, a chevron argent, between three martlets volant or, Pont's MS.

Mr JAMES LUTEFoot, Doctor of Medicine, son to John Lutefoot, Writer to the Signet, and sometime Keeper of the Privy Seal, Representer of the Lutefoot of Orchil, argent, a chevron gules, between two crescents in chief azure, and a martlet in base sable; crest, a swan, proper, on its head a crescent montant: motto, Addicunt aves.

The swallow, the harbinger of the spring, is said, in armories, to denote one that is industrious, prompt, and ready to dispatch business.

The name of SWALLOWS, in England, carry four, gules and argent, on the last, three swallowes volant sable, 2 and 1.

The family of ARUNDEL, in England, carry swallows, as relative to the name, and that of their lands of Arundel in Cornwall, from birundo a swallow; as Imhoff, in his Treatise of the Arms of the English Nobility, says, "Hirundines qua[1] insigne loco ab Arundellis deferri dictum;" and Hopingius, de Jure Insignium, cap. 9. speaking of the swallow, says, "Est peregrinationis et velocis expeditionis hieroglyphicum, est insigne Comitum Lippesium in Germania, et equestris familie Arundellorum apud Anglos, qui ob fortunas, quas habuerunt amplissimas, Arundellis magni dicti fuerunt, in clypeo gentilissimo quinque argentis, oribus habit, utitur, cognomine etiam inde fors an retento, a rondel, cum Gallis hircinnis significat." By the English books, ARUNDEL Lord ARUNDEL, carried sable, six swallows argent, 3, 2, and 1. This family has been eminent in the West of England since the Norman conquest.

King James I. of Great Britain, in the third year of his reign, to countenance the single merit in Sir THOMAS ARUNDEL, created him a Baron of Arundel, by the title of Lord Arundel of Wardour, with limitation of that honour to the heir male of his body; of whom is lineally descended the present Henry Lord Arundel, who carries for his paternal arms the above blazon.

ARUNDEL Lord ARUNDEL of Trecree, a branch of the old family of Arundel. Sir John Arundel of Trecree was Vice-Admiral to King Henry VII. and King Henry VIII. The English historians tell us, he overcame and took Duncan Campbell the great Scottish Pirate: From him was descended John Arundel of Trecree, who, at the first breaking out of the rebellion against King Charles I. took arms for the king, together with four of his sons, whereof two of them lost their lives. Richard, the eldest, attended always the king in his army, and was, in the sixteenth year of his Majesty's reign, for his own merit and father's services, worthily advanced to the dignity of a Baron of England, by the title of Lord Arundel of Trecree; from whom is descended the present John Lord Arundel of Trecree. The family has been in use to carry quarterly, first and fourth Arundel, as before; second and third sable, three chevronels argent; which quarter has sometimes been borne in the first place before the paternal arms of Arundel.

The owl, Minerva's bird, was the ensign of the Athenians; it denoteth prudence and vigilance.

SAVILLE Marquis of Halifax, argent, on a bend sable, three owls of the first.
George Saville, son of Sir George Saville of Thornhill, Baronet, for his dutiful and loyal services to King Charles I. was, by King Charles II. anno 1667, created Lord Saville in Yorkshire, and Viscount of Halifax, and thereafter Earl; and, in the year 1682, advanced to the dignity of Marquis of Halifax.

The STACYS in Nottinghamshire, azure, on a bend waved between three owls or, as many flower-de-luces azure. Of one or other of these families was descended Joseph Stacey, Ross-Herald, and Herald-Painter in Scotland, after the Restoration of King Charles II. who carried the same arms; but, in place of the flower-deluces, charged the bend with as many thistles, proper; as in the Lyon's Register of Arms.

Cranes, herons, pelicans, &c. are carried in arms as emblems of virtue, and as relatives to the names of the bearers.

The crane is the emblem of piety and charity: Hopingius, cap. 9, says, "Ci"conia pietatis et charitatis in armoria nostra cum primis habet symbolum;" upon which account it gives us several German families who carry that bird.

With us CRANSTON Lord Cranston, gules, three cranes argent; crest, a crane sleeping with the head under its wing, lifting up one foot with a stone; and, for supporters, on the right side, a lady richly attired holding out a bunch of strawberries to a buck, proper, the supporter on the left side: motto, Thou shalt want er no Want. This family took its name from the lands of Cranston, both in Teviotdale and Lothian, which they possessed of old. Elfric de Cranston is witness in a charter of King William's to the abbacy of Holyroodhouse. Andrew de Cranston is witness in a charter of Hugo de Riddle, to the abbacy of Newbottle, in the reign of King Alexander III. And Thomas de Cranston gets a charter of the lands of Cranston from King David Bruce; for which see Sir James Dalrymple's Collections concerning the Scots History, page 350.

John Cranston of Moriston, descended of Cranston of that Ilk, he and his wife, Barbara Gray, grant a reversion of the lands of Toderick, in the year 1591, to which both their seals were appended, which I have seen, (Penes Comitem de Home). John's seal of arms had a shield quartered, first and fourth, three cranes; second and third, three cross-patees; and his wife's seal, Barbara Gray, had a lion rampant within a bordure. Their son, William Cranston, married Sarah, daughter and heir to Sir John Cranston of that Ilk, who, for his good services in keeping the Borderers in peace and quiet, was first knighted, and then made a Lord of Parliament, by the title of Lord Cranston, by King James VI. the 4th of June 1610: of whom is descended the present Lord Cranston, who carries, as before, Cranston of that Ilk, his arms.

Thomas Cranston of Mochrie, gules, three cranes within a bordure invected argent; crest, a crane's head erased, proper: motto, I desire not to want. L. R.

The name of FYTHE, azure, a crane argent. Pont's MS. Henricus de Fythie is one of the Commissioners appointed by Robert the Bruce, to inquire and report what rights and liberties the town of Arbroath had from his predecessors.

Henry Fythie, sometime Provost of Aberbrothock, and heir-male of Fythie of Bysack, azure, a crane, proper; crest, a crane's head erased, proper. N. R.

Sir John Hall of Dunglas, Baronet, azure, a chevron argent, accompanied with three cranes' heads and necks erased or; crest, a crane or standing on a hill vert, holding by its right foot a stone: motto, Cara quietem. L. R. and in Plate of Achievements.

DENHAM of West-Shiels, gules, a chevron argent, between three cranes' heads erased or; crest, a crane, proper, holding in her left foot a stone: motto, Cara dat victoriam. Ibid.

The name of DENHAM in England, gules, four fusils in fesse ermine.

The name of FINN, gules, a crane, proper, without a head. Mackenzie's Heraldy.
The name of Heron, with us, and the English, sable, a heron argent, speaking to the name.

Kinnear of that ilk, sable, on a bend or, three canary birds vert. Some call them martlets, and others papangoes; but the first is more relative to the name. This was an ancient family in the shire of Fife; for, in the chartulary of Balmerno, there is a charter bearing, that Simon, son and heir of Simon de Kinner, "Dedit Deo, Sancte Marie, et Monachis de Balmerinoch, in Eclemosynam, pro salute annarum, &c. mediatatem totius terre in feodo de Kyner," (now called Little Kinner) which donation is confirmed by King Alexander II. the 21st of September, and 22d year of his reign. Sib. History of Fife.

Buntein or Bunting of Ardach, argent, a bend gules between three bunten birds, proper; and, for crest, another of the same, standing on a garb, all proper; with the motto, Copiose et opportune. Lyon Register, and in Plate of Achievements.

Bunting of Kilbridge, argent, three bunten birds, and, on a chief azure, a sword fesse-ways of the first, hilted and pommelled or; crest, an arm grasping a sword: motto, Fortiter et fide. Mack. Her.

Thomas Buntein of Bunteinhal, argent, a chevron sable, between three bunten birds, proper. N. R.

John Dow of Ardenhall, or, a mullet sable, surmounted of a pigeon argent: motto, Patient. Ibid.

Winton of Strathmartin, argent, a chevron between three turtle-doves azure, Mackenzie's Heraldry.

The pelican vulnerate, and feeding her young with her blood, has often been used as the emblem of our Saviour Jesus Christ, and affection of parents to children, and is frequently used as a device of piety and devotion. Corpus Christi College in Oxford, has, for arms, azure, a pelican feeding her young or, which was the device of Richard Fox, Bishop of Winchester, founder of the said College; he was Lord Privy Seal, and Lord High Chancellor of England, in the reigns of Henry VII. and VIII. a great promoter of the marriage between King James IV. of Scotland, and Margaret, the eldest daughter of Henry VII. of England.

This bird, being used often as a pious emblem or device, is sometimes used in place of a crest; but, when as an armorial figure in a shield of arms, it loses its former representations, and bespeaks a wyllie and dangerous enemy, as Hopingius de Jure Insignium, cap. 9, at the title of the pelican, whose words I shall here add, "Non est hæc avis in hac insignium negotio, pi parris, piorumque liberorum in parentes, hominis solitarii, et Christi Salvatoris; sed insidios militis hieroglyphicam." He tells us, "Epusmodi insigne, pelicanum scilicet aureum, carulea in area, Honroditii nobilis Brunsvicensis portant," i. e. the Honrodtii in Brunswick carries azure, a pelican or; and with us

The name of Ormiston, argent, three pelicans feeding their young ones gules. Workman's MS.

Cramond of Auldhart, azure, a bend between three pelicans feeding their young ones argent. Pont's MS.

William de Cramond is designed Clericus de Warrderoba Domini Regis, in a charter of John de Strathbern, 1278. Hdg. Col.

The name of Paterson, argent, three pelicans feeding their young or, in nests vert. Mack. Her.

The Patersons; designed of Dalkeith, of old, carried the same with a chief azure, charged with three mullets argent. Pont's MS.

Sir Hugh Paterson of Bannockburn, argent, three pelicans vulned gules, on a chief embattled azure, as many mullets of the field; crest, a dexter hand holding a quill, proper: motto, Hinc orior. N. R.

Captain Robert Paterson, second brother to the Laird of Dunmure, argent, three pelicans feeding their young ones or, in nests vert, and a crescent to difference him from Dunmure; crest, a branch of palm, proper: motto, Virtute virosco. Ibid.

Mr George Paterson of Seafield, Commissary of Ross, a second son of John, Bishop of Ross, argent, three pelicans feeding their young or, in as many nests vert, on a chief azure, a mitre of the second, between two mullets of the first; crest, a hand grasping a sword erect, proper: motto, Pro rege et gege. N. R.
OF FOWLS AND BIRDS.

His younger brother, Mr Roberts Paterson, one of the regents of the Marischal College of Aberdeen, carries the same, but places a mitre azure in the centre; crest, a pelican’s head couped, proper: motto, Peri ut vivat.

The surname of Henry, in some old books, azure, a fesse between three pelicans argent, vultur proper.

The name of Toungue, argent, on a bend azure, between two pelicans feeding their birds gules, within as many nests vert, three flower-de-luces or. Pont’s Manuscript.

The name of Elme or Ellem, in the shire of Berwick, old possessors of Elmside, Ellemford, and Butterdane. John Ellem de Butterdane there, is witness in a charter of Alexander Lord Home, of the lands of Upsattlington, to Alexander Benniston of that Ilk, 1477, who carried, for arms, gules, a pelican argent, vultur proper, feeding her young, which have been quartered by the Homes of Renton, as arms of alliances, being descended by the mother’s side from the Elmes, by an heiress.

Sir Patrick Home, Advocate of Renton and Lumisdin, second son of Sir John Home of Renton, sometime one of the senators of the College of Justice, and Justice-Clerk, descended of a younger son of Home of Manderston, bears four coats, quarterly, first vert, a lion rampant argent, armed and langued gules, for Home; second argent, three papagoes vert, for Pepdie of Dunclas; third argent, three hunting-horns sable, stringed gules, for Forrester; fourth gules, a pelican feeding her young argent, vultur proper, for the name of Ellem.

The phoenix, the type of the Resurrection, the emblem of long life, piety, and love of children to parents, as Hopingius, “Haec avis amoris in parentem symbolem est, quando filius patrem sepeliri fingitur,” is seldom in arms: I only find it carried by the name of Phennwick, as relative to the name, gules, a phoenix argent, in flames, proper. The family of Fenwick of Fenwick, in Northumberland, have the phoenix for their crest: with the motto, Peri ut vivat; and, for arms, parted per fesse, gules and argent.

To come to an end of fowls and birds, I shall here mention bees, fleci, wings, and feathers of birds, used as armorial figures in the bearings of some considerable families.

The family of Barkeiri in Italy, azure, three gad-bees or; which their name does signify.

Wings of birds, in armories, are said to denote protection, and are either single or double, that is, one or two; when but one, it is called a demi-vole, as these carried by some of the name of Falconer, gules, three demi-voles (or lures) or, 2 and 1.

When two wings are joined together, they are then called a vole, or two wings in lure, as these in the arms of Seymour Duke of Somerset of whom before.

The name of Rennie carries gules, two wings conjoined and inverted ermine.

Feathers of Birds are sometimes used as armorial figures, especially these of the ostrich, by the Royal family of England.

Humphrey Duke of Gloucester had an escutcheon sable, charged with three ostrich feathers argent, surrounded with the garter, and supported with a greyhound and antelope; as Ashmole in his Institution of the Garter, page 206. where he also tells us, that these three ostrich feathers were the badge of King Henry IV. of England, which that King had from John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, his father, who bore them for his device, and placed them in a field sable; but the pens of the feathers were powdered with ermine.

These ostrich feathers, carried by the Royal family of England, were all white, distinguished by their pens; the King’s were or; the Prince’s argent; the Duke of Lancaster’s ermine; and the Duke of Somerset’s componé argent and azure: By which, it is to be observed in their devices (being of one body) they used formal differences, as in coats of arms.
OF FISHES.

C H A P. VI.

OF FISHES.

These, being by nature inferior to the former animals, are, with some heralds, of less esteem than the former, on the account that fishes are not suitable marks for military men, to show prowess, valour, and fortitude: it is true that few sovereigns and princes have fishes in their arms, except they be relative to their names, or the produce of their territories; but, as I said before, so now again, all figures are of equal dignity, data paritate gestantium; the bearers of them being of equal dignity, and approved of by royal authority. They are likewise carried to represent some notable event, jurisdiction, and right of fishing, and frequently as relative to the name of the bearers, as by the following examples.

Fishes want not their commendable qualities too, for which they are used in this, as in other sciences, as emblems of industry and vigilance; for they swim against the stream and waves, and are said never to sleep. In this science they have several terms of blazon appropriate to them, according to their posture and parts.

When fishes are carried pale-ways, they are said to be baurient, for which the Latins say, Piscis bauriens balsium, or anbelans erectus.

When they are placed traverse the shield horizontally, that is fesse-ways, they are naiant, i.e. swimming; when they are placed back to back, adossé; and, when face, affronté, as other figures which have ante and post; and, when they are laid one above another alternately, they are said to be fretted; when their fins are of different tinctures from their bodies, they are said to be finned, and, by the French, lóre of such tinctures; when their eyes are sparkling, allumé; when their mouths are open, pamé or pammé, for which the Latins say, exprirant, seu biane ore; but Uredus uses then the word sopitus; and, when fishes are feeding, the English say devouring; of all which I shall give examples.

The dolphin is taken for the King of fishes (as the Lion and Eagle are said to be sovereigns of beasts and birds) for his strength and swiftness in the pursuit of other fishes his prey, and is said to be an admirer of men, so as to be humane, and a lover of music, for which he is often used in arms and devices. Ulysses is said by Al dibvandus to have carried the dolphin on his shield: His words are, "Significabat se animalis ejus dotes maximse sequi velle, quod simul et humanitate et musices amore, et mira celeritate ceteris præstaret omnibus, vel mari vitam degentibus." Hopingius says, that Ulysses carried the dolphin on his shield and signet-ring, upon the account of that creature's humanity for saving his son Telemachus when he fell into the sea. His words are, "Ulysses Delphinum pro insigni habuit, hac occasione, quod Telemachum filium in mare prolapsum Delphinus servasset, cui pater gratiam referens, annulo signatorio et clypeo Delphinum insculpsit," for which, in his 6th chap. N. 129. he gives several authors, and tells us in his 9th chapter, that a dolphin surrounding the stock of an anchor was the ensign and device of Augustus Caesar, Titus Vespasian, Seleucus and Nicanor, and, of old, the badge of the High Admiral of France.

The late Dauphin of France had the dolphin, as a lover of music, given him on the frontispiece of the old books that were dedicated to him for his device, with these words, Trabitur dulciote causis.

Dauphin, being the title of the eldest son of the kings of France, is from the Dauphinate, a territory in France, of old, so named from its loids and princes, called Dauphins, who carried for their arms a dolphin, relative to their name. Metcroy, in his History of France, in the life of Philip VI, tells us, that Humbert Dauphin de Viennois being feeble in body, and having no children, he, in odium of the Duke of Savoy, who invaded his country, made a donation thereof in the year 1343, to King Philip of France, of the Dauphinlate and other lands adjoining, which were incorporate with France for ever, upon condition that the Kings of France, their eldest sons and apparent heirs should enjoy them; and, ever since, the eldest sons of France have used the title of Dauphin, and their arms marshalled with these of France, viz. quarterly, first and fourth France; second and third or, a dolphin inbowed, breathing, azure, eared and barbed, gules; the French say, D’or au Dauphin oif d’azur, oriéillé, barbillé, & cristé de gueules; and Sylvester Petra Sancta says, “Dolphinus cyanus, vivus ac spirans, in aurati scuti “laticulo, cum auriculis, barbulis et crista punicos.” By these blazons they make the dolphin to have ears, a beard and crest; and it is always represented im-bowed, as fig. 14. Plate XI.

The Counts of the Dauphinate D’Auvergno, a province in France, carry azure, sené of flower-de-luces or, a bend of the last charged on the top with a dolphin azure, crested and eared argent.

The Counts of Forrest in France, gules, a dolphin or, descended of the Daupphin of Vienois.

Montpenny of Pitmillie, in Fife, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a dolphin naïant azure, for Monypenny; second and third azure, three cross croslets fitted, issuing out of as many crescents argent, the arms of Cathcart. Richard Monypenny got the lands of Pitmillie from Thomas, Prior of St Andrews, in the 1211; for which see Sir Robert Sibbald’s History of Fife, page 134.

William Montpenny Lord Monypenny, whom we find in the rolls of Parliament, in the reign of King James II. was a cadet of Monypenny of Pitmillie: He was succeeded by his son Alexander Lord Monypenny, in whom the dignity failed, having no male-issue; whose arms, in Sir James Balfour’s Register, are, quarterly, first and fourth or, a dolphin azure, finned gules, for Monypenny; second and gules, three cross croslets fitted issuing out of as many crescents argent; and I have seen them so illuminated in the reign of Queen Mary, having no other difference but changing the tinctures. Some conjecture, that upon the similitude of arms, the Monypennies are originally from the Dauphinites in France.

The name of Freer, azure, a chevron between three dolphins naïant argent.
Balfour’s MS.

The name of Osborne, gules, a fesse between three dolphins naïant or, finned azure.
Ibid.

The name of Dolphin, in England, azure, three dolphins naïant in pale or.
Art. Her.

The name of Dolphingly, vert, three dolphins naïant in pale argent; which are speaking arms.

There is a fish frequent in arms, called by the English, barble, and by the French, a bar; which is carried also imbowed, as the dolphin; and when there are two of them in arms, they are placed ordinarily back to back, for which the English say indorsed, and the French, adosté.

The Dutchy of Bar, in France, carries, in allusion to its name, azure, sené of cross croslets fitted at the foot or, two bars (or barbles) indorsed of the last, teeth and eyes argent; thus blazoned by Favin, “d’azur sené de croix recroisettes, au “pied fitchée d’or, a deux bars adossés de meme, allumée d’argent;” and Uredus thus, “Scutum caruleum nullis barbatulis aureis, duobus tergis obversis, dentibus “et oculis argenteis impressum, & cruribus aureis braechatis in imo spiculatis, “certo numero sparsum.”

The name of Fisher with us, as speaking to the name, gives azure, three salmon fishes naïant, fesse-ways in pale argent; that is, as I have said often before, the one above the other, for which the French say, l’un sur l’autre.

The name of Garvey, or Garvin, azure, three garvin fishes naïant fesse-ways in pale argent.

The Royal Company of Fishing in Scotland, in the reign of King Charles II.
azure, an imperial crown, and under it two herrings in saltier or. Mackenzie’s Heraldry.

The arms of the Country of Iceland, quartered in the achievement of the Kings of Denmark, are gules, a cod-fish argent, crowned or; because a great many fishes of that sort are taken and sold there, to supply other countries.

Robert Ged of that Ilk, azure, three geds (or pikes) haurient argent; crest, a pike’s head, proper: motto, Durat, dicit, placet. (N.R.) When a fish is haurient, it is placed pale-ways, as fig. 15. Plate XI.

Geddes of Rachan, gules, an escutcheon argent between three pikes’ heads coup-ed or. Mack. Her.

The name of Tarbot, or Turbit, argent, three turbet fishes fretted, proper, one fesse-ways, looking to the sinister, and two to the dexter chief and flank points; of which before, at the title of fret and fretted, page 216.

The Town of Glasgow carries argent, an oak tree growing out of a mount in base, with a bird standing on the top thereof, and a bell hanging on a branch in the sinister side, and in base a salmon fish, with a ring in its mouth, all proper; to perpetuate the story of a miracle said to be wrought by St Mungo, that town's patron saint, in recovering by a salmon, in its mouth, the ring of a lady out of the water of Clyde, where she accidentally dropt it, which being got, prevented the jealousy of her husband.

The name of Salmon, in England, sable, three salmon fishes laurient argent, speaking to the name.

The name of Ord, in Northumberland upon Tweed, azure, three fishes laurient argent. The principal family of the name is of an old standing, as Ord of that ilk, and of Felkington, from which there are several considerable families in that country.

In France, the name of Pisso, from piseis a fish, gules, a carp naiant in fesse. The name of Cuarot there, or, three chabot fishes, 2 and 1 gules; for which see Monsieur Baron's l'Art de Blason.

Naiant is said when fishes are placed fesse-ways, as fig. 17. Plate XI.

In England, the name of PIKTON, argent, three pikes naiant in pale. Art. Her.

The name of Ellis, argent, three eels naiant in pale sable. Ibid.

And with us the surname of ORNEEL, or ARNEEL, argent, two eels pale-ways waved between two stars in the flanks azure. W. MS.

The name of Srotty, gules, three salmons (some say trouts) laurient, with a ring through each of their noses argent. Mack. Her.

Grab of Robslaw, azure, a cheveron argent, between two flower-de-ettes in chief, and a crab-fish in base or.

The name of Shelly, in England, sable, a fesse ingrailed between three wilks or, the same borne by Sir John Shelly of Michgrave in Sussex, Baronet. Art. Her.

Since I have come the length of shell-fishes, I shall insist, so far as I have room in this Volume of Heraldry, upon the escllop, coquel and cannet, since they are so frequent in armorial figures, all Europe over, on account of their symbolical and hieroglyphical significations which some have been pleased to give them: As Saltier, an Englishman, in his writings, tells us, that, in the Records of the Office at Arms in London, the escllop signifieth, that the first of a family who carried an escllop has been a commander, and for his virtues and valour had gained the hearts and love of his companions and soldiers. The Italian, Sylvester Petra Sancta, in his Treatise, commends them as coffers of the riches of the sea, and calls them serpina colorum atque gemmarum.

Others again look upon them as fit badges of inviolable fidelity, on account that the shells of the escllop or coquel are marked by nature in pairs; and that, when separate, they can never be matched again to join with others; for which they have been chosen by sovereigns and others, as apposite badges of fraternity of several orders of knighthood and other societies.

They have been also for many ages the badges and marks of pilgrims in their expeditions and pilgrimages to holy places, and of such a distinguishing character and mark, that Pope Alexander IV. by a bull, discharged the giving the use of them but to pilgrims who were truly noble; as Ashmole, in the Institutions of the Garter, observes, chap. ii. sect. 5, where also he gives several instances of the escllops adorning the orders of knighthood, as that called the Order of St James in Gallicia, institute in the year 837, had, for its ensign, a red cross in a white field, cantoned with four escllops.

The escllop, or coquel, was so much esteemed in France, that St Lewis, in the year 1269, instituted the noble Order of the Ship, upon his expedition into Africa, adorning the collar of that Order with escllops of gold, interlaced with double crescents of silver; and Louis XI. of France, when he, in the year 1469, instituted the Order of St Michael, he composed the collar with escllops of gold, joined one with another, fastened to small chains or mail of gold.

The escllop, or coquel, with the French, are all one; but when they want ears, the French call them cannets. We make no distinction, and use only the term escllop, and are intimated conchos marinas.
Many families in Germany, Spain and France, carry them, and several old families with us, some of which I shall here mention.

The honourable and ancient family of the surname of Maule, Earls of Panmure, Lords Maule, Brechin and Navar, carry for the paternal coat of the name, parti argent and gules, a bordure charged with eight escalops, all counter-changed.

This family is originally of French extraction; for there is a lordship of Maule in France, on the river Maudre, eight leagues from Paris, in the Viccomptie of Paris, and confines of Normandy, which had the same arms, as by what follows:

Ordericus Vitalis, who wrote about the middle of the twelfth century, tells us, in his Ecclesiastical History, That Petrus de Maulia, lord of that place, gave to St Ebronville and the Monks of Urca, the churches of St Mary, St German, and St Vincent, in villa qua nuncupatur Maudi, anno 1076; and after his death was buried in the Monks' Cloister. By his wife Guindesmoh, descended of a noble family at Troyes, he left four sons, Ansold, Theobald, Guarin, and William, and was succeeded by Ansold. He went to Italy with Robert de Guiscard Duke of Calabria, who invaded Greece, and was at the battle fought with Alexius, Emperor of Constantinople, where he behaved nobly: This Ansold confirmed the deeds his father had made to the church, and died about the year 1116: He had by his wife, Odellin, daughter of Radulphus Malevicius, seven sons; Petrus, the eldest, succeeded him, who married Ada, daughter of the Count of Ghisine. And thus, after a long succession in the male-line, Robert de Maulia, by his wife Anne d'Augiulliers, left one only daughter, Reginaldula de Maule, who, anno 1397, was married to Monsieur Simon de Morivillier Signeur de Finois, who by her had the lordship of Maule.

In the middle of the village Maule, are yet standing the ruins of the old castle, and on the gate are the arms of the family cut on stone, being parted per pale, a bordure of eight escalops. And on the church, within the choir, near the high altar, where the lords of this place lie buried, they are again painted on boards, quartered with the arms of Morivilliers, being, parted per pale, argent and gules, a bordure charged with eight escalops, all counter-changed of the same. There is also on these boards a long succession of them, and the Morivilliers, with the dates of their marriages, deaths and burials, with inscriptions, one whereof is,

Reginaldula de Maule, seule fille de Robert de Maule, Hereticre seule de nom et lignee de Maule.

This lordship came at length from the Morivilliers to the Harlays of Sancy by marriage, of whom are descended a number of great families in France, and has since passed through several hands, and was lately acquired by one Monsieur de Longiviere, whose heirs do at present enjoy it. About half a league from this, stands the old castle of Panmure, belonging to the lords of this place, as may be seen on the maps of the Isle of France, done in the year 1714, by William de l'Isle, Geographer to the French King.

From the identity of the name, arms, and places there, with these here, it is plain the family of MAULE in Scotland is descended of them. What time they came over to Britain is not certain; but in the reign of King David I. William de Maule is found witness to a charter by Prince Henry, of the lands of Clerkington, to the church of Haddington, in the chartulary of the priory of St Andrews; and in the same chartulary, William de Mauele of Foulis, gives the church of Foulis to the priory of St Andrews, and Roger de Mortimer, who married his eldest daughter, confirms the same; and Gilbert de Rothven, grandchild to Walter de Rothven, resigns to William de Mortimer, his cousin, the half, or any other part, which he had by Cecil his grandmother, daughter of Sir William de Maule, of the lands of Foulis; which charter is dated anno 1262, the estate having gone to daughters. Sir Peter de Maule, grand-nephew and heir-male of the family, in the beginning of King Alexander II.'s reign, married Christiana de Valonis, daughter and sole heir of Sir William de Valonis, and grandchild of Philipp de Valonis, both of them successively Great Chamberlains of Scotland. By her he had the lordship or barony of Panmure and Benvie, and to whom succeeded their son Sir William Maule, whose posterity (when marshalling of arms came to be, in fashion) might have quartered the arms of Valonis (which are, argent, three pallets waved gules, and not azure, three water-budgets or, as I gave before in an Essay, p. 110.) with those of Maule. Sir William was succeeded by his son Sir Henry, who was succeeded again by his son Walter, and he by his son William, who married Marion Fleming, only daughter of Sir David Fleming, by his first wife Dame Jean Barclay, daughter of Sir David Barclay, Lord of Brechin, and sister to David Barclay next Lord of Brechin, whose only daughter and heir, Margaret Barclay, married Walter Earl of Atholl, and died without heirs of her body.

To William Lord Panmure, and Marion Fleming his wife, succeeded their son Sir Thomas Maule of Panmure, who was killed at Harlaw, anno 1411, whose son, Sir Thomas Maule, was heir to Dame Margaret Barclay, Countess of Atholl, and Lady Brechin, in the said lordship of Brechin; which was provided to her heirs, as is plain by a charter under the Great Seal in the public records, dated the 19th of October 1378. So that the family of Panmure having right to carry the arms of the Lords of Brechin, are now in use to quarter them with their paternal, thus; quarterly, first parted per pale, argent and gules, a bordure charged with eight escallops, all counter-changed of the same, for Maule; second argent, three pallets waved gules, for the Valonis; third quarter, quarterly, first and fourth azure, a chevron betwixt three crosses patee argent; second and third or, three piles issuing from the chief, conjoined by the points in base gules, for Barclay Lord Brechin; and the fourth grand quarter as the first; which arms are adorned with crown, helmet, and volets, befitting the quality of the family; and, on a wreath of the tinctures, a dragon vert spouting out fire before and behind, proper; for crest, with the motto, on an escrol, Clementia & animus, and supported by two greyhounds, proper, collared gules, charged with escallops argent.

The name of Graham carries escallops, of whom before, Chap. XII. page 8. where I gave the arms of Morphy, and shall only here add, that the arms of Graham of Morphy are supported with two savages, wreathet about the head and middle with laurel, all proper, which are to be seen on several places in the House of Morphy, of the date 1549; as also on the seat of the family, in their parochial church of St Cyrus, in the shire of the Merns. And, as on the Plate of Achievements, where also are to be seen the arms of Graham of Meiklewood in Stirlingshire, whom before, page 83. I gave also the designation of Meikle, instead of Meiklewood.

Escalops are the proper figures of those of the surname of Pringle, whose first ancestor is said to be one Pelerin, a famous pilgrim in the Holy Land, who came to Scotland, and the descendants from him were called at first Pilgrims, and afterwards by corruption Pringles. The ancientest family of the name I have met with in Teviotdale, where the name is most famous, is Hor-Pringle of that ilk, now designed of Torsone, argent, on a bend sable, three escallops or; crest, an escallop as the former: motto, Amicitia reddit bonores, (as in Plate of Achievements) supported on the dexter by a deer, and on the sinister by a greyhound argent, with collars about their necks sable, charged with escallops or; and upon the compartment are these words, Presse est insignis gloria facti. I have seen a charter of Robert de Laidler, miles, Dominus de Quarlewood, to Thomas Borthwick, of some lands about Laidler, in the reign of King Alexander III. to which charter Thomas de Hoppringle is one of the witnesses; and I have met with an evident in Haddington’s Collections, where King David the Bruce gives all the lands belonging to Walter de Pringle, forfeited, lying in the shires of Teviotdale and Berwick, to John Petillock, brother to William Petillock, miles.

Pringle of Galashiels, argent, on a saltier ingrailed sable, five escallops or; crest, a man’s heart, proper, with wings or: motto, Sursum. Plate of Achievements.

Pringle of Whitebank, descended of Galashiels, argent, on a saltier ingrailed sable, five escallops or; crest, a man’s heart winged, proper: motto, Sursum. N. R. And there, George Pringle of Torwoodles, descended of Galashiels, argent, on a saltier ingrailed azure, five escallops of the first; crest, a serpent nuved, proper: motto, Noce teipsum.

Sir John Pringle of Stitchiel, Baronet, azure, three escallops or; crest, a saltier within a garland of bay leaves, proper: motto, Coronat siles.
Sir Walter Pringle of Newhall, Knight, one of the Senators of the College of Justice, carries the same with Stitchel, being a younger son of that family; and for his difference, a beast in the centre: As in Plate of Achievements.

James Pringle of Greenknow, descended of a second son of Stitchel, azure, three escalops within a bordure ingrailed or; crest, an anchor within a garland of bay leaves, proper: motto, Semper spero meliora.

The arms of Pringle of Burnthouse are the same with Torsonne's, and supported on the Dexter by a buck, and on the sinister by a greyhound, proper. W. MS.

Dishington of Ardross, or, on a bend sable, three escalops argent; crest, an armed man kneeling; with the motto Unica spes mea Christus. The same arms I have seen on the seal of Thomas Dishington of Ardross, appended to a charter of his, of the lands of Grangemuir, to William Scot one of the Clerks of the Session, in the year 1589. And long before that, I meet with John Dishington, one of the assizers in a perambulation between Easter and Wester Kinghorn, in the year 1459. King David the Bruce grants a charter of the lands of Kinbrauchmond, in the shire of Fife, to William Dishington, knight; and King Robert the Bruce granted a charter to another William Dishington, of the lands of Balglassie in the shire of Aberdeen.

Moutray, or Moultrie, of Seafield, azure, on a chevron between three escalops argent, a sanglier's head couped sable, between two spur-rowels gules. (P. W. MSS.) This was the principal family of the name, now outed of the fortune, and represented by Moultrie of Rosecobie, who carries the same arms; and for crest, a mermaid, proper: motto, Nunquam non fidelis. L. R.

The surname of Ramorny carried a chevron between three escalops, as on the seal of Alexander de Ramorny, Dominus de Pitlessy, and his son Andrew de Ramorny had the like appended to an obligation of theirs, to pay to John Lord Lindsay of the Byres, a certain sum of money out of the lands of Pitlessy, of the date the 1st of September 1404.

With the English, escalops are very frequently carried by noble families there.

Villiers Duke of Buckingham, argent, a cross gules, charged with five escalops or; thus blazoned by Imhoff, "Scutum Villerius gentilitium, argentum tinctum " est, & cruce et rubrum quinque conchas aureas ornatam."

Russel Duke of Bedford, argent, a lion rampant gules, on a chief sable, three escalops of the first. And the same by Russel Earl of Orford, with a crescent for his difference.

The name of Barnaby there, argent, three escalops gules.

The name of Palmer, gules, three escalops or.

CHAP. VII.

OF VEGETABLES.

Such as trees, plants, flowers, herbs, fruits, &c. are borne in arms, not only as symbolical, but as badges and marks of the countries and lands where they most abound, and frequently are carried upon the account that their names have relation to those of the bearers. These things have proper terms in blazon, as other charges, according to their position, disposition, and situation in the shield, which I shall illustrate by examples.

Sometimes trees are represented growing out of a mount in the base point of the shield, sometimes pulled up by the root, (a sign of strength) for which they are said in blazon to be erodiente, or arrechvé; when cut through by an even line, truncket or coupled; and when bearing fruits, fructed; and when the branches are cut or broke off, the tree is then said to be raguled.

I am not to insist here on the different kinds of trees, and their specific names, nor of those of other vegetables; nor am I to give their virtues, qualities, and symbolical significations, which others ascribe to them, for the reasons that they are sometimes carried in arms, as the oak tree, which is said to represent antiquity and strength; the olive, peace; the vine, joy; the fig, sweetness and tranquillity; the apple tree, love; the palm, conjugal love, &c, which are to be considered more properly in emblems and devices, than in armories.

The land of Judea was marked out of old by the palm tree, because many such trees grew there, and many other countries have the like mark, which are to be found in the arms of these countries.

With us the Mc Gregors, because their lands were overspread with fir trees, carried, for arms, argent, a fir tree growing out of a mount in base vert, surmounted of a sword bend-ways, supporting by its point an imperial crown, proper, in the dexter chief canton, to perpetuate a piece of special service done by them to the crown. W. MS.

The Farquharsons, and many others, upon the same account, carry fir trees growing out of mounts, seeded, proper, as in the second and third quarters of the achievements of Farquharson of Invercauld, of which before.

These of the surname of Wood, in old evidents and writs, ancienly named with us De Bosco, which signifies the same, carry trees, relative to their names. In a charter of King William to the town of Inverness, in the second year of that king's reign, Willielmus de Bosco, Cancellarius Regis, and Hugo de Bosco are witnesses there. And in the charters of Alexander II. Thomas de Bosco is often to be met with. Had. Col.

Wood of Colpny, an old family in the shire of Aberdeen, now extinct, carried azure, an oak tree erudicate or. Pont's MS.

Wood of Bonnyton, now the principal family of the name, azure, an oak tree, growing out of a mount in base, proper, between two cross creslets fitchèd or; the last being a part of the arms of Tulloch of Bonnyton, which the family has been in use to carry for marrying the heiress, with whom these lands came to the family.

Sir John Wood of Bonnyton, Baronet, carries the same arms, recorded in our New Register, with the badge of Nova Scotia, as baronet; and for crest, a savage from the loins upwards, holding a club erected in his right hand, and wreathed about the head and middle with laurel, proper; supporters, two savages, each having a batton erect in their hands, and wreathed about the head and middle as the former.

Wood of Balbigno, azure, an oak tree growing out of a mount in base or, and to one of its branches are fastened two keys azure, by strappings gules, for the office of Thane of Fettercairn: Which lands, with the jurisdiction, belongs now to Mr John Ogilvie, advocate, descended of Ogilvie of Innerquharity, of whom before.

Wood of Largo, azure, an oak tree growing out of a mount in base or, between two ships under sail argent, as Admiral to King James III. and IV. under whose reigns he defeat the English at sea. King James III. gave to Andrew Wood, Master of his Majesty's Yellow Kervil, the lands of Largo in wadset, and in the year 1482, he got a grant of them heritably and irredeemably, in consideration of his good services; whose issue-male continued in possession of the lands of Largo until the reign of King Charles I. John Wood, a cadet of Largo, founded an hospital for fifteen old men, in the reign of King Charles II. near to the House of Largo. Sir Robert Sibbald's History of Fife.

Wood of Craig, azure, an oak tree acorned, growing out of a mount in base or, a hunting-horn sable, stringed gules, hanging upon one of the branches, all within a bordure inmained of the second. P. MS.

Alexander Wood of Grangehaugh, descended of the family of Bonnyton, argent, an oak tree growing out of the base, proper, between two cross creslets fitchèd azure, all within a bordure inmanted of the last; crest, an oak slip fruticated, proper: motto, Diu virescit. N. R.

These whose names end with Wood, as Spottiswood, Calderwood, Carnewood, Shorewood, Blackwood, carry trees or branches of them, relative to the name.

Spottiswood of that ilk, a good old family in the shire of Berwick, argent, on a cheveron gules, between three oak trees erudicate vert, a boar's head couped of the field; the same in the Lyon Register, recorded for Mr Alexander Spottiswood of Crumstances, representor of the family of Spottiswood; crest, a wolf's head couped, proper: motto, Patitur ut potius.
Some say that the boar's head upon the chevron is carried on the account that the heiress of these lands was married of old to one of the name of Gordon, who took upon him the name of Spotswood.

Others say that the boar's head is carried as a sign of vassallage to the Gordons, who were over-lords and superiors of those lands.

_John de Spotswood Dominus ejusdem_ is witness in a charter of Alexander Lindsay of Ormiston, in the reign of King David II.

_Caldewood_ of Piteadie, _argent_, a palm tree growing out of a mount in base, proper, surmounted of a saltier _gules_, and, on a chief _azure_, three mullets of the first; crest, a hand holding a branch of palm, proper, _motto_, _Veritas premittur, non opprimitur_. _N. R._

Alexander Caldewood, Bailie of Dalkeith, carries the same with Pittedy, but _inverts_ the saltier. His son, Sir William Calderwood of Polton, is one of the present Scitators of the College of Justice.

_The name of Carwood or Carvewood_, parted per fesse, _sable_ and _argent_; on the first, a demi-man, proper, holding in his right hand a sword erect, and in the left, a carpenter's axe, all proper; and in base, the branch of an oak tree acorned, proper. _W. MS._

_The name of Mosman, azure_, a chevron between three oak trees _or_. Mackenzie's Heraldry.

_The name of Witton, argent_, an oak tree _vert_, and a chief _sable_. Pont's MS. _The name of Wartie_ is illuminated in Workman's MS. _argent_, an oak tree growing out of a mount in base _vert_, on one of the branches a pair of spectacles _azure_, and, on the top of the tree, an oye, proper.

_Waitie_ of Rosehill, Advocate, _argent_, an oak tree growing out of a mount in base _vert_, surmounted of a fesse _azure_, charged with a crescent between two stars of the first.

_Watson_ of Saughton, in the shire of Mid-Lothian, _argent_, an oak tree growing out of a mount in base, proper, surmounted of a fesse _azure_; crest, two hands issuing out of clouds _fesse-ways_, holding the trunk of an oak pale-ways, with branches sprouting forth: _motto_, _Inaspera forvit_. (N. R.) Pointing to the condition of the family, who being dispossessed of these lands upwards of an hundred years ago, they now enjoy the same again.

_Andrew Watson_, Merchant in Aberdeen, _argent_, an oak tree growing out of the base, proper, surmounted of a fesse _azure_, charged with a crescent _or_; between two mullets of the field. _N. R._

_Andrew Watson_, Merchant in Peterhead, carries the same as the last; but charges his fesse with a flower _de-luxe_ between two mullets of the field.

_Alexander Watson_ of Wallace-Craigie, sometime Provost of Dundee, _argent_, an oak tree growing out of a mount in base, proper, surmounted of a fesse _azure_, charged with a cinquefoil between two stars of the first; and the same is carried by his representative and grandchild, the present Alexander Watson of Wallace-Craigie; and the same, with a suitable difference, is carried by John Watson Doctor of Medicine, a younger son of Alexander Watson, Provost of Dundee. _Ibid._

_Alexander Watson_ of Glentarkie, Merchant and Burgess of Kirkcaldy, carries the same with the former, but has the fesse waved, and charged with the sail of a ship _argent_; and, for crest, a ship under sail, proper: _motto_, _Ad littora tendo_. _Ibid._

_Kyd_ of Craigie, _argent_, a pine tree ericate, proper, with a hunting-horn pendent upon one of the branches _or_, stringed _gules_. Mack. Her.

_William Kyd_ of Woodhill, a younger son of Craigie, carries the same; and, on a chief _azure_, three mullets _or_, with a crescent for difference: _motto_, _Donec impleat orbem_. _N. R._

_The surname of Whippo_, _vert_, an oak tree on a mount in base _or_, and, on a chief _argent_, three mullets _gules_. Pont's MS.

_Sommers or Symmers_ of Ballyordie, _argent_, an oak tree bend-sinister-ways, surmounted of a bend _gules_, charged with three cross croslets _or_. _Ibid._
OF VEGETABLES.

The name of Forrest, argent, three oak trees vert: motto, Vivunt dum vivent. Bld.

The name of Winchester, argent, a vine tree growing out of the base, leaved and fructuated between two papagoes indorsed, feeding upon the clusters of the grape, all proper; crest, a hand holding a cluster of grapes, proper: motto, Hoc ardua vincere ducet. N. R.

Walkinshaw of that ilk, argent, upon a mount a grove of firs, proper; crest, a dove with an olive branch in its beak: motto, In season. Supporters, two forresters in long gowns, to show that their progenitors were Forresters to the High Stewards of Scotland, in the barony of Renfrew, as in Crawford's History of Renfrew; where it is said that one Dungallus, filius Christina Judicis de Levenox (who was the person that exercised a jurisdiction over the vassals and tenants of the earldom of Lennox) is so designed in the excambion he makes of his lands of Knock, with the abbot and convent of Paisley, for the lands of Walkinshaw, in the year 1235, the 21st year of the reign of King Alexander II. and from these lands his descendants took the name of Walkinshaw, and arms relative thereto.

The lineal male succession of this family continued till it was represented by two daughters heiresses, the one married to a gentleman of the name of Morton, and the other to Walkinshaw of Little-Fulwood, who got with her the lands of Wester-Walkingshaw, whose issue continued in a lineal descent till the year 1636, that the estate, by succession, came to Mr John Walkinshaw of Garturk, the next heir-male, of whom is lineally descended John Walkinshaw now of that ilk, son of Gavin Walkingshaw of that ilk, who carried, as in our New Register, argent, upon a mount in base, a grove of trees, proper; crest, a martlet, proper: motto, In season. This Gavin Walkinshaw alienated the lands of Walkinshaw in the year 1683, to James Walkingshaw, Merchant in Glasgow, a younger son of John Walkinshaw of Burrowfield, who carried the arms of Walkinshaw of that ilk, with a martlet for difference; and John the son of James is now designed Walkinshaw of that ilk.

Walkinshaw of Scotston, a younger son of Burrowfield, acquired Scotston from George Hutchison, anno 1691; he carries the arms of Walkinshaw with a suitable difference.

William Scrogie, Commissary of Argyle, lineal representor of Scrogie of Invert, or, a chevron azure, between two scrogs (branches of a tree wanting leaves) in chief, and a man's heart in base, proper; crest, a trunk of an oak tree spouting out leaves and branches, proper: motto, Ero quod eram. N. R.

The name of Rowantree, argent, on a chevron between three rowan tree branches slipped, proper, as many crescents or. Point's MS.

Blackstock of that ilk, argent, three trunks or stocks of trees couped, under and above, 2 and 1 cable.

The name of Stockdale, azure, three stocks or trunks of trees eradicate or, with branches sprouting out, argent. Balf. MS.

The name of Dalgleish, argent, a tree eradicated lying fesse-ways vert, between three pheons azure. Mack. Her.

The name of Aikman, argent, a dexter arm issuing out from the sinister side of the shield, holding an oak tree eradicate, and broken asunder near the branches, proper, between a crescent in the sinister chief point, and a mullet in the dexter base point, gules.

Mr William Aikman of Cairny, Advocate and Representor of the Aikmans of Loreburn, and old family in Angus, argent, a sinister hand in base issuing out of a cloud fesse-ways, holding an oaken batton pale-ways, proper, with a branch sprouting out of the top thereof, surmounted of a bend ingrained gules; crest, an oak tree, proper: motto, Sub robore virtus. L. R.

The name of Lothian, argent, on a mount in base, proper, a pine tree vert, a talbot (i.e. a dog) tied thereto, proper, and, upon one of the branches, a bugle pendant of the second; which arms, within a bordure vert, are recorded for Richard Lothian, Merchant in Edinburgh; and, for crest, a bugle (i.e. hunting-horn) as the former; with the motto, Non dormit qui custodit; and, in the same Register, the above arms are given to John Lothian, Portioner of Kingsbarns, within a bordure invected azure, for his difference.
OF VEGETABLES.

I am of the opinion that those of the name of Lothian are not of the same stock of people with those of the name of Loudon, who have for arms, as in our old books of blazons, argent, three inescutcheons sable. See Plate of Achievements. Whether the name of the first be from the county of Lothian, I shall not determine, latinized Lothianna, by Buchanan, from one Lothus, one of the Kings of the Picts; but he adduces no vouchers. In old charters it is written Lawdonia, and sometimes Lawdonia. In France, there is the town of Loudon, and, in the shire of Ayr, there is an ancient place called Loudon: From either of those two places it is probable the surname of Loudon is taken; for Sir James Dalrymple, in his Preface to his Scots Collections, page 65, says, that he has seen in the hands of the Right Honourable Hugh Earl of Loudon, a charter of William Morvyl, to James Loudon of Loudon, in the reign of King William. This family continued not long in the male line; for Sir Reginald Crawford married the heiress of the name of Loudon, and with her got that barony in the reign of King Alexander II. and, in the reign of King Robert I. the family of Crawford of Loudon ended in an heiress, Susanna Crawford, who was married to Sir Duncan Campbell; and from them are descended the Earls of Loudon, of whom before. In England, many families carry trees as relative to their names, as the names of Pyreton and Pine, who carry pear trees and pine trees, speaking to their names. The broom plant (planta genista) was the badge and ancient device of the Plantagenet family, for which the Kings of England were so denominatod from Geoffrey Plantagenet Earl of Anjou, father of King Henry II. by his wife Maud, the Empress, daughter and heiress of King Henry I. who did not carry the carbuncle as the armorial figure of his father Anjou, but the figures of England, with the broom-plant for his device; as did also his son Richard I. of England, who adorned his helmet with that plant, instead of a crest, as upon his seal of arms; for which see Sandford's History.

OF FRUITS.

A few of them I shall here mention, with their terms of blazon, which will serve for the rest. When fruits are represented with stalks and leaves, they are in blazon said to be stalket and leaved; the French say, tigés et feuillés; and when the stalk is pulled off at a lith with a piece hanging at it, we say slipped. As for other terms, they rise from their position, disposition, and situation, as to be erect, pendent, bend-ways, and in pale, &c.

The country of Granada, in Spain, argent, a pomegranate gules, stalked and leaved vert; thus, by Favin, D'or à la grenade de guêles tigée & feuillée de sinople; and by Sylvester Petra Sancta, Malum punicum purpureum, cum frondibus & ramis prasinis in argentea areola. Since the Kings of Spain recovered the country of Granada from the Moors, they have marshalled the arms of that country with their own.

Ralston of that Ilk, argent, on a bend azure, three acorns in the seed or; crest, a falcon, proper: motto, Fide et Marte. N. R.

These of this name are said to be descended of one Ralph, who obtained some lands from the High Steward of Scotland, and called them, after his own name, Ralphston, which became the surname of the family.

Nicolas de Ralston is witness to the donation which Sir Anthony Lombard made to the Monks of Paisley in the year 1272; and, in the year 1346, Jacobus Ralston, Dominus ejusdem, is witness in an instrument upon electing an abbot of the Monastery of Paisley, whose successor was John Ralston of that Ilk; and Thomas Ralston of that Ilk obtained a charter of these lands from John Lord Ross, anno 1525, of whom is linearly descended the present Gavin Ralston of that Ilk, who carries as above.

Aikenhead of that Ilk, an ancient family, argent, three acorns slipped vert; crest, a demi-savage holding in his right hand three laurel slips fructuated, proper: motto, Rupe sabore natu, matriculated in our New Register by Mr James Aikenhead, Representative of the family of Aikenhead of that Ilk, Advocate, and one of the Commissaries of Edinburgh, grandson of David Aikenhead, eminent for his loyalty and virtue, who, for many years, was Provost of Edinburgh, whose father sold the barony of Aikenshead, long possessed by his progenitors. He had several brothers and younger sons, who carry the foresaid bearing with suitable differences. Some of the name carry argent, an acorn between three oak leaves vert. Pont's MS.

In England, many families carry fruits relative to their names, as do several families in other countries in Europe; as the family of Pomerule, in France, azuré, a cheveron or, accompanied with three apples of the last.

The family of Moro, in Venice, has the Mulberry, and the city of Orange, an orange.

Ears of corn, as they are said to represent plenty, are carried in arms likewise in relation to the names of the bearers. Their stalks are either couped, slipped, or eradicata; and, when with leaves, we say bladed, which is from the French; as Favin in his Blazon of Arms of Inigo Ximenes, to-named Ariosto King of Navarre, in anno 862, because he carried gules, thirteen ears of corn bladed or.

De guéules à trois épis de blé d'or, 4, 4, 4, and 1.

With us the name of RIDDELL, argent, a cheveron gules, between three ears of rye, slipped and bladed vert.

The original family of this name is RIDDLE of that Ilk, in the shire of Teviotdale. For its antiquity I shall add these observations:

Jeronimus de Ridde is a witness in the inquisition made by David Prince of Cumber land, for the old possessors belonging to the Church of Glasgow. (Dalr. Collect.) And the same man is witness in the charters of that Prince, when King of Scotland, by the name of David I.

I have also seen the transumption of a charter granted by this King to Walter de Ridde, of the lands of Whittines, Eshecho, and Lillesleaf, and others, to be beholden of the king, per servitium unius militis, sicut unus baronum eorum; and which lands are now called the Baronies of Riddle, in which Alicant de Ridde succeeded his brother Walter, as by a bull of Pope Adrian IV. which I have seen, a part of which here follows, "Adrianus Episcopus, servus servorum Dei, dilecto Alicant de lo militi, salutem et Apostolicam benedictionem, &c. sub beati Petri et nostri "protectionis suscipimus, specialiter autem ea qua Walterus de Ridde, frater tu-us, testamentum ante obitum suum faciens, tibi noscitur reliquisse, viz. villas "Wittuness, Lillislyve, Brahebe, et catera bona a qui subveni tibi justa collata; nos devotionis tuae autoritate Sedis Apostolicae integre confirmamus, &c. "Datum Beneventi ymo idus Aprilis." This Pope Adrian sat in the papal chair from the year 1154, to the year 1159.

I have seen another bull, (penes Riddle de codem) of Pope Alexander III. who succeeded the foresaid Adrian, confirming the foresaid testament of Walter, and an agreement passed betwixt Alicant de Ridde, and one Huctredum Sacerdovem, anent the lands of Lilleslaive, by the mediation of King William. In the year 1270, Galfridus de Ridde is to be found a witness in several charters in the Regis-ter of Kelso; and, in the Register of Melrose, Williamus de Ridde is witness in a charter granted by John de Vesci to William of Sprouston, de nova terra de Mow. This John de Vesci was Dominus de Sprouston, and a son of William de Vesci, who was one of the number of those who set up at first to contend for the crown of Scotland with the Bruce and the Bâbol; but their claims were soon dis-cussed. Sir Walter Riddel of that Ilk, Baronet, chief of the name, lineal repre-senter and possessor of the family of Riddle, was honoured with the title of Baro-net, the 14th of May 1628.

There was another old family of this name, designed of Cranston. Hugo Riddel of Cranston, is witness in a charter of King William to the abbacy of Kelso; and in that chartulary, Hugo Riddell gave to the abbacy of Kelso the lands of Preston, being the fourth part of Cranston, called Little-Preston, and now Prestonhull; and from him the lands of Cranston were called Cranston-Riddle; which family continued to the year 1468, and then these lands came to the Creightons, and afterwards to the McGills, for which they are called Cranston-McGill; as in Sir James Dalrymple's Collections.

Walter Riddell of Minto, designed Gentleman in our New Register of Arms argent, a cheveron ingrainé gules, betwixt three ears of rye, slipped and bladed vert; crest, a dexter hand, proper, holding an ear of rye, slipped and bladed or: motto, Virtus maturat.
Mr James Cheap of Rossie, Advocate, representor of the family of Cheap of Mavhill, beside Kirotos, argent, three ears of wheat slipped vert; crest, a garb or, banded vert: motto, Ditat virtus. N. R.

The surname of Plovian, argent, on a chevron vert, between three ears of wheat stalked and bladed of the last, as many mullets or. P. MS.

Robert Collison, Gentleman in King Charles II.'s Horse-Guards, descended of Collison of Auchloumies, argent, on a fesse azur, between three roses in chief, and as many pease-cods in base, a sword bar-ways of the first, hilted and pommeled or; crest, a falcon's head erased, proper: motto, Hoc virtutis opus. N. R.

Many families in England, and other countries, have ears of corn for armorial figures; and such have also adorned the collars of high knighthood, such as that order of knights institute by Francis Duke of Bretagne, called the Order of the Ermine, or Ears of Corn, 1452. The collar of which Order was composed of gold, wrought after the forms of ears of corn, interlaced together, whereat hung the little beast ermine. It is said by some he instituted this order for the love he had to agriculture, and to encourage his subjects to improve their lands that way. Others, as Favin, say, that the ears of corn were to represent the old arms of Bretagne, which were, azur, three sheaves of corn, which have been continued by the Lords of Ponthievre, and quartered with ermine, the new arms of Bretagne.

Ears of corn, when they are bound up in sheaves, are called garbs, and when their bindings are of another tincture, they are said to be banded of such.

Garb, or garb, is a French word, for a bundle of any kind of grain, called by the Latins, fascis frumentarius, and by some, manipulus; as Sylvester Petra Sancta, in his Blazon of these Arms, quartered in the achievements of Poland and Sweden, to show the fertility of their countries, says thus: "Manipulus tritici aureus supra " balteum argentem situs, in parumla muricata." And Imhoff, in his Blazons, for sheaves and garbs, has the word mergeter; as in that of Sheffield Earl of Mulgrave, now Duke of Buckingham and Normandy, argent, a chevron between three garbs gules, as relative to the name Sheffield.

The surname of Cumming carry relative to their name, azure, three garbs of Cumming or. There were many great and eminent families of this name of old with us; the first of them, says Hector Boece, in his History, was one John Cuming, who, for his singular valour, and other good qualities, got several lands from King David I. and in his grandchilden's reigns, Malcolm and William, John's son, Richard Cuming, is frequently to be met with in those kings' charters; as also, his son William Cuming, who was created Earl of Buchan, and made Justiciar of Scotland by King William. The family of Cuming became very numerous and powerful; so that the above-named historian numbers in the reign of Alexander III. three eals of the name, and one lord, viz. Monteiith, Athol, Buchan, eals, and Cuming Lord of Strathbogie, with thirty landed knights; of whom, Andrew Winton and others give their genealogy and arms, as before, with some small alternations, for their respective differences: But most of all these families were extirpate out of Scotland for their submitting to the English, and taking part with the Baliols against the Bruces. There are some families of the name yet extant with us, whose arms I meet with in our books of blazons; as, Cuming of Altyre, the principal family of that name now, carries the plain coat of Cuming, as above, azure, three garbs or.

Cuming of Brunthill, descended of Altyre, azure, a flower-de-luce between three garbs or; crest, a hand holding a sickle, proper motto, Hinc garbe nostra. N. R.

And there, Cuming of Alchry, another cadet of Altyre, carries as Altyre, with a buckle in the centre for his difference; crest, a sword and dagger saltier-ways, proper: motto, Courage.

Sir Alexander Cuming of Coulter, Knight-Baronet, azure, three garbs within a bordure or; crest, a garb or: motto, Courage. L. R.

There are other surnames that carry garbs with us.

The name of Whiteford, argent, a bend between two cottises sable, accompanied with two garbs gules. I have mentioned (page 90.) this family, upon account of their bend cottised, and now again of the garbs which accompanies it. The first of this family was Walter de Whiteford, who, for his good services done at the battle of the Largs, in the reign of King Alexander III. under the command of Alexander Sneschal High Steward of Scotland, got from him the lands of Whiteford, near Paisley, in the shire of Renfrew; whether these lands gave name to him, or he to them, I cannot determine. There is a tradition in that country, that one of the heads of the family, who stood firm for his country in the time of King Robert the Bruce, against the English usurpation, surprised a party of the English, who lay encamped on the opposite side of the river Cart, by a stratagem of putting great quantities of sheaves of wheat and other corns into the water; and, to perpetuate that signal overthrow he gave them, they carry the wheat sheaves: However, whether this be true or not, they were reputed a good family both in Renfrew and Lanark shires, where they had opulent estates. There is a progress of writs of this family, of its antiquity and greatness, in the lands of the Earl of Dundonald, who now possesses the estate of Whiteford. By our registers, John Whiteford of that Ilk, in the reign of King Robert III. resigns his estate of Whiteford in favours of Patrick his son and apparent heir, which was confirmed by King James I. in the year 1431; Patrick was succeeded by his son John, and he again by his son Quintin Whiteford of that Ilk, who was seised in these lands 1527; he was succeeded by Adam his son, who was served heir to his father in these lands 1519; which Adam was the father of another John, who married Margaret, daughter of Robert Lord Sempill; he died without issue, and was succeeded by his brother Adam, of whom mention is made in Spottiswood's History, in the reign of King James VI. He, in the year 1576, married Mary, daughter of Sir James Somerville of Cambeth, and by her had John his successor in the lands of Whiteford and Milton; he married Elizabeth, daughter to Sir Patrick Houston of that Ilk, but had no issue, and was succeeded by his brother John, who was the predecessor of Sir John Whiteford of Milton, who died since the year 1689, without issue, and the principal stem of the family ended in him.

The eldest branch of this family is Whiteford of Blairquhan, in the shire of Ayr, descended of a younger son of Whiteford of that Ilk and Milton: who took up his residence in the shire of Ayr with his brother, who was Abbot of Crossragwell in the reign of King James IV. The family of Blairquhan continues in the above shire, in a good condition, and are designed Heritable Crowners of the Jurisdiction of Carrick, as by their charters; they have matched with honourable families, as with Blair of that Ilk, Kennedy of Ardmillan, Kennedy of Dunmallan, Cathcart of Genoch, Inglis of Sheill, and a second time with Blair of that Ilk; and the present Sir Adam Whiteford of Blairquhan married Margaret, the only daughter of Allan Lord Cathcart. Blairquhan carries, argent, a bend betwixt two cottises sable, with a garb in chief of the last; crest, a pigeon, proper, on the top of a garb: motto, Den baut.

Doctor Walter Whiteford, a younger son of Adam Whiteford of Milton, abovementioned, was first Sub-Dean of Glasgow, Parson of Monkland and Calder, then Parson of Moffat, and afterwards Bishop of Breschin; he married a daughter of Sir John Carmichael of that Ilk, by whom he had Colonel Walter Whiteford, a brave gentleman, who was forced for his loyalty to fly to Holland, where he killed Dorishaus, a Dutch lawyer, who drew up the wicked indictment against King Charles I. He carried argent, on a bend between two cottises sable, accompanied with two garbs gules, three cross pates argent; crest, a garb gules, banded or: motto, Ubique aut nusquam. The three crosses pâtes, (being of the form of those that adorn the Scots crown) were added by King Charles II.'s orders, as in the L. R. His son is now Rector of the Scots College at Paris.

The name of Lawson, argent, a saltier azure, and on a chief gules, three garbs or. P. MS.

Others of the name, as in Balfour's and Workman's Manuscripts, parted per pale argent and sable, an orle counter-changed, and on a chief gules, three garbs or.

Lawson of Boghall, argent, a saltier and chief sable, on the last three garbs or. W. MS.

I have seen the armorial seal of Mr Richard Lawson of Cairnmuir, appended to a charter of his, with the consent of his wife, Janet Elphinstone, to their son Richard Lawson, the 18th of March 1507; on the husband's seal was a saltier and chief, on, the last three garbs; and on the wife's, a cheveron between three boars' heads.
The name of Blyth, argent, on a fesse gules, between three crescents of the last, as many garbs or. P. MS. And there,
The name of Pomery, azure, on a chevron argent, six garbs sable.

Robert Smith of Gibliston, Clerk to the Lyon Olliston, argent, a saltier azure, between two garbs in the flanks, and one of the last banded or; crest, a crescent: motto, Cum plena magis. N. R. And there,
John Smith, Portioner of Durleton, argent, on a saltier azure, between three crescents, one in chief and two in the flanks gules, a garb of the first, and in base a chess-rook azure; crest, a dexter hand holding a writing-quill, proper; motto, Ex uni commodum.

John Baine, Sheriff-Clerk of Berwick, a second son of John Baine Writer to the Signet, who was descended of Baine of Findale in Perthshire, azure, a garb or, banded of the first between three thistles, all within a bordure of the second; crest, a hand holding a scroll of papers, with the word Virtue. N. R.

Mr. David Dunmure, Advocate, vert, three garbs or. N. R.

Kelso of Kelsoland, sable, a fesse ingrailed betwixt three garbs or, confirmed by the Lyon King at Arms, 1636, as marked in a book of old blazons. As for the antiquity of the family, John Kelso, son of John Kelso of Kelsoland, with the consent of his father, mortifies to the abbot and convent of Paisley the lands of Lang-lebank, betwixt the town of Largs and Kelsoland, in the year 1399; from him was descended Archibald Kelso of Kelsoland, who married a daughter of Stewart of Blackhall in the reign of King James VI. Robert Kelso of Kelsoland sold these lands to Patrick Shaw, a son of the House of Greenock; but he dying without succession, the estate came to the Laird of Greenock, and his nephew sold the lands of Kelsoland to Robert Kelso of Hallrig, descended of the family of Kelso: He married a daughter of John Osburn, provost of Ayr, by whom he had John Kelso, late Deputy-Collector and sole Surveyor of Newport-Glasgow, and William Kelso of Dankeith, in the shire of Ayr, Writer to the Signet; he, by his wife, a daughter of Dunlop of that Ilk, left behind him a son, Robert, to succeed him in the lands of Dankeith, and carries the above arms with a suitable difference.

The name of Yule, gules, a garb or, between three crescents argent. (Pont's MS.) And in the same book, others of that name, argent, a fesse sable, between two crescents in chief, and a cross-moline in base gules.

John Yule of Darleith, argent, on a fesse, between three crescents sable, a garb or, banded gules; crest, an ear of wheat, proper: motto, Numine & virtute. N. R.

William Yule of Lechouses, argent, on a fesse sable, between two crescents in chief, and a saltier couped in base gules, a garb or: motto, Per vim & virtutem.

In England many families carry garbs, as William Hatton Viscount Hatton, azure, a chevron between three garbs or.

The name of Holdesheaff, azure, a garb argent.

OF FLOWERS AND LEAVES,

Which are frequent in armories, upon account of their beauty, and good qualities: "Sunt vero omnes flores in genere, spei hieroglyphica," as Hopingius says. They are carried also as relative to the names of the bearers, of which I shall give some instances of them in arms, and by whom, with their particular attributes in the following blazons. I shall begin with the thistle and rose, the known badges of Scotland and England.

The thistle, the most ancient badge with us upon record, not only upon account of its nature, and frequent growth in Scotland, but chiefly for its aptness to express the effect of courage, helden forth by its known and much commend ed motto, Nemo me impune lacesset. And Hopingius, speaking of the thistle, cap. 9. page 635. says, "Inter herbas, Cardium clypeum sive tutelam denotare, "argumento est equestris ordinis apud Scotos Ordo, difficulties in agendo signum."

It has for many ages been the ensign of the most ancient and noble Order of St
Andrew, or the Thistle; of which more particularly in another place, and shall only here mention it as an armorial figure.

The thistle, as a part of the royal achievement of Scotland, has been in use to be granted by our kings, as an additament of honour to their well-deserving subjects: As to Keith Earl of Kintore, Leslie Earl of Leven, Sir Hugh Herries of Cousland, and Sir George Ogilvie of Barras, of whom before, in their armorial bearings.

The roses of England were first publicly assumed as devices by the sons of Edward III.; John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster used the red rose for the badge of his family, and his brother Edward, who was created Duke of York, anno 1385, took a white rose for his device, which the fautors and followers of them and their heirs did afterwards bear for distinction, in that bloody war between the two Houses of York and Lancaster: Which two families being happily united by Henry VII. the male-heir of the House of Lancaster, in marrying Princess Elizabeth, the eldest daughter and heiress of Edward IV. of the House of York, in anno 1486, the two roses were united in one, which became the royal badge of England. The eldest daughter of that union and marriage was Margaret, queen to King James IV. and their great-grandchild, King James VI. in right of his great-grandmother, succeeded by right, and peaceably, to the Kingdom of England, and was crowned in the year 1603, uniting the two kingdoms of Scotland and England in his person, for which he caused place on some of his coins, the epigraph, Henricus Rosas, Regina Jacobus; and afterwards, when a treaty of a nearer union was on foot between the two kingdoms, he placed on other coins, half a thistle, and half a rose, joined in one, with the motto, Fecit eos in gentem unam. His son, King Charles I. when he was crowned in the abbey church of Holyroodhouse, the 16th day of June 1633, caused place on his coronation-pieces a great thistle, with many stalks and heads, arising from one root, or stem, with the epigraph Hinc nostrae creverere rose, to signify, that his right and title to the roses of England grew from the old Scott thistle. King James I. of Great Britain was the first who adorned the compartment of his achievement, whereon the supporters stand, with a thistle vert, flowered gules, issuing out of the right side, and out of the left a rose gules, stalked and leaved vert, the badges of the two kingdoms; that of England being altogether red, to show that the right of Lancaster was better than that of York, in the person of King Henry VII. But to proceed to roses as armorial figures.

Roses, when they are represented in arms with stalks and leaves in blazon, they are said to be stalked and leaved of such a tincture; and the French say, tigées and feuillées. When the heart of the rose is of a different tincture from the body, we say seeded; as also of other flowers, the French bouttonnées, and the Latins, Rosas gemmatus, as Imhoff in his blazons of the families of the empire; as of that of the family of Eggenberg, "Pamula argentea, quinque rosas rubecas foliolis viridibus ornatas, atque auro gemmatus, & in quincuncem dispositas, continent;" thus by the French, d'argent, à cinque roses de gueules feuillées de sinople, & bouttonnées d'or, misées en sautoir, i. e. argent, five roses gules, barbed vert, and seeded or, in salter, 2, 1 and 2.

The custom of the Pope's blessing of roses and other flowers, which they were in use to send to their favourites, has occasioned the bearing of such in arms, as these in the bearing of Grenoble, which Menestrier tells us are of that sort.

Again, many carry roses as relative to their names, as the house of Rosen spar, in Denmark, charged their chevron with three roses; and the house of Bour- sault de Viantes in France, (as Menestrier) argent, three rose-buds gules, leaved sinople; because in their country buds of roses are called boursaults.

The town of Montrose, a burgh-royal, as relative to the name, carries roses; thus in the Lyon Register of arms, argent, a rose gules, with helmet, mantling, and wreath, suitable thereto; crest, an hand issuing from a cloud, and reaching down a garland of roses, proper; supporters, two mermaids arising from the sea, proper: motto, Mare dita, Rosa decorat; which are upon the face of the town seal; and upon the reverse of it, gules, St Peter on his proper cross, with the keys hanging at his girdle or.

David Lindsay Earl of Crawford, being the first that was honoured with the title and dignity of Duke of Montrose for life, from that place, in the reign of King James III. took, as an addition to his arms, an escutcheon argent, charged with a rose gules, which he carried by way of surtout over his own arms. And William Lord Graham, when first dignified with the title of Earl of Montrose, quartered with his own, argent, three roses gules, for Montrose; and the family being afterwards raised to the high titles of Marquis and Duke of Montrose, carry the same arms.

The name of Wedderburn (argent, a chevron between three roses gules, barbed vert) is from the lands of Wedderburn, lying in the shire of Berwick; which barony has been a long time possessed by the Humes, designed of Wedderburn, since the reign of Robert III. of whom before.

Alexander Wedderburn of Easter-Powrie, argent, a chevron between three roses gules; crest, an eagle's head erased, proper: motto, Non degener. N. R.

Sir Archibald Wedderburn of Blackness, argent, on a chevron between three roses gules, barbed vert, a crescent of the first; crest, an eagle's head erased, proper: motto, Aquila non caput muscar. L. R.

Blackadder of that Ilk, sometime another ancient family in the shire of Berwick, azure, on a chevron argent, three roses gules, which is now carried in the first quarter of the achievement of Hume of Blackadder, whose progenitor John Hume, fourth son of Hume of Wedderburn, who was killed at Flodden, married the heiress of Blackadder of that Ilk. See Plate of Achievements.

Blackadder of Tulliallan, the heir-male of Blackadder of that Ilk, carried the foresaid arms of Blackadder, quartered in the first place with argent, three crescents gules, for marrying Edmondston, one of the co-heiresses of Tulliallan. Pont's and Workman's Manuscripts. And on the house of Falkhall, so often mentioned, they are thus illuminated, quarterly, first and fourth or, three crescents gules; second and third gules, on a chevron argent, three roses of the first.

Knows of that Ilk; gules, on a chevron argent, three roses of the first. Workman's MS.

Lockery of that Ilk, gules a chevron argent between three roses or. Pont's Manuscript.

The lands of Lockery have been for a long time possessed by some of the name of Johnston.

The name of Hopper, argent, three roses gules. Pont's MS.

The name of Jossey or Jossey, argent, a chevron between two roses in chief, and a hunting-horn in base sable. Ibid.

But in our New Register, Mr Robert Jossey of Westpans, argent, a fesse between two stars in chief azure, and a hunting-horn in base sable, garnished gules; crest, an eye, proper: motto, Je vois.

John Jossey, second brother of Westpans, carries the same; but, for his difference, waves the fesse; crest, the same as before: motto, Manuque. He being chirurgeon-apothecary in Edinburgh; his son is the present laird of Westpans.

The name of Cadzow or Cadrow, argent, a chevron between three roses gules. Otherwise, as in Pont's Manuscript, argent, a chevron sable, between two roses in chief gules, and a holly leaf in base vert.

The name of Merry, argent, on a bend azure, a crescent betwixt two mullets of the first; in the sinister chief point, three roses gules, growing out of one stalk, vert, and the same in the dexter flank point. Og. MS.

The name of Lockie, argent, on a fesse sable, three roses of the first. Pont's Manuscript.

The name of Fitz-James in England, ermine, a rose gules, leaved vert, and seeded or. Ibid.

The name of Young in England, argent, three roses gules. Art. Her.

Rose of Hasland in Derbyshire, sable, on a chevron argent, three roses gules, seeded and barbed, proper; in the dexter chief point, a close helmet of the second. Ibid.

With us the name of Primrose, as univocally relative to their name, carry primroses, viz. argent, on a fesse azure, betwixt three primroses gules, as many mullets or. As in the old Book of Bass, and Pont's MS.
I find several learned men of that name, as Dr Gilbert Primrose, mentioned by Echard in his History of England, amongst the eminent men, who died anno 1642. Who, as he tells us, was particularly recommended by the King himself, to the University of Oxford, for his great worth and learning, and afterwards by the same King made a canon of Windsor. And Dr James Primrose, his son, an eminent physician, as appears by sundry volumes of his in 4to, which I have seen printed at Rotterdam. As I have also seen a treatise in divinity, written by Mr David Primrose, and printed at London anno 1638.

Archibald Primrose, son to Duncan Primrose, descended of the Primroses of that Ilk, acquired the lands of Burnbrae from the abbacy of Culross; and had two sons: viz. James Primrose, who was Principal Clerk to the Privy Council of Scotland, in the reign of King James VI. and Mr David Primrose of Whitehouse; with an only daughter, named Euphan, married to Sir George Bruce of Carnock, ancestor to the Earls of Kincardine.

The above-named James, having continued in his office for many years, was succeeded in the same office by his three sons; of whom Gilbert the eldest left an only son, who died unmarried; and James the youngest left an only daughter married to Walter Lord Torphichen.

Archibald Primrose, the second son, was knighted by King Charles I. and afterwards dignified with the honour of Knight-Baronet by King Charles II. anno 1651. And on his Majesty's Restoration anno 1660, was made Lord Register, and one of the Senators of the College of Justice.

He twice married, first Elizabeth, daughter to James Keith of Benholm, second son to George Earl Marischal, by whom he had issue, three sons and two daughters.

The first, Sir James Primrose of Barnbougle, who died before his father, leaving issue (by Elizabeth his wife, daughter to Sir Robert Sinclair of Longfórnacus) a daughter, his sole heir, married to George Home of Kimmergham, to whom she bore a son, who died without issue.

His second son was Sir William Primrose of Carrington, the heir of the family. His third son, Major General Gilbert Primrose.

The first daughter, Margaret, was married to Sir John Foulis of Ravelston, whose son got the estate of Dunipace, upon his carrying the names and arms of Primrose, which his grandson Sir Archibald now does. And the second daughter, Katharine, was married to Sir David Carnegie of Pittarrow, Bart. Secondly, he married Agnes Gray, daughter to Sir William Gray of Pittendrum, by whom he had one son and one daughter; Archibald Primrose of Dalmeny, and Grizzel married to Francis Lord Sempill.

The achievements of Sir Archibald Primrose of Carrington, Bart. Clerk-Register, is thus matriculated in the Lyon Office, or, a lion rampant vert, armed and langued gules, (being a concession by King Charles II. to him for his loyalty as mentioned in the Lyon Register) surmounting a fesse purpure, charged with three primroses of the field; crest, a demi-lion gules, holding forth in his dexter paw a primrose, proper: motto, Fide & fiducia.

Sir Archibald was succeeded by Sir William Primrose of Carrington, Baronet, the eldest surviving son of the first marriage; he married Mary, daughter of Sir Patrick Scott of Thirlestane, by whom he had Sir James, his successor, who carried as his father, and was in the year 1753, raised to the honour of Viscount of Primrose, Lord Primrose of Castlefield; he married Eleanor Campbell, daughter of James Earl of Loudon, by whom he has issue, Archibald his successor, who carries now vert, three primroses within a double treasure, flowered and counter-flowered or, supported by two leopards regardant, proper, collared and chained or, the collars charged with three primroses vert; crest, a demi-lion gules, holding in his dexter paw a primrose or: motto, Fide & fiducia. Vid. Plate of Achievements.

Sir Archibald Primrose of Dalmeny, eldest lawful son of the second marriage to the deceased Sir Archibald Primrose of Carrington, Lord Register, and thereafter Justice-General, procreate between him and Agnes Gray, daughter to Sir William Gray of Pittendrum, bears two coats, quarterly, first and fourth or, a lion rampant vert, armed and langued gules, as the coat of augmentation given by King Charles II. to Sir Archibald the father, as a mark of his Majesty's royal favour, for his service to the crown during the late troubles; second and third _argent_, on a _fesse azure_, between three primroses _vert_, as many mullets _or_, the paternal coat of Primrose; crest, a lion rampant _gules_, holding in his dexter paw a primrose, proper: _motto_, _Munus et muniment_, as by his patent of arms, extracted by him out of the Lyon Office, the 25th of October 1693.

Which Sir Archibald was in the year 1700 advanced to the dignity and title of Viscount of Rosebery, and afterwards raised to the honour of Earl of Rosebery, in the year 1703. He married Dorothea, daughter and heir of Everingham Greaty of Birking, in the county of York, by whom he has issue. Since he was dignified, he uses other arms, viz. _or_, three primroses within a double trezure, flowered and counter-flowered _gules_; supporters, two lions _vert_; crest, a demi-lion _gules_, holding in his dexter paw a primrose _gules_: _motto_, _Fide et fideic_; as in Mr Crawford's Peerage of Scotland.

_Lilies_ are not wanting in armories, of which there are two sorts, the _lilies of the garden_, and the _lilies of the flag_, such as these of France; the first are used as the emblem of the Virgin Mary, upon which account, Ferdinand King of Aragon, in the year 1403, in honour of her, instituted an order of knighthood, under the name of the _Lily_.

The collar of the order of the Lily was composed of bough-pots, filled with white lilies, interchanged with griffins, (as Favin in his Theatre of Honour) which is to be seen cut in Ashmole's Institutions of the Carter.

These are also used in that sense by the town of _Dundee_, whose patron saint was the Virgin Mary, _azure_, a bough-pot full of lilies of the garden; and _Winchester College_ in England, _sable_, three lilies _argent_.

The surname of _Lillie_, with us, and the English, carry them as relative to their names, the first _azure_, a crescent _or_, between three lilies _argent_. Pont's Manuscript.

These of that name in England, parted per chevron, _argent_ and _gules_, three lilies counter-changed of the same.

The other lilies, as those of France, so well known, being carried through Europe by most of the sovereign princes, and other noble families, is called the _flower of the flag_, and differs from the lilies of the garden, having only but three leaves, is by the Latins called _flor iris_, and by the French _fleur de l’iris_; being always called the _flower of the rainbow_ or _iridis_, which the French call _fleur-de-lis_, from the river _Lis_, as some will; and anciently _flams_ or _flammis_, which signifies the same: Whence the Royal Standard of France was called the _oriflam_ or _oriflambe_, being a blue banner, charged with golden flower-de-luces, a suitable figure, say some, for the Franks, who came from the marishes of Friesland. They tell us, that the Franks of old had a custom at the choosing or proclaiming of their kings, to place him aloft above their heads upon a shield or target, and put in his right hand a flag with its flower, in place of a sceptre; and from it the kings of the first and second race of France are represented with sceptres in their hands, like to the flag with its flower; and which flowers became the armorial figures of France.

There are other stories about the _flower-de-luces_ of France, as that a banner of them came down from heaven; but as to the time and manner of its descent these historians differ. Gerson says, that St Dennis gave it to the family of France. Nicol Gillies will have that banner to be brought by an angel to King Clovis after his baptism; and Nicolas Upton, an English writer, who lived about the year 1428, says, that an angel from heaven gave a blue banner, _seinte_ of flower-de-luces, to Charlemagne.

Menestrier says, the occasion of these fables was founded upon Pope Leo III. his reception of Charlemagne at Rome, where he declared him with all ceremony Defender of the Church of St Peter, and gave him the keys and a blue banner, _seinte_ of flower-de-luces of gold; the banner being of the heavenly colour, blue, was called _Vexillum celeste_; and having come from the Pope, the Vicar of Christ, through the ignorance of these times, it was commonly believed to have come from heaven, and confirmed by the great success that Charlemagne had in his wars, where that banner was displayed; yet, says our author, that was not the first time that the banner of France was seen adorned with flower-de-luces; for all the regalia of the preceding Kings of France are known to have been adorned with flower-de-luces.

The French have not been wanting to magnify highly this flower, and celebrate it with many eulogies. Guilielm Nangis, in his History of St Lewis, says, that it consists of three leaves, which represent Faith, Wisdom, and Valour; and as Hopingius de Jure Insignium, cap. 6. N. 424, that in the middle, Faith, supported by the other two, the Wisdom and Valour of France.

Churchmen have not been wanting in their mystical applications to the honour of this flower, heaping together all the places of Holy Writ, where the lily is mentioned, and applying them to it, from the sixth chapter of St Matthew, verse 28; and the 12th of St Luke, verse 27, Consider the lilies of the field how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin; (Lilia von laborant, neque nent;) whence they draw devices, and apply them to the Salique law, which excludes women from succeeding to the crown of France; and, from the other piece of Holy Writ, Considerate quonodo lilia crescent, they magnify their Kings above Solomon, Non Solomon in omni gloria sua copertus est, sicut unus ex iitis: And after the same manner they made use of that passage in the first chapter of the first book of Esdras, Ex omnia floribvs orbis elegistis tibi lilium unum, which they made the inscription of the reverse of that coin, called Louis d'or, where two angels carried a shield, on which was a flower-de-luce; and even from the pillars and other ornaments of the Church of Jerusalem, whereon were wrought lilies and other flowers, they bring mysterious applications and explications, to the honour of the French lilies, which gave offence, especially to the Spaniards, who magnify their armorial figures, the Lion and Castle with the like stories.

Chifletius, a Spaniard, wrote a piece called Anastatis Childeficri, after the opening of the old monument at Tournay, where the body of Childeric I. had lain for a long time, in which was found his ring, with some medals of the French Emperors, and a great number of small things like gilded bees; from which Chifletius took occasion to assert, that the arms of France were anciently bees, and that Louis le Jeune was the first king that uscd the flower-de-luces.

Monsieur Tristan, a Frenchman, in answer to Chifletius, takes in hand to prove that the flower-de-luce was the first and ancient bearing of France; and besides many stories he tells, that it has been always the device of France in adorning the sceptres, crowns, royal robes, shields and standards, the regalia of France.

The learned Menestrier, not fond of legends, makes it appear that Louis le Jeune was not the first king that carried the flower-de-luce, though he was termed Ludovicus Florus, from a blessed flower that Pope Alexander presented with him; it being a custom of the Popes of old to compliment princes with consecrated flowers; and no doubt they were such as represent these in their arms.

That the flower-de-luce was more ancient than Ludovicus Florus, Menestrier asserts that he has seen the armorial seal of King Philip, great-grandfather of this Louis, charged with flower-de-luces, appended to a Deed of Mortification to the abbacy of St Martin de Poitiers, which ever since occasioned that abbacy to carry one of them for its arms; and says, that the regalia of France were adorned with flower-de-luces, which were the fixed sovereign figures of France many ages before Louis le Jeune. And that those figures, for their royal antiquity, were affected by many princes; and, among others, by our King Achaiaus, who took them into his imperial ensign, to adorn the double pressure, the badge of the league between him and Charlemagne. And several other writers tell us, that Edward III. of England was not so much fond of his pretensions to the crown of France, as he was of the sovereign figures of that kingdom, which he quartered in the first place before these of England, being then suam, arce, deo de-luces or.

Charles VI. of France, who began to reign in the year 1380, reduced the indefinite number of flower-de-luces to three, disposed two and one, upon what ground I cannot learn; some conjecture upon account of the Trinity, others say to represent the different races of the Kings of France. These three flower-de-luces were placed by that king's order on a shield, after the form of the three crescents affinclti, with these words, Lilia crescent, to signify that, being of a smaller number than before, they would increase; and this form of a shield gave occasion to some to allege, that the arms of France were crescents after that king's reducing the indefinite number of the French lilies to three. King Edward V. of England reduced also the number of the flower-de-luces in his bearing to three.

The flower-de-luces are very famous through Europe, being borne by many princes and persons of high dignity, not only in adorning the imperial crowns of England and Scotland; by the first, to show a right of pretension; and by the second, its unity with France; but also in armorial ensigns by sovereign princes, as the Medici, and the family of Este in Italy, and in the arms of eminent churches and abbeys, and great cities, to show their acknowledgment and subjection; as also many noble families in Boulogne and Genoa carry flower-de-luces, to acknowledge the rise of their greatness to France; as many other families do in other countries, and some with us, as the Dukes of Lennox, who quartered the arms of France with their own, upon the account of the noble Feus they were honoured with in that kingdom. Others upon the account of concessions, and others to show their origin from France, of which I could give many instances, if it were not out of my road. But to proceed to armorial bearings:

The name of Montgomery, azure, three flower-de-luces or, as being originally from France, as the learned Camden, and especially Edmund Howes, in his History of England, page 177, and 135, tell us, that Roger de Montgomery came to England with William the Conqueror, and founded the Church of Shrewsbury; and that his son Robert, upon some discontent, came to Scotland, where he got a fair inheritance in the shire of Renfrew. One Robert de Mundegomery, so writ with us, is a witness in the charter of foundation of the Monastery of Paisley, in the year 1160, in the reign of King Malcolm IV. Allain de Mundegumry is likewise to be found in the Register of Paisley, in the reign of King Alexander III. And in Pryme's Catalogue of the Barons of Scotland, that were convened by King Edward I. there is one John Mundegomery. King Robert the Bruce gives a charter of the lands of Stahar to Allain de Montgomery, son of the deceased John de Montgomery; and the same King gives a charter to Allain de Montgomery, the son of Allan, of the lands of Stair, upon his father Allan's resignation; as in Rot. Rob. I.

There were then several families of the name, but the principal one was designed of Eaglesham: Sir John Montgomery of Eaglesham, in the reign of Robert II. anno 1388, being at the battle of Otterburn, took with his own hands Sir Henry Percy, son of the Earl of Northumberland, prisoner, and with his ransom built the castle of Poonon; he married the daughter and heir of Sir Hugh Eglinton of that Ilk, and his lady Giles, daughter of Walter, High Steward of Scotland, and half-sister to King Robert II. He got with her the baronies of Eglinton and Ar-drossan, in Cumingham; upon which account the family has been in use to quarter the arms of Eglinton, gules, three annulets or, stoned azure, with these of Montgomery before blazoned. Their son and successor, Sir John Montgomery, was designed of Ardrossan; and his son, Sir Alexander of Ardrossan, was made a Lord of Parliament, by the title of Lord Montgomery: He had with his wife Margaret, a daughter of Thomas Boyd of Kilmarnock, two sons, Alexander and George, the first of the family of Skelmurly.

Which Alexander died before his father, and left two sons behind him, by Elizabeth his wife, a daughter of Hepburn of Hailes, Alexander, who succeeded his grandfather, and Robert the first of Broadston, of whom Hugh Montgomery Earl of Mount-Alexander, of the kingdom of Ireland.

Which Alexander, the grandson, was Lord Montgomery after his grandfather's death, and was father of Hugh Lord Montgomery, who was created Earl of Eglinton, by King James IV. 1503. He married Helen, daughter of Colin, first Earl of Argyle, by whom he had three sons and several daughters; first, John, called Master of Eglinton; second son, Sir Neil Montgomery of Lainshaw; and, the third son, William of Stone, of whom the Montgomeries of Auchinhood.

Which John, the Master, died before his father, and left a son, Hugh, who succceeded his grandfather, and was second Earl of Eglinton; he married Marion, daughter of George Lord Seaton, by whom he had only one son, Hugh, third Earl of Eglinton, who married a daughter of Drummond of Innerpeffrey, by whom he had two sons, Hugh and Robert of Giffen; and two daughters, Margaret the eldest, married to Robert, first Earl of Winton, of whom before; and Agnes, to Robert Lord Sempill; which Hugh, fourth Earl of Eglinton, was succeeded by his son, Hugh Montgomery, fifth Earl of Eglinton, who died without any issue, anno 1612, and settled his estate, by virtue of an entail, upon his cousin-german, Alexander Seaton, son of Robert, first Earl of Winton, and his lady Margaret Montgomery, aunt of the last Earl; which Alexander accordingly succeeded to the estate, but could not enjoy the title of Earl till his Majesty was pleased to confer it upon him for the great merits of the family of Seaton; and was obliged by the late Earl of Eglinton's destination, to assume the name and arms of Montgomery; which he accordingly did, and marshalled his arms first, as painted on the house of Seaton, thus, quarterly, first and fourth azure, three flower-de-luces or, for Montgomery; second and third gules, three annulets or, stoned azure, for Eglinton, and over all, by way of surnout, an escutcheon of the paternal arms of Seaton; which surnout was afterwards disused; and since, the Earls have been in use to carry Montgomery and Eglinton quarterly, within a bordure or, charged within a double trezure counter-flowered gules; crest, a gentle-woman, or the picture of hope, dressed in an ancient rich apparel azure, holding in her dexter hand an anchor, and, in the sinister, a savage-head by the hair: motto, Garde bien, (the crest and motto of the family of Eglinton); supporters, two dragons vert, vomiting fire, being the crest of the Earl of Winton, to show their descent from that family, having before used two women or angels in Dalmatic habits, for supporters.

This Alexander Seaton, who took upon him the name of Montgomery, and was Earl of Eglinton, for his valour was to-named Gray-Steel; he had with his wife Anne, daughter of Alexander, first Earl of Linlithgow, several sons and daughters; the eldest, Hugh, his successor, was Earl of Eglinton, and father of Alexander Earl of Eglinton, the grandfather of the present Alexander Earl of Eglinton.

I shall here speak to the branches of this honourable family, whose arms I find in the ancient and modern books of Blazon that have occurred to me.

Sir Robert Montgomery of Skelmurly, Baronet, whose progenitor was George, a second son of Alexander, first Lord Montgomery, carries in our Old and New Registers, quarterly, first and fourth Montgomery; second and third Eglinton, over all, in the centre, a two-handed sword in pale, proper; crest, a heart surmounted of an eye, proper.

Montgomery of Broadston, the first of which family was Robert Montgomery, second son of Alexander, first Lord Montgomery, who died before his father; and of this family of Broadston, descended Hugh Montgomery Earl of Mount-Alexander of Ireland. This family carried, as in Esplin's Illuminated Book of Arms, quarterly, first and fourth Montgomery; second and third Eglinton, and, by way of surnout, an escutcheon argent, charged (as I took it by the painting) with a bear's head couped gules.

Montgomery of Scotston, in the abovementioned book, quarterly, first and fourth Montgomery; second and third Eglinton, and, by way of surnout, an escutcheon charged with a hart's head cabossed.

Robert Montgomery of Scotston is recorded in the chartulary of Paisley to have been an arbiter betwixt the abbot of that convent and the town of Renfrew, in the year 1498; which family continued in the possession of these lands, being a part of the inheritance of the family of Eglinton, of which this family was a branch, till the reign of King Charles I. that John Montgomery of Scotston alienated these lands; and of this family was William Montgomery, who purchased some lands in Kintyre, whose son now living there is John, father of three sons; the eldest, William; the second, James, a sea-captain; the third, John, Minister of the Gospel at Stewarton.

Montgomery of Giffen, quarterly, first and fourth Montgomery, second and third Eglinton; over all, dividing the quarters, a cross waved or, and in chief a label of three points of the last. The first of this family was Robert, second son of Hugh Earl of Eglinton, who married Margaret, daughter of Sir Matthew Campbell of Loudon, by whom he had one daughter, Elizabeth, his sole heir, married to Hugh Earl of Eglinton.
the heiress of the name of Bisset, and one of the heirs of the name of Fentons. The family was dignified with the title of Lord Lovat by King James I. the 3d of March 1426.

Hugh, or Hucheon Fraser of Lovat, sat as a lord in Parliament in the year 1430, of whom were descended the noble lords of that family. For their arms above blazoned see Plate of Achievements.

The other considerable family of the name was Sir Alexander Fraser of Cowie, said to be descended of another younger son of the abovementioned Sir Alexander, and his lady, sister to King Robert the Bruce. Sir Alexander Fraser is served heir in the lands of Cowie, the 13th of September 1561. He married Jean Ross, second daughter and one of the co-heirs of William Earl of Ross, and got with her the lands of Philorth, which became the designation of the family; and from them was lineally descended Sir Alexander Fraser of Philorth; to whom, by the death of Alexander Abernethy Lord Salton, who had issue, the honours devolved, being his sister's son, who, in right of his mother, was served heir to his grandfather the Lord Salton, and by King Charles II. declared Lord Salton, and approved of in Parliament 1670; whose great-grandson is the present Alexander Lord Salton, who carries, quarterly, first azure, three cinquefoils argent, 2 and 1, for Fraser; second or, a lion rampant gules, bruised with a ribband sable, for Abernethy; third argent, three piles issuing from the chief, conjoined in points gules, for Wishart, (these two last quarters were borne by Abernethy Lord Salton) and the fourth quarter as the first; and the supporters, crest and motto, are also the same used by Abernethy Lord Salton, of which before.

Sir Peter Fraser of Dore, Baronet, was descended from the abovementioned Sir Alexander Fraser, nephew to King Robert the Bruce, as by Mr Crawford's Peerage: The family has been in use to carry the plain arms of the name, viz. azure, three cinquefoils argent; and the same arms have been carried by Fraser of Muchill.

Andrew Fraser Lord Fraser of Muchill was dignified with that title by King Charles I. 1633, and carried azure, three frases argent; crest, a mount full of strawberries, leaved, flowered and fructuated, proper; supported on the dexter by a falcon, and on the sinister by a heron, proper: motto, All my hope is in God.

Hugh Fraser of Belladrum, a second son of Culbeckie, who was a second son of Lovat, procreate betwixt him and Jean, daughter to the Earl of Huntly, carries, quarterly, as Lovat, within a bordure ingrailed and quartered, argent and gules; crest, a stag starting, proper, attired or: motto, Virtus laus actio. N. R.

Thomas Fraser of Strichen, descended of a second son of Alexander Lord Lovat, and his wife, a daughter of Sir John Campbell of Calder, carries the quartered arms of Lovat, within a bordure gules; crest, a stag's head coupled, proper: motto, Viva ut postea vivas. Ibid.

Fraser of Eskdale, descended of a second son of Strowie, who was a second son of Lovat, the quartered coat of Lovat, within a bordure indented argent, charged with eight crescents gules; crest, a stag's head coupled, proper, attired or, and charged with an increcent and decrescent interlaced gules: motto, Vel pax vel bellum. Ibid.

Fraser of Auchnagairn, a third son of Belladrum, carries his father's arms as before; and, for difference, charges the bordure with eight mullets, all-counterchanged; crest, a stag's head erased, proper, attired or, charged with a star of eight rays, issuing from a crescent argent: motto, Pace et bello, paratus. New Register.

Mr Simon Fraser of Fingask, fifth son of Belladrum, carries the same with Belladrum; and, for difference, charges the bordure with eight annulets counterchanged; crest, as his brother, above: motto, Ubique paratus. Ibid.

Alexander Fraser of Tyrie, descended of James Fraser, a second son of Philorth, quarterly, first and fourth Fraser; second and third gules, a lion rampant argent, armed and langued sable, with a crescent, for a brotherly difference; crest, an ostrich holding in its beak a horse-shoe: motto, In God is all. Ibid.

Mr Patrick Fraser of Broadland, as above, the quartered arms of Philorth, with a flower-de-luce for difference: motto, In God I trust. Ibid.
Mr James Fraser of Phopachy, azure, three frases argent, within a bordure couped of the second and first; crest, a phcenix, proper; motto, Non extinguar.
Ibid.

Mr James Fraser of Kirkton, in the shire of Forfar, quarterly, first and fourth Fraser; second and third gules, a lion rampant argent, all within a bordure indented or; crest, a bunch of strawberries, proper; motto, Nosce teipsum.
Ibid.

Henry Fraser, Ross-Herald and Herald-Painter, parted per pale, azure and argent, three cinquefoils counter-changed of the same; crest, a winged globe, surmounted of an eagle in a rising posture, proper; motto, In virtute & fortuna.
Ibid.

Philip Fraser, sometime Provost of Inverness, quarterly, first and fourth azure, a fesse betwixt three frases argent; second and third argent, three antique crowns gules; crest, a hand pointing with the fore-finger to an escut above, in which is the motto, Semper parati; recorded 1692.

The noble family of Hamilton have, for their proper arms, gules, three cinquefoils ermine, and derive their descent from the old Earls of Leicester in England, and Mellant in Normandy, who carried gules, a cinquefoil ermine, the paternal coat of Mellant.

The first of this family was Sir William de Hambleton, (so called from the manor of Hambleton in Buckinghamshire, where he was born) who was third son to Robert Earl of Leicester, surnamed Blankmains. This Sir William Hambleton is said to have come to Scotland, when his elder brother, Roger, was Archbishop of St Andrews, and Chancellor of Scotland, where he married the only daughter and heir of Gilbert Earl of Strathern. Upon account of the marriage, and the frequent wars that were between the two nations of Scotland and England, the said Sir William was obliged to return to England, being an Englishman, and an enemy to Scotland, for he lost his interest there.

From him was descended Sir Gilbert de Hambleton, who was obliged to leave England, for killing one Spencer in a duel, in defence of King Robert I. and with great difficulty made his escape to Scotland, where he was kindly received by that king, who gave him considerable lands, as these of Cadzow in the county of Lanark, (now called Hamilton) Edlewood, and several others: He married Isabel Randolph, daughter to Sir James Randolph of Strathdon, and sister to Thomas Earl of Murray, afterwards Governor of Scotland.

Their son and successor was Sir Walter Fitzgilbert de Hambleton: He obtained several charters of the lands of Cadzow, now Hamilton, and others, from King Robert I. as one (in Had. Coll.) Waltero filio Gilberti, militii, dilecto & fideli nostro, pro fideli servitio suo nobis impenso, & Mariæ sponsæ sue, totam baroniam de Kennet in Vicecomitatu de Edinburghe, una cum Terris de Alcathie, &c.

I am not to give here a complete genealogical account of this noble family, which may be had in Mr Crawford's Peerage, but only give a short account of their advancement to titles of honour and dignity, and their armorial bearings, with these of their cadets, which I have met with in our ancient and modern books of arms.

The third in a lineal descent from the last-mentioned Sir Walter, was Sir James Hamilton of that Ilk, who was created a peer, by the title of Lord Hamilton, 1445, all his lands being erected in a barony, called Hamilton: He married Janet Livingston, daughter of Alexander Livingston of Callendar, in the minority of King James II. and with her he had James, second Lord Hamilton, who married Mary, eldest daughter to that king. By her he had James, third Lord Hamilton, who was created Earl of Arran by King James IV. 1523, who gave to him the Island of Arran, the arms of which he and his successors have been in use to quarter with those of Hamilton. He was thrice married: first, to a daughter of the Lord Drummond, by whom he had only a daughter, Margaret, married to Andrew Stewart Lord Edvandale; and secondly, to a daughter of the Lord Home, by whom he had no issue; and thirdly, he married Janet, daughter to Sir David Beaton of Creich, by whom he had James, who succeeded him; and two daughters, one married to Archibald Earl of Argyle, and another to Alexander Earl of Glencairn. This Earl died in the year 1530.
OF FLOWERS AND LEAVES.

Which James, the fourth Lord Hamilton, and second Earl of Arran, after the death of King James V. was declared Governor of Scotland, and tutor to the in\ntant Queen Mary. He was a long time governor after Queen Mary went unto France, and was made a Knight of the Holy Ghost, and created a Duke of Chattel\nhurst, in that kingdom. The collar of the Order of St Michael was placed round his quartered arms, being those of Hamilton and Arran, which are to be seen in our illuminated books of blazon, and other paintings, especially on that curious roof of Samson’s Hall in the House of Seaton. He had to wife Lady Margaret Douglas, eldest daughter to the Earl of Morton, and by her had issue four sons and three daughters. He was succeeded by his second son, John, commendator of Aberbrothock, the eldest dying without issue. This lord was forfeited with his father, for adhering to Queen Mary, and the estate and dignity of Arran given to captain James Stewart, but afterwards was reposed to his fortune and digniti\nies by King James VI. and John Earl of Arran was afterwards solemnly created Marquis of Hamilton, anno 1599, being the first that enjoyed that dignity in Scot\nland. He married Margaret Lyon, daughter to the Lord Glammis, Chancellor of Scotland, by whom he had issue, James, who succeeded him, and a daughter mar\nted to John Lord Maxwell, ancestor to the Earls of Nithsdale.

James, second Marquis of Hamilton, and fourth Earl of Arran, was honoured with the title of Earl of Cambridge in England, and installed one of the Knights of the most noble Order of the Garter, anno 1619. He married Anne Cunninghain, daughter to the Earl of Glencairn, by whom he had James and William, suc\ncessively Dukes of Hamilton, and three daughters, married to the Earls of Craw\nfurd, Eglinton, and Drumlanrig.

James, the third Marquis of Hamilton, was created Duke of Hamilton in the year 1643, and made a Knight of the Garter by King James VI. He married Lady Mary Fielding, daughter to William Earl of Denbigh, by Susanna Villiers, sister to the Duke of Buckingham; who bore him three sons and three daughters.
The sons were, Charles, James, and William; but they, and the Lady Mary, the coldest daughter, died young: The other two daughters were, Lady Anne, thereafter Duchess of Hamilton, and Lady Susanna, married to John Earl of Cassillis. The duke was condemned in England, by the same pretended court of justice which had condemned King Charles I. and accordingly was beheaded the 9th of March, and his corpse was brought down and buried at Hamilton amongst his ancestors.

William, second Duke of Hamilton, fourth Marquis, and sixth Earl of Arran, succeeded his brother Duke James in these dignities; he died in the year 1651, leaving behind him, by his lady, Elizabeth Maxwell, eldest daughter to the Earl of Dirlton, four daughters, Lady Anne, Elizabeth, Mary, and Margaret, married to the Earls of Southeusk, Glaicarn, Callendar, and the Laird of Blair.

He was succeeded by ANNE DUCHESS of HAMILTON, his niece, and eldest daugh\nter to his brother Duke James; she married WILLIAM EARL of SELKIRK, eldest son of William Marquis of Douglas, by his second wife Lady Mary Gordon, daughter to the Marquis of Huntly; who was raised to the dignity of Duke of Hamilton in 1661, for his own lifetime, and soon after made a Knight of the Garter. He car\ried, quarterly, first grand quarter, quartered, first and fourth gules, three cinque\foils ermine, for Hamilton; second and third argent, a ship with her sails furled up sable, for the title of Arran, carried by the family of Hamilton; second grand\nquarter, a man’s heart gules, ensign’d with an imperial crown or, and, on a chief azure, three stars of the first, for Douglas; third grand quarter as the second, and fourth as first. Here the arms of Hamilton are preferred to his own, being mar\nshaled in the first quarter, as I think, upon the account of feudal arms, being in\nvested in that duchy for life, and taking upon him the name of the family: Upon which account, and others, the wife’s, or maternal coat, is sometimes placed in the first and fourth quarters, when the husband, or heir, derive not only their heri\ntage, but their title and dignity from the wife or mother; which arms were sur\nrounded with the garter, and timbred with helmet and volets befitting his quality; and, in place of his wreath, a ducal crown, and thereupon, for crest, a tree, proper, with an iron saw through it; and the word Through, for motto; supporters, two antelopes, proper. He had issue, by Anne, his duchess, aforesaid, James Earl of Arran, who succeeded him, Lord William, who died in France unmarried, Charles Earl of Selkirk, John Earl of Rutherglen, George Earl of Orkney, Lord Basil; and Lord Archibald; and three daughters, Lady Katharine, married to the Duke of Athol; Lady Susan, married first to the Earl of Dundonald, and afterwards to the Marquis of Tweeddale; and Lady Margaret, married to James Earl of Panmure.

James Earl of Arran succeeded his father. His mother, the duchess, in her lifetime, made a surrender of her titles in favour of him; and a patent was signed, creating him Duke of Hamilton, with precedence in the same manner as though he had succeeded thereto by his mother’s death: And, in the year 1711, he was created a peer of Great Britain, by the title of Duke of Brandon, in Com. Suffolk, and Baron of Dutton, in Com. Cest. and the year following, upon the death of the Earl of Rivers, he was made Master-General of the Ordnance, and soon after elected one of the Knights Companions of the most noble Order of the Garter, and was allowed to have both the ensigns of Orders of the Thistle and Garter placed round his arms. The 15th of November 1712, he was unfortunately murdered in a duel with Charles Lord Mohun. He had to his first wife Lady Anne Spencer, daughter to the Earl of Sunderland, by whom he had two daughters, who died young. He married to his second wife Elizabeth Gerard, daughter and sole heir to Digby Lord Gerard of Broomley, with whom he had a very considerable estate in Lancashire and Staffordshire, and by her had Lady Elizabeth and Lady Katharine, who died young; James, now Duke of Hamilton, his heir and successor; Lady Charlotte, Lord William, Lady Susan, and Lord Anne, so named in regard of Queen Anne who was his god-mother. He carried, when Earl of Arran and Duke of Hamilton, only, quarterly, first and fourth Hamilton, second and third Arran, surrounded with the collar of the Thistle, and with that of the Garter, supported by two antelopes, proper, gorged with ducal crowns, and chains thereto affixed, passing betwixt their fore-legs, and reflexing over their backs or; and for crest, a tree issuing out of a ducal coronet, with a saw fesse-ways through it: motto, Through. As in Plate of Achievements.

The branches and cadets of this noble family, with their blazons, are these:

James Earl of Abercorn, Lord Paisley, Viscount of Strabane, and Lord Mountcastle in Ireland; quarterly, first and fourth Hamilton, second and third Arran, with a label of three points argent, in chief, for difference; with the crest, motto, and supporters of the Duke of Hamilton, as before.

The first of this family was Lord Claud Hamilton, third son of James, the fourth Lord Hamilton, second Earl of Arran, and Duke of Chattelherauld in France, by his wife, Lady Margaret Douglas, daughter of James Earl of Morton. King James VI. erected the lands belonging to the abbacy of Paisley into a temporal lordship, in favours, of Lord Claud Hamilton, the 20th of August 1587; and in the year 1591, created him a lord of Parliament, by the title of Lord Paisley; he died 1621. He had by his lady, Margaret Seaton, daughter of George Lord Seaton, James Lord Paisley, who was created Earl of Abercorn the 20th of July 1666, before his father died, of whom is descended the present James Earl of Abercorn.

Sir Thomas Hamilton of Byres; was son to Sir Thomas of Priestfield, and grandchild of Thomas Hamilton of Drumcary, descended of Hamilton of Innerwick, one of the first cadets of the family of Hamilton. The first, named Sir Thomas of Byres, was by King James VI. employed in several honourable offices, as President of the Session, and Secretary of State, and his Majesty created him Lord Binning, the 30th of November 1613. I have seen his seal of arms appended to a charter of his, granted to John Howison of Braehead in Kings-Cramond, of the date the 19th of November 1616, whereupon was a shield, charged with a chevron, and on it a buckle betwixt three cinquefoils, all within a bordure charged with eight thistles; supporters, two dogs; crest and motto as now used. But there was no coronet upon the shield, because Parliamentary Lords were not then in use to have them, and the legend round the shield was, Sigill. Thome Domini Binnry. By the same king he was created Earl of Melrose, with all ceremony, the 30th of March 1619, and one of the knights that attended him in the ceremony was Sir John Dalnahoy of that ilk. This earl, afterwards disliking the title of Melrose, changed it for that of Haddington, which he got confirmed by King,
OF FLOWERS AND LEAVES.

Sir Neil Montgomery, the first of the family of Lainshaw, of Langshaw, was second son to Hugh, the first Earl of Eglinton, and his lady, Helen, daughter of Colin Campbell, first Earl of Argyll, who married Margaret Mure, only daughter and heir to Quintin Mure of Skeldon, by whom he had two sons and three daughters; John, the eldest, died without issue, and was succeeded by his brother Neil. By our old books of blazons, and by that of Esplin, Marchmont-herald, the family of Langshaw carried, quarterly, first and fourth Montgomery, second and third Eglinton, and over all, by way of surtoute, azure, three stars argent, for Mure of Skeldon; and in James Workman's Manuscript, Sir Neil Montgomery of Langshaw's arms are supported with two dragons; and the motto, Garde bien. This Sir Neil, while an old man, was killed in a feud by the Lord Boyd, Mowat of Bulsby, and others, in the town of Irvine, 1547, which occasioned much bloodshed in Cunningham; but afterwards the Lord Boyd was content to compose the matter with Neil, son and heir of Sir Neil who was slain; and that it might be done in the most friendly manner, all parties concerned were called, who accordingly met at Glasgow the 11th of February 1562: On the deceased Sir Neil Montgomery's part was Hugh Earl of Eglinton, pro-nephew (that is great-grandchild) of Hugh Earl of Eglinton, who was father to the abovementioned Sir Neil, and Gilbert Earl of Cassillis, as representing Dame Catharine Kennedy, who was grandauncle to the said Sir Neil, as taking burden on them, the two branches on the father's side; and Archibald Earl of Argyll, taking burden on him for the House of Argyll, and the House of Stewart of Lorn, two branches on the mother's side; with the consent also of Sir Neil's three daughters, viz. Christian Lady Luss; Elizabeth, (who was married to Hume of Fastcastle, to whom she had only two daughters, one married to Logan of Restalrig, and the other to Logan of Dunlugas) and Helen, Sir Neil's third daughter, who was married to Maxwell of Newark; as in the principal indenture, of the date abovementioned, which I have seen in the custody of the present Laird of Lainshaw, and which clearly instructs the descent of the said Sir Neil and his issue.

He was succeeded by his son Neil, second Laird of Lainshaw, who married Jean Lyle, only daughter, and at last heir to her father John Lord Lyle, and her brother James, master of Lyle, who died without issue; of which family I have spoken before, page 216. By her he had a son and successor, Sir Neil Montgomery, third Laird of Lainshaw; who, coming, in right of his mother, to be heir to the Lord Lyle, quartered the arms of that family with his own, as did also his successors, by way of a genealogical penon, and as in Plate of Achievement. And Mr James Montgomery of Lainshaw, Clerk to the Justiciary, as representative of the family of Lainshaw and Lord Lyle, uses the same, viz, quarterly, first grand quarters quartered, first and fourth azure, a bend between six cross creslets fitché or, for Marr Earl of Marr; second and third or, a fret gules, (by the printer's mistake, gules, a fret or) for the Lord Lyle; second grand quarter, argent, on a fesse azure, three stars of the first, for Mure of Skeldon; third grand quarter as the second, and fourth as the first; and over all, by way of surtoute, the quartered coat of Montgomery Earl of Eglinton; crest, a cock, rising: motto, And I may; supporters, two leopards, proper.

Colonel James Montgomery of Coilsfield, a younger son of Alexander Earl of Eglinton, quarterly, first and fourth Montgomery, second and third Eglinton, all within a bordure or, charged with a double pressure counter-flowered gules, and, for difference, a crescent in the centre; crest and motto the same with the Earl of Eglinton. N. R.

Sir Hugh Montgomery of Hessland, gules, two spears crossing other saltier-ways betwixt three flower-de-luces in chief, and as many annulets in base or, stoned azure. Ibid.

George Montgomery of Broomlands, descended of the family of Eglinton, quarterly; first and fourth azure, a branch of a palm-tree between three flower-de-luces or; second and third Eglinton; crest, a branch of palm, proper: motto, Procedamus in pace. Ibid.

The name of Brown is ancient with us, and carries flower-de-luces.

One Walter de Brun is witness in an instrument ofquisition made by David Prince of Cumberland, afterwards King of Scotland, of the possessions of the church of Glasgow, (Dal. Coll. p. 349, and 354.) who may be the predecessor of Philip de Brun, mentioned in a charter by Roger Moubray to Moncreif, in the reign of Alexander II.

There is a judicial transumpt by Sir David Brown of Cumbercolston, to the abbacy of Holyroodhouse, of some lands and acres in territorio de Cumbercolston, for prayers to be said for the soul of King Alexander, and the health of his son King Alexander; which makes it clear, that the original charter was granted in the reign of Alexander III.

Richard de Brun was forfeited by King Robert the Bruce 1320.

Brown of Coalston has a charter from King David II. granted to David Brown of Coalston, who afterwards mortified a part of that barony, pro anima Regis Davidis, (as in Sir George Mackenzie's MS.) John de Brown de Colston is a witness in a charter of David Hepburn of Waughton, to his son and heir Kintigermus Hepburn, and his wife Margaret Lauder, of the lands of Waughton, the 6th of September 1498. (Had. Coll.) Brown of Coalston carries gules, three flower-de-luces or; crest, a lion rampant, holding in his dexter paw a flower-de-luce, as the former: motto, Floreat majestas. N. R.

This family was dignified with the title of Baronet in the reign of King Charles.

Brown of Thornydikes, in the Merse, carries as Coalston, being of a brother of the family, with a filial difference.

Brown of Fordell, in Fife, azure, a chevron between three flower-de-luces or.

And

Brown of Kingside, descended of Fordel, carries the same, and, for his difference, makes the chevron inverted. N. R.

Thomas Brown of Bonnyton, in Mid-Lothian, or, on a chevron betwixt three flower-de-luces azure, a besant of the first; crest, a ship under sail, proper: motto, Cante & sedulo. L. R.

dure gules. Pont's MS.

The same is carried by Alexander Glass of Sauchy; crest, a mermaid holding a looking-glass and a comb in her hand: motto, Luctor non mergor; recorded in the New Register 1668.

John Don of Spittle, Sheriff-Clerk of Stirling, descended of the family of Don of Teth, bears vert, on a fesse betwixt two crescents in chief, and a flower-de-luce in base argent, three masques sable, a dexter hand holding a pen, proper: motto, Suum cuique.

OF CINQUEFOILS, QUATREFOILS, AND TREFOILS.

Flowers and plants are so called in armories from the number of their leaves. The cinquefoil has five leaves, and all other flowers that have but five leaves may be so called when their specific names are not known; yet the English, as Gerard Leigh and others say, though the proper names of flowers of five leaves be not known, they should have different names in blazon, from the nine armorial tinctures of which they are coloured: For example, if the cinquefoil be of the tincture or, it should be called ranuncula; if of argent, jessamine; if gules, the rose; if azure, pircvinales; if sable, ducal; if vert, five-leaved grass; if purpure, buglass; if tenny, puppie; and if sanguine, the stack-jelly-flower. If they be of any other colour besides these, and of the furrs, they are then to be blazoned cinquefoils. The French, whom we ordinarily follow, call them quintefeuilles, and we cinquefoils, of whatsoever tincture they be, and are represented pierced or voided in the centre, to distinguish them from these that have specific names.

Quintefeuille, says Menestrier, est un fleur de cinque feuilles, percé ou ouverte en cœur. He, in his Rise of Arms, tells us, that cinquefoils were anciently used by those who went to war, as distinguishing badges, because it was latined Vina pervincax; which name seems to be lucky, having some resemblance of victory. Others from the Greek call them Penteýlos.

Cinquefoils are frequent with us in the arms of ancient and honourable families, as these borne by the name of Fraser, azure, three cinquefoils argent, which are ordinarily called with us fraser or fraisiers, i.e. strawberry flowers, and so are speaking to the name of Fraser.

The first progenitor of the name (as in Sir George Mackenzie's Manuscript) was one Pierre a Frenchman, who came to Scotland in the reign of King Achaus, when the famous league was made with France. He and his posterity became than of the Isle of Man, and afterwards settled in Tweeddale; and when surnames came in use, they took the name of Fraser.

In the Register of Kelso, Simon Fraser dotes several lands to that abbacy. In the reign of King Malcolm IV, and in the Register of Newbattle, the donation of Adam Fraser is there, of the lands of Southaile, mentioning a gift of his uncle Oliver to that abbey. The seat of the Frasers was Oliver-Castle in that county, probably so called from the above Oliver. From this family proceeded the Frasers of Touch in the shire of Stirling, and others in the north.

The right line of the Frasers in Tweeddale ended in the heiresses of Sir Simon Fraser; the eldest was married to Hay of Locharrat in the south, progenitor of the Earls of Tweeddale, and another to Sir Malcolm Fleming, predecessor to the Earls of Wigtown; for which cause these families have always been in use to quarter the Frasers' arms with their own, which, in old books, are azure, five frises or cinque-foils placed in salter argent, though these many years they have been illuminated azure, three cinquefoils, 2 and 1 argent.

The male representor of the Frasers of Oliver-Castle in Tweeddale is said to have great possessions in the north of Scotland, which he and his successors enjoyed under the title of Lord Frascer, whose armorial bearings were as above.
For the antiquity of those in the north, Ricardus Fraser is a witness in the reign of Alexander II. and William Fraser, designed Cancellarius, is, with Simon Fraser, a witness in the charter of King Alexander III. of the lands of Bethwaldoft, to the abbacy of Dunfermline. Had. Collect.

After the death of this King, we find William Fraser Archbishop of St Andrews, M'Duff Earl of Fife, and John Cumyn Earl of Buchan, Governors of Scotland be-north the river Forth, in the year 1293. About the same time Sir Andrew Fraser, designed Vicccomes de Striwiling, is a witness in a charter of William Gourlay to the abbacy of Kelso. (Dalrymple's Collections.) He was one of the auditors appointed by King Edward I. between the Bruce and the Baliol; and, on his seal, says Sir George Mackenzie in his Manuscript, were six frises, disposed 3, 2 and 1.

Sir Alexander Fraser (whom some call Lord Fraser) married Mary Bruce, sister of King Robert the Bruce, and widow of Sir Neil Campbell of Lochow, ancestor to the Duke of Argyle. This King grants a charter of several lands, "in tene-ra mento de Auchincairn, Alexandro Frazer militi, & heredibus suis, inter ipsum & quondam Mariam Bruce, soorem nostram dilectam, legittim procreatis," dated at Kinross the 18th year of his reign; and two years afterwards he gives a more ample one of the fore-mentioned lands, cum communi pastura Tbanagii nostri de Kinocardine, to the said Sir Alexander and his son John, designed the King's nephew. (Had. Collect.) And the same year, being the 20th of that King's reign, Sir Alexander Fraser is designed Cancelleris nostr in that King's charter to the friars and monks at Edinburgh, of five merks Sterling, to be paid out of the mill of Libberton. Ibid.

Sir Alexander had several sons, John above-named, and Alexander, from whom descended other honourable families of the name, as Fraser of Lovat and Dores.
Sir John, the eldest son, died without male issue, leaving only one daughter, Margaret Fraser, married to Sir William Keith Marischal, by whom he had John his eldest son, who died in the lifetime of his father, leaving issue by his wife, a daughter of King Robert II. a son Robert; but he dying without male issue, his heir-female was married to Alexander, first Earl of Huntly; for which Gordon quarters the arms of Fraser, as before.

There are many honourable families of the name of Fraser; to give a deduction of their genealogical descents would swell my book beyond the designed bulk:
I am, therefore, here necessitated to speak only to their armorial bearings, with some observes on their antiquity, as it relates to their achievements.

Fraser. Lord Lovat, quarterly, first and fourth azure, five cinquefoils in salter argent, for Fraser, (of late, three cinquefoils 2 and 1); second and third argent, three antique crowns gules, (for Bisset, as some say) supported by two bucks sejant, proper, in the middle of bushies of holly vert; crest, a buck's head erased or, armed argent: motto, I am ready.

The first of this family was Simon Fraser, a son of Sir Alexander Fraser, nephew to King Robert Bruce: He or his successor got the lands of Lovat, by marrying Charles 1. yet he continued his coat of augmentation which he took for Melrose, and it is still carried in the achievement of his successors Earls of Haddington; quarterly, first and fourth gules, on a chevron, between three cinquefoils ermine, a buckle azure between two spots of ermine (the spots of ermine were not on the seal of the Lord Binning abovementioned) within a bordure or, charged with eight thistles vert, the paternal coat; second and third argent, a fesse wavy between three roses gules, as a coat of augmentation for the title of Melrose, now surround- ed with the collar of the thistle, by the present Thomas Earl of Haddington, one of the Knights Companions of the most ancient Order of the Thistle, supported by two spaniel dogs argent, collared gules; crest, two dexter hands issuing out of clouds joined fesse-ways, and holding between them a branch of laurel, proper: motto, Præsto & perito. As in Plate of Achievements.

HAMILTON Lord BEHAVEN; the first of the name that was honoured with this title was Sir James Hamilton of Broomhill, by King Charles I. who married a natural daughter of James Marquis of Hamilton, by whom he had daughters, but no issue-male. He resigned his honour in the king's hands, in favours of John Hamilton, son to Sir Robert Hamilton of Presmennan, who married Margaret, daughter of Sir Robert Hamilton of Silvertonhill, by Anne, daughter of James Lord Belhaven, (as in Mr Crawford's Peerage) and John Lord Belhaven had with the said Margaret, John, and Mr James advocate.

Which John, the present Lord Belhaven, married Mary, daughter of Andrew Bruce, merchant in Edinburgh, and has issue: He and his father have been in use to carry for their arms, gules, a sword pale-ways argent, hilted and pommelled or, between three cinquefoils, two in chief, and one in base of the second, supported by two horses argent, bridled gules; and, for crest, a horse-head and neck argent, bridled gules; with the motto, Ride through. As in Plate of Achievements.

HAMILTON of Innerwick, one of the ancientest cadets of the family of Hamilton, descended of John, second son of Sir Walter Hamilton, in the reign of Robert I. and his wife, Isabel, daughter to William Earl of Ross. His son, or grandson, John Hamilton, married Elizabeth Stewart, a daughter of Stewart of Cruxton, and got with her the lands of Ballincricit in West-Lothian, and afterwards the family matched with the daughter and heir of Sir Roger de Clay of Innerwick; which barony fell into the family, and from it was designed: And from both these matches the arms of the family were composed, viz. gules, a fesse chequy, argent and azure, (for Stewart of Cruxton) between three cinquefoils ermine, for Hamilton; all within a bordure of the last, charged with eight buckles of the third, for De Clay of Innerwick.

HAMILTON of Preston, descended of Sir John Hamilton of Rosshaven, second son of Sir Gilbert, the first of the family of Hamilton, gules, three cinquefoils argent, within a bordure of the last; crest, a man from the middle, brandishing a sword aloft, proper: motto, Pro patria. (N. R.) But Pont and Workman, in their Manuscripts, make the bordure compost of argent and sable.

HAMILTON of Sorn and Sanquhar, descended of Walter, second son of Sir David Hamilton of that Ilk, and his lady, daughter and one of the co-heiresses of Walter Leslie Earl of Ross, carried gules, three cinquefoils ermine, within a double pressure counter-flowered or. W. M.

They are so illuminated on the House of Seaton; George Lord Seaton having married Isabel, daughter of Sir William Hamilton of Sorn and Sanquhar, one of the Senators of the College of Justice; who bore to the Lord Seaton, Robert, the first Earl of Winton, and several other children.

HAMILTON of Silvertonhill, descended of Alexander, second son of James first Lord Hamilton, gules, three cinquefoils ermine, within a bordure of the same. Some books have the arms of this family, gules, three cinquefoils argent.

HAMILTON of Evandale, quarterly, first and fourth Douglas, second and third Abernethy; and in surnout, gules, three cinquefoils ermine, for Hamilton. P. MS.

HAMILTON Lord Bargeny, quarterly, first and fourth Hamilton, second and third Arran, all within a bordure gobonated, argent and azure, the first charged with hearts gules, and the second with mullets of the first, supported on the dexter with an antelope argent, collared gules, charged with three cinquefoils ermine.
and on the sinister, by a savage, with a shoulder-belt gules, charged with cinquefoils ermine, and wreathed about the head and middle with laurel vert, holding in his left hand a garb or; crest, a crescent gules: motto, Jeespère. This family was dignified with the title of Lord by King Charles I. the 13th of November 1641.

Sir Robert Hamilton of Mount-Hamilton in Ireland, second lawful son of Mr George Hamilton of Cairns, descended of the House of Preston, gules, three cinquefoils ermine, within a bordure parted per pale, argent and or; crest, an adder disposed in circle, surrounding a cock in a guarding posture, all proper: motto, Adest prudenti animus. N. R.

Sir Alexander Hamilton of Haggs, Baronet, descended of Orbiston, gules, a salmon’s head couped argent, with an annulet through its nose, proper, betwixt three cinquefoils of the second; crest, a salmon laurient argent, having an annulet through its nose. Ibid.

James Hamilton of Woodhall, Baron of Tankerton, descended of Torrence, gules, three holly leaves conjoined at the stalk or, betwixt as many cinquefoils argent; crest, a dexter hand grasping a holly leaf, proper: motto, Semper vivescens. Ibid.

Hamilton of Little-Preston, gules, on a chevron betwixt three cinquefoils argent, as many buckles azure; crest, a greyhound’s head and neck couped, proper, collared gules, and garnished or. Ibid.

Robert Hamilton of Kilbrackmont, descended as Orbiston, quarterly, first and fourth Hamilton; second and third argent, on a bend sable, three escalops or, for Dishington; crest, a hand holding a cinquefoil, proper: motto, Et neglecta vivescit. Ibid.

James Hamilton of Aikenhead, descended of the family of Torrence, descended of Raploch, gules, a bugle between three cinquefoils argent; crest, an hand holding an oak slip, proper: motto, Virebo. Ibid.

John Hamilton of Udston, representer of Sir Robert Hamilton of Burntwood, third son of Sir David Hamilton of that ilk, and his wife, Janet, daughter to the Lord Keith; quarterly, first and fourth gules, a mullet argent, between three cinquefoils ermine, as a third son of the family of Hamilton; second and third gules, a man’s heart, proper, shadowed or, betwixt three cinquefoils ermine, for Hamilton of Raploch; crest, a boar’s head erased, proper: motto, Ubique fidelis. L. R.

William Hamilton of Wishaw, descended of Udston, quarterly, first and last gules, a mullet argent, betwixt three cinquefoils ermine; second and third the coat of Raploch, as above, all within a bordure argent; crest, a hand holding a sword indented on the back like a saw, and a quill, crossing other saltier-ways, proper: motto, Tam virtus quam bonos.

William Hamilton of Orbiston, descended of Gavin, a younger son of James first Lord Hamilton, gules, an annulet or, betwixt three cinquefoils ermine; crest, an antelope, proper.

Hamilton of Barncluith, whose grandfather was a son of Udston, and married the heiress of Barncluith, marshals together the arms of Burntwood, Raploch, and Udston; crest, a spear, proper. Ibid.

Colonel George Hamilton, second lawful son to Reidhouse, whose great-grandfather was one of the Senators of the College of Justice, and second brother to the Laird of Priestfield, after the Earl of Haddington came off Priestfield, gules, on a chevron between three cinquefoils ermine, a buckle azure, all within a bordure embattled or, charged with eight thistles vert, flowered gules; crest, two hands conjoined fesse-ways, issuing out of as many clouds, all within two branches of laurel disposed in orle, proper: motto, Præstanto præsto. Ibid.

John Hamilton of Bangour, descended of the family of Burntwood, gules, a mullet between three cinquefoils argent, a chief of the second; crest, a ship in distress, proper: motto, Littora specta. Ibid.

James Hamilton, Merchant in Edinburgh, third son to John Hamilton of Bangour, the same above, with the addition of a second mullet; and the crest above, with this motto, I gain by hazard. Ibid.
Mr Thomas Hamilton, Doctor of Medicine, a fourth son of John Hamilton of Bangour, carries Bangour as above; and, for difference, has a martlet _gules_ on the chief, and the same crest; with the motto, _Per varios causas_. _Ibid._

Mr George Hamilton of Cains, sometime Minister of Pittenweem, carries _gules_, on a fesse, between three cinquefoils _argent_, a man's heart, proper; crest, the Holy Bible expanded, proper; with the motto, _Ore lego, corde credo_. _Ibid._

Captain Thomas Hamilton of Olveston, third son of John Hamilton of Murrays, who was a second son of Borland, descended of Sir David Hamilton of that Ilk, _gules_, a martlet betwixt three cinquefoils _argent_, within a bordure embattled or; crest, an antelope's head and neck, gorged with a collar, and attired _gules_: motto, _Invidia viriuit peria_. _Ibid._

James Hamilton, Esq. descended of the family of Samuelton, _gules_, a roundle _chequè_, _argent_ and _azure_, between three cinquefoils of the second; crest, a masle or. _Ibid._

Gabriel Hamilton of Westburn, descended of Torrence, descended of Hamilton of Raploch, and again of Hamilton of that Ilk, carries _gules_, three cinquefoils _ermine_, within a bordure counter-potent of the second and first; crest, a hand grasping a lance in bend, proper: motto, _Et arma & virtus_. _Ibid._

Robert Hamilton of Deehmont, descended of Torrence, _gules_, a man's heart environed with two holly branches disposed orle-ways or, between three cinquefoils _argent_; crest, a hand holding a heart, proper: motto, _No heart more true_. _Ibid._

John Hamilton of Neilsland, descended of Raploch, _gules_, three cinquefoils _ermine_, within a bordure quartered, first and fourth _indented argent_; second and third invested _azure_; crest, an oak tree growing out of a torce, and fructuated, proper: motto, _Obsequio non virtutis_. _Ibid._

James Hamilton of Blantyrefarm, descended of Borland, a fourth son of Sir David Hamilton of that Ilk, _gules_, three cinquefoils _ermine_, within a bordure counter-indented _argent_, and of the first; crest, the trunk of an oak tree couped, and in pale, sprouting out two branches, proper: motto, _Non deficit alter_. _Ibid._

Robert Hamilton of Barts, whose father was a second son of Raploch, lineally descended of Sir David Hamilton of that Ilk, _gules_, a man's heart _or_, betwixt three cinquefoils _ermine_, within a bordure indented of the second; crest, a man's heart _gules_, charged with a cinquefoil _argent_: motto, _Faithful in adversity_. _Ibid._

Mr James Hamilton of Westport, descended from Alexander, a younger son to the Lord Hamilton, _gules_, three cinquefoils _ermine_, within a bordure _argent_, charged with eight martlets of the first; crest, two branches of oak crossing other in saltier, fructuated, proper: motto, _Addunt robur_. _Ibid._

Alexander Hamilton of Dalziel, lineally descended from James Hamilton of Dalziel, who was second son to John Hamilton of Orbiston, the heir and representative of Gavin Hamilton, a younger son of James, first Lord Hamilton, _gules_, an annulet _argent_, betwixt three cinquefoils _ermine_, within a bordure indented of the second; crest, an oak tree, proper: motto, _Requiesco sub umbra_. _Ibid._

Gabriel Hamilton of Westburn, descended of the family of Torrence, _gules_, three cinquefoils _ermine_, within a bordure potent _counter-potent_ of the second and first; crest, a hand grasping a lance in bend, proper: motto, _Et arma & virtus_. _Ibid._

John Hamilton of Cubardy, whose grandfather, John Hamilton, was a lawful son of Silvertonhill; he went to the north with Dame Anne Hamilton Countess of Hully, daughter to the Duke of Chantelherault, and Earl of Arran, _gules_, three cinquefoils _argent_, within a bordure of the last, charged with four saltiers couped, and as many multlets interchanged of the first; crest, a cinquefoil _argent_: motto, _Non mutat genus solum_. _Ibid._

Robert Hamilton of Colquot, whose predecessor was brother to Sir William Hamilton of Sorn and Sanguhar, bears _gules_, three cinquefoils between two flanks _argent_; crest, cupid with bow, quiver and arrow, proper: motto, _Quas dedi arcus amor_.

Frederick Hamilton, Captain in his Majesty's service in Ireland, second lawful son of the deceased Archibald Hamilton; which Archibald was a lawful son of Milburn, and Milburn of Raploch, and Raploch was descended of Sir David.
OF FLOWERS AND LEAVES.

Hamilton of that ilk, _gules_, a man's heart or, between three cinquefoils _ermine_, all within a bordure embattled of the second, charged with six crescents of the first; crest, two twigs of oak, disposed in saltier, proper: motto, _Fortiter qui fit_.

_Ibid._

Mr John Hamilton, sometime one of the Ministers of Edinburgh, and Sub-Dean of his Majesty's Chapel-Royal, lawful son procreate between John Hamilton of Blair, and Barbara Elphinston, lawful daughter to James Lord Balmerino, sometime Secretary of State, also grandchild to John Hamilton Lord Archbishop of St Andrews, who, himself, was in the reign of King Charles II. consecrate Bishop of Dunkeld, carried, quarterly, first and fourth _gules_, three cinquefoils _ermine_; second and third _argent_, a ship with her sails truss'd upon _sable_, for Arran, all within a bordure gobsomated of eight pieces, _argent_ and _gules_, charged alternately with a St Andrew's cross, and a buckle interchange'd of the one and the other; crest, an oaken plant, proper: motto, _Dum in arborum_. _L. R._

Sir George Hamilton of Binning, sometime designed of Banston, Baronet, whose father was a lawful son of the House of Binning, and in whose favour Gavin Hamilton, an elder brother's son of the said House, renounced the simple coat of the family, by a letter under his hand, dated the 29th of July, bears _gules_, on a cheveron between three cinquefoils _argent_, a buckle _azure_, between two spots _ermine_, all within a bordure of the second, charged with eight trefoils slipped _vert_; crest, the trunk of an oak sprouting out a new twig, proper: motto, _Through God revived_. _Ibid._

Frederick Hamilton, Lieutenant in the Earl of Dunbarton's Regiment, descended of a second son of Torrence, _gules_, a close helmet, proper, between three cinquefoils _argent_; crest, an oaken plant or: motto, _Tamen fit arbor_. _Ibid._

Hamilton of Pencaitland, one of the Senators of the College of Justice, and second son of Hamilton of Presmennan, carries _gules_, a cheveron between three cinquefoils _ermine_; crest, an arm issuing out of a cloud holding a pen: motto, _Tan virtute quam labore_. His eldest son, John Hamilton, married _______ Livingstone heiress of Saltcoats, and quarters the arms of his father with these of Saltcoats. Hamilton of Dechmont, second son of the said Pencaitland, carries his father's arms, having the cheveron charged with a crescent, for difference: As in Plate of Achievements.

These of the surname of Livingston give for their armorial figures, _argent_, three cinquefoils _gules_, pierced of the field, so carried by Livingston of that ilk, in the shire of Lothian, and the same within a double treasure flowed and counter-flowered with flower-de-luces _vert_, of old by Livingston of Wemyss in Fife, for which see Balfour's MS.

Livingstons Earls of Linlithgow have been sometimes in use, with their descendants, to turn the cinquefoils to gillyflowers, upon what account I cannot learn, if not upon the saying of Gerard Leigh, as I observed before, that cinquefoils, being sanguine, represent the stock-gillyflowers; but others, more knowing, prefer the cinquefoil, as more anciently used in armories, and more military, as Guillem, who disparages the gillyflower, in his Display, as an effeminate figure. The family of Linlithgow have disused the gillyflower, and taken again the cinquefoil; but their cadets have, in our New Register, gillyflowers recorded in place of cinquefoils.

The first of the name is said to be one of the gentlemen who accompanied Queen Margaret, wife to King Malcolm Canmore, from Hungary to Scotland, and got some lands called, either from his own name, or that of one of his successors, Livingius, who, by the records of the abbacy of Holyroodhouse, possessed lands in West-Lothian, in the reign of King David I. which he called _Livingstoun_, from his own name, as in Mr Crawford's Peerage: And Sir James Dalrymple, in his Collections, page 420, says, that in a charter of Robert, Bishop of St Andrews, confirming the grants made by King David I. to the abbacy of Holyroodhouse, _Thurstinus filius Livingi_ is a witness; and the original charter of _Thurstinii filii Livingi_ (now Livingston) is yet to be seen, whereby he grants to that abbacy, "Ecclesiam de Livingston, cum dimidia carruccata terra, & una tofia, &c. sicut pater meus iis dedit." Livingius and Thurstinus were then the predecessors, and probably gave name to the lands, and transmitted it as a surname to the family of Livingston, which continued in a direct lineal succession till the reign of King James IV. that Bartholomew Livingston of that Ilk died without issue.

The next principal family of the name, now in being, is Livingston of Callendar; the first of which was Sir William Livingston, who got that barony by marrying Christian, the daughter of Patrick Callender, who was forfeited for being of the Baliol's interest; so that the family of Callender has been since in use to quarter the arms of Callender with their own.

Which Sir William had, by his wife Christian Callender, Sir William Livingston, father of Sir John Livingston of Callendar, who was killed fighting against the English at the battle of Homildon, anno 1421: He was father of Sir Alexander Livingston of Callendar, who was Governor to King James II. His son, James, was created Lord Livingston by King James III.; and afterwards, one of his successors, Alexander Lord Livingston, was created Earl of Linlithgow by King James VI. the year 1622, who, by virtue of his, took patent, as an addition of honour, a coat of augmentation, the arms of Linlithgow, which are placed by way of surtout over the quartered arms of Livingston and Callender; and of him is lineally descended the present James Earl of Linlithgow and Callendar, who carries, quarterly, first and fourth Livingston, argent, three cinquefoils gules, within a double treesse flowered and counter-flowered with flower-de-luces vert; second and third sable; a bend between six billets or, for Callendar; over all, in the centre, an escutcheon azure, a tree growing out of the base or, within a bordure argent, charged with eight cinquefoils gules, for the title of Linlithgow; crest, a demi-savage, proper, holding a hatton, or club, erected in his right hand, and about his left arm a serpent twisted vert; supporters, two savages, proper, wreathed about the head and middle, holding battons over their shoulders or; motto, Si je puis.

Livingston Earl of Callendar: The first of this family was James, second son to the first Earl of Linlithgow, who purchased honours and riches in the wars abroad; and, after his return home, he was, by King Charles I. created Lord Almmond, anno 1633; and after, in the year 1642, he was honoured with the dignity of Earl of Callendar; he carried Callendar and Livingston, quarterly, with a crescent in the centre for difference; crest, a dexter hand holding a sword, proper; supporters, two lions gules: motto, Et domi & foris. He having no issue, left his estate and honours to Mr Alexander Livingston, younger brother to George Earl of Linlithgow; and, since the dignities of the Earl of Linlithgow and Callendar were united, of late, in the person of James Earl of Linlithgow and Callendar.

Of the surname of Callender, before, see page 192.

The Viscount of Kilsyth is the first cadet of the family of Livingston of Callendar, being a son of John Livingston of Callendar, and his second wife, Agnes, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith, and half-brother to Sir Alexander Livingston the Governor of Scotland, in the minority of King James II. The family was honoured in the person of Sir James Livingston, with the titles of Viscount Kilsyth and Lord Campsie, 17th of August 1661; they carry only the coat of Livingston, and in place of the cinquefoils, gillyflowers slipped, for difference, as Sir George Mackenzie, in his Science of Heraldry, who says, that the Earl of Callendar used the gillyflowers eradicate. The exterior ornaments of the Viscount of Kilsyth's arms are, for supporters, two lions rampant gules; crest, a demi-savage wreathed about the head and middle with laurel, all proper: motto, Spe expecto.

Livingston of Dunipace was a second son of Sir Alexander the Governor, and his lady, a daughter of Dundas of that Ilk; he carried argent, three cinquefoils within a double treesse, counter-flowered gules. Pont's Manuscript.

Livingston of Kinnaird: The first of this family was descended of Livingston of West-Quarter, who was a younger son of John Livingston of Callendar, and his wife, a daughter of Montezth of Carse, father and mother of Sir Alexander Livingston, Governor to King James II. Sir James Livingston, Baronet, son and heir of Sir John Livingston of Kinnaird, was one of the Gentlemen of the Bed-Chamber to King Charles I. who was pleased to raise him to the honour of Viscount of Newburgh; and, for his firm loyalty, was, by King Charles II. raised to the honour of Earl of Newburgh, Viscount of Kinnaird, Lord Livingston of Flancraig, by letters patent, 31st of December 1665. He was succeeded by his son Charles Earl of Newburgh, who died in the year 1694, without male-issue, and the next heir-male was Captain John Livingston.

The family carried argent, on a bend betwixt three gillyflowers gules, an anchor of the first, all within a double tressure, flowered and counter-flowered vert; crest, a Moor's head couped, proper, banded gules and argent, with penndles argent at his ears, supported on the dexter by a savage, proper, wreathed about the head and middle vert, and on the sinister by a horse argent, furnished gules.

Sir THOMAS LIVINGSTON Viscount of Tavern, descended of Livingston of Jerviswood; a cadet of the Lord Livingston, carried, quarterly, first and fourth azure, three oranges slipped, proper, within an orle of thistles or; second and third argent, three cinquefoils gules, within a double tressure, flowered and counter-flowered vert, supported on the dexter by a horse argent, furnished gules, and on the sinister, by a savage wreathed about the head and middle with laurel, holding a batton in his left hand, with its head downward or; crest, a demi-man holding a batton upward or.

Sir JAMES LIVINGSTON of West-Quarter, Baronet, descended of John Livingston of West-Quarter, second son of the first Earl of Linlithgow, carries, quarterly, Livingston and Callendar, all within a bordure quartered, or and gules; crest, a savage-head wreathed about with laurel: motto, Si possim. N. R.

DAVID LIVINGSTON of Baldron, whose father was a fourth lawful son of Livingston of Dunipace, argent, two gillyflowers in chief, and an escalop in base, all within a bordure indented gules; crest, a gillyflower slipped, proper: motto, Nationem retinet decus. Ibid.

WILLIAM LIVINGSTON, Merchant in Aberdeen, descended of the family of Dunipace, carries argent, two gillyflowers in chief, and an escalop in base gules, within a bordure of the last, for his difference; crest, a boar's head couped, holding in his mouth a pair of balances, proper: motto, Fortis & aequus. Lyon Register.

The surname of Borthwick, argent, three cinquefoils sable. The chief of this name was the Lord Borthwick, who carried the same, supported by two angels, proper, winged or; and, for crest, a savage-head couped, proper; with the motto, Qui conducit.

The first of this family and name is said to be one of those gentlemen who attended Queen Margaret from Hungary to Scotland. I have seen a charter of Robert Laudor of Quarrelwood, in the reign of King Alexander II. wherein Thomas de Borthwick is mentioned. In the reign of King Robert III. Sir William Borthwick got the lands of Catcune, near Locharrat, which he called after his own name Borthwick. Sir William de Borthwick obtained a charter from Robert Duke of Albany the Governor, upon a resignation of Walter Scott, of the lands of Toftcoats in the shire of Selkirk. (Had. Coll.) Sir William Borthwick de eodem milis, gets a charter of the lands of Borthwick from King James I. 1430, with a licence to build a castle, as the charter bears, "Ad construendum arcem, in illo loco qui vulgantur dictur Le Mote de Lochquharat, intra vicecomitatem de "Edinburgh." (Had. Coll. p. 76.) He built the castle of Borthwick, as some say, after the fashion and form of the castles in Hungary, in remembrance of his origin. This family is said, by some, to have been dignified with the title of Lord Borthwick, by King James II. in the beginning of that king's reign. Williamus Dominus de Borthwick is witness in a resignation of James Earl of Morton, of the lands of Whittingham, to William Douglas, milis, in the year 1459; and the said William Lord Borthwick sat in Parliament as a Lord Baron, 1464, and is so designed in the renunciation of King James III. for which see Had. Coll. p. 153. The right line of this family is now become extinct, since the Restoration of King Charles II. the last lord dying without issue.

There are several branches of this family, whose blazons I have met with in records; as, Borthwick of Gordonshall, argent; an eagle's head erased between three cinquefoils sable. P. and B. MSS.

William Borthwick, Doctor of Medicine, heir and only representor of the family of Gordonshall, the same as above; and, for crest, a withered rose-bush sprouting anew out of the root; with the motto, Virtus post facto. N. R.
OF FLOWERS AND LEAVES.

BORTHWICK of Crookston, or of Collislaw, the arms of Borthwick of that Ilk, with a crescent sable in the centre. (N. R.) But P. and W. have a raven's head couped in the centre; crest, an eagle displayed sable, with a saltier argent on his breast: motto, Fide & spe. Ibid.

BORTHWICK of Muirhouse, the same, but surmounts the crescent sable with another argent; crest, a pelican with wings expanded or, and vulnered, proper: motto, Ex vulnere salus. Ibid.

BORTHWICK of Harrtscde, alias Hartscad, descended of the Lord Borthwick, the same as he, with a crescent sable, surmounted of another or, in the centre; crest, a hart's head erased gules, attired or, devouring a serpent: motto, Celitus datum. Ibid.

BORTHWICK of Stow, argent, a crescent between three cinquefoils sable, within a bordure ermine; crest, a dexter hand couped pannè, with an eye in the middle of the loof, proper: motto, Mente manuque. Ibid.

BORTHWICK of Mayshiels, argent, a heart gules, between three cinquefoils sable; crest, an eagle rising, proper: motto, Nec devstit opera dextra.

Many ancient and noble families, both in Scotland and England, carry cinquefoils, whose blazons I cannot here subjoin, because they would swell my book to a greater pitch than I design; however, I shall mention two or three; as first, The Umfravilles, of which name there were considerable families in Scotland and the North of England, Robertus de Umfravillæ, Odonellus de Umfravillæ, and Gilbertus de Umfravillæ, are to be found witnesses in the charters of King David I. and in the registers of Durham and Kelso. In the reign of Alexander III. Sir Gilbert de Umfraville married Matilda Countess of Angus, and by her was Earl of Angus; she bore to him a son, Gilbert Earl of Angus, whose armorial bearing was, azuré, a cinquefoil within an orle of eight cross croslets or. But the Umfravilles afterwards, for adhering to the Balois, and to the interest of the Edwards of England, were forfeited of their lands, and forced to reside in England. They were great men there, and always claimed right to the Earlom of Angus, for which see Edmund Howe's History of England. There are few or none of that name now with us, save some small families of the name of Umphray, one of which I find in our New Register, Mr Theodore Umphray, Minister of the Gospel, vert, a cheveron between three cinquefoils in chief, and a cross crosett fitched in base argent; crest, a book expanded, proper: motto, Pax tuae Domini est requies tuae.

The family of Pierrepont, which had its rise from one Robert Pierrepont, who came to England with William the Conqueror; of which family was George Pierrepont, who was knighted by Edward VI. of England. His grandchild, Robert, was, by King Charles I. in the year 1627, for his unshaken loyalty, created Lord Pierrepont and Viscount of Newark, but was killed fighting for the king. His eldest son, Henry, for his own, and his father's good services, was created Marquis of Dorchester. The proper arms of the family, of Pierrepont, are, argent, sené de cinquefoils gules, a lion rampant sable; some make the number of the cinquefoils eight; as Imhoff, in his Blazons, thus, "Seutum quo Pierrepontii ut continuing...tut argentum est, & leonem erectum nigrum, inter octo flores pentaphyllos coccineos exhibet."

The Episcopal See of St David's, in England, sable, on a cross or, five cinquefoils of the field.

D'Arcy Earls of Holderness, for their paternal arms, carry azuré, sené de cross crosets, and three cinquefoils argent. Guillim, in his Display of Heraldry, says, sapphire, crusly three cinquefoils pearl; which is the same with the first blazon. This ancient and honourable family (by the Peerage of England) is originally descended from Norman d'Arcy, who came over to England with William the Conqueror, by whose immediate gift, the said Norman enjoyed no less than thirty-three lordships in Lincolnshire, from whom descended John d'Arcy, who, in the reigns of Edward I. and II. was Governor of Norham Castle; and in the reign of Edward III. was made Justice and Governor of Ireland. He was succeeded by his son John, who was Constable of the Tower, and had summons to Parliament among the barons of England; From whom was descended Thomas d'Arcy, who was one of the lords that marched with Thomas Earl of Surry against Scotland,
OF FLOWERS AND LEAVES.

in the 13th year of the reign of Henry VII. being then a Knight of the Body, and Constable of Bamborough Castle, and Captain of the Town and Castle of Berwick: He, in the 39th year of Henry VIII. was arraigned and found guilty of High Treason, and beheaded on Tower-Hill, 25th of June in the above reign. From whom was descended Sir Conyers d'Arcy of Hornby Castle, in the county of York, being the principal male branch of this ancient family. Upon a representation to King Charles I. his Majesty was pleased to declare, and confirm to him, and his heirs-male, the stile, title, and dignity of Lord D'Arcy, so enjoyed by his ancestors. He married Dorothy, daughter of Sir Henry Bellasyse, Baronet, and with her had six sons and seven daughters.

The eldest son and heir, Conyers, stiled Lord D'Arcy and Conyers, was created Earl of Holderness, by King Charles II. in the year 1682, whose great-grandson is Robert, now Earl of Holderness.

Having said enough of cinquefoils, as armorial figures, I proceed to Quatrefoils, or caterfoils, which are flowers of four leaves, but are not so frequently to be met with in arms as the former.

The name of White, with us, argent, a martlet sable, between three quatrefoils of the last, and on a chief of the same as many quatrefoils of the first. Pont’s MS.

As for the antiquity of the name, Sir James Dalrymple observes one Viniet Albus, witness in a charter of King Edgar to the church of Durham, who perhaps may be the first of the surname of White.

John Whytt of Bennochy, argent, a martlet displayed betwixt three quatrefoils sable, on a chief inmargined of the same, as many quatrefoils of the first: motto, Virtute parta. N. R.

John White of Burnetshielis, argent, an eagle displayed between three quatrefoils sable, on a chief inmargined of the same, as many quatrefoils of the first: motto, Honeste parta. Ibid.

There are many families in England who carry quatrefoils; I shall here only mention one, for its singularity. The name of Platt, vert, three quatrefoils argent, each charged with a lion’s head erased sable.

Trefoils are flowers or herbs of three leaves, more frequent in arms than the quatrefoil, and are often represented with stalks, for which, in blazon, they are said to be slipped, or stalked, which represent the clover-grass, the emblem of fertility; with such the Romans adorned the crowns and chaplets of the victorious, called corona graminia.

Bothwell Lord Holyroodhouse, azure, on a chevron between three trefoils slipped or, a crescent gules, supported on the dexter by a spaniel dog, collared gules, and on the sinister by a goshawk, proper, jessed, beaked, and belled or; crest, a naked boy pulling down the top of a green pine tree; with the motto, Odurum adversus argentia.

Bothwell of Ford carried the foresaid arms, without the crescent and exterior ornaments; which may be seen illuminated in the House of Falkhall.

As for the antiquity of this name, the first that I have met with was one Arthur Bothwell of Adam, who was knighted by King James IV. whose son was likewise a knight, called Sir Francis, one of the Lords of the Council and Session in the reign of King James V. He had two sons by his wife Anne, daughter to the Lord Livingston, Sir Richard Bothwell, Provost of Edinburgh, in the reign of Queen Mary, and Adam Bothwell, Bishop of Orkney; who, as Bishop of Orkney, and Commendator of Holyroodhouse, grants a charter to Sir Robert Stewart of the revenue of the Episcopal See of Orkney, and to his spouse, Dame Jean Kennedy, and their son, Henry, of the date the 17th of July 1572; to which was appended the said bishop’s seal, which had the foresaid arms, without a crescent and exterior ornaments. He complied with the Reformation, and it was he that married Queen Mary with Hepburn Earl of Bothwell. He was also married himself, and had children. His eldest son, John Bothwell, was one of the Senators of the College of Justice, and created a Lord of Parliament, by the title of Lord Holyroodhouse, who died without issue.

Alexander Bothwell of Glencross, as lineally descended of Sir Richard Bothwell, Provost of Edinburgh, the bishop’s elder brother, serves himself heir before the sheriffs of Edinburgh, the 4th of February 1724, to his grandfather, Adam
OF FLOWERS AND LEAVES.

Bothwell of Whelpside, grandchild to Sir Francis the provost; as also to the deceased John Lord Holyroodhouse, grandchild to Adam the bishop, brother to the provost. And, as their successor, he claimed the title of dignity, and to be entered into the rolls of Parliament as Lord Holyroodhouse, with the due precedence; but the Parliament did nothing therein, and Bothwell of Glencross continues to carry the achievement of the Lord Holyroodhouse, as before, and in Plate of Achievements.

The surname of Balcaskie, vert, on a chevron argent, three trefoils slipped of the field. P. and W. MSS.

U mph ras ton of that ilk, argent, on a fesse, between three trefoils slipped gules, as many lions' heads erased of the first. W. MS.

Plenderleith of Blyth, vert, a chevron between two trefoils slipped in chief, and a flower-de-luce in base argent; crest, a hand holding a scroll of paper: motto, Prompte & consilto. L. R.

As for the antiquity of the name, Willielmus de Plenderleith is to be found in the Ragman-Roll. There has been a family of this name, ancient burgesses, and landed men, in the town of Peebles. David Plenderleith, Burgess of Peebles, is infeft in several lands there, in the year 1548; from whom is lineally descended David Plenderleith of Blyth, Advocate, whose father purchased the lands of Blyth.

The surname of Harvey, gules, on a bend argent, three trefoils slipped vert. James Harvey of Broadley, azure, on a bend or, three trefoils vert; crest, another of the same: motto, Delectat & ornat. N. R.

Harvey of Alrick, gules, a fesse or, between three mullets in chief argent, and a mace in base of the last. P. MS.

There are others of the name carry azure, a fesse or, between two martlets in chief, and a Catharine-wheel in base argent; that is, St Catharine's wheel upon which she suffered martyrdom.

The name of Gilbert, argent, on a chevron azure, between three trefoils vert, as many flower-de-luces or. P. MS.

These of that name in England carry argent, on a chevron sable, three roses of the first.

The name of Machan, or McManan, azure, a chevron argent, between three trefoils or, called Clavers, in Mr Thomas Crawford's Heraldry.

Roger Palmer Earl of Castlemain, and Baron Limerick in Ireland, or, two bars gules, each charged with three trefoils slipped of the first. A. H.

Moore of Bankhall, in Lancashire, vert, ten trefoils argent, 4, 3, 2 and 1. Morgan's Heraldry.

Many other instances may be given for bearing of trefoils by the English. Leaves of trees, plants, and herbs, are used in arms, not only upon the account of their natural and symbolical qualities, but as relative to the names of the bearers.

These of the name of Fouls bear argent, three leaves vert. The name is from the French word feuilles, which signifies leaves, whence those of the name are said to be of a French extract, and to have been long in Scotland.

Reginaldus de Fouls is a witness in charters in the reign of Alexander II. The lands of Fouls, in Angus, on the borders of Perthshire, belonged of old to those of this name.

William Fouls, Arch-Dean of St Andrews, was Secretary to King James I. His nephew, William, married Elizabeth, daughter to Sir Walter Ogilvie, with whom he had two sons, William, and James, who married Margaret, a daughter of Sir Thomas Henderson of Fordell; and with her had a son, James, who succeeded to his uncle William, who died without issue. This James purchased the lands of Collington in the year 1534: He was Clerk-Register, and his commission was renewed by Queen Mary 1542. He married Katharine Brown, daughter to Brown of Hartree, and was succeeded by his son, Henry Fouls of Collington, who married a daughter of Haldane of Glem Eagles. Their son was James, father of Sir James Fouls, who married a daughter of Lauder of Hatton, father of Sir Alexander Fouls, dignified with the honour of Knight-Baronet 1634. He had by his wife Elizabeth, a daughter of Hepburn of Riecarton, Sir James Fouls of Collington, who married Barbara, daughter to Andrew Ainslie, one of the magistrates of

As also, his son Sir James, designed of Redford, was one of the Senators of that honourable Bench in the reigns of Charles II. and James VII. who married Margaret, daughter to John Boyd, Dean of Guild of Edinburgh, by whom he had Sir James Foulis of Collington. Their arms, as the principal family of the name, are, argent, three bay leaves slipped vert; crest, a dexter hand couped, holding a sword in pale, supporting a laurel; all proper: motto, Mente manque presto. L. R. and in Plate of Achievements.

Mr Alexander Foulis of Ratho, descended of a second son of Collington, argent, on a chevron between three laurel leaves vert, as many besants argent; crest, a dove holding an olive branch in her beak, proper: motto, Pax. New Register.

Sir John Foulis of Ravelston, Baronet, argent on a fesse between three bay leaves vert, a primrose or; crest, a dove volant, holding a leaf in her beak, proper: motto, Thure & jure.

Sir John married Margaret, daughter to Sir Archibald Primrose of Chester, and Register, who gave to the eldest son of the marriage the lands of Dunipace, upon condition he took upon him the name and arms of Primrose; which accordingly he has performed.

Sir John's second son is Laird of Woodhall, and carries the name and arms of Foulis, argent, three bay leaves slipped vert, within a bordure ermine; crest, a flower-pot with a branch of laurel springing out of it: motto, Non deficit. See Plate of Achievements.

John Foulis, Merchant in Edinburgh, argent, a holly branch between three bay leaves slipped vert: motto, I rise by industry. Ibid.

Laurel is the emblem of victory, and the triumphant garlands of the Romans were made of laurel leaves.

John Wordie of Trabreck, argent, a hand issuing out of the dexter side of the shield, holding a garland ensignied with an imperial crown, proper, on a chief gules, two thistles argent: motto, Nil indigne. (N. R.) All which are equivocally relative only to the name of Wordie. L. R.

The name of Lowis carry laurel leaves relative to the name.

James Lowis of Merchiston, or, three laurel leaves vert; crest, a dexter hand holding a lance in bend, proper: motto, Nos aspera juvantis. New Register.

Lowis of Menar, argent, a mullet azure, between three laurel leaves vert. Pont's Manuscript.

Francis Lawrie of Plainstounes, and sometime one of the Bailies of Portsburgh, parted per fesse, gules and sable, a cup argent, with a garland issuing out of the top between two laurel branches vert; crest, the trunk of an oak sprouting out, proper: motto, Repulilulat. N. R.

Hollis, or holly leaves, a kind of laurel so called upon the account that, with such evergreens, temples, altars, and holy places were wont to be adorned.

Alexander Irvine of Drum, argent, three small sheafs, or bundles of holly, 2 and 1 vert, each consisting of as many leaves slipped of the last, banded gules; crest, a sheaf of arrows; supporters, two savages wreathed about the head and middle with holly, each carrying in their hands a batton, all proper: motto, Sub sole, sub umbra virens. Ibid.

In our old books of arms they are blazoned, argent, three holly leaves vert; and in others, as in Sir George Mackenzie's Heraldry, argent, three holly branches, each consisting of as many leaves vert, banded together gules; and are so painted on the House of Falafern in the year 1664.

Sir George, in his Science of Heraldry, says, that King Robert the Bruce had, for his badge and device, three such leaves; with the motto, Sub sole, sub umbra virens; which he gave for arms, with the forest of Drum, in the shire of Aberdeen, to one Irvine, (afterwards designed of Drum) his armour-bearer, one of the progenitors of the present Irvine of Drum, an ancient and principal family.

Irvine of Bonshaw, another ancient family in the West of Scotland, carried argent, three holly leaves slipped vert.
OF FLOWERS AND LEAVES.

Of which family was Lieutenant-Colonel Gerard Irvine of Castle-Fortagh, who carried argent, a fess gules, between three holly leaves vert; crest, a hand in a gauntlet, issuing out of a cloud, holding a thistle, proper: motto, Drum memori ipse mei. New Register.

James Irvine of Artamford, whose father was a third son of Drum, argent, three holly branches, each consisting of as many leaves, proper, banded gules, within a bordure indented vert; crest, two holly leaves crossing other in saltier vert: motto, Sub sole viriæs. L. R.

Christopher Irvine, Doctor of Physic, argent, three holly leaves and a chief vert; crest, a hand holding a bay rod, adorned with nine leaves, proper, with the chymical letters of Terra, Aqua, Ignis, Sal, Spiritus, Sulphur, Sol, Venus, Mercurius, or: motto, Auspie simmo numine. Ibid.

James Irvine of Inchrar, argent, a chevron between three holly leaves vert; crest, two holly branches saltier-ways, proper: motto, Sequitur vestigia patrum. Ibid.

Robert Irvine of Fedderet, whose father was a second son of Drum, argent, three holly branches, each consisting of as many leaves, proper, banded gules, all within a bordure ingraile vert; crest, a branch of holly banded as the former: motto, Ope salis & umbrae. Ibid.

John Irvine of Kingoussie, descended of Drum, quarterly, first and fourth argent, the arms of Drum, within a bordure chequè, vert and argent; second and third argent, an eagle displayed sable, armed gules, within a bordure of the second, for Ramsay; crest, a decusis like the letter X, within a circle sable: motto, Deo, Regi, & Patriæ. Ibid.

Mr Robert Irvine of Bieldside, second lawful son of John Irvine of Murtle, descended of a third son of Drum, argent, a sheaf of arrows gules, betwixt three holly branches, each consisting of as many leaves vert, banded together of the second, all within a bordure as the third; crest, three holly leaves conjoined in one stalk, proper: motto, Moderata durant. Ibid.

Alexander Irvine of Larnie, descended of Drum, bears as Drum, all within a bordure vert, charged with six leaves slipped argent; crest, a branch of holly and a lily, both slipped, crossing other in saltier, proper: motto, Caudide & constanter. Ibid.

Mr Richard Irvine of Cairnfield, descended of Drum, quarterly, first and fourth the arms of Drum, within a bordure ingraile vert; second and third gules, three crescents argent, for Oliphant; crest, a cross croislet fitched gules, and a branch of holly slipped vert, disposed saltier-ways: motto, Ferendo feres. Ibid.

Irvine of Lenturk, the eldest cadet of Drum, bears as Drum, within a bordure vert; crest, a sheaf of holly consisting of seven leaves, and banded as the former: motto, Fideque perpetuum. Ibid.

John Irvine of Murthill, argent, a sheaf of arrows gules, between three holly branches, each consisting of three leaves, proper, banded together of the second; motto, Sub sole, sub umbra crescent. Ibid.

Leaves, of what kind I know not, frequently called Burnet-leaves, are carried by the name of Burnet, as relative to the name, which is ancient with us; for in the charter of foundation of the abbacy of Selkirk, by Earl David, younger son of Malcolm Canmore, Robertus de Burnetvilla is a witness; and the same man, or his son, is witness again in Earl David's charters when King of Scotland.

There are two principal families of the name, in the South and North of Scotland, who have contended for chiefship; that in the South, in the shire of Peebles, is Burnet of Burnetland, or of that ilk, so designed of old, and of late, of Barns. The other in the North, in the county of Merns, is Burnet of Leys; the first pretends to be descended of the above Robertus de Burnetvilla, i.e. Burnetland.

I have seen a mortification of a chaplainry of the Holyrood altar, in the kirk of St Gregan of Menner, and diocese of Glasgow, by John Burnet of that ilk, the 29th of December 1402; which chaplainry he enriches with the rents of some tenements of lands and houses which belonged to him in the town of Peebles. The same John I find designed of Burnetland, as by a charter of John Towers, and his wife Sibilla Veitch, to John Burnet of Burnetland, the 15th of March 1425. And in the year 1502, Margaret Inglis, sister of Inglis of Murdiston, and widow of John Burnet of that Ilk, by virtue of a brief, is served in a reasonable trecce of the five-merk lands of Barns, and of the half of the lands of Burnetland, before the sheriff of Peebles, and these gentlemen their neighbours, viz. William Fraser of Fraud, Alexander Veitch of Dawick, Gilbert Baird, John Govan of Cardrona, James Sandilands. of Bold, David Tait of Pinn, Thomas Dickson of Ormiston, &c. And in the year 1505, William Inglis of Murdiston, and Mr John Murray, are tutors dative to William Burnet of Burnetland, grandchild and heir to John Burnet of Burnetland. Which William and his successors were afterwards designed of Barns; as by the wills of the family, which I have seen in the custody of the late William Burnet of Barns. The arms of the family are blazoned, argent, three holly leaves vert, and a chief azure; crest, a hand with a knife pruning a vine tree, proper: motto, Virescit vulnere virtus. N. R.

Of this family was descended the pious and learned Doctor Alexander Burnet, Archbishop of St Andrews in the reign of King Charles II. who carried the same.

Robert Burnet, Writer to the Signet, and Commissary of Peebles, a younger son of Barns, carried the same arms; but for his difference embattled the chief; crest, a vine branch slipped: motto, Tandem fit surculus arbor. N. R.

The other principal family of the name is Burnet of Leys, in the county of the Merns, honoured with the title of Knight-Baronet in the year 1626. This family, says Sir George Mackenzie, got a charter of the lands of Lees from King Robert Bruce, and carries argent, three holly leaves in chief vert, and a hunting-horn in base sable, garnished gules; crest, a hand with a knife pruning a vine tree, proper: motto, Virescit vulnere virtus. N. R.

Sir George Mackenzie, in his Science of Heraldry, page 3. says, the family carries the hunting-horn, and a highlander in a hunting-garb, and a greyhound, for supporters; to show that they were the king's foresters in the north, as the foresters in the south carry three hunting-horns, to show their employment. Of this family of Leys are very considerable cadets, whose arms are matriculated in the New Register.

Thomas Burnet of Innerleith, descended of Leys, argent, three holly leaves in chief, and a hunting-horn in base sable, garnished gules, within a bordure indented of the second, and a crescent for difference; crest, a holly branch, proper: motto, Virtute cresco. Ibid.

Alexander Burnet of Craigmelie, whose father was lawfully procreate between James Burnet of the House of Leys, and Elizabeth Burnet, heiress of Craigmelie, and representere of Craigmelie of that Ilk, bears two coats, quarterly, first and fourth Burnet of Leys; second and third azure, two garbs in chief, and a crescent in base or, for Craigmelie: crest, a dexter hand holding the branch of a palm tree; with the motto, Quae veremant crescent. Ibid.

Alexander Burnet, Merchant in Aberdeen, Gentleman, argent, a battle-axe pale-ways, between three holly leaves in chief, and a bugle in base vert, garnished gules: motto, Quidam pro sodali. Ibid.

Robert Burnet, Procurator-Fiscal of Aberdeen, descended of Leys, carries as Leys, with a billet azure in the centre, for his difference; crest, a hand with a cutlass thrusting through a vine branch, proper: motto, Tandem fit surculus arbor. Ibid.

Dr Thomas Burnet, Physician in Ordinary to his Majesty, descended of a third son of the family of Leys, carries as Leys, with a mullet for difference: And his brother, Dr Gilbert Burnet, late Bishop of Sarum, carried the same, as in Dale Pursivant's Catalogue of the Nobility of England, where he blazons the holly leaves, Burnet-leaves.

Mr Andrew Burnet of Wariston carries the arms of Leys, as descended of Leys, within a bordure indented vert; crest, a branch of holly; with the motto, Virtute cresco. L. R.

John Burnet of Dalladies, descended of the family of Leys, carries as Leys, within a bordure compone, argent and vert; crest, a branch of holly slipped, proper: motto, Nec fluctu nec fluat. Ibid.
JAMES BURNET of Shetchoekilly, whose grandfather was a third son of the House of Leys, argent, a falcon volant, proper, between three holly leaves in chief vert, and a hunting-horn in base sable, garnished gules; crest, a hand with a knife pruning a vine-tree, proper; motto, Virescit vulnere virtus. Ibid.

There was a family of the name of BORNAT, or BURNET, in Clydesdale, as in Workman's Manuscript, page 96, who carried argent, a naked man, proper, holding a sword with both his hands, to cut a tree growing out of a mount in base vert, and on a chief azure, a crescent between two stars of the first.

Leaves of nettle are likewise to be found in arms, as in the achievement of the Kings of Denmark, for the Country of Holstein, gules, a nettle of three leaves expanded, and on its middle an inescutcheon argent.

The Country L'ORTIE, in Gallicia, carries argent, three leaves of nettle, proper. L'Ortie signifies a nettle in that country.

The name of Malliherr, anciently with us, carried or, a chevron gules, between three leaves of a nettle vert, as equivocally relative to the name. Balfour's MS.

The name of Geichen, with us, carries argent, a fesse gules, between two fern leaves in chief vert, and a boar's head erased in base sable. Pont's Manuscript.

It is to be observed, all fruits, flowers and leaves, are supposed to be erect, with their heads and tops upward; but when downward, and stalks upward, they are then said to be pendent; as in the arms of Pine, in England, argent, three holly leaves pendent vert.

To put an end to this chapter, I shall only here mention the arms of Robert Douglas of Gruxston, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a man's heart gules, ensigned with an imperial crown, and, on a chief azuré, three stars of the first; second and third argent, a cross counter-embattled sable, all within a bordure engrailed of the first, charged with eight holly leaves vert, for Irvine of Drum; crest and motto as Douglas of Glenbervie; being descended of John Douglas, second son of Sir Archibald Douglas of Glenbervie, and his second wife Alice Irvine, a daughter of Irvine of Drum. As in Plate of Achievements.

OF ARTIFICIAL FIGURES IN ARMORIES.

Many of these have attributes and terms from the Science of Heraldry, as well as the others above treated of; as also from their position, disposition, and situation in the shield, as will appear by the following blazons.

They are to be considered, first, as they relate to military use, both by land and sea. Secondly, as to a civil life in temporal and ecclesiastical offices. And, lastly, as they relate to liberal and mechanical professions.

I shall begin with military instruments, because arms had their first rise from military actions.

The shield being a military instrument, I have treated of before, as an honourable tabula, containing armorial figures; and also as an armorial charge among the sub-ordinaries.

The sword, the badge of authority, and mark of a military man, as such, is frequent in arms, to perpetuate some military exploit done, or to be done; whose position, with the hilt and pommel, if of different tinctures, are to be noticed in the blazon.

Haliday of Tillyboll, argent, a sword pale-ways, the pommel within a crescent in base gules, and a canton azure, charged with a St Andrew's cross of the first; crest, a boar's head couped argent, armed or; motto, Virtute parta. Pont's Manuscript.

Seewman, gules, a lion passant in chief, between two mascles, a sword pale-ways pointing downward, accompanied with two boar-heads couped argent, in the dexter and sinister base points; so illuminated in Workman's MS.

Kemp of Comiston, gules, two hands holding a two-handed sword, bend-sinisterways, broken near the top argent. W. and P. MS.
Sir Alexander Kemp, a favourite of King James V. married the heiress of Thomas Durie of that Ilk, and got with her the lands of Durie, whose posterity sold them to the Gibsons. Sibbald's History of Fife.

Symonston of that Ilk, gules, a two-handed sword bend-ways, between two mullets or. Pont's MS.

The name of Schieres, gules, three swords in fesse pale-ways, with their points downward argent, hilted and pommelled or. Mackenzie's Heraldry.

The name of Kinross, gules, a chevron chequy, or and azure, between three swords pale-ways argent, hilted and pommelled or, 2 and 1. John Kinross, sheriff of Kinross, is witness in a perambulation of the lands of Clesh, belonging to Gilbert de Clesh, in the year 1252. Had. Coll.

The lands of Cleish are called now Dowhill; which lands came to those of the name of Crambah, and from that name to the Lindsay's, and are now possessed by Mr James Lindsay of Dowhill.

The name of Garran, argent, a sword in pale azure, hilted and pommelled or, surmounted on the point by a mullet gules, and over all a saltier couped sable. Mackenzie's Heraldry.

The name of Aberkerdor, or Aberkerdour, azure, three swords in fesse pale-ways, points upward argent, hilted and pommelled or, surmounted of a bend gules. Pont's MS.

Seris Lord Dundee, of old, gules, three swords in fesse pale-ways, points upward argent, as in Mr Thomas Crawford's MS.

The name of Ewart, or Hewart, argent, on a fesse azure between a dexter hand in chief, and a man's heart in base gules, two swords in sable of the first, hilted and pommelled or. Ogilvie's MS.

Sir James Justice of East-Crichton, one of the principal Clerks of the College of Justice, azure, a sword in pale argent, hilted and pommelled or, supporting a pair of balances, within a bordure of the last; crest, a sword erected: motto, Non sine cura. As in Plate of Achievements.

The ancient family of Paulet, in England, sable, three swords, their points conjoined in base argent, hilted or. Thus blazoned by Imhoff, "Tessera Pauletorum "gentilitia, gladios tres argentos quorum cuspides deorsum protense coeunt, in "parma nigra, representat." This ancient family took their surname from the lordship of Paulet in Somersetshire.

Sir John Paulet, Knight, in the reign of Richard II. left behind him two sons, the eldest, Sir Thomas Paulet, the second, William Paulet. From the first is descended the present Earl of Paulet, who carries as above; and from the last William is descended the noble family of Paulet Duke of Bolton, who carries the same arms, with a crescent for difference.

The name of Stapleton, in England, gives another position to their three swords, ordinarily thus blazoned, gules, three swords conjoined at the pommels in the centre argent, their points extending to the corners of the escutcheon. Others blazon thus, gules, three swords conjoined at the pommels in pearl argent, as the French say, misés en pointe, of which before: Or, as some of the Latins say, after the form of Pythagoras's letter Y, as Sylvester Petra Sancta, "Terni gladii argentei in modum "litere Pytagoricae juncti, capulis in media aree punicce." The Episcopall See of London, gules, two swords in sallier argent, the hilts or.

The name of Norton, in England, azure, three swords, one in pale, with the point upwards, surmounted of other two placed saltier-ways, with the points downwards argent.

Crooked swords are frequently borne, such as shabbles and cutlasses, which the French call bâdelaires.

The canton of a sword, called bauteroll by the French, is to be found in the arms of the Town of Sebakh, in the country of Touraine, argent, three bauterolls gules.

Battle-axes and halberts are carried as armorial figures by several families with us.

David Toshach of Monivaird, or of that Ilk, is thus matriculated in our New Register, whose predecessor is said to be descended of the great Macdaff Thane o' Fife, in the reign of Malcolm Canmore, about the time of killing Macbeth; gules.
two pole-axes in pale argent, over all a fesse chequy of the second, and azure; crest, a sinister hand issuing out of the wreath, and thereon a falcon rising, all proper: motto, Ma ha an tosbach.

The name of Dennis, argent, three battle-axes sable, within a bordure gules.

P. MS.

Walter Ranken of Orchardhead, gules, three boars' heads erased argent, 2 and 1, betwixt a lance issuing out of the Dexter base, and a Lochaber-axe issuing out of the sinister, both erect in pale of the second; crest, a lance issuing out of the torse: motto, Fortiter & recte. N. R.

Alexander Ranken, Merchant in Perth, argent, three boars' heads couped, betwixt as many battle-axes gules, and in the centre a quatrefoil vert; crest, a ship, proper: motto, Providentia & virtute. N. R.

Auchmutie of that ilk, in the shire of Fife, an old family, now extinct, argent, a broken spear bend-ways, between two mullets azure. P. MS.

There was another family of the name, lairds of Gosford in East-Lothian, a cadet of the former family, now extinct.

The name of Gibs, with us, gules, a dexter hand holding a broken spear, between two mullets or. These of that name in England, argent, three battle-axes in fesse pale-ways sable.

James Ellis of Southside, or, three helmets with beavers open; crest, a hand gauntleted grasping an adder, proper: motto, Sperno. N. R.

Roberton of that ilk, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a close helmet sable; second and third gules, a cross croislet fitted or. W. MS.

This is an old family in Lanarkshire: Robertus de Roberton is witness in a charter of Robertus filius Waldevi de Bigris, in the reign of King Alexander II. as in the chartulary of Kelso. See History of Renfrew. From two brothers of this family were descended the Robertons of Earnock, and of Bedley.

Roberton of Earnock, quarterly, first and fourth gules, a close helmet argent; second and third argent, a cross croislet fitted gules. P. MS.

Roberton of Bedlay, gules, a close helmet argent. Mackenzie's Heraldry.

The name of Balbriggan, with us, vert, a fesse chequy, argent and azure, between three cuirasses, or habergeons (i. e. breast-plates) of the second, and on a chief of the same three buckles of the third. P. MS.

The name Armourer, in Scotland, azure, two bars argent, between three close helmets or.

A gauntlet, the armour of the hand, is carried with us by the name of Kein, argent, a gauntlet glove azure, on a chief gules, a mullet or. P. MS.

Mr Thomas Crawford, in his Manuscripts, says, that Kein of Hethelry carried gules, a gauntlet in fesse or, and, on a chief argent, three stars of the first. When the arm is wholly covered with armour, it is said to be vambraced; as by those of the name of Armstrong, in England, gules, three dexter arms vambraced, proper. And with us those of the name carry such figures, of which before, page 262.

When the legs are covered with armour, they are said only to be armed, as before, in the armorial ensign of the Isle of Man.

Spurs, with the Romans, was the badge of knighthood, proper to their Equites suoratii, as the golden spurs to the German Knights, and the same to the Knights of the Spur in England, (as Ashmore on the Garter, page 29.) who likewise tells us, that a family of the name of Knight, in Shrewsbury, carries argent, three pallets gules, within a bordure engrailed azure, and a dexter canton of the second, charged with a spur and its leather or; and the same canton is carried by other two families of the name of Knight in England.

With us, Gibs of Caribet, gules, a dexter hand holding a spear bend-ways, between two spurs or, with leathers argent. Pont and Mr Thomas Crawford's Manuscripts.

The rowels of spurs are more frequently borne than the whole spur, called mollettes, or mullets, from the French mollettes d'eperon, the rowel of a spur. They have ordinarily six points, and are pierced in the middle, by which they are distinguished from stars, as Monsieur Baron, in his l'Art Heraldisque, " Les mollettes d'eperon, que " Ton appelle simplement mollettes, out pour l'ordinaire six points, & sont percées.
"au milieu en quoi elles sont differentes des etoiles." Sylvester Petra Sancta says the same, but mentions not the number of their points, "Ehenate calcarium mol-lule pertuse in orbem, in quo nimium a stellis tesserarum ex differunt, eques- tris "militie argumentum esse possunt."

The English do not clearly distinguish in their blazons, mollets, or mullets, whether they represent a spur-rowel or a star; and distinguish them not by the number of their points, but sometimes they add the word pierced to a mollet, to represent a spur-rowel; though since mollet signifies nothing else, the term pierced seems superfluous. Upon what account they call stars, mollets, or mullets, I cannot learn; it seems they take them for fallen stars, as Guillin; such as that in the bearing of Vere Earl of Oxford, called a mollet by them, to represent the star which they say fell on the shield of one of his progenitors at the siege of Jerusalem.

Our old blazoners call them spur-rials, or revels, to distinguish them from stars; but our moderns have followed the English, calling them stars, both mollets, or mullets, without distinction; so that it is hard to know when they represent the one or the other, except they add the word pierced, which is often omitted in their blazons and paintings.

I ordinarily take mollets, or mullets, for stars in blazon, when they accompany celestial figures, as these in the arms of Bailie; but when they accompany military instruments, and other pieces of armour, for spur-rowels. When they have no such figures with them, but are alone in a shield, consisting only of five points, as these in the arms of Sutherland, Douglas, &c. I take these mullets then for stars, except some other documents or tradition make their signification appear. I shall here subjoin some examples of spur-rowels.

Sir John Jardine of Applegirth, Baronet, argent, a salter and chief gules on the last, three spur-rowels of six points of the first; which arms are supported on the right side by a horse at liberty argent, and on the left by a man completely armed cap-a-pee, proper; crest, a spur-rowel of six points, as the former; with the motto, Cave adrum; as in the L. R. and Plate of Achievements. He is chief of the name, and represents an ancient family, which was of old very numerous, and active in defending the borders of Scotland against the English and other depredators. They had considerable lands in Galloway, and, in the East Border, the lands of Jardinefield, so called of old, and at this time.

As for the antiquity of the name, Winfredus Jardine is witness in a charter of King David I. to the abbacy of Kelso, and, in another, to the abbacy of Aberbro-thock, as in their chartularies, and in Mr Pynne's Collections of the Barons of Scotland, that attended King Edward I. at Berwick, in the competition for the crown of Scotland between the Bruce and Batiol. There are of the name to be found, and the family has matched with honourable families, as with Charteris of Amisfield, Douglas of Drumlanrig, and of late again, Sir Alexander Jardine of Applegirth, Baronet, married Lady Margaret Douglas, sister to the first Duke of Queensberry, father and mother of the above-mentioned Sir John.

Sir Joseph Brand, in the county of Suffolk, azure, two swords in salter argent, hilted and pommelled or, within a bordure of the last; crest, a leopard's head issuing out of a ducal coronet.

The name of Currel, or Curlz, with us, argent, a fesse gules, between two spur-rowels in chief, and a hunting-horn in base sable, stringed of the second. P. MS.

The name of Purdie, or, a cheveron azure between three mullets pierced sable. (P. MS.) Sometimes the piercing is of a different tincture from the field, as in other figures voided.

The name of Niddrie, azure, a fesse or, between three mullets of the last, pierced argent.

Smy, gules, a cheveron argent, between two spur-rowels in chief, and a halberd in base or. P. MS.

The name of Townes, quarterly, first and fourth, parted per pale, argent and gules, two spur-rowels in pale counter-changed; second and third gules, three knight-helmets or. P. MS.
OF ARTIFICIAL FIGURES IN ARMORIES.

The name of Burn, or, two spur-rowsels, and a hunting-horn in base sable. Others of that name, argent, on a bend sable, three buckles or. P. MS.

Mr Andrew Bryson of Craighton, gules, a salier betwixt two spur-rowsels in fesse, a spear-head in chief argent, and a crescent in base or. N. R.

The Episcopal See of Bangor, in England, gules, a bend argent, gueté sable, between two mullets pierced of the second, as by Dale Pursuivant's Heraldry; and other English heralds blazon spur-rowsels, mollets pierced.

There are many noble families in England who carry such figures, whom I cannot here mention for want of room.

Buckles, or clasps, in arms, called by the English sometimes fetmailes, from the French, fermeaux, buckles. Sylvester Petra Sancta says, "Fibulae tesserariae pertinent ad militare cingulum," i.e. buckles belong to the military belt. As for the military belt, the fesse or bend, I have treated of them before. Buckles, clasps, and rings, are said by heralds, especially by Menestrier, to represent power and authority in the bearers, as also an acknowledgment of a dependence of sovereign powers; for such things were of old ordinary gifts of superiors, as badges of fidelity and firmness. And Mr Morgan, in his Heraldry, says, that these arming buckles were added as a sign of power and authority to the bordures of the Stewarts Earls of Darnly and Lennox, upon account these earls were Viceroys of Naples and Calabria.

The name of Stirling has always been in use to carry buckles variously situate, sometimes 3, 2 and 1; at other times in chief, or on a chief, in ancient bearings; but more frequently on a bend, as now used.

As for the antiquity of the name, Walterus de Strivilin is witness in a charter of Prince Henry, son of King David I. of the grant of the church of Sprouston, by John, Bishop of Glasgow. (Register of Kelso, p. 143.) And in the Earl of Haddington's Collection of Charters, especially these of King William, Robert de Strivilin is frequently to be found a witness; and in the charters of Alexander II. Robert and Walter Strivilins are witnesses there. In a transumt of a charter of Alexander III. the 15th year of his reign, (which I did see in the hands of the late Lord Kinnaird) to Richard de Moravia, brother to Gilbert, Bishop of Caithness, of the lands of Cowbine, the witnesses are Thomas de Strivilin, Cancellarius, Ingellramus de Balsi, Vice-comes de Berwic, Henricus de Balsi, Alexander Fife, Willielmus Biznet; which charter was transumt before William, Bishop of Murray, under the hands of Sir Thomas Moodie, and Sir Martin Tulloch, clerks, in the year 1481. There are several families of the name of Stirling to be found in Prynne's Ragman-Roll, submitters to King Edward I. in the year 1297, as Johanne de Strivilin, miles, Alexander de Strivilin in Lanarkshire, Johannae de Striviling de Moravia, Johanne de Stirling de Caris in Stirlingshire. This last family is known to have ended in an heiress, married to Monteith, who got the lands of Carse with her, which was enjoyed by their posterity, of the name of Monteith, who quartered the arms of Stirling, viz. azure, three buckles or, with the arms of the name of Monteith, of which before.

Sir James Balfour, in his Blazons, says, in the year 1292, Sir William Stirling carried, parted per fesse, sable and or, three buckles of the last on the first; which arms I think be the same which Sir George Mackenzie ascribes to Stirling of Glenesk, in his MS. viz. or, on a chief sable, three buckles of the first; Sir George taking the partition for the honourable ordinary the Chief.

The family of Stirling of Glenesk failed in an heir-female, who was married to Sir Alexander Lindsay; he got with her the lands of Glenesk, in the reign of King David II. who confirmed these lands to him, with the lands of Byres; as in Had. Coll. page 574.

Stirling of Keir has always been reckoned the principal family of the name, and thought to be descended from the first Walter de Strivilin, witness in Prince Henry's charter before-mentioned: Of old, he carried argent, on a bend sable, three buckles or. Some books have made the bend vert, and others azure; but the bend sable is most frequently to be met with, as on the House of Falahall, where the arms of many of the barons of Scotland were illuminated in the year 1604. Amongst them are these of Stirling of Keir, argent, on a bend ingrailed sable, three buckles or. In our New Register, the arms of Sir John Stirling of Keir, Baronet, are thus recorded; argent, on a bend azure, three buckles or; crest, a Moor's head couped, proper: motto, Semper fidelis.

Sir JOHN STIRLING of Glorat, Baronet, argent, a bend ingrailed azure, charged with three buckles or, on a chief gules, a naked arm issuing out of a cloud, from the sinister side, grasping a sword in pale, and therewith guarding an imperial crown, placed in the dexter chief point, proper, all within a double trezure counter-flowered with thistles vert; crest, a lion passant; motto, Semporeum.

(N. R.) Which honourable additament, the chief, was granted to the family for their loyalty to their sovereigns Charles I. and II. and, in the year 1666, the family was honoured with the dignity of Knight-Baronet. John Earl of Lennox gave a grant of the lands of Park of Inchinnan, in the shire of Renfrew, Dilecto consanguineo suo Gulielmo Stirling de Glorat, & Margaretae Houston, sponsa sua, anno 1525.

A younger son of theirs, Andrew Stirling of Portwallan, obtained the said lands in patrimony, whose lineal heir is John Stirling of Law, who carries argent, on a bend ingrailed azure, three buckles or in chief, an oak tree slipped vert, and thereupon a raven, proper: motto, Sic fides & robos. L. R.

William Stirling of Herbertshire, descended of Calder, now annexed to Keir, argent, on a bend ingrailed azure, between two roses, one in chief, and the other in base gules, three buckles or; crest, a boar's head couped, proper: motto, Gang forward. L. R.

Stirling of Ardoch; argent, on a bend ingrailed, three buckles or; quartered with these of Sinclair of Herdmanston, argent, a cross ingrailed azure. This family was honoured with the title of Knight-Baronet the 2d day of May in the year 1666.

George Stirling, Chirurgeon in Edinburgh, descended of the family of Calder, argent, on a bend ingrailed azure, betwixt a rose in chief gules, and a trapal (a chirurgical instrument) in base, proper, three buckles or; crest, a dexter hand pointing a lancet, proper: motto, By wounding I cure. N. R.

Stirling of Craig-Burnet, argent, on a bend ingrailed azure, betwixt a rose in chief, and a boar's head cabossed in base gules, three buckles or, ensign'd on the head with a cross, proper. Ibid.

James Stirling, Merchant in Dundee, or, on a bend azure, three buckles of the first, and, in chief, a columbine flower slipped, proper; crest, a ship under sail, proper: motto, Faventibus auris. Ibid.

Mr John Stirling of Bankell, argent, on a bend ingrailed azure, three buckles or in chief, a lion's head erased gules; crest, a lion passant, proper: motto, Fides servat a secundat. L. R.

The ancient name of Bunkle carried buckles relative to the name. Sir James Balfour says, in the year 1292, Bunkle, sable, three buckles or. The principal family of the name was Bunkle of that Ilk, in the shire of Berwick, who carried, as some, argent, on a bend sable, three buckles or. These arms have been displayed and perpetuated to us by many noble families, especially the name of Stewart, upon the account of their maternal descent.

Sir John Stewart, second son to Alexander Lord High Steward of Scotland, and fell brother to James Lord High Steward, married Margaret, daughter and heir to Sir Alexander Bunkle of that Ilk, about the year 1294; who, in her right, became possessor of many lands, and especially those of Bunkle in the Merse, after which he was designed Sir John Stewart of Bunkle; as also, he composed his armorial bearings with them, viz. or, a fesse ebene, azure and argent, surmounted of a bend sable, charged with three buckles or; for which their issue carried buckles, as the Stewarts Earls of Angus, and now the Douglasses, as descended of them; and others descended of Stewart of Bunkle place the buckles upon their borders: Of which before at the name of Stewart.

Some of the name of Fergusson carry the buckle as the principal figure, viz. azure, a buckle argent, betwixt three boars' heads couped or.

Fergusson of Kilkerran is very ancient in the shire of Ayr. King Robert I. grants a charter of several lands in that shire, Fergusio Fergusii filio, (Had. Coll.) and John Fergusson of Kilkerran resigns a part of his estate to Fergus Fergusson his son, and Janet Kennedy his spouse, in the year 1466, (as in Mr Law's Collections of Charters.)

This family suffered much by their loyalty in the reign of King Charles I. Sir John Ferguson of Kilkerran having, after he had contracted great debts for the service of the king, and his estate sequestered by the Usurper, retired abroad till the Restoration, a short time after which he died. Honourable mention is made of him in the Bishop of Sarum's Memoirs of the Dukes of Hamilton, as one who had firmly adhered in his duty to the king, and who had received several marks of his Majesty's favour. Of this Sir John the present Sir John Ferguson of Kilkerran is grandchild, by his younger son Simon Ferguson of Auchinwin, who, by a patent from the Lyon, carries the above arms; and, for crest, a bee upon a thistle, with the motto, Duleius ex asperis; as in Plate of Achievements.

Ferguson of Auchinblain, though having none of the ancient inheritance, is descended of the abovementioned Sir John, by an elder son, thus, Sir John was married to Helen Kennedy, daughter to Sir Thomas Kennedy of Culzean, and by her had four sons; Alexander, the eldest, James and John, both captains in the king's army during the civil wars, and Simon of Auchinwin, father of the present Sir John Ferguson of Kilkerran.

Alexander, the eldest son, married Margaret Sydder, daughter to ——— Sydder, first Bishop of Galloway, afterwards Bishop of Edinburgh; and by her he had two sons, Alexander, and James, a clergyman in England: Alexander married Katharine, daughter to Sir William Weir of Stoneybres, and with her had three sons, John, the eldest, who married Margaret, daughter to David Crawfurd of Kerse; he died without male-issue, leaving only a daughter by a second wife.

William, the second son, married Agnes, eldest daughter and heir-portioner of John Kennedy of Auchinblain, a grandson of Kennedy of Knockdon. Captain Alexander, the third son, died in Darien.

John, the eldest son, and Alexander his father, sold the lands of Kilkerran to the present Sir John Ferguson, in the year 1700. Alexander, the father, John and William, the two sons, sign a separate writ, which was in my hands, by which they cheerfully renounce all interest and title they in any manner of way pretend to the above lands, and wish a happy enjoyment thereof to the said Sir John and his; Yet still the primogeniture and right of blood, as heir-male, is in the person of William Ferguson of Auchinblain, who carries the ancient arms of the family, as above; and for crest,

The name of Lumisden carries a buckle in their arms.

Lumisden of that Ilk, an ancient family in the shire of Berwick, azur, on a chevron between three mullets or, a buckle of the first. One of this family married the heiress of Blencarn of that Ilk, in the same shire, and got these lands with her; and besides, to perpetuate the family, added the armorial figures of Blencarn, viz. a hawk, or eagle, a sword, a hawk, or a salmon, proper, to their own arms in base, thus illuminated on the House of Falahall, anno 1604, azur, on a chevron argeont, between two mullets in chief, and an eagle perching on a salmon in base or, a buckle of the first. I am of opinion that the buckle they carry is either upon account of their alliance with the Stewarts Earls of Angus, or as a mark from their arms of their superiority and patronage. Afterwards, the eagle perching on a salmon, was carried only in place of the crest, by that family, and other families descended of it, with the motto, Amor patitur moris; and sometimes, I conquer or die, as in Pont's Manuscript.

Gilbert Lumisden of Blencarn obtains a charter of these lands from John Stewart Earl of Angus, his superior, in the reign of King David II.

It also appears, that the said Lumisdens of Blencarn were heritors of the lands of Lumisden in the shire of Berwick, and were sometimes designed Lumisden of that Ilk, as by several charters and retours, and other documents, and particularly by a charter granted by George Earl of Angus to David Lumisden, designed therein, dilecto nostro consanguineo Davidi de Lumisden de codem, dated in the year 1454: And by an instrument of division of the lands of Blencarn, wherein the said David is designed, honorabilti armiger David Lumisden de codem, dated 24th of February 1453. The family continued in the possession of the lands of Lumisden till 1607, at which time the same were sold by David Lumisden of Blencarn to Archibald Douglas of Tofts, as appears by the contract of alienation in the public registers.

The next branch of the family of Lumisden of that Ilk, was Lumisden of Airdrie in Fife, of a considerable standing, descended of a second son of Blenearn, and Lumisden of that Ilk.

Sir James Lumisden of Airdrie purchased the lands of Innergelly, in Fife, about the year 1445, from which the family has been designed; and a little time thereafter recovered the lands of Blenearn in the Merse. He had two sons, Sir James, the eldest, and Robert Lumisden of Strathvithie the second.

Sir James Lumisden of Innergelly was Major-General to Gustavus Adolphus King of Sweden, in whose wars he was famous for the taking of Franckfort on the Oder. The family is now represented by Robert Lumisden of Innergelly, who carries azure, a chevron or, betwixt a wolf's head couped, and a buckle in chief, and an escalop in base argent; crest, an ear devouring a salmon, proper: motto, Beware in time.

The same is also carried by Colonel William Lumisden, third brother to Sir James Lumisden of Innergelly, all within a bordure ingrailed or. New Register.

Robert Lumisden of Strathvithie, a second son of Innergelly, carries the same with Innergelly, with a crescent for difference. Ibid.

John Lumisden, now of Blenearn, Writer to the Signet, purchased the lands of Blenearn from Innergelly, and he being a second son of Strathvithie, carries as Strathvithie, with a filial difference.

Alexander Lumisden of Cushnie, azure, a buckle or, between two wolves' heads in chief, and an escalop in base argent; crest, a naked arm grasping a sword, proper: motto, Dei dono sum quod sum. Ibid.

Monteith of Kerse carried, quarterly, first and fourth or, a bend chequé, sable and argent; second and third azure, three buckles or.

The first of this family was Sir John Monteith, third son to Sir Andrew Monteith of Ruskie, in the stewartry of Monteith, descended of the ancient Earls of Monteith, of the same surname, who carried only the bend chequé. Sir John married Marion Stirling, daughter and co-heir to Sir John Stirling of Calder, in Clydesdale, and with her he got the lands of Kerse and Alva, for which the family carried the buckles for the name of Stirling, and flourished for many years.

George Monteith, Merchant in Edinburgh, by the Lyon Register, is said to be the representative of the family, who carried the above arms; he left behind him a son, George.

The next to him that represents the family of Kerse, is Monteith of Millhall, who carries, quarterly, first and fourth or, a bend chequé, sable and argent, for Monteith; second and third azure, three buckles or, for Stirling of Calder, as above; and, for his difference, a crescent in the centre of the quartered arms; crest, an eagle looking up to the sun in its glory: motto, Sub sole nilbil. As in Plate of Achievements.

Monteith of Auldeithie, descended of a second son of the family of Kerse, carries only or, a bend chequé, sable and argent, on a canton of the second a lion's head erased of the first: crest, an eagle rising proper, looking up to the sun in his glory: motto, Sub sole nilbil. L. R.

The name of Bowie, argent, on a bend sable, three buckles or. Ogilvie's Manuscript.

But to proceed; military instruments, ancient and modern, such as bows, arrows, darts, &c. have been, and are frequent in arms, to show some singular event, or as relative to the name of the bearer.

Bower of Kinnetles, vert, two bows in full bend pale-ways, proper, stringed argent, between three sheaves of arrows, two in chief, and one in base of the second: motto, Ad metam. N. R.

Others of that name carry argent, a fesse azure, surmounted of three arrows, the middlemost pale-ways, the other two bend dexter and sinister-ways, meeting with their points downwards in the base, counter-changed of the first and second, and in chief a boar's head erased sable. MacKenzie's Heraldry.

Dr John Hutton, representor of the family of Hutton of that Ilk, in the shire of Berwick, so recorded in the Lyon Register 1692, and chief Physician to their Majesties' Persons, and sole Physician to their Majesties' Forces and Hospitals, and fellow of the Royal College of Physicians at London and Edinburgh, or, a lion rampant azure, between three arrows' points downwards, 2 and 1, proper, headed and feathered argent, and on a chief gules as many besants; crest, a serpent catching at the finger of a man's hand, which issues from a cloud, all proper. L. K.

The name of Littlejohn, argent, three arrows gules, the middlemost paleways, the other two saltier-ways, with their points downwards, feathered or, accompanied with six trefoils slipped of the second, two in chief, two in fesse, and two in base.

George M'Alla, Merchant in Edinburgh, gules, two arrows crossing other saltier-ways argent, surmounted of a fesse chechée of the second and first, between three buckles, two in chief, and one in base, all within a bordure indented or; crest, a boot coupled at the ankle, and thereon a spur, proper; motto, Dulce periculum. New Register.

The heads of spears, arrows and darts, are frequent in arms; and in blazons are latined, ferrum baute, sagitta & jaculi. The heads of darts are called pheons, and ordinarily by the French, fer de dart, and are sometimes said to be barbed, when hooked with teeth, as fig. 18. Plate XI.

The name of Smart, argent, a chevron between three pheons sable. Balfour's MS. as equivocally relative to the name.

The name of Moodie, azure, a chevron ermine, between three pheons argent. Workman's MS.

The M'Auls, argent, two spur-rowels in chief gules, and a pheon in base azure. Tbid.

In England the pheon is frequently borne, as by the noble family of Sydney Earl of Leicester, or, a pheon azure.

The noble family of Egerton Earl of Bridgewater, argent, a lion rampant gules, between three pheons sable.

The name of Graden, with us, argent, on a chevron azure, between three otters sable, each devouring a fish, proper, as many pheons barred or; crest, a demi-otter erect sable, devouring a fish; with the motto, Ad escam & usum.

There was an old family of this name, designed of that Ilk, in Berwickshire, whose lands have been possessed by the Homes, and now by the Kers.

There are other military instruments to be met with in armories: I shall here name only a few of them, upon the account of the noble families that bear them.

Caltrap or Trappe, by some called chevvaltrap, by the French chausse-trape, an instrument of iron used in war, to gall and wound horse-feet, consisting of four pricks placed after such a fashion, as which way soever it lie on the ground, one point will always stick up; they are to be seen on the compartment of the achievement of the Earls of Perth; the Latins call them murices, or tribuloi. Plate XII. fig. 19.

The name of Trape, in England, argent, three caltraps sable, as relative to the name.

Hugot in France, d'or à trois chausse-trapes d'azur.

Battering rams are to be found in the arms of Bertie Earl of Lindsey, as their paternal figures, viz. argent; three battering rams bar-ways, proper, armed and garnished azure.

Banners, ensigns, standards, pennons and gonfanons, I have described before with the shield; but I speak of them here as armorial figures or charges contained within in a shield.

The name of Bannerman carried anciently, for an armorial figure, a banner displayed, as relative to the name; which was from their office, being hereditary banner-bearers of old to our kings, in the reigns of Malcolm IV. or William the Lion.

They carried for a long time those of the name of Forbes, with whom they were nearly allied.

5 K.
OF ARTIFICIAL FIGURES IN ARMORIES.

Balfour, in his Manuscript of Blazons, says, that BANNERMAN of Elsick, in the shire of Kincardine, carried or, on a fesse, between three bears' heads couped azure, as many mascles of the first. And Pont, in his Manuscript, says, BANNERMAN of Waterton, in anno 1590, carried azure, on a fess: or, between three bears' heads couped of the last, a male gulles; which arms alter somewhat from these of the Forbeses, neither are the bears' heads muzzled, of which before.

These of the name of BANNERMAN have again reassumed their ancient bearing, as in our New Register. Sir Alexander BANNERMAN of Elsick, gulles, a banner displayed argent, and thereon a canton azure, charged with a St Andrew's cross of the second, as the badge of Scotland; crest, a demi-man in armour, holding in his right hand a sword, proper; supporters, two armed men, proper: motto, Pro patria. By the Lyon's patent 1692.

Mr Robert BANNERMAN, a younger son of Elsick, gulles, a banner displayed argent, and thereon a canton azure, with a St Andrew's cross of the second, within a bordure argent, charged with four buckles azure, as many holy leaves vert, alternately; a man issuing out of the wreath in a priest's habit, and praying posture: motto, Hac praestat militia. See Plate of Achievements.

Farquharson of Invercauld, of whom before, carries in the second and third quarter of his achievement, on a chief gulles, a banner bend-ways or, upon the account that one of his progenitors carried the Banner of Scotland at the battle of Pinky-field.

The gonfannon, which I have described before, is carried as an armorial figure, or common charge, by many families abroad, upon the account they had been gonfaloniers, i.e. standard-bearers to the church, as the Counts of Auvergne, in France, or, a gonfannon gulles, fringed vert. Plate XI. fig. 29.

Musical instruments, used in war, such as trumpets, drums, &c. are to be found in arms; for which see Guillem's and Morgan's Heraldry; but I have met with no such arms carried by any noble families with us.

There is a figure in the arms of Granville, in England, and carried by Granville Earl of Bath, viz. gulles, three clarions or. Some take them to represent musical instruments, called clarions. It is true, in description of tournaments and joustings, I find knights to have come in with their clarions; whether these be the same with them in the arms of Granville, I shall not determine. Williellmus Imhooff, in his Blazon of Granville Earl of Bath, says, Tria clara cymbala aurea in scuto rubeo. Others take them for horsemen's rests, which I cannot well comprehend. Sandford, in his Genealogical History, page 45, gives us the same arms, which he blazons, gulles, three restes or, borne by Robert, surnamed Cane, Earl of Gloucester, natural son to King Henry I.

Water-budget, or budget, another old instrument used in armories, frequent with the English, and to be seen in the bearings of some in Scotland. I have not met with it in the bearings of other countries under such a name or form as the English give it; with them the forms are of two sorts, as fig. 21 and 22. Plate XI.

The English disagree about its nature and use; some take the water-budget to represent aquafort, a water plant; but others take them for vessels made of leather, filled with wind, for to help men to swim over rivers, (as Morgan) and that they represent likewise the script of religious votaries. But generally, his brethren heralds in England take water-budgets for vessels of leather, which soldiers used of old for carrying of water, or other liquors, in long marches where liquors were scarce: Upon which Mr. Gibson latins them, uteres aquario, carried in the arms of the family of Bourchiers Earls of Bath, in England, descended of the Bourchiers in Normandy, sometimes Earls of Ewe, viz. argent, a cross ingrailed gulles, cantoned with four water-budgets sable.

The surname of Ross, in England, carried or, three water-budgets sable. The first of that name (as Dugdale in his Baronage) was one Peter, in the reign of Henry I. who took his name from the place of his residence called Ross, in the East-Riding of Yorkshire: Whose great-grandchild, Robert Ross Lord Hamlock, was sent by King John of England, to King William of Scotland, where it seems he was well received; for, it is said, he married a daughter of that king, who bore to him William Ross Lord Hamlock, (afterwards one of the competitors with the Bruce and Baliol for the crown of Scotland) and Robert Ross of Wark, who, with several other Rosses of the family, were frequent in Scotland in the reigns of Alexander II. and Alexander III. Robert de Ross is often to be found a witness in the charters of King Alexander III. (Had. Coll.) And in Pynne's History of Edward I. especially in the Ragman-Roll of the Scots Barons who submitted to Edward I. are to be found Jacobus de Ross, filius Godofredi junior, Andreas de Ross filius Godofredi, Willielmus de Ross in Vice-comitatu de Edin, Robertus Ross in Vice-comitatu de Air, & Robertus de Ross, miles, Dominus Castri de Work; which our author, Mr Pynne, adds of the last, "Non obstante fidelitate quam regi Anglice juraverat, ad Scotos transfugit."

Of him, it is thought, are descended the Barons of Halkhead, who were eminent in the reign of Robert II. for then it was that Sir John Ross obtained the barony of Melville, in the sheriffdom of Edinburgh, by marrying Agnes, daughter and sole heiress of Sir John Melville of that Ilk, by whom he had Sir John his heir and successor. He quartered the arms of his mother, being gules, three crescents within a bordure argent, charged with eight roses of the first, for Melville, with his paternal arms, viz. or, a chevron chequy, sable and argent, between three water-budgets of the second; the chevron chequy was not carried to difference from any other family of the name, but, as I take it, to show they were dependants and vassals of the High Stewards of Scotland, their superiors and over-lords, as others were then in use to do.

This family was dignified with the title of Lord Ross by King James IV. in the person of Sir John Ross of Halkhead, who was slain in the battle of Flodden; of whom is descended the present William Lord Ross, whose achievement is, quarterly, first and fourth Ross, second and third Melville, supported by two goshawks, proper, armed, jessed, and belled or; crest, a hawk's head erased, proper: motto, Think on.

There were other families of this name who carried water-budgets, as Ross of Sanquhar; which family ended in two daughters, heiresses, the eldest married to one of the name of Edgar, the other to Crichton, one of the progenitors of the Earl of Dumfries; which two families quartered the water-budgets for Ross, with these of the proper ones of their families, of whom before.

There was a family of the name of Ross in Galloway, in the reign of Robert I. for that King gives a charter to Hugh de Ross, militi, of half of the lands of Kinafs, with the fisheries, lying in the shire of Perth, "In excambium terrarum de Genken, infra Gallovidiam, quas ident Hugo haber ratione quondam Walteri de Ross militis fratis sui, & quas idem quondam Walterus de Ross habebat donatis Edwardi, fratis nostri Regis Hibernie." (Had. Coll. page 78.) I have seen a principal discharge of Hugh Ross of Kinafs, to Robert Murray of Ogilvie, (now Abercarny) of an agreement betwixt them, of the date the 2d of June 1387, to which was appended the seal of arms of this Hugh Ross, having a fosse chequy between two water-budgets in chief, and a mullet in base. (pennes Abercarny.)

Ross of Kilravock, in the North, or, a boar's head couped gules, between three water-budgets sable; crest, a harp azure: motto, Constant and true. N. R.

This family derives its descent from one Hugh Rose, who got the lands of Kilravock disposed to him by Elizabeth Bisset, in the reign of Alexander III. whose son, Godofredus de Ross, was sheriff of Inverness in the reign of Robert the Bruce. He is mentioned in the old evidents belonging to the priory of Urquhart and Pluscardine, in the year 1311, whose grandchild, upon the account his mother was an heiress of the name of Chisholm, assumed the boar's head, the armorial figure of that name; for which see Sir George Mackenzie's MS.

Francis Rose of Auchloosen, descended of Kilravock, as Kilravock, within a bordure sable, for difference; crest, a water-budget, as the former: motto, Agnoscebo eventus. N. R.

Mr. John Rose of Inch, Minister of Foveran, descended of a third son of the House of Kilravock, bears as Kilravock, within a bordure gules, charged with six mullets or; crest, a rose gules, stalked and barbed vert: motto, Magnes & animus. Ibid.

Ross of Craigie, or, a fosse chequy, argent and sable, between three water-budgets of the last. Balfour's MS.
This family flourished in Perthshire in the reign of King David Bruce; a daughter of this family was married to Sir John Drummond of Concaig, Steward of Strathern; and ——— Drummond of Balloch married another daughter of Ross of Craige, who was mother of John Drummond, first laird of Milnab.

Ross of Henning, in the shire of Ayr, represented by George Ross of Gaston, or, a chevron counter-embattled, betwixt three water-budgets sable; crest, a spear and rose saltier-ways, proper; motto, Per aspera virtus. N. R.

James Ross of Portivo, descendant of Henning, or, on a chevron counter-embattled, betwixt three water-budgets sable, a thistle slipped of the field, accompanied with two cinquefoils ermine; crest, a rose tree bearing roses, proper: motto, Floret qui laborat. This gentleman lives in Ireland, having an estate there, and in Scotland. N. R.

Andrew Ross of Nui, descended of the Lord Ross's family, bears the paternal coat of the Lord Ross, within a bordure invected sable, for his difference. Ibid.

Robert Ross of Marchinch, late Provost of Inverness, descended of Kilravock, bears as Kilravock, within a bordure indented of the second; crest, a dexter hand holding a slip of a rose bush, proper: motto, Quo spinisor fragrator.

Ross of Clova, as descended of Kilravock, carries as Kilravock, with a suitable difference.

So much then for the Rosses, who carry the water-budgets, as descended of the Rosses in England. The Rosses, or Roses, originally of Scotland, as Balnagowan and his descendants, carry lions, of which before.

The name Valange, or de Valenta, came from England as the name of Ross did, and carried azure, three water-budgets or. (B. and P. MSS.) In old evidences they are designed de Vallibus: I cannot say that they are of the same name and stock with Vas, or Vaus, nor with these named anciently de Valonis, who carried all different arms from one another. Of the Valonis I have spoke before in the Title of the Escalop.

Andrew de Valloence was one of the hostages for King David II. and these of his name carried water-budgets: As, Valance, or Valange, of Tory, married one of the co-heirs of the Lord Loquhoir, and got with her the barony of Inchgal, as in the Genealogical Tree of the family of Boswell of Balmuto, who married another of the co-heirs of Loquhoir. Valange of Tory ended in an heiress, who was married to Wardlaw; he got with her the lands of Tory, and quartered the arms of Valange, three water-budgets with their own, of which before.

Valange of Lochend, azure, three water-budgets or. P. MS.

Robert Valance of Possel, descended of a second brother of Valange of Lochend, bears as Lochend, with a crescent for difference; and, for crest, a rose surmounted of a thistle, proper: motto, In utroque. N. R.

The family of Stair quarter the arms of Ross with their own, upon the account they married an heiress of that name; and the descendants of the family accompany their paternal figure the saltier, with water-budgets, their maternal figures, by Sir Hugh Dalrymple of North-Berwick, &c. And Mr William Dalrymple, eldest lawful son of Sir John Dalrymple of Cousland, Baronet, eldest son of Sir James Dalrymple of Killoch, second son of James, first Viscount of Stair, bears, quarterly, first and fourth or, on a saltier azure, nine lozenges of the first, and in chief a water-budget sable, for Dalrymple; second and third sable, a cross flory, cantoned with four escalops argent, for Fletcher of New-Cranston; crest, a rock, proper: motto, Firm. N. R.

Mr Robert Dalrymple, Writer to the Signet, and younger brother to the above Sir John Dalrymple, carries the paternal coat of his elder brother, with a suitable difference; crest and motto the same as above. See Plate of Achievements.

Many families in England, of different surnames, carry water-budgets, whose blazons I pass over, and recommend the curious to English heralds; neither will I insist here longer on military instruments, since they have no more singular attributes, nor terms in the science, than those already mentioned. Therefore I shall proceed to castles, towers, and other buildings, which have some terms in blazon peculiar to themselves.
Castles and towers are thus distinguished from one another by Guillim, who says, that the architecture of a castle must extend itself over all the field, that is, from the one side of the shield to the other; but the building of a tower is not so extended, so that the field appears on every side. This distinction does not hold in the practice of any nation, nor with that of the English, and is even contrary to our author's own blazons, especially where there are more castles than one placed in a shield: Neither do I find any other herald make such a nice distinction between them, but promiscuously calls castles towers, and towers castles, in their blazons; but what I observe from the Italian Sylvester Petra Saneta, is, that castles have triple towers above the embattlement, and a tower has but one above the embattlement; which is more agreeable to the general practice of Europe.

Many castles and towers are, and may be carried in one shield, situate according to the position of the ordinaries, as in fesse, in bend, in pale &c. from which situation, as other figures, they have their blazons.

Castles, towers, and other buildings, have one peculiar attribute in blazon, which is, whatever tincture they be of, if the sediment of the building be of another colour from the stones, represented by lines or tracery, then the buildings being argent, is said to be masoned of such a tincture, as sable, which the Latins call lapidum junctura, or lapidum commissura. When the windows and ports of castles, and other buildings, are of a different tincture from the field and building, the windows and ports are supposed to be shut, and must be so express in the blazon; if the windows and ports of the tincture of the field, so that the field is seen through them, they are then supposed to be open, which is to be expressed in the blazon, and for which the French say ajouré, as of other figures that are voided of the field. When the port is after the form of a portcullis, it is so named in the blazon, and by the French, cantisse, and, the Latins call the portcullis, porta castellarum.

When towers are topped with spears and fans, we name them in the blazon, for which the French say, girouette, and the Latins say, cum versatili vexillulo. All which attributes I shall illustrate by a few examples.

The kingdom of Castile in Spain, as relative to the name, carries gules, a castle triple-towered or, masoned sable, windows and ports shut azure; thus, by Sylvester Petra Saneta, “Castellum aureum cum ostio ae speculii cyanei, cum sabulea lapide deum commissura, & prominentibus in summo eius fastigio, ternis turriculis, perinde aureis, in parmula purpurata.” In that kingdom there are many noble families that carry castles, as the Albuquerque, Almazani, Carilli, &c. in imitation of the sovereign ensign. And Alphonse III. King of Portugal, when he married a daughter of Alphonse X. of Castile, in the year 1257, and got the country of Algarve, placed round his arms, a bordure gules, charged with eight castles or.

The Chastelain, in France, “de gueules, au chateau a deux tours d’or, crenelle, maçonnée de sable, & girouette d’argent;” as Monsieur Baron, i.e. gules, a castle with two towers or, embattled and masoned sable, adorned with four fans argent. Sylvester Petra Saneta makes the castle have three towers, and, for girouette, says, “Cum versatili preterea triplici vexillulo argenteolo, est Chastelainorum in Gallia.”

The name of Oldcastle, in England, argent, a castle triple-towered sable.

The family of Tours in Auvergne, and La Tour in Savoy, have towers in their arms, relative to their names.

Towers differ from castles, being smaller, and are not triple-towered as castles; they have one or two towers above the embattlement, by the French called donjonée: The same may be said of the towers borne by the town of Aberdeen, donjonnée de trois pièces, which in our books are blazoned, gules, three towers (not castles) triple-towered, within a double treisure, flowered and counterflowered argent, supported by two leopards, proper; with the motto, Bon accord.

The double tressure, being a part of the royal arms, was granted as an honourable additament for the singular loyalty of the citizens of Aberdeen, who cut off in one night their old enemies the English, their word being Bon-accord; which arms are on the face of the town-seal, and on the reverse, in a field azure, a chough argent, masoned sable, St Michael standing in the porch, mitred and vested, proper, with his right hand lifted up, praying over three children in a boiling cauldron of the first, and in his left hand a crosier or N. R.

Edinburgh, the metropolitan city of Scotland, besides its other commendable beauties in buildings, is eminent for its impregnable castle, which is thought to be older than the city, anciently called Arx puellarum, the Maiden-Castle, where the honourable virgins, the daughters of our sovereigns, and these of our nobility, were kept from the insults of the enemy in time of war. The city has that castle represented for their arms, sometimes black in a white field, and at other times white in a black field; but I shall blazon them, as I find them most frequently painted, viz. argent, a castle triple-towered and embattled sable, masoned of the first, and topped with three fans gules, windows and portcullis shut of the last, situate on a rock, proper, supported on the dexter by a maid richly attired, with her hair hanging down over her shoulders, and, on the left, by a stag, or deer, proper: motto, Nisi Dominus frustra.

There are several families with us, who carry castles and towers, upon the account, as I suppose, they are the principal seats of their possessious, and as signs of authority and jurisdiction.

M'Leod of that ilk, azure, a castle triple-towered and embattled argent, masoned sable, windows and port gules.

Some books represent it a tower embattled; which arms are now used, quarterly, by Stewart of Burary, as descended of an heiress of the family, of whom before, page 52.

The family of M'Naughtan of that ilk, in the shire of Argyle, carries a tower embattled.

This family is acknowledged by the Highlanders to be of the greatest antiquity of any in those parts: They derive their origin from one Naughtan, an eminent man in the time of King Malcolm IV. who was in great esteem with the head of the family of Lochow, to whom he was very assistant in his wars with the M'Dowalls, for which he was rewarded with sundry lands, by him. His successors were denominated M'Naughtan, that is, the children or descendants of Naughtan.

Duncan M'Naughtan was a brave and warlike man under King Robert Bruce, and was very assistant to him in reducing the rebellious Lords of Lorn, who sided with the Bailiow and the English, as says Mr Barbour in his History of that King. The family continued in good esteem, and was allied with the most of the ancient families in the West-Highlands, besides others elsewhere, particularly with the Stewarts, Menzies's, Campbells of Glenorchy and Ardkinlass, the M'Leods, &c. A younger son of this family, Donald M'Naughtan, being a churchman, for his learning, was by King James II. raised to the Episcopal See of Dunkeld, where he exercised his episcopal function to his death, as in Spottiswood's History of the Church of Scotland.

Those of the family were always very loyal, and upon the side of the crown, both anciently and of late. Being indifferently rewarded, the family is low, and now represented by John M'Naughtan, a son of the family, who carries as his predecessors, quarterly, first and fourth argent, a hand fesse-ways, proper, holding a cross croslet fitched azure, (a figure carried almost by all the ancient families in the Highlands, as I have observed before) second and third argent, a tower embattled gules, and another for crest; with the motto, I hope in God; and supported by two roebucks, which, as I am informed, is to be seen cut on a stone in the House of M'Naughtan.

With us there are other considerable families, who carry castles, towers, and such buildings, not only as their proper paternal figures, but as additional to their paternal bearings, by way of augmentation, upon the account of their titles of dignities, as in the arms of Leslie Lord Lindores, and Leslie Lord Newark.

Patrick Leslie, son of Andrew Earl of Rothes, was a great favourite of King James IV. of Scotland, a gentleman of the bed-chamber, and one of the Judges of the Session, who, by the bounty of his royal master, got the abbacy of Lindores erected into a temporal lordship, to himself and the heirs-male of his body, in the year 1625; about which time, as an augmentation, he placed over the quartered arms of the Earl of Rothes, his father, an escutcheon gules, charged with a castle argent, masoned sable, to represent the abbacy of Lindores, from which he had his title of honour: And which arms were adorned with a crest, being a demi-angel, proper, with wings displayed or, holding in his dexter hand a griffin's head erased, proper, beaked or; supporters, two griffins argent, winged or, and membred gules: motte, Stat promissa fides.

Lord Patrick was succeeded in his estate and honours by his son John Lord Lindores, father of David Lord Lindores, who died without issue.

Sir David Leslie, a younger son of Patrick Leslie, the first Lord Lindores, by the Lady Jean Stewart his wife, daughter of Robert Earl of Orkney, one of the natural sons of King James V, being militarily inclined, went early abroad, and served in Gustavus King of Sweden his army, where, by his valour and conduct, he was raised to the high post of a major-general, where he continued in great renown until the breaking out of the Civil Wars in Britain, in the reign of King Charles I, that the Parliament of Scotland having raised an army in defence of their liberties, and the king's person, as they pretended, made him lieutenant-general of their army. King Charles II. had so great an esteem of the general's sufficiency and abilities in military affairs, that he made choice of him to command immediately under himself, at the fatal battle of Worcester, where his Majesty made a narrow escape, and the lieutenant-general was taken prisoner, and sent to the Tower of London, where he underwent the same hardships and severities which the most loyal of his countrymen suffered till the King's Restoration: Upon which, his Majesty, being fully satisfied with the merit and loyalty of the general, created him a peer of Scotland, by the title of Lord Newark, 31st of August 1660, by patent to him and the heirs-male of his body; and his Majesty settled upon him, during his life, a pension of 500l. Sterling. He carried the above quartered arms of his brother Lindores, with a crescent for difference.

He married Jean, daughter of Sir John York, knight, by whom he had a son, David, his successor, also three daughters. Upon account that the honours of Lord Newark were limited to the heirs-male of his body, he again made an entail and resignation of his estate in his Majesty's hands in favour of his son David the master, and the heirs-male of his body; which failing, to the master's eldest daughter, Mrs. Jean Leslie, and the heirs whatsoever of her body, which his Majesty was pleased to accept of and grant.

David, second Lord Newark, succeeded his father: He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Thomas Stewart of Grandtully, by whom he had five daughters; Mrs Jean, the eldest, his successor. He died on the 19th of May 1694, without male issue, whereby the estate and title of honours came to his eldest daughter, according to the conception of her grandfather's entail, and the King's charter, upon the resignation abovementioned.

Which Jean, Baroness of Newark, is also heir to her cousin, the late David Lord Lindores, who died without any issue, and from him has a disposition of his estate and honours; but the last being limited to his heirs-male, may come to fall. She married Sir Alexander Anstruther, a son of Sir Philip Anstruther of that Ilk, an ancient and knightly family in the county of Fife, who brought with him a considerable advantage to the family of Newark, and has issue with her: Their eldest son is William, master of Newark, who is obliged to take upon him the name and arms of the family of Newark, and to marshal them with the paternal coat of Anstruther.

McCalloun of Rossie, azure, a castle argent. Pont's Manuscript.

Kincaid of that Ilk, gules, a fesse ermine, between two mullets in chief or, and a castle in base. Ibid.

It seems the castle represents that of Edinburgh, for these of the family were a long time constables thereof.

I find in an old birth-brieve, signed by several honourable persons, in favours of Mr. Andrew Montecith; it is wrote thus, That he was the son of Alexander Montecith of Colchochburn, and his wife Janet Kincaid, lawful daughter to David Kincaid, lineally and lawfully descended of the House of the Laird of Kincaid in Stirlingshire, chief of the name, whose predecessor, for his valiant service, in recovering of the castle of Edinburgh from the English, in the time of King Edward I. was made constable of the said castle, and his posterity enjoyed that office for many years, carrying the castle in their arms, in memory thereof, to this day.

There is an old broad-sword, belonging to some of the families of the name of Kincaid, upon which were the above arms, with the castle, with these words,

Wha will persue, I will defend
My life and honour to the end.

Which is in the custody of Mr Thomas Kincaid, eldest lawful son of Thomas Kincaid, chirurgeon-apothecary in Edinburgh, descended of the family of Kincaid of that Ilk, gules, on a fesse ermine, between two mullets in chief, and a castle triple-towered in base argent, masoned sable, a lozenge of the first; crest, a dexter hand holding a chirurgeon's instrument, called a bisteri, proper; motto, Incidendo sano. Lyon Register.

Charles Bracce of Nether-Auquhask, sable, two bar singrailed, between as many towers triple-towered in chief argent, and three crescents in base or: motto, Fidelis & constant. Ibid.

Colonel Bracce, as in Pont's Manuscript, carried the same, supported on the dexter with a man in armour, and on the sinister with a horse saddled and bridled, all proper; and for crest, a hand holding a sword; with the motto, Honorat mors. Ibid.

Renton of that Ilk, azure, a chevron or, between three towers argent. Pont's Manuscript.

Churches, bridges, and other pieces of architecture are used in arms. There are three considerable families in Piedmont, of the name of Chesia, which signifies a church in that country, that carry churches, relative to their names, as do some families with us.

The name of Templeton, azure, a fesse or, and in base, a church or temple argent.

Arthur Temple of Revelrig, azure, a temple or; crest, a pillar wrought about with woodbine, proper; motto, Stante cirebe. L. R.

The family of Pontevez, in Provence, gules, a bridge with two arches or, masoned sable.

Many other families in France, and in other countries, carry bridges, relative to their names.

In England the name of Trowbridge, in allusion to the name, quasi Throughbridge, argent, a bridge of three arches in fesse gules, masoned sable, the stream transfent, proper.

Mr Alexander Bridge, Portioner of Kinsbarns, gules, a bridge of one arch argent, masoned sable, with streams transfent, proper. L. R.

The name of Archies, in England, gules, three arches argent, masoned sable, 2 and 1.

The Colonni, in Italy, as relative to their names, gules, a pillar argent, ensign'd with a crown or.

There is a piece of building called pignon; by the Latins, fastigium, the pinnacle or top of a building, as in the arms of Jacques Quinson, sometime Secretary of Ureni of Anjou, given us by Daniel Feuole, in his Piece of Heraldry, viz. or, a pignon azure, of three degrees, on each a bird affronté sable. This figure is like the gavel of a house with gorbel steps; And pignon is a term of blazon used by the French, when a figure like a pair of stairs, or scale of music pyramidically; as the chevron in the arms of Stainkirkker in Bavaria, viz. sable, a chevron pignoné or. We would call it a chevron embattled.

Workman, in his Illuminated Book of Arms, gives such a chevron to the name of Evene, argent, a chevron pignoné azure, (for which our heralds say embattled) and ensign'd on the top with a banner gules, between two stars in chief, and a soleil of the last in base. And the same are carried by John Ewen, Writer to the Signet, as in Plate of Achievements.

In the Lyon Register, Thomas Edward, or Udward, of Longcroft, (I do not think that these are one name, for I take Uthward from an office of old) azure,
OF ARTIFICIAL FIGURES IN ARMORIES.

A fesse argent, surmounted of a pillar gules, issuing out of the base wavy azure; crest, a tincture, proper: motto, Nec flatus, nec fluctus. New Register.

Portcullis, latined porta cuteracao, or rostrum militare, was the hereditary badge, or cognizance, of the sons of John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, upon the account that they were born in the castle of Beaufort in France.

WINDY GATE of that ilk, a family sometime with us, bears argent, a portcullis sable, as in Workman's Manuscript; but in Pont's Manuscript, gules, a portcullis or.

The name of YETTS, of which there was a family in Teviotdale, of Yetton of old, bears or, a fesse embattled, being three portcullises gules.

The name of YATES, in England, carry gates, in allusion to the name.

Edward Yates of Buckland, parted per fesse orargent, argent and sable, three field-gates counter-changed; for which see Morgan's Heraldry.

But to proceed to ships, and their parts, which are frequently carried for the arms of maritime countries and towns, and by families upon the account of their situation, and trading by sea, or for the services they were obliged to perform to their kings, by the redendos of their charters. I have seen several charters with their redendos, bearing, Unam navem viginti remorum, ii petatur tempore belli.

The arms of the country of Orkney are azure, a ship with its sails furled up, and oars cross the mast or, carried by the old Earls of Orkney, as feudal arms. And since, Torphin Earl of Orkney, who married a natural daughter of King William; she bore to him John Earl of Orkney and Zetland: Upon which account I think the double tressure has been placed round the ship, as an addition of honour, as Alexander Ross, in his Annals, tells us, who says he has seen the seal of this Earl John, with the ship and the double tressure upon it; which arms have been transmitted to the families which have been dignified with the title of Earl of Orkney.

The Earls of Caithness, the Lords of Arran, and Lords of Lorn, have carried ships for these countries; of which before.

I shall here mention some of the name of Campbell, as also the M'Dowalls, (or M'Dougall, or McCoul) ancient Lords of Lorn, carried the lymphad, which is an old-fashioned ship, with one mast and oars, as by our paintings in the arms of Campbells, Stewarts, and M'Dowalls, Lords of Lorn, and their descendants. Of the last I am of opinion are descended the M'Dougals of Mackerston, though for present they carry only the lion: For,

Colonel Alexander M'Dowall, Baron of Lodvica in Swedenland, a son of Mackerton, carries, quarterly, first azure, a lion rampant argent, crowned or; second gules, an arm in armour argent, holding a cross croislet fitched azure; third or, a lymphad sable; fourth or, a rock sable in base, and in chief, two salmons nautant in fesse, proper; and over all, by way of surlout, an escutcheon as the first quarter, ensign'd with a ducal crown. The shield of arms is tinctred after the German fashion, with three crests, that in the middle a ducal coronet, and upon it a dove, all proper, between two helmets affronté, adorned with mantlings of the tinctures of the arms, and ensign'd with ducal coronets in place of wreaths: Out of that on the right issueth a lion argent, crowned or; and, from that on the left, an arm in armour holding a cross croislet fitched, as before; and above all, on an escrol, for motto, Fear God. For which see Plate of Achievements, taken from those arms finely illuminated in the middle of his patent of nobility, granted by King Charles XI. of Sweden, to Colonel Gustavus M'Dowall, Baron of Lodvica, in the year 1674, father of the above Colonel Alexander, in whose hands I have seen the patent, as also a genealogical tree of the family; where those arms are illuminated as above, with the arms of Swedish and Scottish families, with whom they have matched, as proofs of their noble descents, paternal and maternal.

Which Gustavus M'Dowall was son and successor of Colonel James M'Dowall and his lady, Anna, daughter of George Vanderberg of Saggaedt in Eastland; which James was son and heir of Robert M'Dowall, who went from Scotland to Sweden in the year 1594, and settled there, having married a daughter of Vou Breda of Kremnand: He, to show his noble descent from Scotland, obtains a birth-brevie, or certificate, of his paternal and maternal descents, upon the declarations of several persons of good quality, before the magistrates of Edinburgh, 2d March

5 M
1656, which stands there recorded, 'That he was the son of Patrick M'Dougall of Mackerston, and his lady, Margaret Nisbet, a daughter of Nisbet of that ilk; and that his grandfather was Thomas M'Dougall of Mackerston, and his lady, Elizabeth, a daughter of William Ker of Cessford, predecessor to the Duke of Roxburgh; and so forth, as in the birth-brief.

Sir Duncan Campbell of Lochnell, Baronet, the direct heir, by male-line, of the Honourable John Campbell, first of Lochnell, second son of Colin Earl of Argyile, and Lady Janet Gordon, daughter of Alexander Earl of Huntly, carries, quarterly, first gironné of eight pieces, or and sable, for Campbell; second azuré, a boar's head couped or, for Gordon; third argent, a lymphad sable, for Lorn; and the fourth as the first; crest, a right hand holding a horseman's lance bendways: motto, Armis parata ferc. The family was in use, as I am certainly informed, to adorn their arms with supporters, by a lion gardant gules, on the right side; and on the left, by a swan, proper, as relative to their barony Lochnell, i.e. the Swan's Loch. Plate of Achievements.

Archibald Campbell of Auchtenny, brother-german to the above Sir Duncan, carries as his brother, with a crescent in the centre, for his difference, and crest the same; with the motto, Audaces fero. As in Plate of Achievements.

Mr Archibald Campbell, Writer to the Signet, grandson of Captain John Campbell, a younger son of Sir John Campbell of Calder, carries four coats, quarterly, first or, a bart's head embossed sable, attired gules, for Calder of that ilk; second gironné of eight pieces, or and sable, for Campbell; third argent, a galley with her oars in action sable, for Lorn; fourth or, on a fesse azure, three buckles of the first, all within a bordure ingrailed gules; crest, a swan, proper, crowned or: motto, Be ever mindful. L. R. and Plate of Achievements. And there.

Colin Campbell, Esq. a younger brother of the above Mr Archibald, carries as he, but for his difference charges the bordure with eight crescents argent; crest, a swan crowned, proper, and above, on an escrol, the word Memento; and below the shield, Deus dabit uela, as relative to the galley.

Robert Campbell, Merchant in Stockholm, son by a third marriage of Walter Campbell of Skipnish, and his wife Anne Stewart, father's sister to the deceased James Earl of Bute, carries the paternal coat of Campbell, within a bordure chequy, argent and azure, for Stewart of Bute, and charged with eight crescents argent, for his difference; crest, a dove with an olive branch in his bill, proper: motto, Gaudium affer. See Plate of Achievements.

The Lords of the Isles carried for arms, or, an eagle displayed gules, surmounted with a galley sable. The eldest sons of the kings of Scotland, says Workman, quartered the same with the arms of Scotland; but I have not met with them so but in his book.

The McDonals, Melean's, and McNeils, in one of the quarters of their arms, have a galley, or lymphad, with her sails furled up, and oars erect in saltier. The MePherson's have the like.

The ship, or lymphad, is the armorial figure of the MePherson's, and the cat their crest, the badge of the Catti, of which before, page 254, who have been considered as the stock of the Clanchattan in the Highlands by several writers, though there be other families in the kingdom, for quality, far more considerable, as the noble families of the Keiths and Sutherlands: All which are said to be originally from the Catti in Germany, who were forced by Tiberius Caesar to leave their own country, and seek for another. Who having embarked for Britain, were driven by stress of weather to the north of Scotland, where they landed in a country called after them Caithness, that is, the Catti's Corner. Afterwards they spread southwards to the country now called Sutherland, to which they gave the name Cattow, from their own, and the inhabitants were called South Catti, as Mr Blaeu the geographer, page 128, says, "Provincia haec olim proprio Cattei vocata est, incoœ Catteign: Sutherlandia vox recentior est." But more of this by Mr Brand in his Description of Caithness.

The Catti, or Clanchattan, continued several ages in both these countries; some of them joined with the Picts, and some with the Scots, of whom were the progenitors of the Keiths and Sutherlands. The others, after the decisive battle given to the Picts, by Kenneth II. King of Scots, were forced to leave their country Caithness but, by mediation of their friends, got liberty to settle themselves in Lochaber, where they continued a long time, being called the Clanchattan, as by a manuscript of the family, from the tradition of the Highland senachies and bard: Which likewise tell us, that in the reign of Malcolm IV. one Muriacli, who was parson of the kirk of Kinguissie in Badenoch, after the death of his elder brother, head of the clan, dying without issue-male, was called by the whole clan and family to be their head: He married a daughter of the Thane of Calder, and with her had several sons, Gillicattan, his eldest, and Ewen Bane, the second: Gilliattan succeeded his father, and had a son called Dougal Dawel, who had but one daughter, married to M'Intosh, head of his clan, who got with her several lands in Lochaber, and a command of part of the people, for which he was called Captain of the Clanchattan: But Ewen Bane, second son of Muriacli, after the death of his elder brother and his son, was owned as chief of the family by the whole clan. He had three sons, Kenneth, John, and Gillies.

From Kenneth, the eldest, is come the family of Clunie, which was then and since known by the name of M'Ewen. Of John is come the family of Pitmean; and of Gillies, the third son, is come the family of Invereshie.

After M'Intosh had married the heiress, as above, and gotten possession of the estate, Clunie's predecessors, and others of the Clanchattan, left Lochaber, and got lands in Badenoch, for their special services to King Robert the Bruce; and, for killing Cumin Lord of Badenoch, they had these lands confirmed to them by King David II. They were then called Clan-Muriach, from their chief Muriach, and sometimes Clan-Pherson, from his ecclesiastical office, as parson of Kinguissie, from which the surname of M'Pherson. For more of the Clanchattan, see the great Historical, Geographical, and Genealogical Dictionary, second edition, second volume, by Jeremy Collier.

M'Pherson of Clunie, chief of the name, carries parted per fesse, or and azure, a lymphad, or galley, with her sails trussed up, her oars in action in the first, in the dexter chief point a hand coupled grasping a dagger, point upwards, gules, (for killing the Cumin) and in the sinister chief point a cross croislet hitched of the last; crest, a cat sejant, proper: motto, Touch not the cat, but the glove. L. R.

The family has been in use to have their arms supported with two Highlandmen, with steel helmets on their heads, and cut out short doublets azure, thighs bare, their shirt tied between them, and round targets on their arms, being the dress wherein those of this clan were wont to fight in many battles for the crown, being always loyal.

M'Pherson of Pitmean, (as in the Lyon Register) descended of a second son of Clunie, carries parted per fesse invected, or and azure, a lymphad, or galley, with her sails furled up, oars in action; in the dexter chief point a hand-couped fesseways, holding a dagger pale-ways, and in the sinister chief point a cross croislet hitched, all gules; crest, a cat sejant, proper: motto, Touch not the cat, but a glove. And in the same Register,

M'Pherson of Invereshie, descended of a third son of Clunie, carries as Clunie, within a bordure gules; crest and motto the same: Of late represented by Sir James M'Pherson, advocate, a man of bright parts, and a favourite of King James VII. He has issue a son named JAMES, and a daughter, married to Sir John M'Lean of that ilk, baronet, father and mother of the present

Sir Hector M'Lean, chief of the M'Leans, an ancient, loyal, potent clan, in the Highlands of Scotland, of which there have been very brave men. The achievement of the family of M'Lean, as illustrated in the Book of James Esplin, Marchmont Herald, 1672, has four coats, quarterly, first argent, a rock gules; second argent, a dexter hand fesse-ways couped gules, holding a cross croislet hitched in pale azure; third or, a lymphad sable; fourth argent, a salmon naiant, proper, and in chief, two eagles' heads erased affronté gules; crest, a tower embattled argent: motto, Virtue mine honoür. Which achievement is represented standing on a compartment, representing green land and sea. Out of the last issue two seelches, proper, for supporters.

In the same book are illustrated the arms of M'Naun, designed of that ilk, or Bara, another ancient Highland family; being also quarterly, and almost the same with the former, except the first quarter, viz. azure, a lion rampant argent; second or, a right hand fesseways couped gules, holding a cross creslet fitchet azure in pale; third or, a lymphad sable; fourth parted per fesse, argent and azure, to represent the sea, out of which issue a rock gules; crest, a rock gules; supporters, two fishes like salmon.

Lauchlan M'Neil of Fearfegus, descended of the family of M'Neil of Geigh, bears three coats, quarterly, first azure, a lion rampant argent; second argent, a sinister hand couped fesseways in chief, and in base waved azure, a salmon naissant of the first; third or, a galley, her oars crossing other gules; and on a chief of the last, three mullets of the first. Lyon Register. And there,

Archibald M'Lauchlan of that ilk, bears four coats, quarterly, first or, a lion rampant gules; second argent, a dexter hand couped fesseways, holding a cross-patte pale-ways gules; third or, a galley, her oars in saltier sable, placed in the sea, proper; fourth argent, in the base undé verti, a salmon naissant, proper; supporters, two roebucks, proper: motto, Fortis & fidus.

The name of Gillespie, or Gillespie, as descended of the Clanchattan, carries the same with M'Pherson, as in Workman's MS.

The name of Bad, quarterly, first and fourth azure, a galley argent; second and third or, a crescent sable. P. MS.

The name of Craik, azure, a ship or, under sails argent. P. MS.

Jameson, azure, a saltier or, cantoned with four ships under sail argent. P. MS.

The name of Gelly, argent, an ark in the waters, proper, surmounted of a dove azure, bearing in her beak an olive branch vert; crest, a man trampling on a serpent, proper: motto, Divina robere. By Alexander Gelly of Blackford. N. R.

David Gilles, alias M'Pherson, descended of the family of M'Pherson of Invereslie, parted per fesse ingrailed, or and azure, a lymphad, or galley, of the first, betwixt a hand couped fesseways, holding a dagger in pale, and in the sinister canton a cross creslet fitchet, all within a bordure gules; crest, a cat courant, proper: motto, Touch not the cat, but a glove. L. R.

The town of Leith, the suburb and sea-port of Edinburgh, has for arms a ship, as on the seal of the town of Edinburgh, which I have seen affixed to charters and other deeds relating to Leith. On the seal is a shield, with the castle of Edinburgh, accollé, with another of the arms of Leith, having a ship with her sails trussed up, and the legend round both shields, Sigill. Burgi de Edinburgo, & ville sue de Leith.

Nantz and Rochelle, maritime towns in France, carry ships for their armorial figures.

The arms of the city of Paris, in France, are gules, a ship equippt in full sail argent, a chief coust azure, cimé of flower-de-luces or. Some allege that it carries a ship, because the Argonauts founded that city; but others, as Menestrier, tell us, it carries the ship, because the isle, or land upon which the city is built, by its form, represents a ship.

The furniture of ships are also used in arms, especially the anchor, sails, and rudders.

The dame of Fairholm, with us, as equivocally relative to the name, carries or, an anchor gules.

CHAP. IX.

OF ARTIFICIAL THINGS OR CHARGES, AS THEY RELATE TO CIVIL LIFE, IN TEMPORAL AND ECCLESIASTIC AFFAIRS.

I am not here to speak of them as marks of sovereignty, high offices, and the several degrees of high nobility, till I come to treat of the exterior ornaments which adorn the outer parts of the shield. But here I am to consider them as armorial figures within the shield, which form and constitute arms, as tессeras of descent, and ensigns of dominions, territories, and offices; to distinguish one kingdom from another, one society from another, and one family from another; and some of them as honourable additaments to their paternal bearings. Of these, both temporal and ecclesiastical, I shall mention here, and exemplify by armorial bearings; such as crown, ancient and modern, the imperial, regal, ducal, and earldom, the archiepiscopal-pall, mitres, crosses, and keys.

In this consideration, they have no more eminency than the former figures we have been treating about. And first, crowns within the shield, are no more marks of sovereignty and dignity, than lions, horses, mullets, or buckles, or other armorial figures.

The old Lords and Earls of Garioch carried, for arms, or, a fesse chequy, azure and argent, between three antique crowns, (i.e. open ones with points) gules.

David Earl of Huntingdon, younger son of Prince Henry, eldest son of King David I., was, by his brother King Malcolm IV. honoured with the title of Earl of Garioch, which afterwards he resigned in the hands of his brother King William, for the earldom which he did not keep long.

Henry de Brecbin, so designed from the place of his birth, natural son of King William, was, by King Alexander II. made Earl of Garioch, and was succeeded in that dignity by his son Walden, who died at Dunfermline without issue; as the chartulary of that abbacy says, "Waldenus Comes de Garrioch, juvenis egregius obit sine prole, & omnia sua bona devenerunt ad Alexandrum consanguinem."

Alexander III. bestowed Garioch on William Cumin, as also the earldom of Marr; and after the forfeiture of the Cumins, these earldoms returned to the crown.

King Robert the Bruce reposed Grant Mar, whose daughter, Isabel, he had married, unto the earldom of Marr, and gave him the lordship of Garioch, with its regality; after this, Garioch is always called a lordship.

I have not met with the arms of Garioch carried by any of the abovementioned earls and lords, till Alexander Stewart, natural son of Alexander Stewart of Badenoch, Earl of Buchan, fourth son of King Robert II. who married Lady Isabel Douglas, Countess and heiress of Marr; in her right he was Earl of Marr and Lord Garioch, who carried, quarterly, first and fourth Garioch, or, a fesse chequy, azure and argent, between three ducal crowns gules; second and third Marr, azure, a bend betwixt six cross croslets fitchet or. He died without issue, anno 1436.

The earldom afterwards fell into the king's hands, and King James II. bestowed the earldom of Marr, and lordship of Garrioch, upon his younger son John Earl of Marr, who carried the arms of these dignities, as I just now blazoned.

The armorial figures of the kingdom of Sweden are three antique crowns of gold, in a field azure. It is generally told, that these three crowns were assumed to show the ancient alliance and union of three kingdoms, Sweden, Denmark, and Norway.

The city of Cologne carries argent, on a chief gules, three crowns or; upon account, they say, that the bodies of the three kings, or wise men, that came from the East, to adore our Saviour at his birth, are interred there.

The country of Murcia, in Spain, azure, six ducal crowns or, 3, 2 and 1. They are said to be carried to represent and perpetuate as many victories obtained in that country by the Christians over the Moors.

Menestrier tells us, that crowns, as armorial figures or charges in a shield, are not then to be taken for marks of dignity, but as rewards of valour and good counsel, with which great men were annually honoured; and with these their armorial figures were adorned, as the Douglases enlign the heart on their arms, and others crown their lions, as the McDowalls, of whom before.

I shall here add the blazon of another gentleman of that name, viz.

McDowall, in the Island of St Christopher, brother-german to Garthland, who carries the same arms as his brother, with a suitable difference.

The name of Grant carries gules, three antique crowns or.

One Vanbassan, a Dane, by his MS. in the Lawyers' Library, brings the first of this name from Norway to Scotland; and Sir George Mackenzie, by his MS. brings them from England, upon Hallinshead's mentioning one of the name of Grant of old, a repairer of the University of Cambridge. There are yet of that name in England, but by their arms they appear not to be the same stock of. people with the Grants in Scotland; for they carry argent, three lions rampant, and a chief azure. Art. Her.

Others are of the opinion, that the Grants are of the same stock of people with the Bissets, of Lovat, who carried also crowns for their armorial figures; and by an evident granted by Bisset of Lovat to the Bishop of Murray, 1258, in which is mentioned Dominus Laurentius Grant, and Robertus Grant, friends to the same Bisset. However, the family of Grant is both ancient and powerful.

In anno 1320, Dominus Laurentius Grant is sheriff of Inverness, and Michael Grant is one of the barons who attended Marr Earl of Marri, while the King’s lieutenant in the North.

The principal family of the name is Grant of that Ilk, sometimes designed of Freuchie.

John Grant of Freuchie obtains a charter of confirmation of that barony from King James IV. holding it of his Majesty for military services, as by the charter in the Earl of Haddington’s Collections, page 581, by which it is evident he was the head of a potent clan, and following, by the reddendo of the charter, viz. Unam laniceam suffatum, which is explained by the following words of the charter, viz. Tres sufficienites equestres pro quibusdam decem libraris terrarum baronice pre dictae, tempore guerre, extra regnum, una eum omnibus defensalius personis, dietas terras & baroniam inhabitantibus, ad nostrum & successorum nostrorum mandatum, tempore convocationis ligerum nostrorum, infra praefatum nostrum regnum.

From this John is lineally descended the present —— Grant of Freuchie, of that Ilk, whose achievement is gules, three antique crowns or; crest, a burning hill, proper; supporters, two savages, (or naked men) proper: motto, Stant sure. N. R.

John Grant of Ballendallach, descended of the family of Grant, carries gules, a boat’s head couped, between three antique crowns or; crest, an oak tree growing out of the wreath, proper: motto, Suis ex robusta firmans. Ibid.

Sir Francis Grant of Cullen, Baronet, one of the Senators of the College of Justice, carries gules, three antique crowns or, as descended from Grant of that Ilk, within a bordure ermine, in quality of a judge; supported with two angels, proper; crest, a book expanded; motto, on an escrol above, Sume cuique; and on a compartment below, Jebronab-jireb, as by a special warrant under his Majesty’s hand, the 17th day of May 1725.

John Grant of Corminy, descended of the family of Grant, bears as Grant, within a bordure chequéd, or and gules; crest, a demi-savage, proper: motto, I’ll stand sure. N. R.

John Grant of Dalry desended of Ballendallach, carries Ballendallach’s arms, within a bordure or; crest, a dexter hand holding a branch of oak, proper: motto, Radicem firmans frondes. Ibid.

Grant of Gartenbég, descended of Grant of that Ilk, carries Grant, within a bordure ingrailed or; crest, the trunk of an oak tree sprouting out some leaves, with the sun shining thereon, all proper: motto, Te seteante vinebo. Ibid.

John Grant of Carron, descended of Freuchie, gules, a dove argent, holding in her beak an olive branch vert, betwixt three antique crowns or; and, for crest, an adder nuied, with her head erect, proper: motto, Wise and harmless. Ibid.

James Grant of Auchernick, descended of the family of Grant, gules, a star betwixt three antique crowns or; crest, a burning hill, proper: motto, Stant sure. Ibid.

The ensign of the Episcopal See of Ely, in England, gules, three ducal crowns, 2 and 1 or; and that of the See of Bristol, three ducal crowns in pale or.

The imperial mond, or globe, though an ensign of sovereignty, as well as the imperial crown, is carried as an armorial distinguishing figure by Lamont, or Lamond, of that Ilk, as relative to the name, being of old in a field azure: But more frequently the family has been in use to carry a white lion rampant (in place of the mond) in a field azure; crest, a hand couped at the wrist, proper: motto, Ne percutas nec spernas. (New Register.) Though this family is said to be of old with us, and originally from Ireland.
OF ARTIFICIAL THINGS.

Bourdon of Feddel, in Perthshire, as descended of Lamont, azure, a mond or, crossed gules, between two burden-staves (i. e. battle-axes) pale-ways, proper; and for crest, a lion rampant argent, holding a battle-axe, proper.

By a letter under the subscription of Lamont of that Ilk, of the date the 4th of November 1699, given in to the Herald-Offices by James Bourdon of Feddel, as descended of a younger son of Lamont, in the reign of King Robert III. His arms, as before blazoned, are matriculated.

The name of Bourdon is much older than the reign of Robert III. for I find William de Bourdon a witness in a charter of King Alexander III. to Hugh Abernethy, and in several other charters as old. But whether the Bourdons I am speaking of be of those old Bourdons I know not.

There are of this name also in England, who carry hautboy, or flutes, for their armorial figures, as in Guillem and Morgan’s Heraldry.

As for sceptres and battons, carried in a shield of arms, I shall add these examples, viz.

The Keiths Earls of Kintore, carry in one quarter of their arms, two sceptres in saltier, as a coat of augmentation, of which before, page 72.

Sir John Ayton of Kippo, Gentleman-Usher of the Black Rod in England, added to his arms, by allowance, the badge of his office, being a black batton, ensigned on the top with one of the Lions of England, of which before, page 123.

Sir Thomas Brand, Gentleman-Usher of the Green Rod, of the most ancient Order of the Thistle, or St Andrew in Scotland, Gentleman-Usher daily Waiter to his Majesty, by patent, carries, quarterly, first and fourth azure, two battons (or rods) or, ensigned on the top with the Unicorns of Scotland, as the badge of his office; second and third or, on a bend sable, three maces in argent, and a chief azure, charged with as many stars of the third, for his paternal coat; and over all, by way of an escutcheon, gironné of eight, ermine and gules, within a bordure in-grailed of the last, for Campbell of Lundie, whose daughter he married; crest, a vol, with the batton of the office erected in pale: motto, Advance. And places round his arms, the chain of gold, with the badge of the Order pendent, which he commonly wears; and, behind the shield, two battons in saltier, to show he is actually in post, as in Plate of Achievements. But to proceed to marks of ecclesiastical offices.

The archiepiscopal pall, mitres, croissers, crosses, and keys, which are all marks of ecclesiastical authority, are frequent in arms, and especially in these of the episcopal sees in England.

The Archiepiscopal See of Canterbury, azure, a pastoral staff in pale argent, topped with a cross patee or, surmounted of an archiepiscopal pall of the second, edged and fringed of the third, and charged with four crosses fitted sable, as Plate XI. fig. 25.

The See of Chester, gules, three mitres with their labels or.

The See of Carlisle, argent, on a cross sable, a mitre or.

The Archiepiscopal See of York, gules, two keys adosé in saltier argent, and in chief, an imperial crown.

The See of Landaff, sable, two croissers in saltier argent, on a chief azure, three mitres with labels of the second, as Plate XI. fig. 24.

The See of Peterborough, gules, two keys in saltier, cantonied with four croislets botté, fitché or.

The See of St Asaph, sable, two keys in saltier adosé argent.

The See of Gloucester carries the same with St Asaph, but the field is azure.

The See of Exeter, gules, a sword in pale argent, hilted and pommelled or, surmounted of two keys in saltier adosé of the last.

The See of Winchester, gules, a sword in bend-sinister argent, the hilt downward or, interposed between two keys indorsed in bend-dexter, the uppermost argent, and the other or.

All these blazons are to be found in Mr Dale Pursuivant’s Catalogue of the Nobility of England.

The County of Underwald, a Swiss canton, coupé, argent and azure, two keys in pale adosé, and counter-changed of the same.
Mitres, crosiers, crosses, and keys, have made up the arms of several churches, churchmen, and laics too, who have had a dependence on the church, or from their names relative thereto, as those of the name of Kirk, who, in our old and modern books of arms, carry gules, a bishop's crosier or, with a sword saltier-ways argent, and on a chief of the second, a thistle vert.

The last figure shows them to have been of a Scots extraction, and to have assumed the surname from the kirk, or church, probably upon account of some office belonging thereto.

Sir William Kirk is mentioned in the first book of Knox's History of the Reformation, (whom Petrie, in his Church History, Part II. page 172, says he was a priest) and that he was the first, amongst many others, whom Cardinal Beaton summoned before him, in the Abbey-Kirk of Holyroodhouse, anno 1534, because he favoured the Reformation; but King James V. being there present, and interrogating his authority, commanded Sir William to return to his former principles, to which he submissively acquiesced, and publicly burnt his bill.

He was brother to David Kirk, burgess of Edinburgh, whom the above John Knox, in his History, mentions to be slain, anno 1549, in Edinburgh, valiantly fighting with the Laird of Stenhouse, then provost thereof, who was defending the privileges of the town against the insults of some Frenchmen.

His son was Mr James Kirk, writer in Edinburgh, father of Mr John Kirk, writer there, whose son was Mr James Kirk, minister at Aberfoyl in Perthshire. He had seven sons; the eldest, Mr James, became minister at Balmaghie in Galloway, and his seventh and youngest son, Mr Robert Kirk, became minister at Aberfoyl 1633. He was a man of good parts; he translated King David's Psalms with great exactness into Scottish and Irish verse, which the Privy Council, upon examination, highly approved of, and ordained the same to be printed, anno 1683. He wrote also several other books handsomely: He died at Aberfoyl 14th of May 1692, being twice married, first to Isabel, daughter to Sir Colin Campbell of Monchaster, second son to Colin Campbell of Glenorchy, by whom he had Colin his eldest son: And by his second wife, a daughter of Campbell of Fardy, descended of the family of Lawers, he had Mr Robert Kirk, minister at Dornoch.

Mr Robert, the father, carried the above arms within a bordure indented argent; crest, a crozier and dagger saltier-ways: motto, Optimum quod primum; as now used by his eldest son Colin Kirk. Writer to the Signet, who married Jean, second daughter to George Stirling of Herbertshire, of whose arms before. See Plate of Achievements.

Some of this name with us carry, in place of the crozier and sword saltier-ways, gules, on a saltier argent, a thistle slipped vert, and, on a chief of the second, three cushions azure; crest, a church, proper: motto, Postis & Conamine, as by James Kirk, Merchant in Edinburgh. L. R.

There are several considerable families of the name of Kirk, in England, who carry other figures, as in Guillim's Display of Heraldry; by Sir John Kirk of Eastham in the county of Essex, descended from Sir David Kirk, who was Governor and proprietor of Newfoundland in America, carries parted per fesse, or and gules, a lozenge counter-changed, with a canton azure, thereon a lion supporting a cur, chained and collared argent; which canton was given as an augmentation to the said Sir David Kirk, and to Lewis Kirk, Governor of Canada, and to Captain Thomas Kirk, Vice-Admiral of the English Fleet, and to their descendants, for their good services done in encountering and vanquishing the French navy, and bringing the admiral prisoner to England, and for taking the said country of Canada, then belonging to the French, which was fortified by them; in which expedition the above Sir David took the governor, and brought him prisoner to England.

The surname of Gibson, with us, gules, three keys fesse-ways in pale, wards downward or.

The first of this name, says Sir George Mackenzie, in his Manuscript, was a churchman, who took keys to show he was such: The name afterwards was much raised and advanced by Mr George Gibson, first a Clerk of the Session, and after one of the Senators of the College of Justice, who purchased the lands of Durie in Fife, in the reign of King James VI.

His son and successor, Sir Alexander Gibson of Durie, carried the foresaid arms; and for crest, a pelican vulnerating herself; with the motto, Pandite coelestis porta.

Crosser, as I have said before, are the badges of devotion, and especially the portable ones, the cross croslets, which are very frequent to be seen in the hands of churchmen, represented on seals, and by the bearings of ancient families, of which I have given several instances before, and here mention again that of Cheyne, sometimes writ Cheyne, and Chien, old Barons of Innerugie, who had great possessions in Caithness; Duflus, and others, who carried gules, a bend between six cross croslets fitched argent.

From this family descended several very considerable families, as the Cheynes of Arnage, Esselmont, Straloch, Dundarg, Pitfitchie, &c.

The head of the family of Cheyne, was Lord Cheyne of Innerugie, which, in the reign of King Robert Bruce, failed in the heir-male, having only daughters; the eldest whereof was married to Sir Robert Keith, knight, Marischal of Scotland, one of the progenitors of the Earls Marischal: By her he got the estate of Innerugie, which the family have always possessed, and were sometime in use to quarter the arms of Cheyne with their own, as Mr Crawfurd observes in his History of the Peerage of Scotland.

The estate of Duflus went off with another daughter, married to another son of the Earl of Sutherland, as before, page 131.

The last of the family of Arnage was the learned Jacobus Cheyneus ab Arnage, who being Professor at Douay, did there publish his Mathematical and Philosophical Works.

A son of Cheyne of Innerugie married the heiress of Marshall of Esselmont, and with her got the lands of Esselmont, for which the family quartered the arms of Marshall with their own, of which before, page 129.

From this family is descended the eminent physician Dr George Cheyne, whose bearing is gules, a bend between six cross croslets fitché argent, within a bordure ermine; crest, a cross patee or: motto, Patentia vincit. L. R.

Cheyne of Straloch, carried the plain coat of Cheyne, as they stand on the House of Straloch, and Pont's Manuscripts; crest, a capuchin's cap: motto, Fecit Domus.

I shall conclude this chapter with a few other figures that are looked upon as marks of authority and offices.

Cushions are looked upon as marks of authority, and have been carried as armorial figures by ancient families abroad, and with us, as by the Randolphs Earls of Moray, and by the name of Johnston, of whom before.

Brisbane of Bishopton, an ancient and principal family of the name, sable, a chevron chequè, or and gules, between three cushions of the second; crest, a stork's head erased, holding in her beak a serpent waved, proper; and for motto, of old, Certamine summo; and of late, Dabit osea Deus. N. R.

Sir John Brisbane, sometime Judge-Advocate to the King's Navy, carries as Bishopton, within a bordure vair; crest, a serpent wreathed about an anchor in pale, proper: motto, Animum prudentia firmat. Ibid.

Matthew Brisbane, Doctor of Medicine, as Bishopton, within a bordure chequè, argent and sable; crest, a hillock semé of ants, proper: motto, Virtuti damnaeique. Ibid.

The name of Marjoribanks is said to be descended of the Johnstons, argent, on a chief gules, a cushion, between two spur-rowels of the first, as in Pont's MS. who gives to others of that name, argent, on a fesse gules, between three spur-rowels of the last, as many cushions of the first.

Thomas Marjoribanks of Balbardie, representor of Marjoribanks of that Ilk, argent, a mullet gules, on a chief sable, a cushion or; crest, a demi-griffin, proper: motto, Et custos & paginas. N. R.

Joseph Marjoribanks of Lochie, argent, on a chief gules, a cushion between two spur-rowels of the field; crest, a lion's paw grasping a lance in bend, proper: motto, Advance with courage. Ibid.
Cups are likewise used as armorial figures, and even from the office of butler to sovereigns; as by the Butlers Dukes of Ormond, of whom before, who have been in use to quarter their coat of office, azure, three cups or, with their paternal coat, or, a chief indented azure; the figures of the coat of office have descended to the branches of that family both in Scotland, England, and Ireland, as relative to the name.

Butler of Kirkland, in East-Lothian, parted per fesse ingralled, azure and gules, three covered cups, two in chief, and one in base or; crest, a cup without a cover or: motto, Supiener uti bonum.

Others of the name, with us, carried azure, a fesse ingralled argent, between three cups or. P. MS.

In England, Sir James Butler of Lincoln's-Inn, Knight, argent, on a chief sable, three covered cups or. And Butler of Hales, in Lancashire, the same. Art. Her.

In France, the name of Bouteillers of Senlis and Chantilly there, or, a cross gules, charged with five cups or.

The surname of Shaw, with us, carries also azure, three covered cups or.

These of this name, says Sir George Mackenzie, are descended of one Shaw, a second son of Duncan Earl of Fife, who took their father's name for a surname, of whom the principal family was Shaw of Sauchie, who carried as above.

John Shaw of Sauchie was Comptroller to King James III.; the lands of Greenock belonged to Sauchie, which one of his progenitors purchased, by marrying one of the co-heirs of Galbraith of Greenock, in the reign of Robert III. Which lands continued in the family of Sauchie till the reign of King James V. that Alexander Shaw of Sauchie gave the lands of Greenock, in patrimony, to John Shaw his eldest son, by his second wife, Elizabeth, daughter of William Cunningham of Glengarnock. The family of Sauchie, through failure of succession, fell into Greenock, who is now lineal representative, and chief of the name.

Sir John Shaw of Greenock, Baronet, azure, three covered cups or; supporters, two savages wreathed about the middle with laurel, proper; crest, a demi-savage: motto, I mean well.

Shaw of Bargaran, in Renfrewshire, azure, a fesse chequé, argent and gules, between three covered cups or.

John Shaw of Sornbeg, azure, three mullets in fesse, between as many covered cups argent. N. R.

The name of Carricote of that Ilk, azure, on a bend or, between three covered cups of the last, as many boars' heads erased gules. Others of that name, says Pont, gave argent, on a bend between two mullets gules, three crescents of the first.

M'Ilvain of Grinet, gules, two cups covered or, in the middle chief point a star argent.

Laurie of Maxwelton, sable, a cup argent, with a garland between two laurel branches, all issuing out of the same, vert. Mackenzie's Heraldry.

Francis Lawrie of Plainstones, sometime Bailie of Portsburgh, parted per fesse, gules and sable, a cup argent, with a garland issuing out of the top, between two laurel branches vert; crest, a trunk of an oak sprouting out, proper: motto, Repullat. N. R.

Edmund Warcup of Northmore, in Oxfordshire, sable, three covered cups argent, as relative to the name.

Hunting-born are commonly represented semicircular, and called bugles, by the Latins, bucine incurevo; and when straight, bucine porrecta: The last are very frequent with the Germans.

Hunting-horns, or bugles, are ordinarily hung by strappings; which, if of a different tincture from the bugle, are then said to be bendressed, by the old heralds, because worn over the shoulder by way of a bend: The modern heralds say stringed of such a tincture, and the French say, liez. Hunting-horns have sometimes their mouth-pieces, and rings, of a different tincture from the body of the horn; for which the French say, enguiché and virolé of such tinctures. We say, garnished of such a tincture.
The surname of Forrester is from the office of keeper of the king's forests, as appears by their armorial figures, hunting-horns, called bugles.

There was an ancient family of this name, designed of Renton, in the Merse, who carried argent, three hunting-horns (or bugles) sable, stringed gules; which family long since ended in an heiress, who was married to Elin of Eliburn, and again passed from them, with another heiress of Eliburn, to the Homes. The Homes of Renton quarter their arms with their own, as before.

The principal family of the name of Forrester is that of the Lord Forrester, descended of the Forrester of Corstorphine. I have seen the transcript of a charter of Archibald Earl of Douglas, Lord of Galloway, to Sir Adam Forrester of Corstorphone, of the lands of Clerkington, now called Nicolson, of the date the 24th of February 1401.

King Robert III. gives a charter of annuity of ten marks Sterling to Sir Adam Forrester, out of the customs of Edinburgh; to which grant, John Stewart of But, the king's natural brother, is a witness, dated the 5th of February 1404, for which see Mr Crawford's History of Renfrew.

Sir John Forrester of Corstorphine, Chamberlain of Scotland, obtains a new charter from King James I. the 4th of February, proceeding upon his own resignation, erecting the lands of Drylaw, Nether-Libberton, Clerkington; and Meadowfield, into a barony, to be holden of the king for payment of a penny. He got also from that king another charter of confirmation of the lands and village of Corstorphine, to himself, and his son John Forrester, and his heirs-male; which failing, to his other son Henry; and failing of him, to another son James; and last of all, to his uncle Thomas Forrester and his heirs-male, dated at Perth the 4th of February 1430. He was succeeded by Archibald Forrester of Corstorphine. I have seen his seal of arms appended to an alienation and resignation of all his lands, in favour of his son Alexander Forrester, in the year 1482. On the which seal was a shield couché, charged with three hunting-horns stringed, supported by two dogs, and a dog's head for crest. This Alexander made an assignation of all his lands in favour of his cousin James Forrester of Meadowflat, and his heirs-male, in the year 1587, and the year after James is infeft in the lands of Corstorphine, and others; and he was succeeded by Sir George Forrester, who was created a lord of Parliament, by the title of Lord Forrester, the 20th of November 1633. He had only three daughters, one of them was married to James Baillie of Torwoodhead, son to Lieutenant-General William Baillie, in whose favour the Lord Forrester resigned the honour. But he having no issue, the honour, by virtue of the entail, came to his brother William Baillie, who married also another daughter, Lilias, of George Lord Forrester; by whom he had William Lord Forrester, father to the present George Lord Forrester: Whose arms are argent, a fesse gules, between three hunting-horns sable, garnished of the second, supported on the dexter by a hound, proper, and on the sinister by a grey-hound argent; and, for crest, a hunting-horn; with the motto, Blow Hunter thy born.

Forrester of Carden, in Stirlingshire, argent, three hunting-horns sable, garnished gules. This family is now extinct; a son of which married the heiress of Strathhearnies of that ilk, about the year 1496, which continued in the name of Forrester till King Charles II.'s reign, that a younger son of Kirkness married the heiress, and got the estate, and his son John Douglas is the present possessor.

Alexander Forrester, descended of the family of Carden, argent, a pellet (i. e. torteaux de sable) between three hunting-horns sable; crest, a dexter hand holding a hunting-horn, proper: motto, It's good to be laun. N. R.

David Forrester of Denoven, descended of Carden, as Carden, and, for difference, a crescent surmounted of another. Ibid.

Sir Andrew Forrester, Under-Secretary of State in the reigns of Charles II. and James VII. argent, a chevron between three bugles sable, garnished gules; crest, a lily growing through, and surmounting, a bush of thorns, proper: motto, Spernit periculo virtus. Ibid.

George Forrester, sometime Dean of Guild of Dundee, argent, a beagle (or ratch-hound) between three hunting-horns sable; crest, a grey-hound with a leash, proper: motto, Recreation. Ibid.
OF ARTIFICIAL THINGS.

The name of Mascrop, of which there are several in Teviotdale, or, a hunting-horn vert, stringed gules, and on a chief azure, three mullets of the first.

I have seen the seal of arms of Patrick Mascrop of Jedburgh, appended to a deed of his, in the year 1597, on which seal was a shield charged with a hunting-horn, and on a chief, a crescent and a mullet.

Penncook of that ilk, argent, a bend azure, between three hunting-horns sable, stringed gules; (P. MS.) crest, a man winding a horn: motto, "Free for a blast.

Alexander Penncook of Newhall, or, a fesse, between three hunting-horns sable, garnished and stringed gules; crest, a stag lodged under an oak tree, proper: motto, "Ut resurgam." N. R.

The surname of Semple carries a chevron chequé, accompanied with hunting-horns.

The principal family was Semple of Elliotston, in the shire of Renfrew, where they had great possessions and offices, as seneschals and bailiffs, under the illustrious family of the Stewart, proprietors of that country, before they came to the crown: Upon which account, they carry the chevron chequé, as many other families have done, as I observed before, in imitation of the chequé figure of the Stewarts, their patrons and overlords.

Robert Semple was steward of the barony of Renfrew, and is a witness in a charter of James High Steward of Scotland, grandfather of King Robert II. the first of the Stewarts, in whose reign the barons of Elliotston were eminent, and sheriffs of Renfrew. Of them was lineally descended Sir Thomas Semple, father of Sir John Semple of Elliotston, who, by King James IV. in the first year of his reign, was created a baron of Parliament, by the title of Lord Semple: Of whom was lineally descended Francis Lord Semple, who dying without issue, his eldest sister, Anne, succeeded into the dignity, and was married to Francis Abercomby of Fitternier, who was dignified with the title of Lord Glassford, by King James VII. She bore Francis, now Lord Semple, who succeeded his mother, and carries, as his predecessors the Lords Semple, argent, a chevron chequé gules, and of the first, accompanied with three bugles sable, garnished of the second, supported by two mastiff-hounds sable, collared gules; crest, a stag's head, proper, attired argent: motto, "Keep triste.

Francis Semple of Belltrees, descended of the family of Semple, carries as Semple, with a gillyflower for his difference. N. R.

James Semple, Merchant in Stockholm in Sweden, son to John Semple of Cathcart, descended of the Lord Semple, carries as the Lord Semple, within a bordure gules, charged with eight crescents or; crest, a stag's head argent, attired azure, charged with a crescent gules: motto, "Diligentia & vigilantia." Ibid.

There are other goodly families of this name descended of the House of Semple, whose descents I cannot here mention, since their additional figures, marks of cadency, added to the principal bearing, are not to be found as they have used them in our records of blazon.

I shall here add the achievement of the ingenious Mr. George Crawford, author of the Peerage of Scotland, a younger son of Thomas Crawford of Cartsburn, or Crawsburn, who quarters the arms of Semple with those of his family, upon the account his mother, Jean Semple, being the heir of that branch of the Semples of Milbank and Burntshiel, descended of Andrew, master of Semple, in King James VI.'s time, carries by the approbation of the Lyon King at arms, viz. quarterly, first gules, a fesse ermine, (for Crawford of Kilbirny, of which his great-grandfather was a younger brother) and in base two swords saltier-ways, proper, hilted and pommelled or; which were given to his predecessor Captain Thomas Crawford of Jordanhill, by reason of his great valour and virtue, highly celebrated for his martial achievements, especially in that attempt in assaulting and winning with a few men the impregnable castle of Dumbarton, in the minority of King James VI.; second quarter, azure, a chevron betwixt three cross pattons or, for Barclay of Kilbirny; the heirs of which estate the Crawford married with in the reign of King James III.; the third quarter, argent, a chevron chequé gules, and of the first, accompanied with three bugles sable, garnished of the second, for Semple, as above; and the fourth quarter as the first; crest, a pair of balance on the point of a dagger pales-ways: motto, God shew the right. As in Plate of Achievements.

The name of Horn, in the Low-Countries of Germany, or, three hunting-horns sable; and the town of Horn there, argent, a hunting-horn sable, garnished gules, and stringed of the same.

Mr James Horn of Westerhall, Advocate, argent, a fesse waved and cottised azure, betwixt two unicorns' heads couped in chief, and a bugle in base gules, garnished of the first, and stringed of the third; crest, a bugle azure, garnished and stringed as the former: motto, Monitus munitus. N. R.

Beelingham, in England, argent, three bugles sable, stringed gules, and garnished or.

Since I am speaking of hunting-horns, I shall here mention the name of Balfour of Dovam, who, by their seals appended to charters in the reign of Robert III. had a chevron charged with an otter's head, and in base a bugle stringed.

The first of this family was Peter Balfour, a son of Balfour of that Ilk; he married Anna, daughter of Thomas Sibbald of Balgony, who gave to him, and his wife Ann, a charter of the lands of Dovam, in the reign of Robert III. and the family was designed of Dovam.

John Balfour of Lalethan, son and heir to Andrew Balfour of Dovam, gets a charter from Andrew Lundin of Balgony of the lands of Dovam, with the consent of Sir Robert Lundin and Elisabeth Sibbald his mother, as the charter bears, of the date the 3d of June 1499. This John Balfour married Isabel, daughter of John Lord Lindsay and Byres; his son and successor was David Balfour of Dovam, father of another David Balfour, who gets a charter of the lands of Lalethan to him and his son Martin, from Mr William Lundin of that Ilk, in the year 1576.

Martin Balfour was retoured heir to his grandfather David Balfour, in the lands of Dovam and Lalethan, in the year 1596. He married Janet Balfour, a daughter of Balfour of Ballo.

Their son, George Balfour, purchased the lands of Balbirn; and by his wife, Anne, a daughter of Sir Michael Arnot of that Ilk, he had Robert Balfour, who married Elizabeth, eldest daughter to Sir John Preston of that Ilk. Their son and heir is the present

George Balfour of Balbirn; he married Agnes, only daughter to Robert Lumisden of Stravithy, son to Sir James Lumisden of Innergelly, and with her has issue: Their eldest son is Robert Balfour, 1sr of Balbirn.

This family, when designed of Lalethan, carried sable, on a chevron argent, betwixt three roses of the second, an otter's head erased of the first. Which blazon, Sir James Balfour says, in his MS. he confirmed in the year 1638: And since, anno 1664, Balfour of Balbirn's arms are registrate by Sir Charles Areskine, Lyon King at Arms, being argent, on a chevron ingrailed, between three mullets sable, a selch's head erased of the first; crest, a palm tree, proper: motto, Virtus ad athera tendit. But the family have resumed their ancient bearings, with the crest and motto, as in Plate of Achievements.

OF ARTIFICIAL THINGS OR CHARGES, AS THEY RELATE TO PROFESSIONS LIBERAL AND MECHANICAL.

HAVING treated of the kinds and species of armorial figures, with their attributes, I come now to the last sort of them, which relate to sciences and arts, which seem not to be so honourable as others that have their rise from military and civil virtue, dignities, and honourable offices: Nor can their use in armories be supposed to be so ancient as the former, but as marks of a later, or new nobility, arising from such professions, which were not numbered among the noble ones of old.

These figures are not so frequent with us, as in other nations, because our nobility is ancient, and its rise military; yet I cannot but say that some of these mechanical figures I am to speak of, are of ancient use, and, when relative to the names of the bearers, are of good esteem, as all canting arms are throughout Europe, which are even commended by the nice Marcus Gilbertus de Warrennius, a French writer of no small esteem; but he mightily discommends arms composed of the letters of the alphabet, upon the account, says he, that these are made use of by merchants and tradesmen, as their marks on their bundles and packs of manufactory goods, in oval and quadrangular cartouches, and to whom it is not allowed, by the laws of all well governed nations, to place such in formal shields.

5 P

With submission to this author, not only the Hebrew, Greek, and Roman characters have been used, on the ensigns and arms of the ancients singly, interlaced with others, and also joined in composing words and sentences; and besides, have been carried in arms for their mystical and symbolical significations, and for being the initial letters of the names of the bearers.

The letter A, with the Romans, was the mark of absolusion, and carried as a token of honour and innocence.

A is carried in the arms of the family of Althamn, in Germany, as the initial letter of their name, thus, gules, on a fesse argent, the letter A of the first. Morgan's Heraldry.

The Greek A delta was the symbol of perfect amity, and H in the Hebrew mysteries was the emblem of generation, brought from the Almighty's adding that letter to the names of Ewah and Abraham, when he was pleased to tell them, "That she should be the mother of mankind, and he the father of many nations."

The Messinians carried on their ensigns the capital letter M, the initial one of their name.

Upon the same account, the Zionians carried the letter Z, and the Lacedemonians the letter L, and Francis I. King of France, placed the Greek letter s phi on his seals and coins, upon the account that he rectified the Greek alphabet, as Menestrier tells us.

Byzantium, now Constantinople, had on its ensigns the Greek B, beta; and the City of Rome has its old device for its arms, thus, gules, S, P, Q, R, (which stands for, Senatus Populusque Romanus) in bend, between two cottises or.

The Republic of Lucca, as a trophy of her preserved liberty, carries azure, the word Libertas, in bend, between two cottises or.

Many honourable families have letters in their arms.

Sigismund, King of Poland, charged the breast of his eagle with a capital S.

Sigismund Banvix, Prince of Transylvania, carried over his arms, by way of surtout, the imperial eagle, and charged the right wing with the letter R, and the left with the letter A, to point out that that bird was Regina Aevium, i. e. Queen of Birds.

Many religious societies of the Church of Rome have their arms composed of the letters of the holy name of Jesus, and sometimes cyphered with the letters M, for St Mary his mother.

The congregation of the Benedictines in Italy have the word Pax; the Minorites, the word Charitas; and the Servites, the letters S and M, interlaced, which signify Servi Marie, for their armorial figures.

The Turks and Moors being forbid by their religion the use of images, and figures of living creatures, place letters on their ensigns.

The Spaniards, who had long wars with the Moors in Spain, have been in use to place letters and words on their armorial ensigns, as the families of Vega and Andrida, in Spain, place the words Ave Maria, orle-ways, round their arms.

Several families in England have letters in their arms; for which see Morgan and Guilm's Display of Heraldry: With us I have found no such practice by our nobility.

Books are frequently carried in the ensigns of universities, colleges, cities, and by some families: When they are represented open, the English say, expanded, and, when closed, clasped; as Morgan, who tells us, the one implies manifestation, and the other council.

The Republic of Venice carries in its arms a book expanded; of which before.

The University of Oxford, azure, a book open, with seven seals or; and, on the leaves, the words, Sapientia, Felicitas, between three crowns or.
The University of Cambridge, gules, on a cross ermine, between two lions passant gardant or; a book shut, and clasped of the field, and garnished or.

Writing pens are carried with us by the name of Gilmour.

Sir Alexander Gilmour of Craigmillar, Baronet, azure, three writing pens paleways, full-feathered argent; crest, a dexter hand holding a scroll of papers, within a garland of laurel, proper: motto, Nil penna, sed uus; to show their rise was from being writers and clerks. N. R.

There is a figure with the English, which they call mauneh, that is, as I take it, an old-fashioned sleeve of a garment, which Mr Gibbon latinus thus, manica antiquae formas.

Menestrier tells us of a very ancient Manuscript of Blazons, which is kept in the college of the English Benedictines at Douay, and it seems to be the ancientest piece of that kind in Britain, having the arms of many of the captains that came over with William the Conqueror, writ and illuminated in his time by the monks of Ely. Among these captains there is one Hastings, as Menestrier observes, who carried then, or, à la manche mal taille de gueules; which figure these of the name of Hastings in England carry, but in a different tincture. Plate II. fig. 25.

The most eminence of the name was Baron Hastings, in the reign of King Edward IV. who, by a writ of summons to Parliament, 15th of November 1482, sat as a peer.

One of his successors was made Earl of Huntingdon, by King Henry VIII. from whom is descended Throphiulus Hastings, the present Earl of Huntingdon, Baron Hastings of Hungerford, who carries as his predecessors, for his paternal arms, argent, a maunch sable, quartered with other coats of alliance, as in Guillim’s Display.

The name of Wharton, in England, carries also sable, a maunch argent; which name is from Wharton, a barony upon the river Eden in Westmoreland, where now the seat of the family is called Wharton-hall.

This family was advanced to the dignity of Lord Baron, in the person of Thomas Wharton, by writ of summons to Parliament, 30th January 1544, by King Henry VIII. He was then Governor of the town and castle of Carlisle, and Warden of the West-Marches: for defeating the discontented Scots, at Solway Moss, he got an augmentation added to his arms, viz. a bordure or, charged with eight couple of lions’ paws saltier-ways, erased gules. This family of late was dignified, in the year 1726, with the titles of Viscount Winchington, and Earl of Wharton.

Purses, or palmer-scrips, are carried with us, by the name of Spreul.

For the antiquity of the name, Walter Spreul Seneschallus de Dunwhartons, in the reign of King Robert I. obtained a charter of the lands of Dalquhern: And there is also, in the Register, a resignation made by another Walter Spreul, of the land of Cowden, in favours of Thomas Spreul his son and heir; which family continued in a lineal succession till the year 1622, that the lands of Cowden were sold: Of which family are descended several of that name, whose bearings are or, a fesse chequè, azure and argent, between three purses (or palmer-scrips) gules. Pont’s Manuscript.

The name of Bell with us carry, relative to their name, bells; as Bell of Kirkconnel,azure, three bells or. Ibid. Plate II. fig. 26.

James Bell of Provosthaugh, azure, a fesse between three bells or; crest, a roe feeding, proper: with the motto, Signum pacis amor. New Register.

The name of Porter, in England, sable, three bells argent.

When the tongue, or clapper, of a bell is of a different tincture, the French for it use the term bataillé, as in the blazon of the family of Bellegarde, azure, a bell argent, bataillé sable.

Grieson of Lag, in Annandale, as I observed before, carried a saltier, and chief, as arms of patronage of that country; but it seems they have been in use to carry other arms, as matriculated in our Lyon Register, gules, on a fesse or, between three quadrangular locks argent, a mullet azure, (some make them fetterlocks); crest, a lock as the former: motto, Hoc secunrior. And the same are in Sir George Mackenzie’s Heraldry, and so illuminated on the House of Falahall. Plate II. fig. 27.
Andrew Grierson, one of his Majesty's Heralds, argent, a fir tree growing out of the middle base vert, surmounted of a sword in bend, bearing up by the point an imperial crown, proper, (by which it seems he has been a McGregor, and changed his name to Grierson) placing the arms of McGregor within a bordure gules, charged with four quadrangular locks as the first; crest, a branch of fir, proper: motto, Spem renovat. L. R. Plate II. fig.

The surname of Dun, gules, a sword pale-ways, proper, hilted and pommelled or, between three padlocks argent; crest, a dexter hand holding a key, proper: motto, Mecum habito. N. R. Plate II. fig. 28.

Charles Dun, Merchant in Aberdeen, carries the same, with a mullet for difference. Ibid.

The name of Ewart, or, three swords, two of them saltier-ways, and one fesse-ways, between a dexter hand in chief, and a man's heart in base gules. P. MS. Plate II. fig. 29.

Since I am here speaking of swords, I shall mention another piece of armament, viz. spur-rowels, borne by the name of Bryson, gules, a saltier between two spur-rowels in chief, and as many mullets in base argent; as in our old books of blazons, which make a distinction betwixt spur-rowels and mullets, the first being pierced, and the second not, as I observed before, page 420.

In our New Register, Mr Andrew Bryson of Craigton carried gules, a saltier between two spur-rowels in fesse, a spear-head in chief, and a crescent in base or. Plate II. fig. 30.

This family ended in two daughters; the eldest of them was married to Walter Ewing, Writer to the Signet, father and mother of John Ewing, Writer to the Signet, who possesses the lands of Craigton, which belonged to his grandfather by the mother's side; and, by the father's side, he is the male-representer of Ewing of Keppoch, his grandfather, in the shire of Dumbarton; which lands of Keppoch were purchased by a younger son of the family, who had only one daughter, married to John Whitehill, whose son, Thomas, possesses the lands of Keppoch, and is obliged to take upon him the name of Ewing.

The arms of Ewing are carried by John Ewing of Craigton, Writer to the Signet, of which before, page 412.

The name of Megget, azure, a quadrangular lock and key or. Pont's Manuscript.

Padlocks are carried by the name of Lockhart, and Murray of Blackbarony, of whom before.

Chess-rocks, used in the play of the chess, are carried with us by the name of Orrock. Plate II. fig. 31.

Alexander Orrock of that Ilk bears sable on a chevron, betwixt three mullets argent, as many chess-rocks of the first; crest, a falcon perching, proper: motto, Vox Christi mea rupestis. L. R.

Wheels are carried in arms, as that ancient one to be seen in the first quarter of the achievement of the Archbishop of Mentre, Elector and Great Chancellor of the Empire, gules, a wheel or, which had its rise from one Willigis, or Willekis, who came to be archbishop and elector in the time of the Emperor Otto II. being the son of a mean man, a carter, or wheel-wright, took for his arms a wheel, as a sign of his humility, to show the meanness of his birth, and caused paint the wheel upon all the rooms of his house, and furniture, to put him in mind of his mean extract, with these words, Villegis, recollis quis es, & unde venis. And ever since that wheel has become the fixed figure of that See, which the Emperor Henry II. confirmed, as Hoppeinus de Jurie Insignium, cap. vi. page 236.

There is another sort of a wheel to be met with in arms, especially that called St Katharine's wheel, which has iron teeth round it, used as an instrument of torture of old, upon which St Katharine, a confessor, was put to death.

Katharine Rouet, daughter of Sir Payn Rouet, Guienne King at Arms, being third wife to John Duke of Lancaster, had her arms impaled with her husband's, being gules, a St Katharine’s wheel or, as relative to her father’s name, Rout, or Rota, as Sandford tells us in his Genealogical History, page 144.

Sir James Turner, one of the chief commanders of the forces of King Charles II. of Scotland, carried table, a St Katharine’s wheel argent, quartered with argent, three gouttes de sang. Mackenzie’s Heraldry. Plate II. fig. 32.

Mr Archibald Turner, sometime one of the Ministers of Edinburgh, carries the same, with a crescent for difference; crest, a heart flaming, proper: motto, tuum cede malis. N. R.

The plough, waggon, and all other instruments of agriculture, are to be met with in arms, for which see English books of heraldry; as also borne furniture. I find few or none with us carry such figures.

Kroye, in England, azure, a plough, in fesse argent. (Art. Her.) The motto to it, when used as a device, fiuvis dum laevas, The turning up of the clod is a help to the seed, Evertendo fecundat.

Menestrier gives us the arms of Reilkad, in Provence, viz. azure, the sock of a plough in pale argent; because Reilke in that country signifies the sock of a plough, and so of other instruments of agriculture, as relative to the names of the bearers: And he tells us, that the family of Scala, in Italy, carries, de gueules à l’échelle d’or, en pal tenu par deux chiens de même, i.e. gules, a ladder in pale, holden up by two dogs or. These arms make a double allusion to the surname Scala, by the ladder, and the dogs to the name Matin, frequent in that family, which possessed great territories in Italy; others give to that family, an eagle perching on a ladder.

The waggon is carried by these of the name of Binning, descended of the family of East-Binning, as by Binning of Carlouriehall, and Binning of Walliford, as before, page 100, Carlouriehall being now extinct, without issue, Walliford is the only representative of East-Binning, the waggon is carried upon account that one William Binning, of the family of Binning, surprised the castle of Linlithgow by a stratagem with a waggon full of hay, in the reign of Robert the Bruce; and for which piece of good service, in dispossessing the English, he and his got the lands of East-Binning, and the waggon to be added to their arms, to perpetuate that achievement: Which John Barbour, Archdean of Aberdeen, in the Acts and Life of King Robert the Bruce, has given a full account of; and likewise it is noticed by Mr Thomas Bell, Professor of Philology in the College of Edinburgh, in his Stratemener Scotinum. In Walliford’s charter-crest there is a charter by King James I. of the lands of East-Binning, to David de Binning, upon William de Binning his father’s resignation.

The name of Binning appears to have come from France; Moreri, in his Dictionary, and several other authors, mention S. Benignus, first archbishop of Dijon, and other persons of learning and distinction of that name, both in Italy and France; the variation of the spelling is but adapted to the pronunciation in several languages.

Mr Charles Binning of Pilmuir, Advocate, one of his Majesty’s Solicitors-General, being a younger son of Sir William Binning of Walliford, bears argent, on a bend inerlaid azure, a waggon of the first, within a bordure ermíne.

There was a family of the name of Ferrier, which lived in Tranent, in the reign of Alexander II. whose seal of arms I have seen appended to an alienation of some lands in Tranent, to the family of Seaton, on which was a shield charged with three horse-shoes. The Ferrers were a considerable family in England, and carried the same figures.

Naismith of Posso bears, quarterly, first and fourth gules, a dexter hand coupled, proper, holding a sword pale-ways argent, between two broken hammers or, as the paternal coat relative to the name of Naismith; second and third azure, on a fesse argent, between three mullets in chief, and a sanguine passant, in base of the second, a boar’s head couped gules, for Baird of Posso; crest, a hand holding a hammer as the former: motto, Non arte sed Marte. N. R.

Neilson of Corsack, in Galloway, azure, two hammers in saltier or; in the dexter flank a crescent, and in base a star argent; crest, a demi-man issuing out of the wreath, holding over his shoulder a hammer, all proper; with the motto, Præsto pro patria.
OF ARTIFICIAL THINGS.

The family has been in use to carry those figures, to perpetuate a valiant and bold action in the reign of David the Bruce; which figures differ from those of the other families of the name, as before, upon the account of some notable event, though of the same origin with them, as by the common tradition, That three brothers of the surname of O'Neal, came from Ireland to Scotland, in the reign of Robert the Bruce, where they got lands for their valour, and their issue changed their name a little, from O'Neal to Neilson; for O'Neal and M'Neil are the same with Neilson.

For the antiquity of this family, I have seen a precept granted by James Lindsay of Fairgirth, to inflet John Neilson, and his wife Isobel Gordon, in the lands of Corsack in Galloway, in the year 1430. Also a charter of confirmation of the lands of Corsack, of the date 26th of July 1444, by Sir John Forrester of Cottorphine, to Fergus Neilson, son and heir to John Neilson of Corsack. And in anno 1497, there is a charter granted by James Lindsay of Carsluith, to John Neilson of Corsack, who married a daughter of Cairns of Orchardton, and with her had a son, who got the lands of Arvic; which family ended in three daughters, who died without issue, and these lands were purchased by Corsack. Secondly, he married Janet, a daughter of Lindsay of Fairgirth, and with her had a son, John, who succeeded to the lands of Corsack, as by charters in the years 1539, and 1546. This John married a daughter of Kirkwall, or Kirko of Bogrie, and was succeeded by his son John, who built the present House of Corsack, the date of which is to be seen engraven upon a stone, above the head of the door of the tower, with the shield of arms as above, without the crest and motto. He married Margaret, a daughter of Gordon of Macartney, and was succeeded by his son Robert Neilson of Corsack, who married a daughter of Macellen of Barcob; with her he had John his successor, who married Anne, eldest daughter to Gordon of Earlston, father and mother of the present John Neilson of Corsack, who carries the above arms.

Barnacles, an instrument used by horse-farmers, to curb and command unruly horses, were carried in arms by the ancient family of the name of Genevill, by corruption called Grenvill, sometime great in England, and Lords of Meath in Ireland, azure, three horse-barnacles extended in pale or, on a chief ermine, a lion issuant gules, which Mr Gibbon blazons thus: "Gestant in area curulens tres postomides aureas prorrectae expansas, & alternat alteri impostas summitata scutum muris Armeniae velleris impressa, & itidem leone exeunte rubro adornata." Plate II. fig. 33. This author latinizes barnacles, postomides, to distinguish them from the bird barnacle, (known with us by the name of cleg-goose) latined barnicula. This bird, says our author, he never met with in arms, but in these of Sir William Bernacke, in Leicestershire, viz. argente, a fesse between three barnacles sabule, which were in allusion to the name. Menestrier, in his Abrégé Méthodique des Armoiries, calls the instruments barnacles, broes, and takes it for an instrument to break hemp to make it spin, which he says are carried by the name of Broes, in France, in allusion to the name, viz. d'azur à trois broes d'or, étendues en face l'une sur l'autre. Plate II.
The family of Butex, in Savoy, carries three buttets in allusion to the name, that is, three instruments wherewith Farriers pare the hooves of horses. Menestrier.
The name of Kyle, with us, or, three candlesticks sable. Mackenzie's Heraldry.
The name of Wright, in Scotland, azure, three carpenters' axes argent. Ibid. Plate II. fig. 34.

John Shuttleworth of Newbechall, in Yorkshire, argent, three weavers' shuttles sable, tipped and furnished with their quills of yarn or.
The name of Webster, argent, a fesse between three weavers' shuttles gules, tipped and furnished with quills of yarn or. Plate II. fig. 35. For such like mechanical instruments, and musical ones, such as fiddles, drums, &c. are seldom or never carried by our gentry or nobility. See Guillim, Morgan, and other English herald books of blazons.

So much then for armorial figures in their different kinds, and various terms and attributes, as methodically as I could perform.
OF ARTIFICIAL THINGS.

Having omitted some, and others of late, who have applied to have their arms and memorials of their families inserted, after I have treated of such figures as they carry in their arms; so that I could not place them according to the method of this treatise, these not having occurred to me when I printed examples of such figures, I was obliged here to add them before I put an end to this volume.

Mr John Mitchel of Addiston, in Mid-Lothian, carries sable, a chevron, accompanied with three masses or; crest, a stalk of wheat bladed and erected in pale, proper: motto, Cresco; as in Workman's Manuscripts, and Plate of Achievements.

The family of Craighhead, who have been in use to write their name Mitchel, and are of a good old standing, and of whom there are severals of the same descended of them in the West of Scotland. Alexander Mitchel of Craighhead married a daughter of Glass of Goldhenhoof, which family is now designed of Sauchie. Their son, Mr Thomas Mitchel, married Anna Graham, sister to Sir William Graham of Gartmore, baronet. Their son and successor is Mr John Mitchel of Addiston, who carries the above blazon, (Lyon Register) as lineal representative of the family of Craighhead; he married Isabel, sister to William Borthwick of Johnstonburn, formerly designed of Falshall, and has with her two sons, Walter and William Mitchels.

Chancellor of Shieldhill, carries or, a lion rampant sable, armed and langued gules, on a chief azure, three mullets of the first; crest, an eagle displayed sable: motto, Que je suenante. L. R.

As for the documents of this family, the oldest one in the custody of the present Chancellor of Shieldhill, which is a charter of confirmation granted by Thomas Somervel Baron de Carnwath, to George Chancellor of Quodquan, of half the lands of Quodquan, upon the said George his resignation of these lands, to be helden of the said Lord Somerville, as freely and honourably as his predecessors held the same of his lordship's predecessors, dated the 6th of March 1434. George Chancellor was succeeded by his son Alexander, and he got a new charter of the above lands from John Lord Somerville, in anno 1463; his son and heir, George Chancellor, gets a charter from his superior the Lord Somerville of those lands, 1472, wherein he is designed, Nobilis Vir Georgius Chancellor Dominus de Quodquan. He married a daughter of Ramsay of Dalhousie, and had with her a son, William, who was infeft and seised in the above lands, 1477: He had to wife Janet, daughter of Geddes of Rachen and Kirkurd, an old family in Tweeddale. He was succeeded by his son John, who was infeft the 11th of April 1491, and his son and heir, Robert, was infeft in the above lands 1529; he married Elizabeth, daughter of Brown of Coalston; and their son, William, was infeft the 26th of March 1533; he was designed of Quodquan. He had by his wife Margaret, a daughter of Hamilton of Dalserf, William Chancellor; he obtained decree before the Lords of Council and Session, 1566, against Denholm of Westshields, and Inglis of Eastshield, for non-entry duties, they being both vassals, and still continue. He married Agnes, a daughter of Sir James Hamilton of Crawfurdo'han, Baron of Evandale, and with her had Robert Chancellor; he took the title only of Shieldhill, and by Agnes Symington was father of John, who was infeft in the above lands 1605; he married Catharine, daughter of Gavin Hamilton of Raploch, and of Jean his wife, daughter and one of the co-heirs of Sir Thomas Dishington of Ardross, and with her had Robert his son, heir and successor, who signalized himself in loyalty for King Charles I. and II. and had the happiness to see the happy Restoration, before he died, in the year 1665, leaving issue by Jean his wife, daughter of Sir James Lockhart of Lee, and Jean Auchinleck, daughter of Sir George Auchinleck of Balmaino, an ancient family in Perthshire, James Chancellor of Shieldhill, who succeeded his father, and was infeft in the year 1664; he died in 1704, and all his children, and was succeeded by his brother John, the present laird of Shieldhill, who has issue by his wife Jean, daughter of Sir James Agnew of Lochnaw, and carries the above arms, as in Plate of Achievements.

Maitland of Pittrichie, is an ancient cadet of the Maitlands of Thirlestane, (now Lauderdale) whose second son, upwards of 300 years ago, married the heiress of Schives, alias Gight, in Vicecom. de Aberdeen; which fortune they possessed for a long time, and some of them were knighted, particularly Sir Patrick Maitland of Gight, whose daughter was married to Pitlurg: But they having contracted debts, and unwarily secured their creditors on their lands, which, by the tenure, was ward, or held by knight-service of the crown, a son of the family of Gordon procured a gift of recognition of the estate of Gight; so that they were restricted to a small share of their former inheritance, a part of which does however still remain with them, beside their late purchases. They have since, it seems, removed their seat to Pittrichie, and by it they take their designation. Their arms are, or, a lion rampant gules, couped at all joints of the field, within a bordure chequy, argent and azure; crest, a lion's head erased gules: motto, Poix & pew*. Lyon Register.

Edward Maxwell of Hills, in Galloway, carries argent, a saltier sable, betwixt a mullet in chief, and a crescent in base gules, impaled with the arms of his lady, Goldie, daughter of Goldie of Craigmuir, viz. argent, a chevron gules, betwixt three trefoils slipped vert; which arms are adorned with helmet and mantlings befitting his quality, and on the wreath of his tinctures; for crest, a roe-buck, proper, attired argent, cauchant before a holly bush, proper: motto, Res urient. supported on the dexter by a roebuck, and on the sinister by a savage, all proper. Upon the old house of Hills, are to be seen in several places, upwards of 150 years, (as I am certainly informed) the arms of the family cut out upon stone, having only the saltier for Maxwell; and in other places, quartered with the arms of Herries, the three urcheons: The first mentioned are supported with two roebucks, and the last, which belong to the present laird his father's great-grandfather, supported by two savages, all proper; and the present Edward Maxwell of Hills carries them supported; for which see Plate of Achievements.

The first of this family was Herbert Maxwell, a younger son of John, master of Maxwell of Carlaverock, and his lady, Janet Crichton, daughter to George Earl of Crichton. This John, the master, died before his father, Robert, the first Lord Maxwell, who was killed at the battle of Bannockburn with King James III. and was succeeded by his grandchild John Lord Maxwell, the son of the said master, elder brother of the abovementioned Herbert; from John the master are descend ed the earls of Nithsdale, the lairds of Hills, and several others, of whom before, page 137.

Edward Goldie of Craigmuir, in the stewartry of Galloway, originally from England, carries argent, a chevron gules, betwixt three trefoils slipped vert; crest, a garb or: motto, Quid ulilis.

John Symmer, Merchant in Edinburgh, and Accomptant to the Equivalent, carries as his predecessors, as in the Plate of Achievements, viz. argent, an oak tree eradicating, proper, placed bend-sinister-ways, surmounted of a bend-dexter gules, charged with three crosses couped or, all within a bordure of the third; crest, a stag lodged or, attired gules: motto, Tandum tranquillus. He being the son of Robert Symmer, Esq. the son of Lieutenant-Colonel Paul Symmer of Megie, a younger son of the old family of Symmer of Balzordie: Which Paul adhered to his sovereigns King Charles I. and II. and was at the battle of Worcester for King Charles II. Upon the hearing of his Majesty's Restoration, he was one of the first persons who proclaimed him king over the cross of Aberdeen, who from his Majesty got a charter of the lands of Pitmuckleston, near to Aberdeen, with the office of Mair of Fee of the sheriffdom of Aberdeen, with the lands pertaining to the said office; which were ratified and recorded in the second session of the first Parliament of King Charles II. in the year 1662.

I have given before the arms of McMillan, out of the old books of blazons; but since I have met with the old writs of Andrew McMillan of Arndarach, in the barony of Earlston, amongst which I find his seal of arms appended to a right of reversion in the year 1569. I shall here blazon it, viz. a saltier, and in base a crescent. As for the tinctures they cannot be learned by seals; the figures seem to be taken from the superiors, Sinclairs of Earlston, or the Maxwells. I find by their writs, they have been in Galloway in the reign of King Robert III.

Lauder of Bass carried gules, a griffon salient, within a double trezure counterflowered argent; crest, a solan-goose sitting on a rock, proper: motto, Sub umbra alarum tuarum; by some books supported by two lions: But upon an old stone in the church of North-Berwick, the above arms are supported with two angels, proper, as in Plate of Achievements.

* This supposed to be Poix & pew. E.

And also, in the aisle of the lairds of Bass, in the old church of North-Berwick, where they were interred, there is a tomb-stone, whereupon are cut, in Saxon letters, these words, Hic jacet Bus. (i.e. bonus) Robertus Lauder mrs. (i.e. magnus) Dus. (Dominus) de Congleton et le Bass, qui obiit nense Maii; some read, MCCCXI.

This family continued in a lineal descent till the reign of King Charles I. I said before, page 344, that the family was extinct; but, upon better information, I find the nearest branch is Lauder of Beilmouth, now representative of the family of Bass, as appears by several certificates under the hands of several gentlemen of probity, that Robert Lauder, a younger son of Sir Robert Lauder of Bass, got from his father part of the lands of Beilmouth and West-Barns; and Robert was succeeded by his son Maurice in these lands, which Maurice was the father of Alexander Lauder.

I have seen a charter of these lands granted by King James VI. of the date 1594, to the said Alexander Lauder, and his eldest son George: Which George Lauder grants a disposition and charter in the year 1666, of the lands of Beilhaven and West-Barns, to his eldest son Robert, procreate betwixt him and his wife Elizabeth Lauder: Which Robert grants a charter to his eldest son, Mr Robert Lauder, procreate betwixt him and his wife Mary, daughter of Patrick Douglas of Standstone, in the year 1672. Mr Robert, afterwards Sir Robert Lauder, designed of Beilmouth, father of Archibald, father of the present Robert Lauder of Beilmouth, the eighth person of the family in a lineal descent.

I did see the above evidents in Robert's custody, whose great-grandfather recorded his armorial bearing in the Lyon Register thus: "Robert Lauder, Portioner of Beilhaven and West-Barns, descended of the family of the Bass, bears gules, a griffin salient, within a double treisure flowered and counter-flowered argent, the same with Bass; and charges the breast of the griffin with a heart ensigned with an imperial crown, all proper, for his difference, upon account his wife was a Douglas; crest, the trunk of an old tree budding proper: motto, Repululat."

Captain David Scott, Baron of Hundlehope, in the shire of Tweeddale, carries as below, being lineally descended of John Scott, a younger son of Scott of Thirlestane, who purchased the lands of Hundlehope, and was infruct therein in the year 1592.

I have seen an act of curatory, in the year 1625, for John Scott, son and heir of the deceased John Scott of Hundlehope, where Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane, knight, as nearest of kin on the father's side, and William Burnet of Barns on the mother's side, are called with several other friends, and Sir John Stewart of Traquair, predecessor of the present Earl of Traquair, is chosen one of the curators.

From the above John Scott of Hundlehope is lineally descended the present Captain David Scott of Hundlehope, who carries the paternal coat of Scott of Thirlestane, viz. or, on a bend azure, a mullet pierced betwixt two crescents of the first, all within a bordure of the second, for his difference; and, for crest, a right hand issuing out of the wreath, holding a lance, all proper: motto, I am ready; as in Plate of Achievements.

These of the surname of Duff are thought to have derived their descent and name from the M'Duffs, Thanes of Fife, though they differ in armorial bearings, as many have done, though of the same stock, not only here, but in other nations, who have both changed name and arms, as I have formerly shown in the Essay of the Ancient and Modern Use of Arms.

The principal family of the name was Duff of Craighead in Vicecomitatu de Banff.

In our ancient books of blazon their arms are illuminated by Mr Workman, an old herald, thus, parted per fesse, vert and gules, a fesse danette argent, betwixt a hart's head cabossed, with a pheon betwixt his attire, and two escalops of the last in chief, and in base another pheon of the same.
The like blazon of the name is to be found in other manuscripts, as that of Mr Pont's, in my custody.

Thereafter the same family was designed Duff of Keithmore. And Alexander Duff of Keithmore has his arms matriculated in the Lyon Register, since the year 1663, as being lineally descended from, and then representing the family of Craighead, thus, vert, a fesse dancetté ermine, betwixt a buck's head cabossed in chief, and two escallops in base or; crest, a buck's head, proper: motto, Virtute & opera.

This Alexander was father to Alexander Duff, who designed himself of Braco, as did thereafter his only son the deceased William Duff; and they, and their representative, William Duff, now of Braco, have been in use, as chiefs of the name, to support their arms with two savages, wreathed about the head and middle with laurel, holding branches of trees in their hands, all proper.

In the Lyon Register are also recorded the arms of William Duff, a third son of the family of Craighead, whose representative I take to be Duff of Drummure, being thus; vert, a fesse dancetté, betwixt a buck's head cabossed in chief, and a mullet in base or, for his difference; and, for motto, Omnibus fortuna committit.

There are several other branches of the principal family, such as the Duffs of Dipple, Craigston, Hatton, Tulloch, &c. who carry the above arms with suitable differences.

Mr James Anderson, Writer to his Majesty's Signet, a learned antiquary, by his patent of arms, carries, azure, a saltier argent, between three stars in chief, and flanks, and a crescent in base or; crest, a crescent as the last: motto, Gradatim. For which see Plate of Achievements.

The surname of Lyon is ancient with us, who carry a lion rampant, as relative to the name.

Sir George Mackenzie, and Sir Patrick Lyon of Carse, in their Manuscripts, with others, bring them from the family of De Lyons in France, originally from the ancient Leons in Rome, who had for their armorial bearing a lion.

A branch of those in France accompanied William the Conqueror to England, and some of them afterwards came to Scotland with King Edgar, son of Malcolm III. and got from that king sundry lands in the shire of Perth, which were called after their name Glen-Lyon.

Sir George, in his above Manuscript, says he has seen a charter granted by King Edgar to the monks in Dunfermline, the 7th year of his reign; and, amongst the witnesses, next after David the king's brother, and Gilmichael Earl of Fife, is mentioned Secher de Lyon, before Philippus Camerarius Regis, and other persons of good quality.

Joannes de Lyon is witness in a charter granted by King William to Philip de Seton, of the lands of Seton, Winton and Winchburgh.

John de Lyon, who lived in the reign of King David II. got from that king several baronies in the shires of Perth and Aberdeen, propter fortunam et fidelem operam sibi et patri suo praestitam.

He was succeeded by his son Sir John Lyon, commonly called the White Lion, for his complexion, a man of good parts and qualities, a great favourite of King Robert II. who gave to him the Thanedom of Glimmies in the shire of Forfar, for his good services, as the charter bears of the date 7th January 1373, pro laudabili et fideliter servitio, ac continuo laboribus; which charter was confirmed to him by John Earl of Carrick, (designed therein Primogenitus Regis Scotiae) Robert Earl of Fife, and Alexander Lord Badenoch; he was High Chamberlain of Scotland, and got the keeping of the castle of Edinburgh for life. He married Lady Jean, the king's daughter, and with her got a grant of the castle and dominion of Kingdom, nomine dotis, as the several charters of these lands and others bear, wherein he is designed Charissimo nostro filio Joanuni Lyon, militii, Camerario nostro Scotiae.

In remembrance of which marriage, he, or his successors, had a grant of the double tressure, surrounding the lion, as the custom then was to be given to those who married with the daughters of the royal family, or were descended from them: And further, to represent the marriage, took for crest, a lady in bust, circled about with a garland of bays, holding in her right hand a thistle, proper, the badge of Scotland.
OF ARTIFICIAL THINGS.

Their son was John, who being young at his father's death, his grandfather the king took him into his own immediate care and protection, with all his fortune and goods. He married Mary, daughter of Patrick Graham Earl of Strathern, by whom he had Patrick, his son and heir, who was one of the hostages sent to England for the ransom of King James I. He married a daughter of Sir Alexander Ogilvie of Auchterhouse, by whom he had three sons, Alexander his successor, John and William: Of the last were descended the Lyons of Easter and Wester-Ogil.

Which Alexander dying without issue, was succeeded by his brother, the above-named John, who married a daughter of Sir John Scrymgeour, constable of Dun-dee: By her he had John Lord Glammis, and David Lyon, the first of the family of Cossins.

John had two sons, George and John; George dying young, was succeeded by his brother John, who married Jean, daughter of George master of Angus; and was succeeded by his son, John Lord Glammis, who married a daughter of William Earl Marischal, and with her had John his successor, and Sir Thomas Lyon of Auldbar, Lord High Treasurer of Scotland, in the minority of King James VI.

John Lord Glammis succeeded his father, a man of great parts and learning; he was preferred to be Lord High Chancellor of Scotland, 1575, but was unfortunately killed by a pistol-shot in a tumult upon the streets of Stirling, 7th of March 1577, to the great lamentation of the king and kingdom. He left behind him by his lady, a daughter of Alexander Lord Abermethy of Salton, Patrick his son and heir, and several daughters.

Patrick was created Earl of Kinghorn by King James VI. in the year 1606. He married Anne, daughter of John first Earl of Tullibardine, by whom he had John his successor, James Lyon of Auldbar, Frederick, of whom are the Lyons of Brigton, and a daughter married to William Earl of Errol.

John his son, second Earl of Kinghorn, married first a daughter of John Earl of Marr, by whom he had no issue. And, secondly, he married Elisabeth, daughter of Patrick first Earl of Panmure, by whom he had Patrick his son and successor, who, by the favour of his Majesty King Charles II. got a new patent of honour, to be styled Earl of Strathmore and Kinghorn. He married Helen, daughter of John first Earl of Middleton, by whom he had John Earl of Strathmore, who married Elisabeth, daughter of Philip Stanhope Earl of Chesterfield, of the Kingdom of England, by whom he had several sons and daughters, and Charles the present Earl of Strathmore.

The achievement of this ancient and noble family, is, argent, a lion rampant argent, armed and langued gules, within the double tressure, flowered and counter-flowered of the last; crest, a lady to the girdle, holding in her right hand the Royal Thistle, and inclosed within a circle of laurels, proper; in memory of the honour that family had in marrying King Robert II.'s daughter, with the motto, In te, Domine, speravi; as Sir George Mackenzie, in his Science, page 96. For having gained the affection of King Robert II.'s daughter, he was much crossed in his match; but having at last obtained her, he took that crest, and the motto relative to it, supported on the dexter by an unicorn argent, armed, maned, and unguled or, and on the sinister by a lion rampant gules: Both which creatures do belong to the royal achievement. See Plate of Achievements.

Having before treated of the lion, in all its various positions, I did, in page 283, give a memorial of two old families of the name of M'Dowall, according to the documents then shown me; amongst which I now understand, that the bond of man-rent there mentioned, to have been given by John M'Dowall of Logan to Uthred M'Dowall of Garthland, with the alleged descent of Garthland's family, are very much controverted upon reasons contained in a protest taken by Robert M'Dowall of Logan, against Alexander M'Dowall of Garthland, and another protest lately taken against myself.

The said Logan, since that time, has produced the following documents, viz. an instrument dated at Kilstay, the 8th of March 1579, in these words, " The whilk " day, comparèd personally an honourable man, Patrick MacDoual of Logan, and " did deliver possession to Uthred MacDoual of Garthland, administrator, tutor,
OF ARTIFICIAL THINGS.

"guider, and governor to John MacDoual appearant of Logan, of the lands, tenements, and haill goods and gear of Kilstay;" &c.

And likewise I have seen an old tack of the lands of Auchzeilland, lying in the lordship of Logan, (so worded) by Uthred M'Dowall of Logan, to Thomas M'Kelly, for nineteen years, upon the yearly payment of two merks and a half; which lands are now worth an hundred, and are known by the name of Boal-Kelly, which signifies in Irish, Kelly's Town, having taken their name from the above-mentioned Kelly. This tack is upon vellum, and of a very old date.

After perusal of the documents produced by both families, and weighing the arguments of each, it is difficult to judge, nor can it be determined, which of the two is to be reputed the principal family; which is likewise asserted by Mr Richard Hay, a known antiquary here, as appears by his certificate the 22d of March last, who had the perusal, it seems, of the documents of both families.

If in this treatise I have done any gentleman injustice, which is far from my purpose, I am ever willing, upon conviction, to repair him in the next volume:
But I hasten to a conclusion of this.

MAXWELL of Kirkconnel, quarterly, first and fourth argent, an eagle displayed sable, beaked and membred _gules_; and, on its breast, an escutecheon of the first, charged with a saltier of the second, for Maxwell; second and third azure, two crossies in saltier _adasté_, and in chief, a mitre or, for Kirkconnel of that ilk; crest, an eagle issuing out of a wreath of its tinctures, with the motto, _Spero meliora_; as in the Lyon Register and Plate of Achievements.

Kirkconnel of that ilk is mentioned in Pryne's History, page 654, amongst those who submitted to Edward King of England, there designed _Thomai de Kirk-connel._

This family, about the year of God 1421, ended in an heiress, Janet Kirkconnel, who was married to Homer Maxwell, a second son of Herbert Lord Maxwell, and had issue; and ended again in another heiress, who was married to Thomas, second son to Robert Lord Maxwell, of whom is lineally descended the present William Maxwell of Kirkconnel, who carries the above arms.

BONTEIN, or BUNTING, of Milldovan, in Dumbartonshire, descended of Bunting of Ardoch, in the same shire, carries as Ardoch; and, for his difference, ingrails the bend, viz, argent, a bend ingrail'd, _gules_, betwixt three bunting-birds, proper; and, for his crest, an armillary sphere; with the motto, _Solii Deo Gloria._ See Plate of Achievements.

BONTEIN of Boglass in Stirlingshire, descended of Bontein of Milldovan, carried as Milldovan, with a difference: But Milldovan having married with the heiress of Balglass, they are now become one family, and so carry the same arms.

BONTEIN of Geilston, in Dumbartonshire, also descended of Bontein of Milldovan, carries as Milldovan, with a difference.

BUCHANAN of Carbeth, in Stirlingshire, descended of Buchanan of that ilk, car-rries or, a lion rampant _sable_, armed and langued _gules_, holding in his dexter paw a ducal cap, tufted on the top, with a rose of the last, all within a double tressure flowered and counter-flowered of the second; crest, a dexter hand holding a shobble bend-ways, proper: motto, _Audacia & Industria._ See Plate of Achievements.

I have given before, page 111, the blazon of _Glenndonwy_ of that ilk, as in Sir George Mackenize's Science of Heraldry, and in Mr Pont's Manuscript of arms; but, having since seen some evidents of the family, I shall here mention them.

Adam Glenndonwy of that ilk, in Eskdale, obtains of old a charter from John Megill, (or M'Gill) _de codem_ of the lands of Clifton in the shire of Roxburgh; the onorous cause for granting the said charter, is, _Pro suo auxilio & concilio_; he was succeeded by his son,

Sir Adam Glenndonwy of that ilk, who, in the year 1313, gets a discharge of his feu-duties, from Archibald Douglas Lord of Galloway; as also, a charter from King Robert the Bruce, the 14th year of his reign, of the feu and castle-ward duties of Scarburgh, payable to the castle of Roxburgh; and from the same king, in the 10th year of his reign, Sir Adam procures a charter of confirmation of his lands of Falshop in Roxburghshire, and several other lands lying in the forest of Jedworth.
OF ARTIFICIAL THINGS.

Sir Simeon Glendowyn of that Ilk, a famous and brave country-man, got from Archibald Earl of Douglas and Galloway the lands of Within-Glencorse, and several others, as appears by the charters of the family, with the bailiary of the regality of Eskdale: He had for his wife Mary Douglas, daughter to the said Earl. His son and successor was Simeon Glendowyn, father of Bartholomew Glendowyn, father of John, as by an account which I had from the present representative of the family; and that the family resided at Parton in the stewardry of Kirkcudbright; from which afterwards they took the designation from the lands of Parton. And their descent runs thus:

Which John was father of Ninian, who married Janet Dunbar; their son, John, married a daughter of Gordon of Lochinvar, who had issue, Alexander, married to a daughter of Gordon of Troquhane; and their son was Robert, who had for wife a daughter of Maxwell Lord Ierries; and their son, John, was succeeded by his son Robert of Parton, who married Agnes Ierries, of the family of Mabie, and with her had only a daughter, Agnes Glendowyn, heiress of Parton, who was married to James Murray of Combeath, who takes upon him the name and arms of Glendowyn, and has issue a son, Robert Glendowyn. The arms of the family are, quarterly, argent and sable, a cross parted per cross indented, and counter-changed of the same; crest, the sleeve of a coat upon the point of a sword: motto, Horse faith in Christ. The same arms are to be seen carved upon their seat in the church of Parton, in the year 1598; but there are placed several other figures on the cantons, which the cross makes; on the first a goat's head, on the second a sword in bend sinister, on the third a boar's head, and on the fourth a fess chequy, and in chief the sleeve of a coat, as by a draught of them sent to me by Mr James Rowan, minister in the parish church of Parton.

Dunbar of Machrimore, in Galloway, descended from the Dunbars of Enterkin, a branch of the old family of Dunbars Earls of March. The first of this family who came to Galloway, was a second son of Enterkin, commonly called Long John of Enterkin; his son, Anthony Dunbar, was the first that purchased the barony of Machrimore from the M'Dowalls, old possessors of these lands, in the year 1623; he married a daughter of Stewart of Phisgill, and with her had a son, John Dunbar, his successor, who married a daughter of John M'Dowall of Logan; his son and successor, Patrick Dunbar, was a member of Parliament for the stewardry of Galloway, in the reigns of King William and Queen Anne. He married a daughter of M'Dowall of Freugh; his son and successor is the present Alexander Dunbar of Machrimore, married to a daughter of John Hamilton of Bardanoche, late bailie of his Majesty's palace of Holyroodhouse.

The family of Machrimore has been in use to carry for arms, gules, a lion rampant or, surmounted of a bend azure, charged with three cushions of the second, all within a bordure argent, charged with eight cinquefoils of the first; crest, a lion's head erased, crowned with an open crown or: motto, Fortis & fidelis; as in Plate of Achievements.

The ensign-armorial of Thomas Brown of Bonnyton, in Mid-Lothian, near Edinburgh, is, or, on a chevron betwixt three flower-de-luces azure, a besant of the first; crest, a ship under sail, proper: motto, Caute & sedule. L. R. and in Plate of Achievements.

Anderson of Whitebrough, argent, on a saltier betwixt four stars azure, the sun in its splendour, proper; crest, a crescent argent: motto, Ut crescit clarescit.

Cambell of Inverav, commonly called Macksinachie or Macksinachie of Inverav, being a patronimical appellation, as the offspring or son of Duncan; who, it seems, was the first descended from the ancient family of Argyle, before that noble family married the heiress of Lorn, and so bear only gironnié of eight, or and sable, within a bordure waved azure, and charged with eight salmons nainant argent, for difference, in reference to the river of Awe, upon which their lands and houses lie, which runs out of Lochow, where they have a considerable salmon fishing; crest, a hart's head, proper, in regard of the forest, or deer they have in the great mountain of Cruachan.

Of this family are several branches, viz. Alexander Campbell of Kilmartin, Douglas Campbell of Shirvan, Colonel Patrick Campbell of the Horse-Guards, Captain Alexander Campbell of Brigadier Stanwix's Regiment, and many others.
OF ARTIFICIAL THINGS.

The arms of Bruce of Earlshall, in Fifè, I gave before in page 143, being or, a saltier and chief gules, and in the collar point a flower-de-luce azure; which last figure was allowed them not only as differences from other families of the name, but also shows their military prowess performed in France, where they got several lands; and afterwards, in the reign of King James IV. purchased the barony of Earlshall in Fifè, where their arms above blazoned are to be seen, painted and engraven on several parts of the house, with their exterior ornaments, viz. for crest, a horse's head and neck bridled, issuing out of the wreath; and, for motto, Be true; supporters, two savages, wreathed about the head and middle with laurel, all proper: And upon the compartment, whereupon the supporters stand, are these words, Contemno & ornas, mente & mensa, as upon a stone over the head of the entry to the house, and the same upon the chimney-piece of the high gallery, with an inscription relative to the arms, the date 1546. Likewise, upon the tomb-stone of Sir Alexander Bruce of Earlshall, where he is interred in the church of Leuchars, with the date 1584: So that the family has been in an ancient usage of using supporters. The family is now dissolved in an heiress, Mrs Helen Bruce, lineally descended of the family of Earlshall, married to David Baillie, Esq. son to Mr James Baillie of Hardington, who takes upon him the name and arms of Bruce of Earlshall.

Sir Mark Carse of Fordelcarse, as in the Lyon Register, carried argent, on a saltier vert, betwixt four cross croislets fitchè gules, five crescents of the first; crest, a crescent surmounted of a cross croisé fitche or: motto, ________ Sir Mark purchased the lands of Cockpen, in Mid-Lothian, from which the family takes now their designation. The present ——— Carse of Cockpen is grandson of the said Sir Mark.

Carse of Falconhouse, an old family in the shire of Linlithgow, though now extinct, (there are several of the name descended from it) carried argent, a falcon perching on the trunk of an old tree, all proper, within a bordure vert; crest, a falcon's head: motto, Velocitate.

Murhead of Lauchop, argent, on a bend azure, three acorns or; crest, two hands supporting a sword erect in pale, proper: motto, Auxilium Dei; being the principal family of them, and of a very old standing.

Murhead of Stanhope, descended of Lauchop, argent, on a bend azure, a mullet between two acorns or. The mullet is for his difference, as in Sir George Mackenzie's Science of Heraldry.

Murhead of Bredisholm, as a second son of the family of Lauchop, bears as Lauchop above, with a crescent for difference, as in the Lyon Register.

But to conclude this volume, I shall speak a little to the label, and its use in armories, not having treated of it before.

The label, or lambel, is taken for a piece of silk, stuff, or linen, with pendants. Robert Glover, Somerset Herald, in his book De Origine Armorum, says, " Differ rentia principis est labellus, seu linguula cum pendulis & appendicibus imparti bus; simplex, & quandoque rebus onustus," I. e. the principal difference is the label, as a string with points, or pendants, of odd number, sometimes plain, and sometimes charged. Sir Henry Spelman, in his Armilia, page 142, says, " Lambellus coronæ prefert similitudinem, lennisicis ex ea dependentibus; quam ideo primogenito assignatam dieris, quia familia decus, sic praecoxandus videatur," I. e. the label with points is like a coronet; and, therefore, assigned to the eldest son, that, as he is the glory of the family, he may seem to be adorned above the rest.

The French take it for a scarf, or ribbon, which young men wore anciently about the neck of their helmets, (as we now do cravats) with points hanging down, when they went to the wars, or to military exercises in company with their fathers, by which they were distinguished from them.

To the eldest son, in his father's lifetime, was assigned a label with three points, plain. But if his grandfather was living, says Gerard Lee, a label with five points. The label is always placed on the upper part of the shield, the chief, or collar points of the shield, and sometimes also, by our heralds, upon the exterior ornaments. The traverse part is called the beam, which does not touch the sides of
The plain label is seldom assigned to the younger brother; but when the heirs-male of the eldest brother fails, and the inheritance falls to their daughters, and their heirs, the younger brother and his issue may use the plain label, as heir of expectation: Of which practice I shall here add one instance with us. Hamilton Earl of Abercorn, carries, as before, page 384, the arms of Hamilton, with a plain label in chief (as by our books of blazons) for his difference. The first of this family was Lord Claud, progenitor to the present Earl of Abercorn, being third son of James Duke of Chatelherault, and immediate brother to John Marquis of Hamilton, whose issue-male failing in James and William Dukes of Hamilton, the estate and honours did devolve on Lady Anne, eldest daughter of James Duke of Hamilton, whose heirs and successors carry the absolute arms of Hamilton, quartered with those of Arran, as also do the Earls of Abercorn, but, for difference, use a plain label. I shall here add a practice of the same nature, given us by Sir William Dugdale, Garter Principal King of Arms, in his Treatise of the Ancient Usage of Arms, page 28, who, speaking of the plain label of three points, tells us in the following words: "A label being much in use for the heir apparent, (to wear as his difference, during his father's life) was seldom removed to the second brother, but when the inheritance went into the daughters of the elder brother; and then the second was permitted to bear the same, for his difference, as being the heir-male of his family, and as one that remained in expectation. Yet might not the second brother use to intrude himself into the absolute signs of his house, (the inheritance being in his nieces, or kinswomen) as appeared in the case between Gray of Ruthine and Hastings, which was this: "John Lord Hastings married to his first wife Isabel, one of the sisters and heirs of Almery de Valence Earl of Pembroke, by whom he had issue, John Hastings, (after Earl of Pembroke) and Elizabeth, married to Roger Lord Grey. After Isabel's death, John Lord Hastings took a second wife, Isabel, the daughter of Hugh Spencer, by whom he had issue, Hugh Hastings and Thomas, and then died, and left as his heir, John, his son by his first wife, who was Earl of Pembroke, erected by reason of his mother's inheritance. Which John Earl of Pembroke, married and had issue another Earl of Pembroke, who also married and had issue a third Earl of Pembroke. But in the end, all the line of the said John Hastings (first Earl of Pembroke of that family) failing, there arose a question between the heirs of Roger Grey, and Elisabeth his wife, (being sister of the whole blood) and the heirs of Hugh Hastings (brother of the half blood) to the said John Earl of Pembroke, for the inheritance of the Hastings. "But Grey recovering the same, (by the law that sayeth, Possessio fratris de feudo simplici finit soverem esse heredem) called the said Hastings also (having removed the difference for his mark, for that he was the then heir-male of that house) into the Court of Chivalry, and there having a judgment against him, the said Hastings was compelled to use a difference (which was a label of silver) upon his mark (that is the paternal figure): Since which, the heirs of that younger family have used the said label, even unto this our age. "So that you may see by this, (says our author) that the law was then taken to be such, that such an heir-male as had not the inheritance of his ancestors, should not be suffered to bear his mark without distinction; for it should seem, by this, that the issue of them that had married the heir-general of any family, (being by reason thereof possessed of the lands) had not only an interest in the arms, but might also forbid any man the bearing thereof." When the label is not plain, but under accidental forms, or charged with figures, it then shows the bearers to be younger sons, or the descents of such.
younager sons in England, and those of the best note. The younger sons of King Edward III. of that kingdom differenced themselves and their families from one another, by a label over the imperial arms. I shall begin with the eldest son. Edward the Black Prince of Wales did bear his father's sovereign ensign, viz. France quartered with England, bruised with a label of three points argent.

Lionel Plantagenet, third son of King Edward, carried the same arms, and label; but to difference himself from his elder brother, the prince, made the points of the label parti, gules and argent. Sylvestre Petra Sancta takes notice of this variety, thus, " Leonelius Plantagenetus tertio genitus Regis Edwardi Tertii, ut " frangeret regia insignia, tum Gallia, tum etiam Britannia, usus est trifide laciniola " argentela, cujus pedes dimidiit tantum ostro sunt imbuti."

John of Gaunt, the fourth son of King Edward, who was Duke of Lancaster, in right of his wife the heiress thereof, carried also France and England, quarterly, with a label ermine for his difference.

Edward of Langley, another son, Duke of York, carried the same arms, with a label argent; but, for difference, charged it with tinctures gules. These last two brothers were the founders of the great families of Lancaster and York, whose devices were the red and white roses, which became badges to their heirs and followers, in a long and bloody war betwixt these two families; and thereafter, the badges of the kings of England, as descended from them, by a continued practice. And since those days, to this day, the label has been used to difference families by the greatest in Europe. Amongst many examples, I shall add these. Thomas Plantagenet Duke of Clarence, second son to King Henry IV. of England, carried over France and England, quarterly, a label of three points ermine, with red spots. John Duke of Bedford, that king's third son, had his label parted per pale; that part which lay over France, was ermine, and the other half, on the quarter of England, azure, charged with flower-de-luces.

George Plantagenet, third son to King Edward IV. had a label of five points, parted per pale; the beam and two points, and a half argent, each charged with three tinctures gules, and the other part of the beam with its points azure, charged with lioncel or.

Henry Duke of York, second son to King Henry VII. carried over the arms of England, a label of three points argent, each charged with as many tinctures gules.

By this practice we learn, that not only younger brothers, but their sons, made use of labels, to difference themselves by labels of different tinctures, various attributes and charges, as others of sovereign families of nobility and gentry were in use to variegate their bordures, of which I have treated fully in this volume, in all its varieties, at the title of the Bordure, page 169.

Having thus far treated of all figures, both proper and natural, generally used in armorial bearings throughout Europe, in their proper terms, significations, and various marks, according to their different positions, situations and dispositions within the shield, I should now have proceeded to the other parts of heraldry mentioned in my proposals, viz. of additional figures, or marks of cadency; and of marshalling divers coats in one shield: As also of other figures without the shield, such as helmets, crowns, mantlings, wreaths, crests, mottos, supporters, &c. But the variety of matters already treated of, having swelled the book beyond the number of sheets mentioned in the proposals, and to which I was limited by my undertaker, and finding, that the subjects yet to be treated of will make such another volume, I am obliged here to break off. And shall, in the subsequent volume, not only finish the whole Science of Heraldry, but rectify and supply what errors or defects may have happened in this, especially with respect to memorials of families in Scotland: And therefore, all who think themselves concerned, are desired to send in their corrections or additions, with their proper vouchers, in order to render this work as complete as possible, and to do both themselves and posterity justice.

END OF VOLUME FIRST.
